- <sup>50</sup> M'Clintock and Strong, Cyclopedia, art. "Patarenes."
- <sup>51</sup> Allix, The Ancient Churches of Piedmont, pp. 121, 122.
- <sup>52</sup> "Nearly the whole form of the Latin church therefore, was changed by this pontiff; and the most valuable rights of councils, of bishops, and of religious societies, were subverted, and transferred over to the Roman pontiff. The evil however was not equally grievous in all the countries of Europe; for in several of them, through the influence of different causes, some shadow of pristine liberty and customs was preserved. As Hildebrand introduced a new code of ecclesiastical law, he would have introduced also a new code of civil law, if he could have accomplished fully his designs. For he wished to reduce all kingdoms into fiefs of St. Peter, i.e., of the Roman pontiffs; and to subject all causes of kings and princes, and the interests of the whole world, to the arbitrament of an assembly of bishops, who should meet annually at Rome." —Mosheim, Institutes of Ecclesiastical History, b. 3, cent. 11, pt. 2, ch. 2, par. 10.
- <sup>53</sup> Muston, The Israel of the Alps, vol. 1, pp. 3, 14, note 1.
- <sup>54</sup> See Peter of Cluny, Tractatus Contra Petrobrussianos, found in Migne, Patrologia Latina, vol. 189, pp. 720-850.
- <sup>55</sup> White, Bishop of Eli, A Treatise on the Sabbath Day, p. 8, found in Fisher, Tracts on the Sabbath.
- <sup>56</sup> Gui, Manuel d' Inquisiteur, vol. 1, p. 37. Pope Innocent III was the inspiring force in legalizing the Inquisition; Dominic became its founder; Francis dragged the unoffending evangelicals to its prisons; but Bernard Gui drew up the processes of condemning and of afflicting the victims.
- <sup>57</sup> "Dicti sunt et Insabbatati: non 'quod nullum festum colerent' ut opinatus est Johannes Massonus, nec quod in Sabbato Colendo Judaizarent, ut multi putabant," wrote Ussher, Gravissimae Quaestionis de Christianarum Ecclesiarum Successione, ch. 8, par. 4.

- <sup>58</sup> Gretzer, Praeloquia in Triadem Scriptorum Contra Valdensium Sectam, found in Maxima Bibliotheca Vetricum Patrum, vol. 24, pp. 1521, 1522.
- <sup>59</sup> Robinson, Ecclesiastical Researches, p. 304.
- <sup>60</sup> Ibid., pp. 322, 323.
- <sup>61</sup> Peter of Cluny, Tractatus Contra Petrobrussianos, found in Migne, Patrologia Latina, vol. 189, pp. 720-850.
- <sup>62</sup> Ibid., vol. 189, p. 723.
- <sup>63</sup> Bernard of Clairvaux, Epistle 241 (A.D. 1147) to Hildefonsus, Count of St. Eloy, found in Eales, The Works of St. Bernard, vol. 2, pp. 707, 708.
- <sup>64</sup> Bernard of Clairvaux, Sermon 66, on the Canticles, found in Eales, The Works of St. Bernard, vol. 4, pp. 388,400 — 403.
- <sup>65</sup> Mezeray, Abrege Chronologique de L'Histoire de France, vol. 2, pp. 654-657.
- <sup>66</sup> Genebrard, Sacred Chronology. See Allix, Remarks Upon the Ecclesiastical History of the Ancient Church of the Albigenses, p. 172.
- <sup>67</sup> Bower, The History of the Popes, vol. 2, p. 456.
- <sup>68</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, p. 468
- <sup>69</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, pp. 470, 471.
- <sup>70</sup> Bower, The History of the Popes, vol. 2, p. 471.
- <sup>71</sup> Milman, History of Latin Christianity, vol. 3, p. 281.
- <sup>72</sup> Allix, Remarks Upon the Ecclesiastical History of the Ancient Church of the Albigenses, p. 117.
- <sup>73</sup> The Annals of Roger de Hoveden, translated from the Latin by Riley, vol. 1, p. 502.

CHAPTER 16

- <sup>1</sup> Arnaud, The Glorious Recovery by the Vaudois, Preface by the author, p. xiv.
- <sup>2</sup> Benedict, A General History of the Baptist Denomination, vol. 1, p. 112.

- <sup>3</sup> Gilly, Waldensian Researches, p. 39; Jones, The History of the Christian Church, vol. 2, p. 6; Robinson, Ecclesiastical Researches, p. 178.
- <sup>4</sup> Muston, The Israel of the Alps, vol. 2, p. 448.
- <sup>5</sup> Bompiani, A Short History of the Italian Waldenses, pp. 56, 57.
- <sup>6</sup> Muston, The Israel of the Alps, vol. 1, p. 36.
- <sup>7</sup> McCabe, Cross and Crown, p. 32; also Perrin, History of the Ancient Christians, pp. 47, 48.
- <sup>8</sup> Mornay, The Mysterie of Iniquitie, p. 354.
- <sup>9</sup> Wylie, The History of Protestantism, vol. 1, pp. 29, 30.
- <sup>10</sup> Nolan, The Integrity of the Greek Vulgate, pp. 88, 89.
- <sup>11</sup> Allix, The Ancient Churches of Piedmont, p. 37.
- <sup>12</sup> Warner, The Albigensian Heresy, vol. 1, p. 12.
- <sup>13</sup> Henderson, The Vaudois, pp. 248, 249.
- <sup>14</sup> In a famous library in Dublin, Ireland, the writer saw one of the four extant copies of this Waldensian Bible.
- <sup>15</sup> Bompiani, A Short History of the Italian Waldenses, pp. 2, 3.
- <sup>16</sup> Muston, The Israel of the Alps, vol. 1, p. 52.
- <sup>17</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, p. 448.
- <sup>18</sup> Thompson, The Papacy and the Civil Power, p. 416.
- <sup>19</sup> Gilly, Waldensian Researches, p. 76.
- <sup>20</sup> Edgar, The Variations of Popery, pp. 51, 52.
- <sup>21</sup> Perrin, Luther's Forerunners, pt. 2, pp. 1, 2.
- <sup>22</sup> Mornay, The Mysterie of Iniquitie, p. 392.
- <sup>23</sup> McCabe, Cross and Crown, p. 37.
- <sup>24</sup> Monastier, A History of the Vaudois Church, pp. 83, 84.
- <sup>25</sup> Mornay, The Mysterie of Iniquitie, p. 449.
- <sup>26</sup> Muir, The Arrested Reformation, p. 3.
- <sup>27</sup> The United States Catholic Magazine, Index to vol. 4, 1845, pp. 233, 234.
- <sup>28</sup> The United States Catholic Magazine, Index to vol. 4, 1845, p. 233.

- <sup>29</sup> Socrates, Ecclesiastical History, b. 5, ch. 22, found in Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, 2d Series, vol. 2.
- <sup>30</sup> Sozomen, Ecclesiastical History, b. 7, ch. 19, found in Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, 2d Series, vol. 2.
- <sup>31</sup> Robinson, Ecclesiastical Researches, p. 180. It should be noted that some church historians place the date of the Council of Elvira at A.D. 324; among these is Michael Geddes, an eminent authority on Spanish church history.
- <sup>32</sup> “Errorum placuit corrigi, ut omni Sabbati die superpositiones celebremus.” — Mansi, Sacrorum Conciliorum Nova et Amplissima Collectio, vol. 2, p. 10.
- <sup>33</sup> See the author’s discussion in Chapter 20, entitled, “The Great Struggle in India,” pp. 311-314.
- <sup>34</sup> Robinson, Ecclesiastical Researches, p. 299.
- <sup>35</sup> Ibid., p. 302.
- <sup>36</sup> Ibid., p. 310.
- <sup>37</sup> The writer had the privilege of visiting Sabadell many years ago and assisting in the baptism of Christian converts.
- <sup>38</sup> Robinson, Ecclesiastical Researches, pp. 319-321.
- <sup>39</sup> Mansi, Sacrorum Conciliorum Nova et Amplissima Collectio, vol. 13, p. 852.
- <sup>40</sup> Responsa Nicolai Papae I ad Consulta Bulgarorum, Responsum 10, found in Mansi, Sacrorum Conciliorum Nova et Amplissima Collectio, vol. 15, p. 406.
- <sup>41</sup> Allix, The Ancient Churches of Piedmont, p 154.
- <sup>42</sup> Benedict, A General History of the Baptist Denomination, vol. 2, p. 414.
- <sup>43</sup> Blair, History of the Waldenses, vol. 1, p. 220.
- <sup>44</sup> Warner, The Albigensian Heresy, vol. 1, p. 15.
- <sup>45</sup> Adeney, The Greek and Eastern Churches, p. 218.
- <sup>46</sup> Gilly, Waldensian Researches, p 98, note 2.
- <sup>47</sup> Marianae, Praefatio in Lucam Tudensem, found in Maxima Bibliotheca Veterum Patrum, vol. 25, p. 190.

- <sup>48</sup> Gui, Manuel d' Inquisiteur, vol. 2, p. 158.
- <sup>49</sup> Du Cange, Glossarium Mediae et Infimae Latinitatis, art. "Sabatati."
- <sup>50</sup> Geddes, Miscellaneous Tracts, vol. 2, p. 26.
- <sup>51</sup> Whishaw, Arabic Spain, pp. 19, 20; also Mosheim, Institutes of Ecclesiastical History, b. 3, cent. 11, pt. 2, ch. 4, par. 1.
- <sup>52</sup> Geddes, Miscellaneous Tracts, vol. 2, p. 71.
- <sup>53</sup> Robinson, Ecclesiastical Researches, pp. 271,272.
- <sup>54</sup> Quoted by Dr. Jacob Gretzer, Opera Omnia, vol. 12, pt. 2, p. 11. 55.
- <sup>55</sup> Gilly, Waldensian Researches, pp. 102, 103.
- <sup>56</sup> Der Blutige Schau-Platz, Oder Martyrer Spiegel der Taufs Gesinnten, b. 2, pp. 30,31.
- <sup>57</sup> Mosheim, Institutes of Ecclesiastical History, b. 4, cent. 16, sec. 3, pt. 2, ch. 3, par. 2.
- <sup>58</sup> Lamy, The History of Socianism, p. 60.
- <sup>59</sup> Favyn, Histoire de Navarre, pp. 713-715.
- <sup>60</sup> Cox, The Literature of the Sabbath Question, vol. 1, p. 257.
- <sup>61</sup> See Lewis, A Critical History of Sabbath and Sunday, pp. 211,212.
- <sup>62</sup> Cox, The Literature of the Sabbath Question, vol. 2, pp. 201,202.
- <sup>63</sup> Mosheim, Institutes of Ecclesiastical History, b. 4, cent. 16, sec. 3, pt. 2, ch. 2, par. 25.
- <sup>64</sup> M'Clintock and Strong, Cyclopedia, art. "Waldenses."
- <sup>65</sup> Gibbons, The Faith of Our Fathers, p. 111, 63d ed.; p. 86, 76th ed.
- <sup>66</sup> Notes on Revelation 14.

CHAPTER 17

- <sup>1</sup> Gibbon, Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. 47, par. 30.
- <sup>2</sup> Foakes-Jackson, The History of the Christian Church, p. 184.
- <sup>3</sup> Foakes-Jackson, The History of the Christian Church, pp. 184, 185.
- <sup>4</sup> Newman, A Manual of Church History, vol. 1, p. 296.

- <sup>5</sup> O'Leary, The Syriac Church and Fathers, pp. 83, 84.
- <sup>6</sup> Wigram, Introduction to the History of the Assyrian Church, p. 167.
- <sup>7</sup> Edgar, The Variations of Popery, p. 62.
- <sup>8</sup> Before the writer visited the bishop of the cathedral in Trichur, India, he had been informed that it was a Nestorian church. When, however, he sat at the table with the bishop, this official declared that not only he but all the directors belonging to his denomination rejected the name Nestorian.
- <sup>9</sup> O'Leary, The Syriac Church and Fathers, p. 46.
- <sup>10</sup> Milman, The History of Christianity, vol. 2, pp. 248, 249.
- <sup>11</sup> Adeney, The Greek and Eastern Churches, pp. 496, 497.
- <sup>12</sup> Gordon, "World Healers," pp. 231, 232.
- <sup>13</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 9, p. 302.
- <sup>14</sup> Ibid., vol. 9, p. 303.
- <sup>15</sup> Wigram, Introduction to the History of the Assyrian Church, p. 227.
- <sup>16</sup> Humboldt, Cosmos: A Sketch of a Physical Description of the Universe, vol. 2, p. 208.
- <sup>17</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 9, pp. 304, 305.
- <sup>18</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 9, p. 316.
- <sup>19</sup> Ibid., vol. 9, p. 317.
- <sup>20</sup> Gordon, "World Healers," p. 146.
- <sup>21</sup> Buchanan, Christian Researches in Asia, pp. 141, 142.
- <sup>22</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 10, p. 459.
- <sup>23</sup> Yule, The Book of Ser Marco Polo, vol. 2, pp. 407-409, with notes.
- <sup>24</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, p. 105.
- <sup>25</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 9, p. 341.

- <sup>26</sup> Gibbon, Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. 47, par. 30.
- <sup>27</sup> Wigram, Introduction to the History of the Assyrian Church, p. 199.
- <sup>28</sup> Ibid., p. 200.
- <sup>29</sup> Ibid., p. 201.
- <sup>30</sup> Ibid., p. 202.
- <sup>31</sup> Wigram, Introduction to the History of the Assyrian Church, pp. 202, 203.
- <sup>32</sup> Ibid., pp. 203, 204.
- <sup>33</sup> Wigram, Introduction to the History of the Assyrian Church, pp. 204-207.
- <sup>34</sup> Yule, The Book of Ser Marco Polo, vol. 2, p. 409, note 2; also Gordon, "World Healers," p. 466.
- <sup>35</sup> Realencyclopädie für Protestantische Theologie und Kirche, art. "Nestorianer"; also, Bower, The History of the Popes, vol. 2, p. 258, note 2.
- <sup>36</sup> Couling, The Luminous Religion, p. 44.
- <sup>37</sup> When the writer was in Beyrouth, Syria, he visited the Jacobite bishop. A series of questions were asked the church leader regarding his people and their history. The last remark of the bishop was that his church had anathematized Nestorius. He admitted that the Papacy had anathematized the Jacobites.
- <sup>38</sup> Budge, The Monks of Kublai Khan, Emperor of China, p. 37.
- <sup>39</sup> Gibbon, The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. 47, par. 28.
- <sup>40</sup> Edgar, The Variations of Popery, pp 60-67.

CHAPTER 18

- <sup>1</sup> Grant, The Nestorians, or the Lost Tribes, p. 72.
- <sup>2</sup> Wishard, Twenty Years in Persia, p. 18.
- <sup>3</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, pp. 50, 51.
- <sup>4</sup> Budge, The Monks of Kublai Khan, Emperor of China, pp. 30, 31.

- <sup>5</sup> Schaff, History of the Christian Church, vol. 3, pp. 731, 732, note 2.
- <sup>6</sup> Yohannan, The Death of a Nation, p. 102.
- <sup>7</sup> Vambery, History of Bokhara, p. 32; also p. 89, note 2.
- <sup>8</sup> Neander, General History of the Christian Religion and Church, vol. 2, p. 183, note; Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, pp. 116-118; Schaff, History of the Christian Church, vol. 3, pp. 732, 732, note; Draper, History of the Intellectual Development of Europe, pp. 290, 291.
- <sup>9</sup> Buchanan, Christian Researches in Asia, pp. 146, 147.
- <sup>10</sup> Among all the memorials which still remain to revive the glorious centuries of the Church of the East, this stone, which it was the privilege of the writer to study and to photograph, attracts the greatest attention.
- <sup>11</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 9, p. 306.
- <sup>12</sup> Ibid., vol. 9, p. 306.
- <sup>13</sup> Ibid., vol. 9, p. 306.
- <sup>14</sup> Ibid., vol. 9, p. 307.
- <sup>15</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 9, pp. 307, 308.
- <sup>16</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 10, p. 466.
- <sup>17</sup> O'Leary, The Syriac Church and Fathers, p. 113.
- <sup>18</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 10, p. 113.
- <sup>19</sup> Abul Faraj, Chronography, vol. 1, p. 354.
- <sup>20</sup> Vambery, History of Bokhara, pp. 137, 138.
- <sup>21</sup> Pott, A Sketch of Chinese History, p. 81.
- <sup>22</sup> Huc, Christianity in China, Tartary, and Thibet, vol. 1, p. 129.
- <sup>23</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 9, p. 312.
- <sup>24</sup> Abul Faraj, Chronography, vol. 1, p. 398.

- <sup>25</sup> Mingana, “Early Spread of Christianity,” Bulletin of John Ryland’s Library, vol. 9, p. 315.
- <sup>26</sup> Rockhill, The Journey of William of Rubruck, pp. 109, 110.
- <sup>27</sup> Ibid., pp. 141, 142.
- <sup>28</sup> Ibid., p. 168.
- <sup>29</sup> See Neander, General History of the Christian Religion and Church, vol. 4, pp. 46-50.
- <sup>30</sup> Mosheim, Institutes of Ecclesiastical History, b. 3, cent. 12, pt. 1, ch. 1, par. 7, note 12.
- <sup>31</sup> M’Clintock and Strong, Cyclopedia, art. “Nestorians.”
- <sup>32</sup> Gibbon, Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. 47, par. 31.
- <sup>33</sup> D’Orsey, Portuguese Discoveries, Dependencies, and Missions in Asia and Africa, pp. 232, 233.
- <sup>34</sup> Etheridge, The Syrian Churches, p. 89.
- <sup>35</sup> Schaff-Herzog, The New Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, art. “Nestorians”; also, Realencyclopaedie fur Protestantische Theologie und Kirche, art. “Nestorianer.”
- <sup>36</sup> Gibbon, Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. 47, par. 38.
- <sup>37</sup> Geddes, The Church History of Ethiopia, pp. 87, 88.
- <sup>38</sup> Ibid., pp. 311, 312.
- <sup>39</sup> Purchas, His Pilgrimes, vol. 8, p. 73.
- <sup>40</sup> Abudacnus, Historia Jacobitarum, pp. 118, 119.
- <sup>41</sup> Ross, Religions of the World, p. 493.

CHAPTER 19

- <sup>1</sup> Rae, The Syrian Church in India, pp. 196, 197.
- <sup>2</sup> Eusebius, Ecclesiastical History, b. 3, ch. 1, found in Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, 2d Series, vol. 1.

- <sup>3</sup> When the writer visited Miramon in the kingdom of Travancore in southern India, where the largest camp meeting in the world is annually held, the St. Thomas Christians enthusiastically pointed out the place where the apostle Thomas had built a church. "See," said they, "that farm over there? That farm is located on the spot where he secured his first converts."
- <sup>4</sup> Neale, A History of the Holy Eastern Church, vol. 1, General Introduction, p. 145.
- <sup>5</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 10, pp. 447, 448.
- <sup>6</sup> Neale, A History of the Holy Eastern Church, vol. 1, General Introduction, p. 145.
- <sup>7</sup> Huc, Christianity in China, Tartary, and Thibet, vol. 1, pp. 17, 18.
- <sup>8</sup> Adeney, The Greek and Eastern Churches, p. 297.
- <sup>9</sup> D'Orsey, Portuguese Discoveries, Dependencies, and Missions in Asia and Africa, pp. 63, 64.
- <sup>10</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 10, p. 90.
- <sup>11</sup> Ibid., vol. 10, p. 94
- <sup>12</sup> The Catholic Encyclopedia, art. "Thomas."
- <sup>13</sup> Couling, The Luminous Religion, pp. 7-10.
- <sup>14</sup> Burkitt, Early Eastern Christianity, p. 34.
- <sup>15</sup> The Catholic Encyclopedia, art. "Calendar."
- <sup>16</sup> Rae, The Syrian Church in India, pp 70-72.
- <sup>17</sup> Gibbon, Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. 47, par. 31.
- <sup>18</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 10, p. 440.
- <sup>19</sup> Keay, A History of the Syrian Church in India, p. 17.
- <sup>20</sup> Buchanan, Christian Researches in Asia, pp. 126, 127.
- <sup>21</sup> Ibid., p. 140
- <sup>22</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 10, p. 459.

<sup>23</sup> Mingana proves that as early as A.D. 225 there existed large bishoprics or conferences of the Church of the East stretching from Palestine to, and surrounding, India. In 370 Abyssinian Christianity (a Sabbathkeeping church) was so popular that its famous director, Musaeus, traveled extensively in the East promoting the church in Arabia, Persia, India, and China. In 410 Isaac, supreme director of the Church of the East, held a world council, — stimulated, some think, by the trip of Musaeus, — attended by eastern delegates from forty grand metropolitan divisions. In 411 he appointed a metropolitan director for China. These churches were sanctifying the seventh day, as can be seen by the famous testimonies of Socrates and Sozomen, Roman Catholic historians (c. A.D. 450), that all the churches throughout the world sanctified Saturday except Rome and Alexandria, which two alone exalted Sunday. A century later (c. A.D. 540) Cosmas, the celebrated world traveler, a member of the great Church of the East, testified to the multiplied number of churches of his faith he had seen in India and central Asia and to those he had learned about in Scythia and China. We wrote in previous pages of the Sabbathkeeping Irish, Scottish, Welsh, and English Churches in the British Isles during these same centuries and down to 1200. We dwelt upon the Paulicians, Petrobrusians, Passagians, Waldenses, Insabbatati, as great Sabbathkeeping bodies of Europe down to 1250. We wrote of the sabbatarians in Bohemia, Transylvania, England, and Holland between 1250 and 1600, as authenticated by Cox, Jones, Allix, and William of Neuburg. We have mentioned the innumerable Sabbath-keeping churches among the Greeks, Abyssinians, Armenians, Maronites, Jacobites, Scythians, and the great Church of the East (also from A.D. 1250 to 1600) with supporting evidence from competent authorities. The doctrines of all these Sabbathkeeping bodies throughout the centuries were comparatively pure, and the lives of their members were simple and holy. They were free from the unscriptural ceremonies which arose from the following of tradition. They received the Old Testament, and the whole Bible was their authority.

<sup>24</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 10, p. 460.

- <sup>25</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 10, p. 462.
- <sup>26</sup> Ibid., vol. 10, p. 462.
- <sup>27</sup> Komroff, The Travels of Marco Polo, p. 311.
- <sup>28</sup> Major, India in the Fifteenth Century, Travels of Nicolo Conti, p. 20.
- <sup>29</sup> Rae, The Syrian Church in India, p. 155.
- <sup>30</sup> Adeney, The Greek and Eastern Churches, pp. 520, 521.
- <sup>31</sup> Two of these plates were shown to the author by Mar Thomas (the word "Mar" is their title for clergy of official rank), supreme head of the St. Thomas Christians, in his church headquarters at Tiruvalla, Travancore. The other three plates, now in possession of the leader of the Jacobites at Kottayam, could not be seen as he was absent from the church at the time of my visit.
- <sup>32</sup> Hunter, The Indian Empire, p. 240.
- <sup>33</sup> Neale, A History of the Holy Eastern Church, vol. 1, General Introduction, p. 148.
- <sup>34</sup> Smith, The Oxford History of India, p. 300.
- <sup>35</sup> Yule, The Book of Ser Marco Polo, vol. 2, p. 427.
- <sup>36</sup> Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity," Bulletin of John Ryland's Library, vol. 10, p. 487.
- <sup>37</sup> Major, India in the Fifteenth Century, Travels of Nicolo Conti, p. 7.
- <sup>38</sup> Ibid., p. 33.
- <sup>39</sup> Temple, The Itinerary of Ludovico di Varthema of Bologna From 1502 to 1508, pp. 59, 60.
- <sup>40</sup> Ibid., pp. 79, 80.
- <sup>41</sup> Ibid., Preliminary Discourse, p. lxix.

CHAPTER 20

- <sup>1</sup> Rae, The Syrian Church in India, p. 200.
- <sup>2</sup> Mosheim, Institutes of Ecclesiastical History, b. 4, cent. 16, sec. 3, pt. 1, ch. 1, pars 10-12.

- <sup>3</sup> Hunter, A Brief History of the Indian People, p. 151.
- <sup>4</sup> D'Orsey, Portuguese Discoveries, Dependencies, and Missions in Asia and Africa, p. 5.
- <sup>5</sup> Ibid., pp. 30, 31.
- <sup>6</sup> Kaye, Christianity in India, reviewed in Dublin University Magazine, vol. 54, p. 340.
- <sup>7</sup> Froude, The Council of Trent, pp. 174, 175; Muir, The Arrested Reformation, pp. 152, 153; also M'Clintock and Strong, Cyclopedia, art. "The Council of Trent."
- <sup>8</sup> Holtzmann, Kanon und Tradition, p. 263.
- <sup>9</sup> Pallavicini, Histoire du Concile de Trente, vol. 2, pp. 1031, 1032.
- <sup>10</sup> D'Orsey, Portuguese Discoveries, Dependencies, and Missions in Asia and Africa, p. 163.
- <sup>11</sup> Dellon, Account of the Inquisition at Goa, p. 8; p 23, 1815 ed.
- <sup>12</sup> Buchanan, Christian Researches in Asia, pp. 169-172.
- <sup>13</sup> Dellon, Account of the Inquisition at Goa, pp. 41, 42.
- <sup>14</sup> Rae, The Syrian Church in India, pp. 217, 218.
- <sup>15</sup> Ibid., p. 238.
- <sup>16</sup> D'Orsey, Portuguese Discoveries, Dependencies, and Missions in Asia and Africa, p. 190.
- <sup>17</sup> D'Orsey, Portuguese Discoveries, Dependencies, and Missions in Asia and Africa, p. 193.
- <sup>18</sup> D'Orsey, Portuguese Discoveries, Dependencies, and Missions in Asia and Africa, pp. 215, 216.
- <sup>19</sup> D'Orsey, Portuguese Discoveries, Dependencies, and Missions in Asia and Africa, p. 228.
- <sup>20</sup> Geddes, The Church History of Malabar, pp. 116, 117.
- <sup>21</sup> Rae, The Syrian Church in India, p. 201.
- <sup>22</sup> Geddes, The Church History of Malabar, p. 357.
- <sup>23</sup> Geddes, The Church History of Malabar, pp. 357, 358.

- <sup>24</sup> Neander, General History of the Christian Religion and Church, vol. 1, p. 295.
- <sup>25</sup> Victorinus, On the Creation of the World, found in Ante-Nicene Fathers, vol. 7, p. 342.
- <sup>26</sup> Neander, General History of the Christian Religion and Church, vol. 1, p. 296.
- <sup>27</sup> Yeates, East Indian Church History, p. 72.
- <sup>28</sup> Purchas, His Pilgrimes, vol. 1, pp. 351-353.
- <sup>29</sup> Epistles of Gregory I, coil. 13, ep. 1, found in Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers, 2d Series, vol. 13.
- <sup>30</sup> Buchanan, Christian Researches in Asia, p. 266
- <sup>31</sup> Green, A Short History of the English People, b. 6, pt. 2, ch. 6, par. 26.
- <sup>32</sup> Adeney, The Greek and Eastern Churches, p. 530.

CHAPTER 21

- <sup>1</sup> Rawlinson, The Seven Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World, vol. 2, p. 444.
- <sup>2</sup> See Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, pp. 54, 171, 231, 265; also, Gordon, "Worm Healers," pp. 134, 181-183, 285, 476.
- <sup>3</sup> Sansom, Japan, pp. 80, 81; Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, p. 3.
- <sup>4</sup> Sansom, Japan, pp. 81-84.
- <sup>5</sup> It was the writer's privilege to examine the stone firsthand, having made an airplane trip there for that purpose. We took particular pains to take pictures of this renowned memorial and to study the city with its surrounding country.
- <sup>6</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, pp. 14, 15.
- <sup>7</sup> Huc, Christianity in China, Tartary, and Thibet, vol. 1, pp. 45, 46.
- <sup>8</sup> Gordon, "World Healers," p. 147.
- <sup>9</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, p. 175.
- <sup>10</sup> Yule, The Book of Ser Marco Polo, vol. 1, p. 191, note 1.

- <sup>11</sup> Ibid., vol. 1, p. 191; also Beal, Buddhists' Records of the Western World.
- <sup>12</sup> Monier-Williams, Indian Wisdom, p. 49.
- <sup>13</sup> See the author's discussion in Chapter 2, entitled, "The Church in the Wilderness in Prophecy."
- <sup>14</sup> Sansom, Japan, p. 133.
- <sup>15</sup> Gordon, "World Healers," pp. 31, 32, 229.
- <sup>16</sup> Ibid., p. 27.
- <sup>17</sup> Geikie, Hours With the Bible, vol. 6, p. 383, note 1; Old Testament Series on Isaiah 49:12; Encyclopedia Britannica, 9th and 11th eds., art. "China"; M'Clatchie, "The Chinese in the Plain of Shinar," Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, vol. 16, pp. 368-435.
- <sup>18</sup> Pott, A Sketch of Chinese History, 3d ed., p. 2.
- <sup>19</sup> Lacouperie, Western Origin of Early Chinese Civilisation, pp. 9, 12.
- <sup>20</sup> Gordon, "World Healers," p. 54.
- <sup>21</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, pp. 39, 40.
- <sup>22</sup> The attendant at the "forest of tablets" in Changan showed the writer a stone slab with a face carved upon it which, he claimed, was believed to be the face of the apostle Thomas.
- <sup>23</sup> Arnobius, Against the Heathen, found in Ante-Nicene Fathers, vol. 6, p. 438.
- <sup>24</sup> Smith, The Oxford History of India, p. 122.
- <sup>25</sup> Forsythe, Journal of the Royal Geographic Society, vol. 47, p. 2.
- <sup>26</sup> Yule, The Book of Ser Marco Polo, vol. 1, p. 192, note.
- <sup>27</sup> Johnson, Journal of the Royal Geographical Society, vol. 37, p. 5.
- <sup>28</sup> Quatremere, Notices des Manuscrits, vol. 14, pp. 476, 477.
- <sup>29</sup> Rawlinson, The Seven Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World, vol. 2, p. 444.
- <sup>30</sup> M'Clatchie, Notes and Queries on China and Japan (edited by Dennys), vol. 4, Nos. 7, 8, pp. 99, 100.
- <sup>31</sup> Finn, The Jews in China, p. 23.
- <sup>32</sup> M'Clatchie, A Translation of the Confucian Classic of Change, p. 118.

- <sup>33</sup> Harlez, Le Yih-King: A French Translation of the Confucian Classic on Change, p. 72. Translated by this author from a French version (using the important footnote of M. de Harlez). Many translators of the Chinese render the “culminating day” differently. Most all agree, some at length, that this section of the Yih-King, the oldest Chinese book, is a glorification of the seventh day as the symbol of returning or success. The influence of this glorification determined the customs of kings, merchants, and landed possessors.
- <sup>34</sup> Renan, Histoire General et Systeme Compare des Langues Semitiques, p. 291.
- <sup>35</sup> Smith, The Oxford History of India, p. 129.
- <sup>36</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, pp. 41, 42.
- <sup>37</sup> Ibid., p. 43.
- <sup>38</sup> Lloyd, The Creed of Half Japan, p. 194, note.
- <sup>39</sup> Gordon, “World Healers,” p. 54.
- <sup>40</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, pp. 162, 255; see also pp. 186, 187.
- <sup>41</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, pp. 70, 71.
- <sup>42</sup> Li Ung Bing, Outlines of Chinese History, pp. 50, 51.
- <sup>43</sup> Sansom, Japan, p. 111.
- <sup>44</sup> Huc, Christianity in China, Tartary, and Thibet, vol. 1, pp. 167, 221.
- <sup>45</sup> Cable and French, Through Jade Gate and Central Asia, pp. 136-138. See Gordon, “World Healers,” for a study of the idolatry of Buddhism.
- <sup>46</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, p. 175.
- <sup>47</sup> Mingana, “Early Spread of Christianity,” Bulletin of John Ryland’s Library, vol. 9, pp. 325, 338.
- <sup>48</sup> Mingana, “Early Spread of Christianity,” Bulletin of John Ryland’s Library, vol. 9, pp. 308-310.
- <sup>49</sup> Gibbon, Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. 47, note 118.

CHAPTER 22

- <sup>1</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, pp. 42, 43.
- <sup>2</sup> Montgomery, The History of Yaballaha III, p. 11.
- <sup>3</sup> Mingana, “Early Spread of Christianity,” Bulletin of John Ryland’s Library, vol. 9, p. 312, note 1.
- <sup>4</sup> Budge, The Monks of Kublai Khan, Emperor of China, p. 45.
- <sup>5</sup> Budge, The Monks of Kublai Khan, Emperor of China, p. 1.
- <sup>6</sup> Budge, The Monks of Kublai Khan, Emperor of China, pp. 45, 46.
- <sup>7</sup> Cable and French, Through Jade Gate and Central Asia, p. 133.
- <sup>8</sup> Yule, The Book of Ser Marco Polo, vol. 1, p. 192.
- <sup>9</sup> Yule, The Book of Ser Marco Polo, vol. 1, p. 182.
- <sup>10</sup> Budge, The Monks of Kublai Khan, Emperor of China, p. 47.
- <sup>11</sup> Ibid., p. 139.
- <sup>12</sup> Gibbon, Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, ch. 47, par. 30.
- <sup>13</sup> Budge, The Monks of Kublai Khan, Emperor of China, pp. 140, 141.
- <sup>14</sup> See the author’s discussion in Chapter 19, note 27, and in Chapter 21.
- <sup>15</sup> Komroff, The Travels of Marco Polo, p. 29.
- <sup>16</sup> Komroff, The Travels of Marco Polo, pp. 16, 17.
- <sup>17</sup> Yule, The Book of Ser Marco Polo, vol. 1, p. 187.
- <sup>18</sup> Ibid., vol. 1, p. 203.
- <sup>19</sup> Ibid., vol. 1, p. 212.
- <sup>20</sup> Ibid., vol. 1, p. 217.
- <sup>21</sup> Ibid., vol. 1, p. 219.
- <sup>22</sup> Ibid., vol. 1, p. 274.
- <sup>23</sup> Yule, The Book of Ser Marco Polo, vol. 1, p. 281.
- <sup>24</sup> Ibid., vol. 1, p. 284.
- <sup>25</sup> Ibid., vol. 1, p. 285.
- <sup>26</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, p. 66.

- <sup>27</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, p. 154, and note 2.
- <sup>28</sup> Various known as Tamerlane, Timor, or Timour.
- <sup>29</sup> Encyclopedia Britannica, 9th ed., art. “Timur.”
- <sup>30</sup> Malcolm, History of Persia, vol. 1, pp. 471,472; pp. 301,302, 1829 ed.
- <sup>31</sup> Malcolm, History of Persia, vol. 1, pp. 471,472; pp. 306, 307, 1829 ed.
- <sup>32</sup> Herrmann, Atlas of China, p. 46.
- <sup>33</sup> Yule, The Book of Ser Marco Polo, vol. 1, pp. 191, 192.
- <sup>34</sup> Johnson, Journal of the Royal Geographical Society, vol. 37, p. 5.
- <sup>35</sup> Hedin, Central Asia and Tibet, vol. 2, pp. 112-120.
- <sup>36</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, pp. 134, 135.
- <sup>37</sup> Hunter, The Indian Empire, p. 240.
- <sup>38</sup> Gordon, “World Healers,” p. 481.
- <sup>39</sup> Huc, Christianity in China, Tartary, and Thibet, vol. 2, chs. 3, 4.
- <sup>40</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, pp. 235, 317; p. 292, 1857 ed.
- <sup>41</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, pp. 265, 266.
- <sup>42</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, p. 230.
- <sup>43</sup> Wall, Ancient Orthography of the Jews, vol. 2, p. 160.
- <sup>44</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, pp. 159, 160.
- <sup>45</sup> Kircher, La Chine, pp. 10, 11; also Wall, Ancient Orthography of the Jews, vol. 2, p. 160.
- <sup>46</sup> Wall, Ancient Orthography of the Jews, vol. 2, p. 163.
- <sup>47</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, p. 162.
- <sup>48</sup> See the author’s discussion in Chapter 9, entitled, “Papās, First Head of the Church in Asia.”
- <sup>49</sup> Wall, Ancient Orthography of the Jews, vol. 2, pp. 185, 186.
- <sup>50</sup> Ibid., vol. 2, pp. 200-245.

CHAPTER 23

- <sup>1</sup> Sansom, Japan, p. 225.

- <sup>2</sup> Underwood, Shintoism, p. 18.
- <sup>3</sup> Underwood, Shintoism, pp. 14, 15.
- <sup>4</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, p. 145.
- <sup>5</sup> Gordon, "World Healers," p. 471, note 2; p. 481, note 4.
- <sup>6</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, p. 123.
- <sup>7</sup> Smith, The Oxford History of India, p. 55.
- <sup>8</sup> Reichelt, Truth and Tradition in Chinese Buddhism, p. 12.
- <sup>9</sup> See the author's discussion in Chapter 21, entitled, "Adam and the Church in China."
- <sup>10</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, p. 148.
- <sup>11</sup> Ibid., p. 153.
- <sup>12</sup> Reichelt, Truth and Tradition in Chinese Buddhism, p. 41.
- <sup>13</sup> Lloyd, The Creed of Half Japan, pp. 203, 204.
- <sup>14</sup> Gordon, "World Healers," p. 38.
- <sup>15</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, p. 12.
- <sup>16</sup> Sansom, Japan, p. 223.
- <sup>17</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, p. 214.
- <sup>18</sup> Sansom, Japan, p. 223.
- <sup>19</sup> Anesaki, Religious Life of the Japanese Peoples, p. 58.
- <sup>20</sup> Saeki, The Nestorian Monument in China, p. 2.
- <sup>21</sup> Ibid., p. 148.
- <sup>22</sup> Reichelt, Truth and Tradition in Chinese Buddhism, p. 131.
- <sup>23</sup> Sansom, Japan, p. 223.
- <sup>24</sup> Sansom, Japan, p. 224.
- <sup>25</sup> Anesaki, History of the Japanese Religions, pp. 13, 14.
- <sup>26</sup> Griffis, The Religions of Japan, pp. 346-348.
- <sup>27</sup> Ibid., p. 348.
- <sup>28</sup> Sansom, Japan, pp. 413-442.
- <sup>29</sup> Sansom, Japan, pp. 445.

<sup>30</sup> Blair and Robertson, The Philippine Islands, vol. 1, p. 80.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid., vol. 1, p. 79, note 132.

CHAPTER 24

<sup>1</sup> Protestant Digest, April-May, 1941, p. 62.

<sup>2</sup> See the author's discussion in Chapter 10, entitled, "How the Church Was Driven Into the Wilderness."

<sup>3</sup> Westcott and Hort, The New Testament in the Original Greek, vol. 2, p. 142.

<sup>4</sup> Nolan, The Integrity of the Greek Vulgate, pp. 413, 414.

<sup>5</sup> Armitage, A History of the Baptists, p. 318; Cox, The Literature of the Sabbath Question, vol. 2, pp. 201, 202.

<sup>6</sup> Muir, The Arrested Reformation, p. 9.

<sup>7</sup> Tyndale, An Answer to Sir Thomas More's Dialogue, b. 1, ch. 25, p. 97.

<sup>8</sup> Stanley, History of the Eastern Church, p. 26.

<sup>9</sup> Adeney, The Greek and Eastern Churches, p. 363.

<sup>10</sup> Hulme, Renaissance and Reformation, p. 178.

<sup>11</sup> Adeney, The Greek and Eastern Churches, pp. 527, 528.

<sup>12</sup> Muir, The Arrested Reformation, p. 10.

<sup>13</sup> Emory, The Works of the Reverend John Wesley, vol. 5, p. 688.

<sup>14</sup> Sessler, Communal Pietism Among Early Armenian Moravians, p. 8.

<sup>15</sup> Macaulay, Critical, Historical, and Miscellaneous Essays and Poems, vol. 5, pp. 482, 483. See also his essay, "Von Ranke."

<sup>16</sup> Lehmann, "What Is Wrong With the Jesuits?" Protestant Digest, vol. 4, no. 1, Aug-Sept. 1941.

<sup>17</sup> James Bryce, The Holy Roman Empire, pp. 295, 296.

<sup>18</sup> Lacunza, La Venida del Mesias en Gloria y Majestad; see Urzua, Las Doctrinas de P. Manuel Lacunza.

<sup>19</sup> Oliphant, The Life of Edward Irving, 6th ed., pp. 80, 82, 84, 405, 406.

- <sup>20</sup> Taylor, The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer, pp. 342, 344.
- <sup>21</sup> The Catholic Encyclopedia, art. “Newman, John Henry.”
- <sup>22</sup> White, The Great Controversy Between Christ and Satan, p. 644.

HISTORY OF THE SABBATH and FIRST DAY OF THE WEEK

By J. N. Andrews

PREFACE

---

THE history of the Sabbath embraces the period of 6000 years. The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord. The acts which constituted it such were, first, the example of the Creator; secondly, his placing his blessing upon the day; and thirdly, the sanctification or divine appointment of the day to a holy use. The Sabbath, therefore, dates from the beginning of our world's history. The first who Sabbatized on the seventh day is God the Creator; and the first seventh day of time is the day which he thus honored. The highest of all possible honors does, therefore, pertain to the seventh day. Nor is this honor confined to the first seventh day of time; for so soon as God had rested upon that day, he appointed the seventh day to a holy use, that man might hallow it in memory of his Creator.

This divine appointment grows out of the nature and fitness of things, and must have been made directly to Adam, for himself and wife were then the only beings who had the days of the week to use. As it was addressed to Adam while yet in his uprightness, it must have been given to him as the head of the human family. The fourth commandment bases all its authority upon this original mandate of the Creator, and must, therefore, be in substance what God commanded to Adam and Eve as the representatives of mankind.

The patriarchs could not possibly have been ignorant of the facts and the obligation which the fourth commandment shows to have originated in the beginning, for Adam was present with them for a period equal to more than half the Christian dispensation. Those, therefore, who walked with God in the observance of his commandments did certainly hallow his Sabbath.

The observers of the seventh day must therefore include the ancient godly patriarchs, and none will deny that they include also the prophets and the apostles. Indeed, the entire church of God embraced within the records of inspiration were Sabbath-keepers. To this number must be added the Son of God.

What a history, therefore, has the Sabbath of the Lord! It was instituted in Paradise, honored by several miracles each week for the space of forty years, proclaimed by the great Lawgiver from Sinai, observed by the Creator, the patriarchs, the prophets, the apostles, and the Son of God! It constitutes the very heart of the law of God, and so long as that law endures, so long shall the authority of this sacred institution stand fast.

Such being the record of the seventh day, it may well be asked, How came it to pass that this day has been abased to the dust, and another day elevated to its sacred honors? The Scriptures nowhere attribute this work to the Son of God. They do, however, predict the great apostasy in the Christian church, and that the little horn, or man of sin, the lawless one, should think to change times and laws.

It is the object of the present volume to show, 1. The Bible record of the Sabbath; 2. The record of the Sabbath in secular history; 3. The record of the Sunday festival, and of the several steps by which it has usurped the place of the ancient Sabbath.

The writer has attempted to ascertain the exact truth in the case by consulting the original authorities as far as it has been possible to gain access to them. The margin will show to whom he is mainly indebted for the facts presented in this work, though it indicates only a very small part of the works consulted. He has given the exact words of the historians, and has endeavored, conscientiously, to present them in such a light as to do justice to the authors quoted.

It is not the fault of the writer that the history of the Sunday festival presents such an array of frauds and of iniquities in its support. These are, in the nature of the case, essential to its very existence, for the claim of a usurper is necessarily based in fraud. The responsibility for these rests with those who dare commit or uphold such acts. The ancient Sabbath of the Lord has never needed help of this kind, and never has its record been stained by fraud or falsehood.

Battle Creek, Mich., Nov. 18, 1873 J. N. A.

HISTORY OF THE SABBATH

PART I - BIBLE HISTORY

CHAPTER I - THE CREATION

---

Time and eternity - The Creator and his work - Events of the first day of time - Of the second - Of the third - Of the fourth - Of the fifth - Of the sixth.

---

TIME, as distinguished from eternity, may be defined as that part of duration which is measured by the Bible. From the earliest date in the book of Genesis to the resurrection of the unjust at the end of the millennium, the period of about 7000 years is measured off.<sup>1</sup> Before the commencement of this great week of time, duration without beginning fills the past; and at the expiration of this period, unending duration opens before the people of God. Eternity is that word which embraces duration without beginning and without end. And that Being whose existence comprehends eternity, is he who only hath immortality, the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God.<sup>2</sup>

When it pleased this infinite Being, he gave existence to our earth. Out of nothing God created all things;<sup>3</sup> "so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." This act of creation is that event which marks the commencement of the first week of time. He who could accomplish the whole work with one word chose rather to employ six days, and to accomplish the result by successive steps. Let us trace the footsteps of the Creator from the time when he laid the foundation of the earth until the close of the sixth day, when the heavens and the earth were finished, "and God saw everything that he had made, and behold, it was very good."<sup>4</sup>

On the first day of time God created the heaven and the earth. The earth thus called into existence was without form, and void; and total darkness covered the Creator's work. Then "God said, Let there be light; and there was light." "And God divided the light from the darkness," and called the one day, and other night.<sup>5</sup>

On the second day of time "God said, Let there be a firmament [margin, Heb., expansion] in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters." The dry land had not yet appeared; consequently the earth was covered with water. As no atmosphere existed, thick vapors rested upon the face of the water; but the atmosphere being now called into existence by the word of the Creator, causing those elements to unite which compose the air we breathe, the fogs and vapors that had rested upon the bosom of the water were borne aloft by it. This atmosphere or expansion is called heaven.<sup>6</sup>

On the third day of time God gathered the waters together and caused the dry land to appear. the gathering together of the waters God called seas; the dry land, thus rescued from the waters, he called earth. "And God said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and fruit-tree yielding fruit after his kind, whose seed is in itself, upon the earth: and it was so." "And God saw that it was good."<sup>7</sup>

On the fourth day of time "God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven, to divide the day from the night; and let them be for signs, and for seasons, and for days, and years." "And God made two great lights; the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night; he made the stars also." Light had been created on the first day of the week; and now on the fourth day he causes the sun and moon to appear as light-bearers, and places the light under their rule. And they continue unto this day according to his ordinances, for all are his servants. Such was the work of the fourth day. And the Great Architect, surveying what he had wrought, pronounced it good.<sup>8</sup>

On the fifth day of time "God created great whales, and every living creature that moveth, which the waters brought forth abundantly, after their kind, and every winged fowl after his kind: and God saw that it was good."<sup>9</sup>

On the sixth day of time "God made the beast of the earth after his kind, and cattle after their kind, and everything that creepeth upon the earth after his kind: and God saw that it was good." Thus the earth, having been fitted for the purpose, was filled with every order of living creature, while the air and waters teemed with animal existence. To complete this noble work of creation, God next provides a ruler, the representative of himself, and places all in subjection under him. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth." "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul. And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden; and there he put the man whom he had formed. And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil." Last of all, God created Eve, the mother of all living. The work of the Creator was now complete. "The heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them." "And God saw everything that he had made, and behold, it was very good." Adam and Eve were in paradise; the tree of life bloomed on earth; sin had not entered our world, and death was not here, for there was no sin. "The morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." Thus ended the sixth day.<sup>10</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> For the scriptural and traditional evidence on this point, see Shimeall's Bible Chronology, part i. chap. vi; Taylor's Voice of the Church, pp. 25-30; and Bliss' Sacred Chronology, pp. 199-203.

<sup>2</sup> Isa.57:15; 1Sam.15:29, margin; Jer.10:10, margin; Micah 5:2, margin; 1Tim.6:16; 1:17; Ps.90:2.

<sup>3</sup> Dr. Adam Clarke, in his Commentary on Gen.1:1, uses the following language: "[Created] Caused that to exist which previously to this moment, had no being. The rabbis, who are legitimate judges in a case of verbal criticism on their own language, are unanimous in asserting that word bara, expresses the commencement of the existence of a thing: or its egression from nonentity to entity . . . . These words should be translated: 'God in the beginning created the substance of the heavens and the substance of the earth; i.e., the prima materia, or first elements, out of which the heavens and the earth were successively formed.' "

Purchase's Pilgrimage, b. i. chap. ii., speaks thus of the creation: "Nothing but nothing had the Lord Almighty, whereof, wherewith, whereby, to build this city" [that is the world].

Chapter One – The Creation

Dr. Gill says: "These are said to be created, that is, to be made out of nothing; for what pre-existent matter to this chaos [of verse 2] could there be out of which they could be formed?"

"Creation must be the work of God, for none but an almighty power could produce something out of nothing." Commentary on Gen.1:1.

John Calvin, in his Commentary on this chapter, thus expounds the creative act: "His meaning is, that the world was made out of nothing. Hence the folly of those is refuted who imagine that unformed matter existed from eternity."

The work of creation is thus defined in 2 Maccabees 7:28: "Look upon the heaven and the earth, and all that is therein, and consider that God made them of things that were not; and so was mankind made likewise."

That this creative act marked the commencement of the first day instead of preceding it by almost infinite ages is thus stated in 2 Esdras 6:38: "And I said, O Lord, thou spakest from the beginning of the creation, even the first day, and saidst thus: Let heaven and earth be made; and thy word was a perfect work."

Wycliffe's translation, the earliest of the English versions, renders Gen.1:1, thus: "In the first, made God of naught heaven and earth.

<sup>4</sup> Gen. 1:31

<sup>5</sup> Gen.1:1-5; Heb.1.

<sup>6</sup> Gen.1:6-8; Job 37:18.

<sup>7</sup> Gen.1:9-13; Ps.136:6; 2Pet.3:5.

<sup>8</sup> Gen.1:14-19; Ps.119:91; Jer.33:25.

<sup>9</sup> Gen.1:20-23.

<sup>10</sup> Gen.1:24:31; 2:7-9, 18-22; 3:20; Job 38:7.

CHAPTER 2

THE INSTITUTION OF THE SABBATH

---

Event of the seventh day - Why the Creator rested - Acts by which the Sabbath was made - Time and order of their occurrence - Meaning of the word sanctified - The fourth commandment refers the origin of the Sabbath to creation - The second mention of the Sabbath confirms this fact - The Saviour's testimony - When did God sanctify the seventh day - Object of the Author of the Sabbath - Testimony of Josephus and of Philo - Negative argument from the book of Genesis considered - Adam's knowledge of the Sabbath not difficult to be known by the patriarchs.

---

The work of the creator was finished, but the first week of time was not yet completed. Each of the six days had been distinguished by the Creator's work upon it; but the seventh was rendered memorable in a very different manner. "And on the seventh<sup>1</sup> day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made." In yet stronger language it is written: "On the seventh day he rested, and was REFRESHED."<sup>2</sup>

Thus the seventh day of the week became the rest-day of the Lord. How remarkable is this fact! "The everlasting God, The Lord, the Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not, neither is weary."<sup>3</sup> He needed no rest; yet it is written, "On the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed." Why does not the record simply state the cessation of the Creator's work? Why did he at the close of that work employ a day in rest? The answer will be learned from the next verse. He was laying the foundation of a divine institution, the memorial of his own great work.

"And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." The fourth commandment states the same fact: He "rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."<sup>4</sup>

The blessing and sanctification of the seventh day were because that God had rested upon it. His resting upon it, then, was to lay the foundation for blessing and sanctifying the day. His being refreshed with this rest, implies that he delighted in the act which laid the foundation for the memorial of his great work.

The second act of the Creator in instituting this memorial was to place his blessing upon the day of his rest. Thence forward it was the blessed rest-day of the Lord. A third act completes the sacred institution. The day already blessed of God is now, last of all, sanctified or hallowed by him. To sanctify is "to separate, set apart, or appoint to a holy, sacred, or religious use." To hallow is "to make holy; to consecrate; to set apart for a holy or religious use."<sup>5</sup>

The time when these three acts were performed is worthy of especial notice. The first act was that of rest. This took place on the seventh day; for the day was employed in rest. The second and third acts took place when the seventh day was past. "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work." Hence it was on the first day of the second week of time that God blessed the seventh day, and set it apart to a holy use. The blessing and sanctification of the seventh day, therefore, relate not to the first seventh day of time, but to the seventh day of the week for time to come, in memory of God's rest on that day from the work of creation.

With the beginning of time, God began to count days, giving to each an ordinal number for its name. Seven different days receive as many different names. In memory of that which he did on the last of these days, he sets that apart by name to a holy use. This act gave existence to weeks, or periods of seven days. For with the seventh day, he ceased to count, and, by the divine appointment of that day to a holy use in memory of his rest thereon, he causes man to begin the count of a new week so soon as the first seventh day had ceased. And as God has been pleased to give man, in all, but seven different days, and has given to each one of these days a name which indicates its exact place in the week, his act of setting apart one of these by name, which act created weeks and gave man the Sabbath, can never - except by sophistry - be made to relate to an indefinite or uncertain day.

The days of the week are measured off by revolution of our earth on its axis; and hence our seventh day, as such, can come only to dwellers on this globe. To Adam and Eve, therefore, as inhabitants of this earth, and not to the inhabitants of some other world, were the days of the week given to use. Hence, when God set apart one of these days to a holy use in memory of his own rest on that day of the week, the very essence of the act consisted in his telling Adam that this day should be used only for sacred purposes. Adam was then in the garden of God, placed there by the Creator to dress it and to keep it. He was also commissioned of God to subdue the earth.<sup>6</sup> When therefore the rest-day of the Lord should return, from week to week, all this secular employment, however proper in itself, must be laid aside, and the day observed in memory of the Creator's rest.

Dr. Twisse quotes Martin Luther thus:

"And Martin Luther professeth as much (tome vi, in Gen.2:3). 'It follows from hence,' saith he, 'that, if Adam had stood in his innocency, yet he should have kept the seventh day holy, that is, on that day he should have taught his children, and children's children, what was the will of God, and wherein his worship did consist; he should have praised God, given thanks, and offered. On other days he should have tilled his ground, looked to his cattle.' "<sup>7</sup>

The Hebrew verb, kadash, here rendered sanctified, and in the fourth commandment rendered hallowed, is defined by Gesenius, "To pronounce holy, to sanctify; to institute any holy thing, to appoint."<sup>8</sup> It is repeatedly used in the Old Testament for a public appointment or proclamation. Thus, when the cities of refuge were set apart in Israel, it is written: "They appointed [margin, Heb., sanctified] Kedesh in Galilee in Mount Naphtali, and Shechem in Mount Ephraim," &c. This sanctification or appointment of the cities of refuge was by a public announcement to Israel that these cities were set apart for that purpose. This verb is also used for the appointment of a public fast, and for the gathering of a solemn assembly. Thus it is written: "Sanctify [i.e., appoint] ye a fast, call a solemn assembly, gather the elders and all the inhabitants of the land into the house of the Lord your God." "Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify [i.e., appoint] a fast, call a solemn assembly." "And Jehu said, Proclaim [margin, Heb., sanctify] a solemn assembly for Baal."<sup>9</sup> This appointment for Baal was so public that all the worshipers of Baal in all Israel were gathered together. These fasts and solemn assemblies were sanctified or set apart by a public appointment or proclamation of the fact. When therefore God set apart the seventh day to a holy use, it was necessary that he should state that fact to those who had the days of the week to use. Without such announcement the day could not be set apart from the others.

But the most striking illustration of the meaning of this word may be found in the record of the sanctification of Mount Sinai.<sup>10</sup> When God was about to speak the ten commandments in the hearing of all Israel, he sent Moses down from the top of Mount Sinai to restrain the people from touching the mount. "And Moses said unto the Lord, The people cannot come up to Mount Sinai; for thou chargedst us, saying, Set bounds about the mount, and sanctify it." Turning back to the verse where God gave this charge to Moses, we read: "And thou shalt set bounds unto the people round about, saying, Take heed to yourselves, that ye go not up into the mount or touch the border of it." Hence to sanctify the mount was to command the people not to touch even the border of it; for God was about to descend in majesty upon it. In other words, to sanctify or set apart to a holy use Mount Sinai, was to tell the people that God would have them treat the mountain as sacred to himself. And thus also to sanctify the rest-day of the Lord was to tell Adam that he should treat the day as holy to the Lord.

The declaration, "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it," is not indeed a commandment for the observance of that day; but it is the record that such a precept was given to Adam.<sup>11</sup> For how could the Creator "set apart to a holy use" the day of his rest, when those who were to use the day knew nothing of his will in the case? Let those answer who are able.

This view of the record in Genesis we shall find to be sustained by all the testimony in the Bible relative to the rest-day of the Lord. The facts which we have examined are the basis of the fourth commandment. Thus spake the great Law-giver from the summit of the flaming mount: "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."<sup>12</sup>

The term Sabbath is transferred from the Hebrew language, and signifies rest.<sup>13</sup> The command, "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy," is therefore exactly equivalent to saying, "Remember the rest-day, to keep it holy." The explanation which follows sustains this statement: "The seventh day is the Sabbath [or rest-day] of the Lord thy God." The origin of this rest-day is given in these words: "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it." That which is enjoined in the fourth commandment is to keep holy the rest-day of the Lord. And this is defined to be the day on which he rested from the work of creation. Moreover, the fourth commandment calls the seventh day the Sabbath day at the time when God blessed and hallowed that day; therefore the Sabbath is an institution dating from the foundation of the world. The fourth commandment points back to the creation for the origin of its obligation; and when we go back to that point, we find the substance of the fourth commandment given to Adam: "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it;" i.e., set it apart to a holy use. And in the commandment itself, the same fact is stated: "The Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it;" i.e., appointed it to a holy use. The one statement affirms that "God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it;" the other, that "the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it." These two statements refer to the same acts. Because the word Sabbath does not occur in the first statement, it has been contended that the Sabbath did not originate at creation, it being the seventh day merely which was hallowed. From the second statement, it has been contended that God did not bless the seventh day at all, but simply the Sabbath institution. But both statements embody all the truth. God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it; and this day thus blessed and hallowed was his holy Sabbath, or rest-day. Thus the fourth commandment establishes the origin of the Sabbath at creation.

The second mention of the Sabbath in the Bible furnishes a decisive confirmation of the testimonies already adduced. On the sixth day of the week, Moses, in the wilderness of Sin, said to Israel, "To-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord."<sup>14</sup> What had been done to the seventh day since God blessed and sanctified it as his rest-day in paradise? Nothing. What did Moses do to the seventh day to make it the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord? Nothing. Moses on the sixth day simply states the fact that the morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord. The seventh day had been such ever since God blessed and hallowed the day of his rest.

The testimony of our divine Lord relative to the origin and design of the Sabbath is of peculiar importance. He is competent to testify, for he was with the father in the beginning of the creation.<sup>15</sup> "The Sabbath was made for man," said he, "not man for the Sabbath."<sup>16</sup> The following grammatical rule is worthy of notice: "A noun without an adjective is invariably taken in its broadest extension, as: Man is accountable."<sup>17</sup> The following texts will illustrate this rule, and also this statement of our Lord's: "Man lieth down and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man." "It is appointed unto men once to die."<sup>18</sup> In these texts man is used without restriction, and, therefore, all mankind are necessarily intended. The Sabbath was therefore made for the whole human family, and consequently originated with mankind. But the Saviour's language is even yet more emphatic in the original: "The Sabbath was made for THE man, not THE man for the Sabbath." This language fixes the mind on the man Adam, who was made of the dust of the ground just before the Sabbath was made for him, of the seventh day.

This is a striking confirmation of the fact already pointed out that the Sabbath was given to Adam, the head of the human family.

"The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; yet he made the Sabbath for man. "God made the Sabbath his by solemn appropriation, that he might convey it back to us under the guarantee of a divine charter, that none might rob us of it with impunity."

But is it not possible that God's act of blessing and sanctifying the seventh day did not occur at the close of creation week? May it not be mentioned then because God designed that the day of his rest should be afterward observed? Or rather, as Moses wrote the book of Genesis long after the creation, might he not insert this account of the sanctification of the seventh day with the record of the first week, though the day itself was sanctified in his own time?

It is very certain that such an interpretation of the record cannot be admitted, unless the facts in the case demand it. For it is, to say the least, a forced explanation of the language. The record in Genesis, unless this be an exception, is a plain narrative of events. Thus what God did on each day is recorded in its order down to the seventh. It is certainly doing violence to the narrative to affirm that the record respecting the seventh day is of a different character from that respecting the other six. He rested the seventh day; he sanctified the seventh day because he had rested upon it. The reason why he should sanctify the seventh day existed when his rest was closed. To say, therefore, that God did not sanctify the day at that time, but did it in the days of Moses, is not only to distort the narrative, but to affirm that he neglected to do that for which the reason existed at creation, until twenty-five hundred years after.<sup>19</sup>

But we ask that the facts be brought forward which prove that the Sabbath was sanctified in the wilderness of Sin, and not at creation. And what are the facts that show this? It is confessed that such facts are not upon record. Their existence is assumed in order to sustain the theory that the Sabbath originated at the fall of the manna, and not in paradise.

Did God sanctify the Sabbath in the wilderness of Sin? There is no intimation of such fact. On the contrary, it is mentioned at that time as something already set apart of God. On the sixth day Moses said, "To-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord."<sup>20</sup> Surely this is not the act of instituting the Sabbath, but the familiar mention of an existing fact. We pass on to Mount Sinai. Did God sanctify the Sabbath when he spoke the ten commandments? No one claims that he did. It is admitted by all that Moses spoke of it familiarly the previous month.<sup>21</sup> Does the Lord at Sinai speak of the sanctification of the Sabbath? He does; but in the very language of Genesis he goes back for the sanctification of the Sabbath, not to the wilderness of Sin, but to the creation of the world.<sup>22</sup> We ask those who hold the theory under examination, this question: If the Sabbath was not sanctified at creation, but was sanctified in the wilderness of Sin, why does the narrative in each instance<sup>23</sup> record the sanctification of the Sabbath at creation and omit all mention of such fact in the wilderness of Sin? Nay, why does the record of events in the wilderness of Sin, show that the holy Sabbath was at that time already in existence? In a word, How can a theory subversive of all the facts in the record, be maintained as the truth of God?

We have seen the Sabbath ordained of God at the close of the creation week. The object of its Author is worthy of especial attention. Why did the Creator set up this memorial in paradise? Why did he set apart from the other days of the week that day which he had employed in rest? "Because that in it," says the record, "he had rested from all his work which God created and made." A rest necessarily implies a work performed. And hence the Sabbath was ordained of God as a memorial of the work of creation. And therefore that precept of the moral law which relates to this memorial, unlike every other precept of that law, begins with the word, "Remember." The importance of this memorial will be appreciated when we learn from the Scriptures that it is the work of creation which is claimed by its Author as the great evidence of his eternal power and Godhead, and as that great fact which distinguishes him from all false gods. Thus it is written:

"He that built all things is God." "The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish from the earth, and from under these heavens."
"But the Lord is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting King."
"He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his discretion." "For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead."
"For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast." Thus "the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear."<sup>24</sup>

Such is the estimate which the Scriptures place upon the work of creation as evincing the eternal power and Godhead of the creator. The Sabbath stands as the memorial of this great work. Its observance is an act of grateful acknowledgment on the part of his intelligent creatures that he is their Creator, and that they owe all to him; and that for his pleasure they are and were created. How appropriate this observance for Adam! And when man had fallen, how important for his well being that he should "remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." He would thus have been preserved from atheism and from idolatry; for he could never forget that there was a God from whom all things derived their being; nor could he worship as God any other being than the Creator.

The seventh day, as hallowed by God in Eden, was not Jewish, but divine; it was not the memorial of the flight of Israel from Egypt, but of the Creator's rest. Nor is it true that the most distinguished Jewish writers deny the primeval origin of the Sabbath, or claim it as a Jewish memorial. We cite the historian Josephus and his learned contemporary, Philo Judaeus. Josephus, whose "Antiquities of the Jews" run parallel with the Bible from the beginning, when treating of the wilderness of Sin, makes no allusion whatever to the Sabbath, a clear proof that he had no idea that it originated in that wilderness. But when giving the account of creation, he bears the following testimony:

"Moses says that in just six days the world and all that is therein was made. And that the seventh day was a rest and a release from the labor of such operations; WHENCE it is that we celebrate a rest from our labor on that day, and call it the Sabbath; which word denotes rest in the Hebrew tongue." <sup>25</sup>

And Philo bears an emphatic testimony relative to the character of the Sabbath as a memorial. Thus he says:

"But after the whole world had been completed according to the perfect nature of the number six, the Father hallowed the day following, the seventh, praising it and calling it holy. For that day is the festival, not of one city or one country, but of all the earth; a day which alone it is right to call the day of festival for all people, and the birth-day of the world." <sup>26</sup>

Nor was the rest-day of the Lord a shadow of man's rest after his recovery from the fall. God will ever be worshiped in an understanding manner by his intelligent creatures. When therefore he set apart his rest-day to a holy use, if it was not as a memorial of his work, but as a shadow of man's redemption from the fall, the real design of the institution must have been stated, and, as a consequence, man in his unfallen state could never observe the Sabbath as a delight, but ever with deep distress, as reminding him that he was soon to apostatize from God. Nor was the holy of the Lord and honorable, one of the "carnal ordinances imposed on them until the time of reformation;" <sup>27</sup> for there could be no reformation with unfallen beings.

But man did not continue in his uprightness. Paradise was lost, and Adam was excluded from the tree of life. The curse of God fell upon the earth, and death entered by sin, and passed upon all men. <sup>28</sup> After this sad apostasy, no further mention of the Sabbath occurs until Moses on the sixth day said, "To-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord."

It is objected that there is no precept in the book of Genesis for the observance of the Sabbath, and consequently no obligation on the part of the patriarchs to observe it. There is a defect in this argument not noticed by those who use it. The book of Genesis was not a rule given to the patriarchs to walk by. On the contrary, it was written by Moses 2500 years after creation, and long after the patriarchs were dead. Consequently the fact that certain precepts were not found in Genesis is no evidence that they were not obligatory upon the patriarchs. Thus the book does not command men to love God with all their hearts, and their neighbours as themselves; nor does it prohibit idolatry, blasphemy, disobedience to parents, adultery, theft, false witness or covetousness. Who will affirm from this that the patriarchs were under no restraint in these things? As a mere record of events, written long after their occurrence, it was not necessary that the book should contain a moral code. But had the book been given to the patriarchs as a rule of life, it must of necessity have contained such a code. It is a fact worthy of especial notice that as soon as Moses reaches his own time in the book of Exodus, the whole moral law is given. The record and the people were then contemporary, and ever afterward the written law is in the hands of God's people, as a rule of life, and a complete code of moral precepts.

The argument under consideration is unsound, 1. Because based upon the supposition that the book of Genesis was the rule of life for the patriarchs; 2. Because if carried out it would release the patriarchs from every precept of the moral law except the sixth.<sup>29</sup> 3. Because the act of God in setting apart his rest-day to a holy use, as we have seen, necessarily involves the fact that he gave a precept concerning it to Adam, in whose time it was thus set apart. And hence, though the book of Genesis contains no precept concerning the Sabbath, it does contain direct evidence that such precept was given to the head and representative of the human family.

After giving the institution of the Sabbath, the book of Genesis, in its brief record of 2370 years, does not again mention it. This has been urged as ample proof that those holy men, who, during this period, were perfect, and walked with God in observance of his commandments, statutes and laws,<sup>30</sup> all lived in open profanation of that day which God had blessed and set apart to a holy use. But the book of Genesis also omits any distinct reference to the doctrine of future punishment, the resurrection of the body, the revelation of the Lord in flaming fire, and the Judgment of the great day. Does this silence prove that the patriarchs did not believe these great doctrines? Does it make them any the less sacred?

But the Sabbath is not mentioned from Moses to David, a period of five hundred years, during which it was enforced by the penalty of death. Does this prove that it was not observed during this period?<sup>31</sup> The jubilee occupied a very prominent place in the typical system, yet in the whole Bible a single instance of its observance is not recorded. What is still more remarkable, there is not on record a single instance of the observance of the great day of atonement, notwithstanding the work in the holiest on that day was the most important service connected with the worldly sanctuary. And yet the observance of the other and less important festivals of the seventh month, which are so intimately connected with the day of atonement, the one preceding it by ten days, the other following it in five, is repeatedly and particularly recorded.<sup>32</sup> It would be sophistry to argue from this silence respecting the day of atonement, when there were so many instances in which its mention was almost demanded, that that day was never observed; and yet it is actually a better argument than the similar one urged against the Sabbath from the book of Genesis.

The reckoning of time by weeks is derived from nothing in nature, but owes its existence to the divine appointment of the seventh day to a holy use in memory of the Lord's rest from the six days' work of creation.<sup>33</sup> This period of time is marked only by the recurrence of the sanctified rest-day of the Creator. That the patriarchs reckoned time by weeks and by sevens of days, is evident from several texts.<sup>34</sup> That they should retain the week and forget the Sabbath by which alone the week is marked, is not a probable conclusion. That the reckoning of the week was rightly kept is evident from the fact that in the wilderness of Sin on the sixth day the people, of their own accord, gathered a double portion of manna. And Moses said to them, "To-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord."<sup>35</sup>

The brevity of the record in Genesis causes us to overlook many facts of the deepest interest. Adam lived 930 years. How deep and absorbing the interest that must have existed in the human family to see the first man! To converse with one who had himself talked with God! To hear from his lips a description of that paradise in which he had lived! To learn from one created on the sixth day the wondrous events of the creation week! To hear from his lips the very words of the creator when he set apart his rest-day to a holy use! And to learn, alas! the sad story of the loss of paradise and the tree of life!<sup>36</sup>

It was therefore not difficult for the facts respecting the six days of creation and the sanctification of the rest-day to be diffused among mankind in the patriarchal age. Nay, it was impossible that it should be otherwise, especially among the godly. From Adam to Abraham a succession of men - probably inspired of God--preserved the knowledge of God upon earth. Thus Adam lived till Lamech, the father of Noah, was 56 years of age; Lamech lived till Shem, the son of Noah, was 93; Shem lived till Abraham was 150 years of age. Thus are we brought down to Abraham, the father of the faithful. Of him it is recorded that he obeyed God's voice and kept his charge, his commandments, his statutes, and his laws. And of him the Most High bears the following testimony: "I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment."<sup>37</sup> The knowledge of God was preserved in the family of Abraham; and we shall next find the Sabbath familiarly mentioned among his posterity, as an existing institution.

---

<sup>1</sup> "On the sixth day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day," &c., is the reading of the Septuagint, the Syriac, and the Samaritan; "and this should be considered the genuine reading," says Dr. A. Clarke. See his Commentary on Gen.2.

<sup>2</sup> Gen.2:2; Ex.31:17.

<sup>3</sup> Isa.40:28.

<sup>4</sup> Gen.2:3; Ex.20:11. In an anonymous work entitled "Morality of the Fourth Commandment," London, 1652, but not the same with that of Dr. Twisse, of the same title, is the following striking passage: "The Hebrew root for seven, signifies fullness, perfection, and the Jews held many mysteries to be in the number seven: so John in his Apocalypse useth much that number. As, seven churches, seven stars, seven spirits, seven candlesticks, seven angels, seven seals, seven trumpets; and we no sooner meet with a seventh day, but it is blessed; no sooner with a seventh man [Gen.5:24; Jude 14], but he is translated." Page 7.

<sup>5</sup> Webster's Unabridged Dictionary on the words sanctify and hallow. Ed. 1859. The revised edition edition of 1864 gives this definition: "To make sacred or holy; to set apart to a holy or religious use; to consecrate by appropriate rites; to hallow. God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it. Gen.2:3. Moses . . . sanctified Aaron and his garments. Lev.8:30." Worcester defines it thus: "To ordain or set apart to sacred ends; to consecrate; to hallow. God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it. Gen.2:3."

<sup>6</sup> Gen.2:15; 1:28.

<sup>7</sup> Morality of the Fourth Commandment, pp. 56, 57, London, 1641.

<sup>8</sup> Hebrew Lexicon, p. 914, ed. 1854.

<sup>9</sup> Josh.20:7; Joel 1:14; 2:15; 2Kings10:20,21; Zeph.1:7, margin.

<sup>10</sup> Ex.19:12,23.

<sup>11</sup> Dr. Lange's Commentary speaks on this point thus, in vol. i, p. 197: "If we had no other passage than this of Gen.2:3, there would be no difficulty in deducing from it a precept for the universal observance of a Sabbath, or seventh day, to be devoted to God, as holy time, by all of that race for whom the earth and its nature were specially prepared. The first men must have known it. The words, 'He hallowed it,' can have no meaning otherwise. They would be a blank unless in reference to some who were required to keep it holy." Dr. Nicholas Bound, in his "True Doctrine of the Sabbath," London, 1606, page 7, thus states the antiquity of the Sabbath precept: "The first commandment of Sabbath was no more then first given when it was pronounced from Heaven by the Lord, than any other one of the moral precepts, nay, that it hath so much antiquity as the seventh day hath being; for, so soon as the day was, so soon was it sanctified, that we might know that, as it came in with the first man, so it must not go out but with the last man; and as it was in the beginning of the world, so it must continue to the end of the same; and, as the first seventh day was sanctified, so must the last be. And this is that which one saith, that the Sabbath was commanded by God, and the seventh day was sanctified of him even from the beginning of the world; where (the latter words expounding the former) he sheweth that, when God did sanctify it, then also he commanded it to be kept holy; and therefore look how ancient the sanctification of the day is, the same antiquity also as the commandment of keeping it holy; for they two are all one."

<sup>12</sup> Ex.20:8-11.

<sup>13</sup> Buck's Theological Dictionary, article, Sabbath; Calmet's Dictionary, article, Sabbath.

<sup>14</sup> Ex.16:22,23.

<sup>15</sup> John 1:1-3; Gen.1:1,26; Col.1:13-16.

<sup>16</sup> Mark 2:27.

<sup>17</sup> Barrett's Principles of English Grammar, p. 29.

<sup>18</sup> Job 14:12; 1 Cor.10:13; Heb.9:27.

<sup>19</sup> Dr. Twisse illustrates the absurdity of that view which makes the first observance of the Sabbath in memory of creation to have begun some 2500 years after that event: "We read that when the Ilienses, inhabitants of Ilium, called anciently by the name of Troy, sent an embassy to Tiberius, to condole the death of his father Augustus, he, considering the unseasonableness thereof, it being a long time after his death, requited them accordingly, saying that he was sorry for their heaviness also, having lost so renowned a knight as Hector was, to wit, above a thousand years before, in the wars of Troy." - Morality of the Fourth Commandment, p. 198.

<sup>20</sup> Ex.16:23.

<sup>21</sup> Ex.16.

<sup>22</sup> Ex.20:8-11.

<sup>23</sup> Compare Gen.2:1-3; Ex.20:8-11.

<sup>24</sup> Heb.3:4; Jer.10:10-12; Rom.1:20; Ps.33:9; Heb.11:3.

<sup>25</sup> Antiquities of the Jews, b. i. chap. i. sect. 1.

<sup>26</sup> Works, vol. i. The Creation of the World, sect. 30.

<sup>27</sup> Isa.58:13,14; Heb.9:10.

<sup>28</sup> Gen.3; Rom.5:12.

<sup>29</sup> Gen.9:5,7.

<sup>30</sup> Gen.5:24; 6:9; 26:5.

<sup>31</sup> See the beginning of chap. viii. of this work.

<sup>32</sup> Ezra.3:1-6; Neh.8:2, 9-12, 14-18; 1Kings 8:2,65; 2Chron.5:3; 7:8,9; John 7:2-14,37.

<sup>33</sup> "The week, another primeval measure, is not a natural measure of time, as some astronomers and chronologers have supposed, indicated by the phases or quarters of the moon. It was originated by divine appointment at the creation - six days of labor and one of rest being wisely appointed for man's physical and spiritual well-being." - Bliss' Sacred Chronology, p. 6; Hale's Chronology, vol. i. p. 19. "Seven has been the ancient and honored number among the nations of the earth. They have measured their time by weeks from the beginning. The original of this was the Sabbath of God, as Moses has given the reasons of it in his writings." - Brief Dissertation on the first three Chapters of Genesis, by Dr. Coleman, p. 26.

<sup>34</sup> Gen.29:27,28; 8:10,12; 7:4,10; 50:10; Ex.7:25; Job 2:13.

<sup>35</sup> Ex.16:22,23.

<sup>36</sup> The interest to see the first man is thus stated: "Sem and Seth were in great honor among men, and so was Adam above every living thing in the creation." Ecclesiasticus 49:16.

<sup>37</sup> Gen.26:5; 18:19.

CHAPTER 3

THE SABBATH COMMITTED TO THE HEBREWS

---

Object of this chapter - Total apostasy of the human family in the antediluvian age - Destruction of mankind - The family of Noah spared - Second apostasy of mankind in the patriarchal age - The apostate nations left to their own ways - The family of Abraham chosen - Separated from the rest of mankind - Their history - Their relation to God - The Sabbath in existence when they came forth from Egypt - Analysis of Ex.16 - The Sabbath committed to the Hebrews.

---

We are now to trace the history of divine truth for many ages in almost the exclusive connection with the family of Abraham. That we may vindicate the truth from the reproach of pertaining only to the Hebrews - a reproach often urged against the Sabbath - and justify the dealings of God with mankind in leaving to their own ways the apostate nations, let us carefully examine the Bible for the reasons which directed divine Providence in the choice of Abraham's family as the depositaries of divine truth.

The antediluvian world had been highly favored of God. The period of life extended to each generation was twelve-fold that of the present age of man. For almost one thousand years, Adam, who had conversed with God in paradise, had been with them. Before the death of Adam, Enoch began his holy walk of three hundred years, and then he was translated that he should not see death. This testimony to the piety of Enoch was a powerful testimony to the antediluvians in behalf of truth and righteousness. Moreover the Spirit of God strove with mankind; but the perversity of man triumphed over all the gracious restraints of the Holy Spirit. "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." Even the sons of God joined in the general apostasy. At last a single family was all that remained of the worshipers of the Most High.<sup>1</sup>

Then came the deluge, sweeping the world of its guilty inhabitants with the besom of destruction.<sup>2</sup> So terrible a display of divine justice might well be thought sufficient to restrain impiety for ages. Surely the family of Noah could not soon forget this awful lesson. But alas, revolt and apostasy speedily followed, and men turned from God to the worship of idols. Against the divine mandate separating the human family into nations,<sup>3</sup> mankind united in one great act of rebellion in the plain of Shinar. "And they said, Go to, let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth." Then God confounded them in their impiety and scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth.<sup>4</sup> Men did not like to retain God in their knowledge; wherefore God gave them over to a reprobate mind, and suffered them to change the truth of God into a lie, and to worship and serve the creature rather than the Creator. Such was the origin of idolatry and of the apostasy of the Gentiles.<sup>5</sup>

In the midst of this wide-spread apostasy on man was found whose heart was faithful with God. Abraham was chosen from an idolatrous family, as the depositary of divine truth, the father of the faithful, the heir of the world, and friend of God.<sup>6</sup> When the worshipers of God were found alone in the family of Noah, God gave up the rest of mankind to perish in the flood. Now that the worshipers of God are again reduced almost to a single family, God gives up the idolatrous nations to their own ways, and takes the family of Abraham as his peculiar heritage. "For I know him," said God, "that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to justice and judgment."<sup>7</sup> That they might preserve in the earth the knowledge of divine truth and the memory and worship of the Most High, they were to be a people walled off from all mankind, and dwelling in a land of their own. That they might thus be separated from the heathen around, God gave to Abraham the rite of circumcision, and afterward to his posterity the whole ceremonial law.<sup>8</sup> But they could not possess the land designed for them until the iniquity of the Amorites, its inhabitants, was full that they should be thrust out before them. The horror of great darkness, and the smoking seen by Abraham in vision, foreshadowed the iron furnace and the bitter servitude of Egypt.

The family of Abraham must go down thither. Brief prosperity and long and terrible oppression follow.<sup>9</sup> At length the power of the oppressor is broken, and the people of God are delivered. The expiration of four hundred and thirty years from the promise to Abraham marks the hour of deliverance to his posterity.<sup>10</sup> The nation of Israel is brought forth from Egypt as God's peculiar treasure, that he may give them his Sabbath, and his law, and himself. The psalmist testifies that God "brought forth his people with joy, and his chosen with gladness: and gave them the lands of the heathen: and they inherited the labor of the people: that they might observe his statutes and keep his laws. And the Most High says, "I am the Lord which hallow you, that brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God."<sup>11</sup> Not that the commandments of God, his Sabbath and himself, had no prior existence, nor that the people were ignorant of the true God and his law; for the Sabbath was appointed to a holy use before the fall of man; and the commandments of God, his statutes and his laws, were kept by Abraham; and the Israelites themselves, when some of them had violated the Sabbath, were reprov'd by the question, "How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?"<sup>12</sup> And as to the Most High, the psalmist exclaims, "Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God."<sup>13</sup> But there must be a formal public espousal of the people by God, and of his law and Sabbath and himself by the people.<sup>14</sup> But neither the Sabbath, nor the law, nor the great Law-giver, by their connection with the Hebrews, became Jewish. The Law-giver indeed became the God of Israel,<sup>15</sup> and what Gentile shall refuse him adoration for that reason? but the Sabbath still remained the Sabbath of the Lord,<sup>16</sup> and the law continued to be the law of the Most High.

In the month following their passage through the Red Sea, the Hebrews came into the wilderness of Sin. It is at this point in his narrative that Moses for the second time mentions the sanctified rest-day of the Creator. The people murmured for bread:

"Then said the Lord unto Moses, Behold, I will rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day, that I may prove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no. And it shall come to pass, that on the sixth they shall prepare that which they bring in; and it shall be twice as much as they gather daily. . . . I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel: speak unto them, saying, At even ye shall eat flesh, and in the morning ye shall be filled with bread; and ye shall know that I am the Lord your God. And it came to pass, that at even the quails came up, and covered the camp; and in the morning the dew lay round about the host. And when the dew that lay was gone up, behold, upon the face of the wilderness there lay a small round thing, as small as the hoar frost on the ground. And when the children of Israel saw it, they said one to another, It is manna; for they wist not what it was. And Moses said unto them, This is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat. This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded, Gather of it every man according to his eating, an omer for every man, according to the number of your persons; take ye every man for them which are in his tents. And the children of Israel did so, and gathered, some more, some less. And when they did mete it with an omer, he that gathered much had nothing left over, and he that gathered little had no lack; they gathered every man according to his eating. And Moses said, Let no man leave of it till the morning. Notwithstanding they hearkened not unto Moses; but some of them left of it until the morning and it bred worms, and stank; and Moses was wroth with them. And they gathered it every morning, every man according to his eating; and when the sun waxed hot, it melted. And it came to pass, that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread,<sup>17</sup> two omers for one man; and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moses. And he said unto them, This is that which the Lord hath said,<sup>18</sup> To-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord: bake that which ye will bake to-day, and seethe that ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over lay up to be kept until the morning. And they laid it up till the morning, as Moses bade; and it did not stink, neither was there any worm therein. And Moses said, Eat that to-day; for to-day is a Sabbath unto the Lord:<sup>19</sup> to-day ye shall not find it in the field. Six days ye shall gather it; but on the seventh day, which is the Sabbath, in it there shall be none. And it came to pass, that there went out some of the people on the seventh day for to gather, and they found none. And the Lord said unto Moses, How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws? See, for that the Lord hath given you the Sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days; abide ye every man in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day. So the people rested on the seventh day."<sup>20</sup>

This narrative shows, 1. That God had a law and commandments prior to the giving of the manna. 2. That God in giving his people bread from heaven designed to prove them respecting his law. 3. That in this law was the holy Sabbath; for the test relative to walking in the law pertained directly to the Sabbath; and when God said, "How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?" it was the Sabbath which they had violated. 4. That in proving the people respecting this existing law, Moses gave no new precept respecting the Sabbath, but remained silent relative to the preparation for the Sabbath until after the people, of their own accord, had gathered a double portion on the sixth day. 5. That by this act the people proved not only that they were not ignorant of the Sabbath, but that they were disposed to observe it.<sup>21</sup> 6. That the reckoning of the week, traces of which appear through the patriarchal age,<sup>22</sup> had been rightly kept, for the people knew when the sixth day had arrived. 7. That had there been any doubt existing on that point, the fall of the manna on the six days, the withholding of it on the seventh, and the preservation of that needed for the Sabbath over that day, must have settled that point incontrovertibly.<sup>23</sup> 8. That there was no act of instituting the Sabbath in the wilderness of Sin; for God did not then make it his rest-day, nor did he then bless and sanctify the day. On the contrary, the record show that the seventh day was already the sanctified rest-day of the Lord.<sup>24</sup> 9. That the obligation to observe the Sabbath existed and was known before the fall of the manna. For the language used implies the existence of such an obligation, but does not contain a new enactment until after some of the people had violated the Sabbath. Thus God says to Moses, "On the sixth day they shall prepare that which they bring in," but he does not speak of the seventh. And on the sixth day Moses says, "To-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord," but he does not command them to observe it. On the seventh day he says that it is the Sabbath, and that they should find no manna in the field. "Six days ye shall gather it; but on the seventh day, which is the Sabbath, in it there shall be none." But in all this there is no precept given, yet the existence of such a precept is plainly implied. 10. That when some of the people violated the Sabbath they were reproved in language which plainly implies a previous transgression of this precept. "How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?" 11. And that this rebuke of the Law-giver restrained for the time the transgression of the people.

"See, for that the Lord hath given you the Sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days."<sup>25</sup> abide ye every man in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day."<sup>26</sup> As a special trust, God committed the Sabbath to the Hebrews. It was now given them, not now made for them. It was made for man at the close of the first week of time; but all other nations having turned from the Creator to the worship of idols, it is given the Hebrew people. Nor does this prove that all the Hebrews had hitherto disregarded it. For Christ uses the same language respecting circumcision. Thus he says, Moses therefore gave unto you circumcision; not because it is of Moses, but of the fathers."<sup>27</sup> Yet God had enjoined that ordinance upon Abraham and his family four hundred years previous to this gift of it by Moses, and it had been retained by them.<sup>28</sup>

The language, "The Lord hath given you the Sabbath," implies a solemn act of committing a treasure to their trust. How was this done? No act of instituting the Sabbath here took place. No precept enjoining its observance was given until some of the people violated it, when it was given in the form of a reproof; which evinced a previous obligation, and that they were transgressing an existing law. And this view is certainly strengthened by the fact that no explanation of the institution was given to the people; a fact which indicates that some knowledge of the Sabbath was already in their possession.

But how then did God give them the Sabbath? He did this, first, by delivering them from the abject bondage of Egypt, where they were a nation of slaves. And second, by providing them food in such a manner as to impose the strongest obligation to keep the Sabbath. Forty years did he give them bread from heaven, sending it for six days, and withholding it on the seventh, and preserving food for them over the Sabbath. Thus was the Sabbath especially intrusted to them.

As a gift to the Hebrews, the Creator's great memorial became a sign between God and themselves. "I gave them my Sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them." As a sign, its object is stated to be, to make known the true God; and we are told why it was such a sign. "It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed."<sup>29</sup> The institution itself signified that God created the heavens and the earth in six days and rested on the seventh. Its observance by the people signified that the Creator was their God. How full of meaning was this sign!

The Sabbath was a sign between God and children of Israel, because they alone were the worshipers of the Creator. All other nations had turned from him to "the gods that have not made the heavens and the earth."<sup>30</sup> For this reason the memorial of the great Creator was committed to the Hebrews, and it became a sign between the Most High and themselves. Thus was the Sabbath a golden link uniting the Creator and his worshipers.

1 Gen.2-6; Heb.11:4-7; 1Pet.3:20; 2Pet.2:5.

2 Gen.7; Matt.24:37-39; Luke 17:26,27; 2Pet.3:5,6.

3 Deut.32:7,8; Acts 17:26.

4 Gen.11:1-9; Josephus' Ant., b. i. chap. iv. This took place in the days of Peleg, who was born about one hundred years after the flood. Gen.10:25, compared with 11:10-16; Ant., b. i. chap. 6. sect. 4.

5 Rom.1:18-32; Acts 14:16,17; 17:29,30.

6 Gen.12:1-3; Josh.24:2,3,14; Neh.9:7,8; Rom.4:13-17; 2Chron.20:7; Isa.41:8; James 2:23.

7 Gen.18:19.

8 Gen.17:9-14; 34:14; Acts 10:28; 11:2,3; Eph.2:12-19; Num23:9; Deut.33:27,28.

9 Gen.15; Ex.1-5; Deut.4:20.

10 Ex.12:29-42; Gal.3:17.

11 Ps.105:43-45; Lev.22:32,33; Num.15:41.

12 Gen.2:2,3; 26:5; Ex.16:4,27,28; 18:16.

13 Ps.90:2.

14 Ex.19:3-8, 24:3-8; Jer.3:14, compared with last clause of Jer.31:32.

15 Ex.20:2; 24:10.

16 Ex.20:10; Deut.5:14; Neh.9:14.

17 On this verse Dr. A. Clarke thus comments:- "On the sixth day they gathered twice as much - This they did that they might have a provision for the Sabbath."

18 The Douay Bible reads: "To-morrow is the rest of the Sabbath sanctified unto the Lord." Dr. Clarke comments as follows upon this text: "To-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath. There is nothing either in the text or context that seems to intimate that the Sabbath was now first given to the Israelites, as some have supposed; on the contrary, it is here spoken of as being perfectly well known, from its having been generally observed. The commandment, it is true, may be considered as being now renewed; because they might have supposed, that in their unsettled state in the wilderness, they might have been exempted from the observance of it. Thus we find, 1. That when God finished his creation he instituted the Sabbath; 2. When he brought the people out of Egypt, he insisted on the strict observance of it; 3. When he gave the LAW, he made it a tenth part of the whole: such importance has this institution in the eyes of the Supreme Being!" Richard Baxter, a famous divine of the seventeenth century, and a decided advocate of the abrogation of the fourth commandment, in his "Divine Appointment of the Lord's Day," thus clearly states the origin of the Sabbath: Why should God begin two thousand years after [the creation of the world] to give men a Sabbath upon the reason of his rest from the creation of it, if he had never called man to that commemoration before? And it is certain that the Sabbath was observed at the falling of the manna before the giving of the law; and let any considering Christian judge. . . . 1. Whether the not falling of the manna, or the rest of God after the creation, was like to be the original reason of the Sabbath. 2. And whether if it had been the first, it would not have been said, Remember to keep holy the Sabbath-day; for on six days the manna fell, and not on the seventh; rather than 'for in six days God created heaven and earth, &c., and rested the seventh day.' And it is casually added, 'Wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath-day, and hallowed it.' Nay, consider whether this annexed reason intimates not that the day on this ground being hallowed before, therefore it was that God sent not down the manna on that day, and that he prohibited the people from seeking it." - Practical Works, Vol. iii, p. 784. ed. 1707.

19 The Douay Bible reads: "Because it is the Sabbath of the Lord."

20 Ex.16.

21 It has indeed been asserted that God by a miracle equalized the portion of every one on five days, and doubled the portion of each on the sixth, so that no act of the people has any bearing on the Sabbath. But the equal portion of each on the five days was not thus understood by Paul. He says: "But by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want; that there may be equality; as it is written, He that gathered much had nothing over; and he that had gathered little had not lack." 2Cor.8:14,15. And that the double portion on the sixth day was the act of the people, is affirmed by Moses. He says that "on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread." Verse 22.

22 Gen.7:4,10; 8:10,12,; 29:27,28; 50:10; Ex.7:25; Job 2:13.

23 By this three-fold miracle, occurring every week for forty years, the great Law-giver distinguished his hallowed day. The people were therefore admirably prepared to listen to the fourth commandment enjoining the observance of the very day on which he had rested. Ex.16:35; Josh.5:12; Ex.20:8-11.

24 The twelfth chapter of Exodus relates the origin of the passover. It is in striking contrast with Ex.16, which is supposed to give the origin of the Sabbath. If the reader will compare the two chapters he will see the difference between the origin of an institution as given in Ex.12, and a familiar reference to an existing institution as in Ex.16. If he will also compare Gen.2 with Ex.12, he will see that the one gives the origin of the Sabbath in the same manner that the other gives the origin of the passover.

25 This implies, first, the fall of a larger quantity on that day, and second, its preservation for the wants of the Sabbath.

26 This must refer to going out for manna, as the connection implies; for religious assemblies on the Sabbath were commanded and observed. Lev.23:3; Mark 1:21; Luke 4:16; Acts 1:12; 15:21.

27 John 7:22.

28 Gen. 17; 34; Ex.4. Moses is said to have given circumcision to the Hebrews; yet it is a singular fact that his first mention of that ordinance is purely incidental, and plainly implies an existing knowledge of it on their part. Thus it is written: "This is the ordinance of the passover: There shall no stranger eat thereof; but every man's servant that is bought for money, when thou hast circumcised him, then shall he eat thereof." Ex.12:43,44. And in like manner when the Sabbath was given to Israel, that people were not ignorant of the sacred institution.

29 Eze.20:12; Ex.31:17.

30 Jer.10:10-12.

---

CHAPTER 4

THE FOURTH COMMANDMENT

---

The holy One upon Mount Sinai - Three great gifts bestowed upon the Hebrews - The Sabbath proclaimed by the voice of God - Position assigned it in the moral law - Origin of the Sabbath - Definite character of the commandment - Revolution of the earth upon its axis - Name of the Sabbatic institution - Seventh day of the commandment identical with the seventh day of the New Testament week - Testimony of Nehemiah - Moral obligation of the fourth commandment.

---

And now we approach the record of that sublime event, the personal descent of the Lord upon mount Sinai.<sup>1</sup> The sixteenth chapter of Exodus, as we have seen, is remarkable for the fact that God gave to Israel the Sabbath; the nineteenth chapter, for the fact that God gave himself to that people in solemnly espousing them as a holy nation unto himself; while the twentieth chapter will be found remarkable for the act of the Most High in giving to Israel his law.

It is customary to speak against the Sabbath and the law as Jewish, because thus given to Israel. As well might the Creator be spoken against, who brought them out of Egypt to be their God, and who styles himself the God of Israel.<sup>2</sup> The Hebrews were honored by being thus intrusted with the Sabbath and the law, not the Sabbath and the law and the Creator rendered Jewish by this connection. The sacred writers speak of the high exaltation of Israel in being thus intrusted with the law of God.

"He sheweth his word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation: and as for his judgments, they have not known them. Praise ye the Lord!" "What advantage then hath the Jew? or what profit is there of circumcision? Much every way: chiefly, because that unto them were committed the oracles of God." "Who are Israelites; to whom pertaineth the adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the giving of the law, and the service of God, and the promises; whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, who is over all, God blessed forever. Amen."<sup>3</sup>

After the Most High had solemnly espoused the people unto himself, as his peculiar treasure in the earth,<sup>4</sup> they were brought forth out of the camp to met with God. "And Mount Sinai was altogether on a smoke, because the Lord descended upon it in fire: and the smoke thereof ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mount quaked greatly." Out of the midst of this fire did God proclaim the ten words of his law.<sup>5</sup>

The fourth of these precepts is the grand law of the Sabbath. Thus spake the great Lawgiver:-

"Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."

The estimate which the Law-giver placed upon his Sabbath is seen in that he deemed it worthy of a place in his code of ten commandments, thus causing it to stand in the midst of nine immutable moral precepts. Nor is this to thought a small honor that the Most High, naming one by one the great principles of morality until all are given, and he adds no more,<sup>6</sup> should include in their number the observance of his hallowed rest-day. This precept is expressly given to enforce the observance of the Creator's great memorial; and unlike all the others, this one traces its obligation back to the creation, where that memorial was ordained.

The Sabbath is to be remembered and kept holy because that God hallowed it, i.e., appointed it to a holy use, at the close of the first week. And this sanctification or hallowing of the rest-day, when the first seventh day of time was past, was the solemn act of setting apart the seventh day for time to come in memory of the Creator's rest. Thus the fourth commandment reaches back and embraces the institution of the Sabbath in paradise, while the Sanctification of the Sabbath in paradise extends forward to all coming time. The narrative respecting the wilderness of Sin admirably cements the union of the two. Thus in the wilderness of Sin, before the fourth commandment was given, stands the Sabbath, holy to the Lord, with an existing obligation to observe it, though no commandment in that narrative creates the obligation. This obligation is derived from the same source as the fourth commandment, namely, the sanctification of the Sabbath in paradise, showing that it was an existing duty, and not a new precept. For it should never be forgotten that the fourth commandment does not trace its obligation to the wilderness of Sin, but to the creation; a decisive proof that the Sabbath did not originate in the wilderness of Sin.

The fourth commandment is remarkably definite. It embraces, first, a precept: "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy;" second, and explanation of this precept: "Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates;" third, the reasons on which the precept is based, embracing the origin of the institution, and the very acts by which it was made, and enforcing all by the example<sup>7</sup> of the Law-giver himself: "for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."

The rest-day of the Lord is thus distinguished from the six days on which he labored. The blessing and sanctification pertain to the day of the Creator's rest. There can be, therefore, no indefiniteness in the precept. It is not merely one day in seven, but that day in the seven on which the Creator rested, and upon which he placed his blessing, namely, the seventh day.<sup>8</sup> And this day is definitely pointed out in the name given it by God: "The seventh day is the Sabbath [i.e., the rest-day] of the Lord thy God."

That the seventh day in the fourth commandment is the seventh day of the New Testament week may be plainly proved. In the record of our Lord's burial, Luke writes thus:

"And that day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on. And the women also which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulcher, and how his body was laid. And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment. Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulcher, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them."<sup>9</sup>

Luke testifies that these women kept "the Sabbath day according to the commandment."

The Commandment says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." This day thus observed was the last or seventh day of the week, for the following<sup>10</sup> day was the first day of the week. Hence the seventh day of the commandment is the seventh day of the New Testament week.

The testimony of Nehemiah is deeply interesting. "Thou camest down also upon Mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments: and madest known unto them thy holy Sabbath, and commandedst them precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of Moses thy servant."<sup>11</sup> It is remarkable that God is said to have made known the Sabbath when he thus came down upon the mount; for the children of Israel had the Sabbath in possession when they came to Sinai. This language must therefore refer to that complete unfolding of the Sabbatic institution which is given in the fourth commandment. And mark the expression: "Madest known<sup>12</sup> unto them thy holy Sabbath;" not madest the Sabbath for them: language which plainly implies its previous existence, and which cites the mind back to the Creator's rest for the origin of the institution.<sup>13</sup>

The moral obligation of the fourth commandment which is so often denied may be clearly shown by reference to the origin of all things. God created the world and gave existence to man upon it. To him he gave life and breath, and all things. Man therefore owes everything to God. Every faculty of his mind, every power of his being, all his strength and all his time belong of right to the Creator. It was therefore the benevolence of the Creator that gave to man six days for his own wants. And in setting apart the seventh day to a holy use in memory of his own rest, the Most High was reserving unto himself one of the seven days, when he could rightly claim all as his. The six days therefore are the gift of God to man, to be rightly employed in secular affairs, not the seventh day, the gift of man to God. The fourth Commandment, therefore, does not require man to give something of his own to God, but it does require that man should not appropriate to himself that which God has reserved for his own worship. To observe this day then is to render to God of the things that are his; to appropriate it to ourselves is simply to rob God.

---

1 That the Lord was there in person with his angels, see besides the narrative in Ex.19:20; 32-34, the following testimonies: Deut.33:2; Judges 5:5; Nehemiah 9:6-13; Ps.68:17.

2 Ex.24:10; Lev.22:32,33; Num.15:41; Isa.41:17.

3 Ps.147:19,20; Rom.3:1,2; 9:4,5. The following from the pen of Mr. Wm. Miller presents the subject in a clear light: "I say, and believe I am supported by the Bible, that the moral law was never given to the Jews as a people exclusively; but they were for a season the keepers of it in charge. And through them the law, oracles, and testimony, have been handed down to us. See Paul's clear reasoning in Rom. chapters 2, 3, and 4, on that point." - Miller's Life and Views, p. 161.

4 Ex.19; Deut.7:6; 14:2; 2Sam.7:23; 1Kings 8:53; Amos 3:1,2.

5 Ex.20:1-17; 34:28, margin; Deut.5:4-22; 10:4, margin.

6 Deut.5:22

7 He who created the world on the first day of the week, and completed its organization in six days, rested on the seventh day, and was refreshed. Gen.1; 2; Ex.31:17.

8 To this, however, it is objected that in consequence of the revolution of the earth on its axis, the day begins earlier in the East than with us; and hence that there is no definite seventh day to the world of mankind. To suit such objectors, the earth ought not to revolve. But in that case, so far from removing the difficulty, there would be no seventh day at all; for one side of the globe would have perpetual day and the other side perpetual night. The truth is, everything depends upon the revolution of the earth. God made the Sabbath for man [Mark 2:27]; he made man to dwell on all the face of the earth [Acts 17:26]; he caused the earth to revolve on its axis that it might measure off the days of the week; causing that the sun should shine of the earth, as it revolves from west to east, thus causing the day to go round the world from east to west. Seven of these revolutions constitute a week; the seventh one brings the Sabbath to all the world.

9 Luke 23: 54-56; 24:1.

10 See also Matt.28:1; Mark 16:1,2.

11 Neh.9,13,14.

12 This expression is strikingly illustrated in the statement of Eze.20:5, where God is said to have made himself known unto Israel in Egypt. This language cannot mean that the people were ignorant of the true God, however wicked some of them might be, for they had been God's peculiar people from the days of Abraham. Ex.2:23-25; 3:6,7; 4:31. The language implies the prior existence both of the Law-giver and of his Sabbath, when it is said that they were "made known" to his people.

13 It should never be forgotten that the term Sabbath day signifies rest-day; that the Sabbath of the Lord is the rest-day of the Lord; and hence that the expression, "Thy holy Sabbath," refers the mind to the Creator's rest-day, and to his act of blessing and hallowing it.

---

CHAPTER 5

THE SABBATH WRITTEN BY THE FINGER OF GOD

---

Classification of the precepts given through Moses - The Sabbath renewed - Solemn ratification of the covenant between God and Israel - Moses called up to receive the law which God had written upon stone - The ten commandments probably proclaimed upon the Sabbath - Events of the forty days - The Sabbath becomes a sign between God and Israel - The penalty of death - The tables of testimony given to Moses - And broken when he saw the idolatry of the people - The idolaters punished - Moses goes up to renew the tables - The Sabbath again enjoined - The tables given again - The ten commandments were the testimony of God - Who wrote them - Three distinguished honors which pertain to the Sabbath - The ten commandments a complete code - Relation of the fourth commandment to the atonement - Valid reason why God himself should write that law which was placed beneath the mercy-seat.

---

When the voice of the Holy One had ceased, "the people stood afar off, and Moses drew near unto the thick darkness where God was." A brief interview follows<sup>1</sup> in which God gives to Moses a series of precepts, which, as a sample of the statutes given through him, may be classified thus: Ceremonial precepts, pointing to the good things to come; judicial precepts, intended for the civil government of the nation; and moral precepts, stating anew in other forms the ten commandments. In this brief interview the Sabbath is not forgotten:

"Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest; that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid, and the stranger, may be refreshed."<sup>2</sup>

This scripture furnishes incidental proof that the Sabbath was made for mankind, and for those creatures that share the labors of man. The stranger and the foreigner must keep it, and it was for their refreshment.<sup>3</sup> But the same persons could not partake of the passover until they were made members of the Hebrew church by circumcision.<sup>4</sup>

When Moses had returned unto the people, he repeated all the words of the Lord. With one voice all the people exclaim, "All the words which the Lord hath said will we do." Then Moses wrote all the words of the Lord. "And he took the book of the covenant and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient." Then Moses "sprinkled both the book and all the people, saying, This is the blood of the testament which God hath enjoined unto you."<sup>5</sup>

The way was thus prepared for God to bestow a second signal honor upon his law:

"And the Lord said unto Moses, Come up to me into the mount, and be there: and I will give thee tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that thou mayest teach them. . . . And Moses went up into the mount, and a cloud covered the mount. And the glory of the Lord abode upon Mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it six days: and the seventh day he called unto Moses out of the midst of the cloud."<sup>6</sup>

And the sight of the glory of the Lord was like devouring fire on the top of the mount in the eyes of the children of Israel. And Moses went into the midst of the cloud, and gat him up into the mount; and Moses was in the mount forty days and forty nights."<sup>7</sup>

During this forty days God gave to Moses a pattern of the ark in which to place the law that he had written upon stone, and of the mercy-seat to place over that law, and of the sanctuary in which to deposit the ark. He also ordained the priesthood, which was to minister in the sanctuary before the ark.<sup>8</sup> These things being ordained, and the Law-giver about to commit his law as written by himself into the hands of Moses, he again enjoins the Sabbath:

"And the Lord spake unto Moses saying, Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep; for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you: every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death; for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people. Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the Sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed. And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God."<sup>9</sup>

This should be compared with the testimony of Ezekiel, speaking in the name of God:

"I gave them my statutes, and showed them my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them. Moreover also I gave them my Sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them. . . . I am the Lord your God: walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; and hallow my Sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God."<sup>10</sup>

It will be observed that neither of these scriptures teach that the Sabbath was made for Israel, nor yet do they teach that it was made after the Hebrews came out of Egypt. In neither of these particulars do they even seem to contradict those texts that place the institution of the Sabbath at creation. But we do learn, 1. That it was God's act of giving to the Hebrews his Sabbath that made it a sign between them and himself. "I gave them my Sabbaths TO BE a sign between me and them." This act of committing to them the Sabbath has been noticed already.<sup>11</sup> 2. That it was to be a sign between God and the Hebrews, "that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them." Wherever the word LORD in the Old Testament is in small capitals, as in the texts under consideration, it is in the Hebrew, Jehovah. The Sabbath then as a sign signified that it was Jehovah, i.e., the infinite, self-existent God, who had sanctified them. To sanctify is to separate, set apart, or appoint, to a holy, sacred or religious use.<sup>12</sup> That the Hebrew nation had thus been set apart in the most remarkable manner from all mankind, was sufficiently evident. But who was it that had thus separated them from all other people? As a gracious answer to this important question, God gave to the Hebrews his own hallowed rest-day. But how could the great memorial of the Creator determine such a question? Listen to the words of the Most High: "Verily my Sabbaths," i.e., my rest-days, "ye shall keep; for it is a sign between me and you. . . . It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed." The Sabbath as a sign between God and Israel, was a perpetual testimony that he who had separated them from all mankind as his peculiar treasure in the earth, was that Being who had created the heavens and the earth in six days and rested on the seventh. It was therefore the strongest possible assurance that he who sanctified them was indeed Jehovah.

From the days of Abraham God had set apart the Hebrews. He who had previously borne no local, national or family name, did from that time until the end of his covenant relation with the Hebrew race, take to himself such titles as seemed to show him to be their God alone. From his choice of Abraham and his family forward he designates himself as the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob; the God of the Hebrews, and the God of Israel.<sup>13</sup> He brought Israel out of Egypt to be their God,<sup>14</sup> and at Sinai did join himself to them in solemn espousal. He did thus set apart or sanctify unto himself the Hebrews, because that all other nations had given themselves to idolatry. Thus the God of Heaven and earth condescended to give himself to a single race, and to set them apart from all mankind. It should be observed that it was not the Sabbath which had set Israel apart from all other nations, but it was the idolatry of all other nations that caused God to set the Hebrews apart for himself; and that God gave to Israel the Sabbath which he had hallowed for mankind at creation as the most expressive sign that he who thus sanctified them was indeed the living God.

It was the act of God in giving his Sabbath to the Israelites that rendered it a sign between them and himself. But the Sabbath did not derive its existence from being thus given to the Hebrews; for it was the ancient Sabbath of the Lord when given to them, and we have seen<sup>15</sup> that it was not given by a new commandment. On the contrary, it rested at that time upon existing obligation. But it was the providence of God in behalf of the Hebrews, first in rescuing them from abject servitude, and second, in sending them bread from heaven for six days, and preserving food for the Sabbath, that constituted the Sabbath a gift to that people. And mark the significance of the manner in which this gift was bestowed, as showing who it was that sanctified them. It became a gift to the Hebrews by the wonderful providence of the manna: a miracle that ceased not openly to declare the Sabbath every week for the space of forty years; thus showing incontrovertibly that He who led them was the author of the Sabbath, and therefore the Creator of heaven and earth. That the Sabbath which was made for man should thus be given to the Hebrews is certainly not more remarkable than that the God of the whole earth should give his oracles and himself to that people. The Most High and his law and Sabbath did not become Jewish; but the Hebrews were made the honored depositaries of divine truth; and the knowledge of God and of his commandments was preserved in the earth.

The reason on which this sign is based, points unmistakably to the true origin of the Sabbath. It did not originate from the fall of the manna for six days and its cessation on the seventh - for the manna was given thus because the Sabbath was in existence - but because that "in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested and was refreshed." Thus the Sabbath is shown to have originated with the rest and refreshment of the Creator, and not at the fall of the manna. As an INSTITUTION, the Sabbath declared its Author to be the Creator of heaven and earth; as a sign<sup>16</sup> between God and Israel, it declared that he who had set them apart was indeed Jehovah.

The last act of the Law-giver in this memorable interview was to place in the hands of Moses the "two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God." Then he revealed to Moses the sad apostasy of the people of Israel, and hastened him down to them.

"And Moses turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of the testimony were in his hand: the table were written on both their sides: on the one side and on the other were they written. And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables. . . . And it came to pass, as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that he saw the calf, and the dancing: and Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount."

Then Moses inflicted retribution upon the idolaters, "and there fell of the people that day about three thousand men." And Moses returned unto God and interceded in behalf of the people. Then God promised that his angel should go with them, but that he himself would not go up in their midst lest he should consume them.<sup>17</sup> Then Moses presented an earnest supplication to the Most High that he might see his glory. This petition was granted, saving that the face of God should not be seen.<sup>18</sup>

But before Moses ascended that he might behold the majesty of the infinite Law-giver, the Lord said unto him:

"Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first: and I will write upon these tables the words that were in the first tables, which thou brakest. . . . And he hewed two tables of stone like unto the first; and Moses rose up early in morning, and went up unto Mount Sinai, as the Lord had commanded him, and took in his hand the two tables of stone. And the Lord descended in the cloud, and stood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the Lord. And the Lord passed by before him."

Then Moses beheld the glory of the Lord, and he "made haste and bowed his head toward the earth and worshiped." This interview lasted forty days and forty nights, as did the first, and seems to have been spent by Moses in intercession that God would not destroy the people for their sin.<sup>19</sup> The record of this period is very brief, but in this record the Sabbath is mentioned. "Six days thou shalt work, but on the seventh day thou shalt rest: in earing time and in harvest thou shalt rest."<sup>20</sup> Thus admonishing them not to forget in their busiest season the Sabbath of the Lord.

This second period of forty days ends like the first with the act of God in placing the tables of stone in the hands of Moses. "And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread, nor drink water. And he<sup>21</sup> wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments." Thus it appears that the tables of testimony were two tables of stone with the commandments written upon them by the finger of God. Thus the testimony of God is shown to be the ten commandments. The writing on the second tables was an exact copy of that on the first. "Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first; and I will write," said God, "upon these tables the words that were in the first tables, which thou brakest." And of the first tables Moses says: "He declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone."<sup>22</sup>

Thus did God commit to his people the ten commandments. Without human or angelic agency he proclaimed them himself; and not trusting his most honored servant Moses, or even an angel of his presence, himself wrote them with his own finger. "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy," is one of the ten words thus honored by the Most High. Nor are these two high honors the only ones conferred upon this precept. While it shares them in common with the other nine commandments, it stands in advance of them in that it is established by the EXAMPLE of the Law-giver himself. These precepts were given upon two tables with evident reference to the two-fold division of the law of God; supreme love to God, and the love of our neighbor as ourselves. The Sabbath commandment, placed at the close of the first table, forms the golden clasp that binds together both divisions of the moral law. It guards and enforces that day which God claims as his; it follows man through the six days which God has given him to be properly spent in the various relations of life, thus extending over the whole of human life, and embracing in its loan of six days to man all the duties of the second table, while itself belonging to the first.

That these ten commandments form a complete code of moral law is proved by the language of the Law-giver when he called Moses up to himself to receive them. "Come up to me into the mount, and be there: and I will give thee tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written."<sup>23</sup> This law and commandments was the testimony of God engraven upon stone. The same great fact is presented by Moses in his blessing pronounced upon Israel: "And he said, The Lord came from Sinai, and rose up from Seir unto them: he shined forth from Mount Paran, and he came with ten thousands of saints: from his right hand went a fiery law for them."<sup>24</sup> There can be no dispute that in this language the Most High is represented as personally present with ten thousands of his holy ones, or angels. And that which he wrote with his own right hand is called by Moses "a fiery law," or as the margin has it, "a fire of law." And now the man of God completes his sacred trust. And thus he rehearses what God did in committing his law to him, and what he himself did in its final disposition: "And he wrote on the tables, according to the first writing, the ten commandments, which the Lord spake unto you in the mount out of the midst of the fire in the day of the assembly: and the Lord gave them unto me. And I turned myself and came down from the mount, and put the tables in the ark which I had made; and there they be, as the Lord commanded me." Thus was the law of God deposited in the ark beneath the mercy-seat.<sup>25</sup> Nor should this chapter close without pointing out the important relation of the fourth commandment to the atonement.

The top of the ark was called the mercy-seat, because all those who had broken the law contained in the ark beneath the mercy-seat, could find pardon by the sprinkling of the blood of atonement upon it.

The law within the ark was that which demanded an atonement; the ceremonial law which ordained the Levitical priesthood and the sacrifices for sin, was that which taught men how the atonement could be made. The broken law was beneath the mercy-seat; the blood of sin-offering was sprinkled upon its top, and pardon was extended to the penitent sinner. There was actual sin, and hence a real law which man had broken; but there was not a real atonement, and hence the need of the great antitype to the Levitical sacrifices. The real atonement when it is made must relate to that law respecting which an atonement had been shadowed forth. In other words, the shadowy atonement related to that law which was shut up in the ark, indicating that a real atonement was demanded by that law. It is necessary that the law which demands atonement, in order that its transgressor may be spared, should itself be perfect, else the fault would in part at least rest with the Law-giver, and not wholly with the sinner. Hence, the atonement when made does not take away the broken law, for that is perfect, but is expressly designed to take away the guilt of the transgressor.<sup>26</sup> Let it be remembered then that the fourth commandment is one of the ten precepts of God's broken law; one of the immutable holy principles that made the death of God's only Son necessary before pardon could be extended to guilty man. these facts being borne in mind, it will not be thought strange that the Law-giver should reserve the proclamation of such a law to himself; and that he should intrust to no created being the writing of that law which should demand as its atonement the death of the Son of God.

1 Ex.20-24

2 Ex.23:12

3 See also Ex.20:10; Deut.5:14; Isa.56

4 Ex.12:43-48

5 Ex.24:3-8; Heb.9:18-20

6 Dr. Clarke has the following note on this verse: "It is very likely that Moses went up into the mount on the first day of the week; and having with Joshua remained in the region of the cloud during six days, on the seventh, which was the Sabbath, God spake to him." - Commentary on Ex.24:16. The marking off of a week from the forty days in this remarkable manner goes far toward establishing the view of Dr. C. And if this be correct, it would strongly indicate that the ten commandments were given upon the Sabbath; for there seems to be good evidence that they were given the day before Moses went up to receive the tables of stone. For the interval in which chapters 21-23 were given would require but a brief space, and certainly followed immediately upon the giving of the ten commandments. Ex.20:18-21. When the interval closed, Moses came down to the people and wrote all the words of the Lord. In the morning he rose up early, and, having ratified the covenant, went up to receive the law which God had written. Ex.24:3-13.

7 Ex.24:12 18

8 Ex.25 31

9 Ex.31:12-18

10 Eze.20:11,12,19,20

11 See third chapter of this work.

12 "To sanctify, kadash, signifies to consecrate, separate, and set apart a thing or person from all secular purposes to some religious use." Clarke's Commentary on Ex.13:2. The same writer says, on Ex.19:23, "Here the word kadash is taken in its proper, literal sense, signifying the separating of a thing, person, or place, from all profane or common uses, and devoting it to sacred purposes.

13 Gen.17:7,8; 26:24; 28:13; Ex.3:6,13-16,18; 5:3; Isa.45:3.

14 Lev.11:45.

15 See chapter third.

16 As a sign it did not thereby become a shadow and a ceremony, for the Lord of the Sabbath was himself a sign. "Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath given me are for signs and wonders in Israel from the Lord of hosts, which dwelleth in Mount Zion. Isa.8:18. In Heb.2:13, this language is referred to Christ. "And Simeon blessed them, and said unto Mary his mother, Behold, this child is set for the fall and rising again of many in Israel; and for a sign which shall be spoken against." Luke 2:34. That the Sabbath was a sign between God and

Israel throughout their generations, that is, for the time that they were his peculiar people, no more proves that it is now abolished than the fact that Jesus is now a sign that is spoken against proves that he will cease to exist when he shall no longer be such a sign. Nor does this language argue that the Sabbath was made for them, or that its obligation ceased when they ceased to be the people of God. For the prohibition against eating blood was a perpetual statute for their generations; yet it was given to Noah when God first permitted the use of animal food, and was still obligatory upon the Gentiles when the apostles turned to them. Lev.3:17; Gen.9:1-4; Acts 15.

The penalty of death at the hand of the civil magistrate is affixed to the violation of the Sabbath. The same penalty is affixed to most of the precepts of the moral law. Lev.20:9,10; 24:15-17; Deut.13:6-18; 17:2-7. It should be remembered that the moral law embracing the Sabbath formed a part of the CIVIL code of the Hebrew nation. As such, the great Law-giver annexed penalties to be inflicted by the magistrate, thus doubtless shadowing forth the final retribution of the ungodly. Such penalties were suspended by that remarkable decision of the Saviour that those who were without sin should cast the first stone. But such a Being will arise to punish men, when the hailstones of his wrath shall desolate the earth. Our Lord did not, however, set aside the real penalty of the law, the wages of sin, nor did he weaken that precept which had been violated. John 8:1-9; Job 38:22,23; Isa.28:17; Rev.16:17-21; Rom.6:23.

17 This fact will shed light upon those texts which introduce the agency of angels in the giving of the law. Acts 7:38,53; Gal.3:19; Heb.2:2.

18 Ex.32; 33.

19 Ex.34; Deut.9.

20 Ex.34:21.

21 The idea has been suggested by some from this verse that it was Moses and not God who wrote the second tables. This view is thought to be strengthened by the previous verse: "Write thou these words: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel." But it is to be observed that the words upon the tables of stone were the ten commandments; while the words here referred to were those which God spoke to Moses during this interview of forty days, beginning with verse 10 and extending to verse 27. That the pronoun he in verse 28 might properly enough refer to Moses, if positive testimony did not forbid such reference, is readily admitted. That it is necessary to attend to the connection in deciding the antecedents of pronouns, is strikingly illustrated in 2Sam.24:1, where the pronoun he would naturally refer to the Lord, thus making God the one who moved David to number Israel. Yet the connection shows that this was not the case; for the anger of the Lord was kindled by the act; and 1Chron.21:1, positively declares that he who thus moved David was Satan. For positive testimony that it was God and not Moses who wrote upon the second tables, see Ex.34:1; Deut.10:1-5. These texts carefully discriminate between the work of Moses and the work of God, assigning the preparation of the tables, the carrying of them up to the mount and the bringing of them down from the mount, to Moses, but expressly assigning the writing on the tables to God himself.

22 Ex.34:1,28; Deut.4:12,13; 5:22.

23 Ex.24:12.

24 Deut.33:2. That angels are sometimes called saints or holy ones, see Dan.8:13-16. That angels were present with God at Sinai, see Ps.68:17.

25 Deut.10:4,5; Ex.25:10-22.

26 1John 3:4,5.

---

CHAPTER 6

THE SABBATH DURING THE DAY OF TEMPTATION

---

General history of the Sabbath in the wilderness - Its violation one cause of excluding that generation from the promised land - Its violation by their children in the wilderness one of the causes of their final dispersion from their own land - The statute respecting fires upon the Sabbath - Various precepts relative to the Sabbath - The Sabbath not a Jewish feast - The man who gathered sticks upon the Sabbath - Appeal of Moses in behalf of the decalogue - The Sabbath not derived from the covenant at Horeb - Final appeal of Moses in behalf of the Sabbath - The original fourth commandment - The Sabbath not a memorial of the flight from Egypt - What words were engraven upon stone - General summary from the books of Moses.

---

The history of the Sabbath during the provocation in the day of temptation in the wilderness when God was grieved for forty years with his people may be stated in few words. Even under the eye of Moses, and with the most stupendous miracles in their memory and before their eyes, they were idolaters,<sup>1</sup> neglecters of sacrifices, neglecters of circumcision,<sup>2</sup> murmurers against God, despisers of his law<sup>3</sup> and violators of his Sabbath.

Of their treatment of the Sabbath while in the wilderness, Ezekiel gives us the following graphic description:

"But the house of Israel rebelled against me in the wilderness: they walked not in my statutes, and they despised my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; and my Sabbaths they greatly polluted: then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them in the wilderness, to consume them. But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, in whose sight I brought them out."<sup>4</sup>

This language shows a general violation of the Sabbath, and evidently refers to the apostasy of Israel during the first forty days that Moses was absent from them. God did then purpose their destruction; but at the intercession of Moses, spared them for the very reason assigned by the prophet.<sup>5</sup> A further probation being granted them they signally failed a second time, so that God lifted up his hand to them that they should not enter the promised land. Thus the prophet continues:

"Yet also I lifted up my hand unto them in the wilderness, that I would not bring them into the land which I had given them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands; BECAUSE they despised my judgments, and walked not in my statutes, but polluted my Sabbaths: for their heart went after their idols. Nevertheless mine eye spared them from destroying them, neither did I make an end of them in the wilderness."

This language has undoubted reference to the act of God in excluding all that were over twenty years of age from entering the promised land.<sup>6</sup> It is to be noticed that the violation of the Sabbath is distinctly stated as one of the reasons for which that generation were excluded from the land of promise. God spared the people so that the nation was not utterly cut off; for he extended to the younger part a further probation. Thus the prophet continues:

"But I said unto their children in the wilderness, Walk ye not in the statutes of your fathers, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols: I am the Lord your God; walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; and hallow my Sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God. Notwithstanding the children rebelled against me: they walked not in my statutes, neither kept my judgments to do them, which if a man do, he shall even live in them; they polluted my Sabbaths: then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the wilderness. Nevertheless I withdrew mine hand, and wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted in the sight of the heathen, in whose sight I brought them forth. I lifted up mine hand unto them also in the wilderness, that I would scatter them among the heathen, and disperse them through the countries; because they had not executed my judgments, but had despised my statutes, and had polluted my Sabbaths, and their eyes were after their father's idols."

Thus it appears that the younger generation, which God spared when he excluded their fathers from the land of promise, did, like their fathers, transgress God's law, pollute his Sabbath, and cleave to idolatry. God did not see fit to exclude them from the land of Canaan, but he did lift up his hand to them in the wilderness, that he would give them up to dispersion among their enemies after they had entered the land of promise. Thus it is seen that the Hebrews while in the wilderness laid the foundation for their subsequent dispersion from their own land; and that one of the acts which led to their final ruin as a nation was the violation of the Sabbath before they had entered the promised land. Well might Moses say to them in the last month of his life: "Ye have been rebellious against the Lord from the day that I knew you."<sup>7</sup> In Caleb and Joshua was another spirit, for they followed the Lord fully.<sup>8</sup>

Such is the general history of Sabbatic observance in the wilderness. Even the miracle of the manna, which every week for forty years bore public testimony to the Sabbath,<sup>9</sup> became to the body of Hebrews a mere ordinary event, so that they dared to murmur against the bread thus sent from heaven;<sup>10</sup> and we may well believe that those who were thus hardened through the deceitfulness of sin, had little regard for the testimony of the manna in behalf of the Sabbath.<sup>11</sup> In the Mosaic record we next read of the Sabbath as follows:

And Moses gathered all the congregation of the children of Israel together, and said unto them, These are the words which the Lord hath commanded, that ye should do them. Six days shall work be done, but on the seventh day there shall be to you an holy day, a Sabbath of rest to the Lord: whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death.<sup>12</sup> Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the Sabbath day."<sup>13</sup>

The chief feature of interest in this text relates to the prohibition of fires on the Sabbath. As this is the only prohibition of the kind in the Bible, and as it is often urged as a reason why the Sabbath should not be kept, a brief examination of the difficulty will not be out of place. It should be observed, 1. That this language does not form part of the fourth commandment, the grand law of the Sabbath. 2. That as there were laws pertaining to the Sabbath, that were no part of the Sabbatic institution, but that grew out of its being intrusted to the Hebrews, such as the law respecting the presentation of the shew-bread on the Sabbath; and that respecting the burnt-offering for the Sabbath:<sup>14</sup> so it is at least possible that this is a precept pertaining only to that nation, and not a part of the original institution. 3. That as there were laws peculiar only to the Hebrews, so there were many that pertained to them only while they were in the wilderness. Such were all those precepts that related to the manna, the building of the tabernacle and the setting of it up, the manner of encamping about it, &c. 4. That of this class were all the statutes given from the time that Moses brought down the second tables of stone until the close of the book of Exodus, unless the words under consideration form an exception. 5. That the prohibition of fires was a law of this class, i.e., a law designed only for the wilderness, is evident from several decisive facts.

1. That the land of Palestine during a part of the year is so cold that fires are necessary to prevent suffering.<sup>15</sup>

2. That the Sabbath was not designed to be a cause of distress and suffering, but of refreshment, of delight, and of blessing.<sup>16</sup>

3. That in the wilderness of Sinai, where this precept respecting fires on the Sabbath was given, it was not cause of suffering, as they were two hundred miles south of Jerusalem, in the warm climate of Arabia.

4. That this precept was of a temporary character, is further applied in that while other laws are said to be perpetual statutes and precepts to be kept after they should enter the land,<sup>17</sup> no hint of this kind here appears. On the contrary, this seems to be similar in character to the precept respecting the manna,<sup>18</sup> and to be co-existent with, and adapted to it.

5. If the prohibition respecting fires did indeed pertain to the promised land, and not merely to the wilderness, it would every few years conflict directly with the law of the passover. For the passover was to be roasted by each family of the children of Israel on the evening following the fourteenth day of the first month,<sup>19</sup> which would fall occasionally upon the Sabbath. The prohibition of fires upon the Sabbath would not conflict with the passover while the Hebrews were in the wilderness; for the passover was not to be observed until they reached that land.<sup>20</sup> But if that prohibition did extend forward to the promised land, where the passover was to be regularly observed, these two statutes would often come in direct conflict. This is certainly a strong confirmation of the view that the prohibition of fires upon the Sabbath was a temporary statute, relating only to the wilderness.<sup>21</sup>

From these facts it follows that the favorite argument drawn from the prohibition of fires, that the Sabbath was a local institution, adapted only to the land of Canaan, must be abandoned; for it is evident that that prohibition was a temporary statute not even adapted to the land of promise, and not designed for that land. We next read of the Sabbath as follows:

"And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, Ye shall be holy; for I the Lord your God am holy. Ye shall fear every man his mother, and his father, and keep my Sabbaths: I am the Lord your God. . . . Ye shall keep my Sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the Lord."<sup>22</sup>

These constant references to the Sabbath contrast strikingly with the general disobedience of the people. And thus God speaks again:

"Six days shall work be done; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of rest, an holy convocation; ye shall do no work therein: it is the Sabbath of the Lord in all your dwellings."<sup>23</sup>

Thus does God solemnly designate his rest-day as a season of holy worship, and as the day of weekly religious assemblies. Again the great Law-giver sets forth his Sabbath:

"Ye shall make you no idols nor graven image, neither rear you up a standing image, neither shall ye set up any image of stone in your land, to bow down unto it; for I am the Lord your God. Ye shall keep my Sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the Lord."<sup>24</sup>

Happy would it have been for the people of God had they thus refrained from idolatry and sacredly regarded the rest-day of the Creator. Yet idolatry and Sabbath-breaking were so general in the wilderness that the generation which came forth from Egypt were excluded from the promised land.<sup>25</sup> After God had thus cut off from the inheritance of the land the men who had rebelled against him,<sup>26</sup> we next read of the Sabbath as follows:

"And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man that gathered sticks upon the Sabbath day. And they that found him gathering sticks brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the congregation. And they put him inward, because it was not declared what should be done to him. And the Lord said unto Moses, The man shall be surely put to death; all the congregation shall stone him with stones without the camp. And all the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones, and he died; as the Lord commanded Moses."<sup>27</sup>

The following facts should be considered in explaining this text: 1. That this was a case of peculiar guilt; for the whole congregation before whom this man stood in judgment, and by whom he was put to death, were themselves guilty of violating the Sabbath, and had just been excluded from the promised land for this and other sins.<sup>28</sup> 2. That this was not a case which came under the existing penalty of death for work upon the Sabbath; for the man was put in confinement that the mind of the Lord respecting his guilt might be obtained. The peculiarity of his transgression may be learned from the context. The verses which next precede the case in question read thus:

"But the soul that doeth aught presumptuously, whether he be born in the land, or a stranger, the same reproacheth the Lord; and that soul shall be cut off from among his people. Because he hath despised the word of the Lord, and hath broken his commandment, that soul shall utterly be cut off; his iniquity shall be upon him."<sup>29</sup>

These words being followed by this remarkable case were evidently designed to be illustrated by it. It is manifest, therefore, that this was an instance of presumptuous sin, in which the transgressor intended despite to the Spirit of grace and to the statutes of the Most High. This case cannot therefore be quoted as evidence of extraordinary strictness on the part of the Hebrews in observing the Sabbath; for we have direct evidence that they did greatly pollute it during the whole forty years of their sojourn in the wilderness.<sup>30</sup> It stands therefore as an instance of transgression in which the sinner intended to show his contempt for the Law-giver, and in this consisted his peculiar guilt.<sup>31</sup>

In the last month of his long and eventful life Moses rehearsed all the great acts of God in behalf of his people, with the statutes and precepts that he had given them. This rehearsal is contained in the book of Deuteronomy, a name which signifies second law, and which is applied to that book, because it is a second writing of the law. It is the farewell of Moses to a disobedient and rebellious people; and he endeavors to fasten upon them the strongest possible sense of personal obligation to obey. Thus, when he is about to rehearse the ten commandments, he uses language evidently designed to impress upon the minds of the Hebrews a sense of their individual obligation to do what God had commanded. Thus he says:

"Hear, O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and keep, and do them. The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day."<sup>32</sup>

It was not the act of your fathers that placed this responsibility upon you, but your own individual acts that brought you into the bond of this covenant. You have personally pledged yourselves to the Most High to keep these precepts.<sup>33</sup> Such is the obvious import of this language; yet it has been gravely adduced as proof that the Sabbath of the Lord was made for the Hebrews, and was not obligatory upon the patriarchs. The singularity of this deduction appears in that it is brought to bear against the fourth commandment alone; whereas, if it is a just and logical argument, it would show that the ancient patriarchs were under no obligation in respect to any precept of the moral law. But it is certain that the covenant at Horeb was simply an embodiment of the precepts of the moral law, with mutual pledges respecting them between God and the people, and that that covenant did not give existence to either of the ten commandments. At all events, we find the Sabbath ordained of God at the close of creation<sup>34</sup> and obligatory upon the Hebrews in the wilderness before God had given them a new precept on the subject.<sup>35</sup> As this was before the covenant at Horeb it is conclusive proof that the Sabbath did no more originate from that covenant than did the prohibition of idolatry, theft or murder.

The man of God then repeats the ten commandments. And thus he gives the fourth:

"Keep the Sabbath day, to sanctify it, as the Lord thy God commanded thee. Six days thou shalt labor and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, not any of thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; that thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou. And remember that thou was a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched-out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day."<sup>36</sup>

It is a singular fact that this scripture is uniformly quoted by those who write against the Sabbath, as the original fourth commandment; while the original precept itself is carefully left out. Yet there is the strongest evidence that this is not the original precept; for Moses rehearses these words at the end of the forty years' sojourn, whereas the original commandment was given in the third month after the departure from Egypt.<sup>37</sup> The commandment itself, as here given, contains direct proof on the point. Thus it reads; "Keep the Sabbath day, to sanctify it, AS the Lord thy God HATH COMMANDED thee;" thus citing elsewhere for the original statute. Moreover the precept as here given is evidently incomplete. It contains no clue to the origin of the Sabbath of the Lord, nor does it show the acts by which the Sabbath came into existence. This is why those who represent the Sabbath as made in the wilderness and not at creation quote this as the fourth commandment, and omit the original precept, which God himself proclaimed, where all these facts are distinctly stated.<sup>38</sup>

But while Moses in this rehearsal omits a large part of the fourth commandment, he refers to the original precept of the whole matter, and then appends to this rehearsal a powerful plea of obligation on the part of the Hebrews to keep the Sabbath. It should be remembered that many of the people had steadily persisted in the violation of the Sabbath, and that this is the last time that Moses speaks in its behalf. Thus he says:

"And remember that thou was a servant in the land of Egypt, and that Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched-out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day."

These words are often cited as proof that the Sabbath originated at the departure of Israel from Egypt, and that it was ordained at that time as a memorial of their deliverance from thence. But it will be observed, 1. That this text says not one word respecting the origin of the Sabbath or rest-day of the Lord. 2. That the facts on this point are all given in the original fourth commandment, and are there referred to creation. 3. That there is no reason to believe that God rested upon the seventh day at the time of this flight from Egypt; nor did he then bless and hallow the day. 4. That the Sabbath has nothing in it of a kind to commemorate the deliverance from Egypt, as that was a flight and this is a rest; and that flight was upon the fifteenth of the first month, and this rest, upon the seventh day of each week. Thus one would occur annually; the other, weekly. 5. But God did ordain a fitting memorial of that deliverance to be observe by the Hebrews: the passover, on the fourteenth day of the first month, in memory of God's passing over them when he smote the Egyptians; and the feast of unleavened bread, in memory of their eating this bread when they fled out of Egypt.<sup>39</sup>

But what then do these words imply? Perhaps their meaning may be more readily perceived by comparing them with an exact parallel found in the same book and from the pen of the same writer:

"Thou shalt not pervert the judgment of the stranger, nor of the fatherless; nor take a widow's raiment to pledge; but thou shalt remember that thou was a bondman in Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee thence; therefore I command thee to do this thing."<sup>40</sup>

It will be seen at a glance that this precept was not given to commemorate the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage; nor could that deliverance give existence to the moral obligation expressed in it. If the language in the one case proves that men were not under obligation to keep the Sabbath before the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, it proves with equal conclusiveness in the other that before that deliverance they were not under obligation to treat with justice and mercy the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow. And if the Sabbath is shown in the case to be Jewish, in the other, the statute of the great Law-giver in behalf of the needy and the helpless must share the same fate. It is manifest that this language is in each case an appeal to their sense of gratitude. You were slaves in Egypt, and God rescued you; therefore remember others who are in distress, and oppress them not. You were bondmen in Egypt, and God redeemed you; therefore sanctify unto the Lord the day which he has reserved unto himself; a most powerful appeal to those who had hitherto persisted in polluting it. Deliverance from abject servitude was necessary, indeed, in each case, in order that the things enjoined might be fully observed; but that deliverance did not give existence to either of theses duties. It was indeed one of the acts by which the Sabbath of the Lord was given to that nation, but it was not one of the acts by which God made the Sabbath, nor did it render the rest-day of the Lord a Jewish institution.

That the words engraven upon stone were simply the ten commandments is evident.

It is said of the first tables:

"And the Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; only ye heard a voice. And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone."<sup>41</sup>

2. Thus the first tables of stone contained the ten commandments alone. That the second tables were an exact copy of what was written upon the first, is plainly stated:

"And the Lord said unto Moses, Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first: and I will write upon these tables the words that were in the first tables, which thou breakest." "And I will write on the tables the words that were in the first tables which thou breakest and thou shalt put them in the ark."<sup>42</sup>

This is confirmed by the following decisive testimony:

"And he wrote upon the table the words of the covenant, the ten commandments," margin, Heb., "words." "And he wrote on the tables, according to the first writing, the ten commandments [margin, words], which the Lord spake unto you in the mount, out of the midst of the fire in the day of the assembly: and the Lord gave them unto me."<sup>43</sup>

These texts will explain the following language: "And the Lord delivered unto me two tables of stone written with the finger of God; and on them was written according to all the words which the Lord spake with you in the mount out of the midst of the fire in the day of the assembly."<sup>44</sup> Thus God is said to have written upon the tables according to all the words which he spoke in the day of the assembly; and these words which he thus wrote, are said to have been TEN WORDS. But the preface to the decalogue was not one of these ten words, and hence was not written by the finger of God upon stone. That this distinction must be attended to, will be seen by examining the following text and its connection:

"THESE WORDS the Lord spake unto all your assembly in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice: and he added no more. And he wrote in two tables of stone, and delivered them unto me."<sup>45</sup>

THESE WORDS here brought to view as written by the finger of God after having been uttered by him in the hearing of all the people, must be understood as one of two things. 1. They are simply the ten words of the law of God; or, 2. They are the words used by Moses in this rehearsal of the decalogue. But they cannot refer to the words used in this rehearsal; for, 1. Moses omits an important part of the fourth precept as given by God in its proclamation from the mount. 2. In this rehearsal of that precept he cites back to the original for that which is omitted.<sup>46</sup> 3. He appends to this precept an appeal in its behalf to their gratitude which was not made by God in giving it. 4. This language only purports to be a rehearsal and not the original itself; and this is further evinced by many verbal deviations from the original decalogue.<sup>47</sup> These facts are decisive as to what was placed upon the tables of stone. It was not an incomplete copy, citing elsewhere for the original, but the original code itself. And hence when Moses speaks of THESE WORDS as engraven upon the tables, he refers not to the words used by himself in this rehearsal, but to the TEN WORDS of the law of God, and excludes all else.

Thus have we traced the Sabbath through the books of Moses. We have found its origin in paradise when man was in his uprightness; we have seen the Hebrews set apart from all mankind as the depositaries of divine truth; we have seen the Sabbath and the whole moral law committed as a sacred trust to them; we have seen the Sabbath proclaimed by God as one of the ten commandments; we have seen it written by the finger of God upon stone in the bosom of the moral law; we have seen that law possessing no Jewish, but simply moral and divine, features, placed beneath the mercy-seat in the ark of God's testament; we have seen that various precepts pertaining to the Sabbath were given to the Hebrews and designed only for them; we have seen that the Hebrews did greatly pollute the Sabbath during their sojourn in the wilderness; and we have heard the final appeal made in its behalf by Moses to that rebellious people.

We rest the foundation of the Sabbatic institution upon its sanctification before the fall of man; the fourth commandment is its great citadel of defense; its place in the midst of the moral law beneath the mercy-seat shows its relation to the atonement and its immutable obligation.

---

1 Ex.32; Josh.24:2, 14, 23; Eze.20:7,8,16,18,24.

2 Amos 5:25-27; Acts 7:41-43; Josh.5:2-8.

3 Num.14; Ps.95; Eze.20:13.

4 Eze.20:13-24.

5 Ex.32.

6 Num.14.

7 Deut.9:24.

8 Num.14; Heb.3:16.

9 Ex.16; Josh.5:12.

10 Num.11;21.

11 A comparison of Ex.19; 20:18-21; 24:3-8, with chapter 32, will show the astonishing transitions of the Hebrews from faith and obedience to rebellion and idolatry. See a general history of these acts in Ps.78; 106.

12 For a notice of this penalty see chapter 5.

13 Ex.35:1-3.

14 Lev.24:5-9; Num.28:9, 10.

15 The Bible abounds with facts which establish this proposition. Thus the psalmist in an address to Jerusalem, uses the following language: "He giveth snow like wool; he scattereth the hoarfrost like ashes. He casteth forth his ice like morsels; who can stand before his cold? He sendeth out his word, and melteth them; he causeth his wind to blow, and the waters flow. He showeth his word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel." Ps.147:16-19. Dr. Clarke has the following note on this text: "At particular times the cold in the East is so very intense as to kill man and beast. Jacobus de Vitriaco, one of the writers in the Gesta Dei per Francos, says that in an expedition in which he was engaged against Mount Tabor, on the 24th of December, the cold was so intense that many of the poor people, and the beasts of burthen died by it. And Albertus Aquensis, another of these writers, speaking of the cold in Judea, says that thirty of the people who attended Baldwin I., in the mountainous districts near the Dead Sea, were killed by it; and that in that expedition they had to contend with horrible hail and ice; with unheard of snow and rain. From this we find that the winters are often very severe in Judea; and that in such cases as the above we may well call out, "Who can stand against his cold!" See his commentary on Ps.147. See also Jer.36:22; John 18:18; Matt.24:20; Mark 13:18. 1 Maccabees 13:22, mentions a very great snow storm in Palestine, so that horsemen could not march.

16 The testimony of the Bible on this point is very explicit. Thus we read: "Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest: that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thine handmaid, and the stranger, may be refreshed." Ex.23:12. To be without fire in the severity of winter would cause the Sabbath to be a curse and not a refreshment. It would ruin the health of those who should thus expose themselves, and render the Sabbath anything but a source of refreshment. The prophet uses the following language: "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day: and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable." etc. The Sabbath then was designed by God to be a source of delight to his people, and not a cause of suffering. The merciful and beneficent character of the Sabbath is seen in the following texts: Matt.12:10-13; Mark 2:27,28; Luke 14:3-6. From them we learn that God regards the sufferings of the brute creation, and would have them alleviated upon the Sabbath; how much more the distress and the needs of his people, for whose refreshment and delight the Sabbath was made.

17 Ex.29:9; 31:16; Lev.3:17; 24:9; Num.19:21; Deut.5:31; 6:1; 7. The number and variety of these allusions will surprise the inquirer.

18 Ex.16:23.

19 Ex.12; Deut.16.

20 The law of the passover certainly contemplated the arrival of the Hebrews in the promised land before its regular observance. Ex.12:25. Indeed, it was only once observed in the wilderness: namely, in the year following their departure from Egypt; and after that, was omitted until they entered the land of Canaan. Num.9; Josh.5. This is proved, not merely from the fact that no other instances are recorded, but because that circumcision was omitted during the whole period of their sojourn in the wilderness; and without this ordinance the children would have been excluded from the passover. Ex.12; Josh.5.

21 Dr.Gill, who considered the seventh-day Sabbath as a Jewish institution, beginning with Moses, and ending with Christ, and one with which Gentiles have no concern, has given his judgment concerning this question of fire on the Sabbath. He certainly had no motive in this case to answer this popular objection only that of stating the truth. He says:

"This law seems to be a temporary one, and not to be continued, nor is it said to be throughout their generations, as elsewhere, where the law of the Sabbath is given or repeated; it is to be restrained to the building of the tabernacle, and while that was about to which it is prefaced; and it is designed to prevent all public or private working on the Sabbath day in anything belonging to that;" etc. - Commentary on Ex.35:3.

Dr. Bound gives us St. Augustine's idea of this precept: "He doth not admonish them of it without cause; for that he speaketh in making the tabernacle, and all things belonging to it, and showeth that, notwithstanding that, they must rest upon the Sabbath day, and not under the color of that (as it is said in the text) so much as kindle a fire." - True Doctrine of the Sabbath, p. 140.

22 Lev.19:1-3,30.

23 Lev.23:3. It has been asserted from verse 2, that the Sabbath was one of the feasts of the Lord. But a comparison of verses 2 and 4, shows that there is a break in the narrative, for the purpose of introducing the Sabbath as a holy convocation; and that verse 4 begins the theme anew in the very language of verse 2; and it is to be observed that the remainder of the chapter sets forth the actual Jewish feasts; viz., that of unleavened bread, the Pentecost, and the feast of tabernacles. What further clears this point of all obscurity is the fact that verses 37, 38, carefully discriminate between the feasts of the Lord and the Sabbaths of the Lord. But Ex.23:14, settles the point beyond controversy: "Three times thou shalt keep a feast unto me in the year." And then verses 15-17 enumerate these feasts as in Lev.23:4-44. See also 2Chron.8:13.

24 Lev.26:1,2.

25 Eze.20:15,16.

26 Num.13; 14.

27 Num.15:32-36.

28 Eze.20:15, 16 comp. with Num.14:35.

29 Num.15:30.

30 Ezek.20.

31 Hengstenberg, a distinguished German Anti-Sabbatarian, thus candidly treats this text: "A man who had gathered wood on the Sabbath is brought forth at the command of the Lord, and stoned by the whole congregation before the camp. Calvin says rightly, 'The guilty man did not fall through error, but through gross contempt of the law, so that he treated it as a light matter to overthrow and destroy all that is holy.' It is evident from the manner of its introduction that the account is not given with any reference to its chronological position; it reads, 'And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man that gathered sticks upon the Sabbath day.' It stands simply as an example of the presumptuous breach of the law, of which the preceding verses speak. He was one who despised the word of the Lord and broke his commandments [verse 31]; one who with a high hand sinned and reproached the Lord. Verse 30." - The Lord's Day, pp. 31, 32.

32 Deut.5:1-3.

33 See the pledges of this people in Ex.19; 24.

34 See the second chapter of this work.

35 See chapter third.

36 Deut.5:12-15.

37 Compare Ex.19; 20; Deut.1.

38 Ex.20:8-11.

39 Ex.12; 13.

40 Deut.24:17,18.

41 Deut.4:12,13.

42 Ex.34:1; Deut.10:2.

43 Ex.34:28; Deut.10:4.

44 Deut.9:10.

45 Deut.5:22.

46 Deut.5:12-15, compared with Ex.20:8-11.

47 Deut.5, compared with Ex.20.

---

CHAPTER 7

THE FEASTS, NEW MOONS AND SABBATHS OF THE HEBREWS

---

Enumeration of the Hebrew festivals - The passover - The pentecost - The feast of tabernacles - The new moons - The first and second annual sabbaths - The third - The fourth - The fifth - The sixth and seventh - The sabbath of the land - The jubilee - None of these festivals in force until the Hebrews entered their own land - The contrast between the Sabbath of the Lord and the sabbaths of the Hebrews - Testimony of Isaiah - Of Hosea - Of Jeremiah - Final cessation of these festivals.

---

We have followed the Sabbath of the Lord through the books of Moses. A brief survey of the Jewish festivals is necessary to the complete view of the subject before us. Of these there were three feasts: the passover, the Pentecost, and the feast of tabernacles; each new moon, that is, the first day of each month throughout the year; then there were seven annual sabbaths, namely, 1. The first day of unleavened bread. 2. The seventh day of that feast. 3. The day of Pentecost. 4. The first day of the seventh month. 5. The tenth day of that month. 6. The fifteenth day of that month. 7. The twenty-second day of the same. In addition to all these, every seventh year was to be the sabbath of the land, and every fiftieth year the year of jubilee.

The passover takes its name from the fact that the angel of the Lord passed over the houses of the Hebrews on that eventful night when the firstborn in every Egyptian family was slain. This feast was ordained in commemoration of the deliverance of that people from Egyptian bondage. It began with the slaying of the paschal lamb on the fourteenth day of the first month, and extended through a period of seven days, in which nothing but unleavened bread was to be eaten. Its great antitype was reached when Christ our passover was sacrificed for us.<sup>1</sup>

The Pentecost was the second of the Jewish feasts, and occupied but a single day. It was celebrated on the fiftieth day after the first-fruits of barley harvest had been waved before the Lord. At the time of this feast the first-fruits of wheat harvest were offered unto God. The antitype of this festival was reached on the fiftieth day after the resurrection of Christ, when the great outpouring of the Holy Ghost took place.<sup>2</sup>

The feast of tabernacles was the last of the Jewish feast. It was celebrated in the seventh month when they had gathered in the fruit of the land, and extended from the fifteenth to the twenty-first day of that month. It was ordained as a festival of rejoicing before the Lord; and during this period the children of Israel dwelt in booths in commemoration of their dwelling thus during their sojourn in the wilderness. It probably typifies the great rejoicing after the final gathering of all the people of God into his kingdom.<sup>3</sup>

In connection with these feast it was ordained that each new moon, that is, the first day of every month, should be observed with certain specified offerings, and with tokens of rejoicing.<sup>4</sup> The annual sabbaths of the Hebrews have been already enumerated. The first two of these sabbaths were the first and seventh days of the feast of unleavened bread, that is, the fifteenth and twenty-first days of the first month. they were thus ordained by God:

"Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; even the first day ye shall put away leaven out of your houses. . . . And in the first day there shall be an holy convocation, and in the seventh day there shall be an holy convocation to you; no manner of work shall be done in them, save that which every man must eat, that only may be done of you."<sup>5</sup>

The third in order of the annual sabbaths was the day of Pentecost. This festival was ordained as a rest-day in the following language:

"And ye shall proclaim on the selfsame day, that it may be an holy convocation unto you: ye shall do no servile work therein; it shall be a statute forever in all your dwellings throughout your generations."<sup>6</sup>

The first day of the seventh month was the fourth annual sabbath of the Hebrews. It was thus ordained:

"Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a sabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation. Ye shall do no servile work therein; but ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord."<sup>7</sup>

The great day of atonement was the fifth of these sabbaths. Thus spake the Lord unto Moses:

"Also on the tenth day of this seventh month there shall be a day of atonement; it shall be an holy convocation unto you. . . . Ye shall do no manner of work; it shall be a statute forever throughout your generations in all your dwellings. It shall be unto you a sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls: in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye celebrate your sabbath."<sup>8</sup>

The sixth and seventh of these annual sabbaths were the fifteenth and twenty-second days of the seventh month, that is, the first day of the feast of tabernacles, and the day after its conclusion. Thus were they enjoined by God:

"Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast unto the Lord seven days; on the first day shall be a sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be sabbath."<sup>9</sup>

Besides all these, every seventh year was a sabbath of rest unto the land. The people might labor as usual in other business, but they were forbidden to till the land, that the land itself might rest<sup>10</sup> After seven of these sabbaths, the following or fiftieth year was to be the year of jubilee, in which every man was to be restored unto his inheritance<sup>11</sup> There is no evidence that the jubilee was ever observed, and it is certain that the sabbatical year was almost entirely disregarded<sup>12</sup>

Such were the feasts, new moons, and sabbaths, of the Hebrews. A few words will suffice to point out the broad distinction between them and the Sabbath of the Lord. The first of the three feasts was ordained in memory of their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, and was to be observed when they should enter their own land<sup>13</sup> The second feast, as we have seen, could not be observed until after the settlement of the Hebrews in Canaan; for it was to be celebrated when the first fruits of wheat harvest should be offered before the Lord. The third feast was ordained in memory of their sojourn in the wilderness, and was to be celebrated by them each year after the ingathering of the entire harvest. Of course this feast, like the others, could not be observed until the settlement of the people in their own land. The new moons, as has been already seen, were not ordained until after these feasts had been instituted. The annual sabbaths were part and parcel of these feasts, and could have no existence until after the feasts to which they belonged had been instituted. Thus the first and second of these sabbaths were the first and seventh days of the paschal feast. The third annual sabbath was identical with the feast of Pentecost. The fourth of these sabbaths was the same as the new moon in the seventh month. The fifth one was the great day of atonement. The sixth and the seventh of these annual sabbaths were the fifteenth and twenty-second days of the seventh month, that is, the first day of the feast of tabernacles, and the next day after the close of that feast. As these feasts were not to be observed until the Hebrews should possess their own land, the annual sabbaths could have no existence until that time. And so of the sabbaths of the land. These could have no existence until after the Hebrews should possess and cultivate their own land; after six years of cultivation, the land should rest the seventh year, and remain untilled. After seven of these sabbaths of the land came the year of jubilee.

The contrast between the Sabbath of the Lord and these sabbaths of the Hebrew<sup>14</sup> is strongly marked.

1. The Sabbath of the Lord was instituted at the close of the first week of time; while these were ordained in connection with the Jewish feasts.
2. The one was blessed and hallowed by God, because that he had rested upon it from the work of creation; the others have no such claim to our regard.
3. When the children of Israel came into the wilderness, the Sabbath of the Lord was an existing institution, obligatory upon them; but the annual sabbaths then came into existence. It is easy to point to the very act of God, while leading that people, that gave existence to these sabbaths; while every reference to the Sabbath of the Lord shows that it had been ordained before God chose that people.
4. The children of Israel were excluded from the promised land for violating the Sabbath of the Lord in the wilderness; but the annual sabbaths were not to be observed until they should enter that land. This contrast would be strange indeed were it true that the Sabbath of the Lord was not instituted until the children of Israel came into the wilderness of Sin; for it is certain that two of the annual sabbaths were instituted before they left the land of Egypt<sup>15</sup>
5. The Sabbath of the Lord was made for man; but the annual sabbaths were designed only for residents in the land of Palestine.
6. The one was weekly, a memorial of the Creator's rest; the others were annual, connected with the memorials of the deliverance of the Hebrews from Egypt.
7. The one is termed "the Sabbath of the Lord," "my Sabbaths," "my holy day," and the like; while the others are designated as "your sabbaths," "her sabbaths," and similar expressions<sup>16</sup>
8. The one was proclaimed by God as one of the ten commandments, and was written with his finger in the midst of the moral law upon the tables of stone, and was deposited in the ark beneath the mercy-seat; the others did not pertain to the moral law, but were embodied in that hand-writing of ordinances that was a shadow of good things to come.
9. The distinction between these festivals and the Sabbaths of the Lord was carefully marked by God when he ordained the festivals and their associated sabbaths. Thus he said:

"These are the feast of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, . . . BESIDE the Sabbaths of the Lord.<sup>17</sup>

The annual sabbaths are presented by Isaiah in a very different light from that in which he presents the Sabbath of the Lord. Of the one he says:

"Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting. Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth; they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them.<sup>18</sup>

In striking contrast with this, the same prophet speaks of the Lord's Sabbath;

"Thus saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment, and do justice: for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed. Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil. Neither let the son of the stranger, that hath joined himself to the Lord, speak, saying, The Lord hath utterly separated me from his people; neither let the eunuch say, Behold, I am a dry tree. For thus saith the Lord unto the eunuchs that keep my Sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and take hold of my covenant; even unto them will I give in mine house and within my walls a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters; I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off. Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer; their burnt-offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called a house of prayer for all people.<sup>19</sup>

Hosea carefully designates the annual sabbaths in the following prediction:

"I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feast-days, her new moons, and HER sabbaths, and all her solemn feasts.<sup>20</sup>

This prediction was uttered about B.C. 785. It was fulfilled in part about two hundred years after this, when Jerusalem was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. Of this event, Jeremiah, about B.C. 588, speaks as follows:

"Her people fell into the hand of the enemy, and none did help her: the adversaries saw her, and did mock at HER sabbaths. . . . The Lord was as an enemy; he hath swallowed up Israel, he hath swallowed up all her palaces; he hath destroyed his strongholds, and hath increased in the daughter of Judah mourning and lamentation. And he hath violently taken away his tabernacle, as if it were of a garden; he hath destroyed his places of the assembly; the Lord hath caused the solemn feasts and sabbaths to be forgotten in Zion, and hath despised in the indignation of his anger the king and the priest. The Lord hath cast off his altar, he hath abhorred his sanctuary, he hath given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces; they have made a noise in the house of the Lord, as in the day of a solemn feast.<sup>21</sup>

The feasts of the Lord were to be holden in the place which the Lord should choose, namely, Jerusalem<sup>22</sup> and when that city, the place of their solemn assemblies, was destroyed and the people themselves carried into captivity, the complete cessation of their feasts, and, as a consequence, of the annual sabbaths, which were specified days in those feasts, must occur. The adversaries mocked at her sabbaths, by making a "noise in the house of the Lord as in the day of a solemn feast." But the observance of the Lord's Sabbath did not cease with the dispersion of the Hebrews from their own land; for it was not a local institution, like the annual sabbaths. Its violation was one chief cause of the Babylonish captivity<sup>23</sup> and their final restoration to their own land was made conditional upon their observing it in their dispersion<sup>24</sup> The feasts, new moons, and annual sabbaths, were restored when the Hebrews returned from captivity, and with some interruptions, were kept up until the final destruction of their city and nation by the Romans. But ere the providence of God thus struck out of existence these Jewish festivals, the whole typical system was abolished, having reached the commencement of its antitype, when our Lord Jesus Christ expired upon the cross. The handwriting of ordinances being thus abolished, no one is to be judged respecting its meats, or drinks, or holy days, or new moons, or sabbaths," which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ." But the Sabbath of the Lord did not form a part of this handwriting of ordinances; for it was instituted before sin had entered the world, and consequently before there was any shadow of redemption; it was written by the finger of God, not in the midst of types and shadows, but in the bosom of the moral law; and the day following that on which the typical sabbaths were nailed to the cross, the Sabbath commandment of the moral law is expressly recognized. Moreover, when the Jewish festivals were utterly extinguished with the final destruction of Jerusalem, even then was the Sabbath of the Lord brought to the minds of his people<sup>25</sup> Thus have we traced the annual sabbaths until their final cessation, as predicted by Hosea. It remains that we trace the Sabbath of the Lord until we reach the endless ages of the new earth, when we shall find the whole multitude of the redeemed assembling before God for worship on each successive Sabbath.

---

1 Ex.12; 1Cor.5:7,8.

2 Lev.23:10-21; Num.28:26-31; Deut.16:9-12; Acts 2:1-18.

3 Lev.23:34-43; Deut.16:13-15; Neh.8; Rev.7:9-14.

4 Num.10:10; 28:11-15; 1Sam.20:5,24,27; Ps.81:8.

5 Ex.12:15,16; Lev.23:7,8; Num.28:17,18,25.

6 Lev.23:21; Num.28:26.

7 Lev.23:24,25; Num.29:1-6.

8 Lev.23:27-32; 16:29-31; Num.29:7.

9 Lev.23:39.

10 Ex.23:10,11; Lev.25:2-7.

11 Lev.25:8-54.

12 Lev.26:34,35,43; 2Chron.36:21.

13 Ex.12:25.

14 On this point Mr. Miller uses the following language: "Only one kind of Sabbath was given to Adam, and one only remains for us. See Hosea 2:11. 'I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feast days, her new moons, and her sabbaths, and all her solemn feasts.' All the Jewish sabbaths did cease when Christ nailed them to his cross. Col.2:14-17. These were properly called Jewish sabbaths. Hosea says, 'her sabbaths.' But the Sabbath of which we are speaking, God calls 'my Sabbath.' Here is a clear distinction between the creation Sabbath and the ceremonial. The one is perpetual; the others were merely shadows of good things to come." - Life and Views, pp. 161, 162.

15 Ex.12:16.

16 Ex.20:10; 31:13; Isa.58:13; compared with Lev.23:24,32,39; Lam.1:7; Hosea 2:11.

17 Lev.23:37,38.

18 Isa.1:13,14.

19 Isa.56:1-7; 58:13,14.

20 Hosea 2:11.

21 Lam.1:7; 2:5-7.

22 Deut.16:16; 2Chron.7:12; Ps.122.

23 Jer.17:19-27; Neh.13:15-18.

24 Isa.56. See the eighth chapter of this work.

25 See Chapter 10

CHAPTER 8.

THE SABBATH FROM DAVID TO NEHEMIAH

---

Silence of six successive books of the Bible relative to the Sabbath - This silence compared to that of the book of Genesis - The siege of Jericho - The standing still of the sun - David's act of eating the shew-bread - The Sabbath of the Lord, how connected with and how distinguished from the annual sabbaths - Earliest reference to the Sabbath after the days of Moses - Incidental allusions to the Sabbath - Testimony of Amos - Of Isaiah - The Sabbath a blessing to MANKIND - The condition of being gathered to the holy land - Not a local institution - Commentary on the fourth commandment - Testimony of Jeremiah - Jerusalem to be saved if she would keep the Sabbath - This gracious offer despised - The Sabbath distinguished from the other days of the week - The Sabbath after the Babylonish captivity - Time for the commencing of the Sabbath - The violation of the Sabbath caused the destruction of Jerusalem.

---

When we leave the books of Moses there is a long-continued break in the history of the Sabbath.<sup>1</sup> No mention of it is found in the book of Joshua, nor in that of Judges, nor in the book of Ruth, nor in that of first Samuel, nor in the book of second Samuel, nor in that of first Kings. It is not until we reach the book of second Kings<sup>1</sup> that the Sabbath is even mentioned. In the book of first Chronicles, however, which as a narrative is parallel to the two books of Samuel, the Sabbath is mentioned<sup>2</sup> with reference to the events of David's life. Yet this leaves a period of five hundred years, which the Bible passes in silence respecting the Sabbath.

During this period we have a circumstantial history of the Hebrew people from their entrance into the promised land forward to the establishment of David as their king, embracing many particulars in the life of Joshua, of the elders and judges of Israel, of Gideon, of Barak, of Jephthah, of Samson, of Eli, of Naomi and Ruth, of Hannah and Samuel, of Saul, of Jonathan and of David. Yet in all this minute record we have no direct mention of the Sabbath.

It is a favorite argument with anti-Sabbatarians in proof of the total neglect of the Sabbath in the patriarchal age, that the book of Genesis, which does give a distinct view of the origin of the Sabbath in Paradise, at the close of the first week of time, does not in recording the lives of the patriarchs, say anything relative to its observance. Yet in that one book are crowded the events of two thousand three hundred and seventy years. What then should they say of the fact that six successive books of the Bible, relating with comparative minuteness the events of five hundred years, and involving many circumstances that would call out a mention of the Sabbath, do not mention it at all? Does the silence of one book, which nevertheless does give the institution of the Sabbath at its very commencement, and which brings into its record almost twenty-four hundred years, prove that there were no Sabbath-keepers prior to Moses? What then is proved by the fact that six successive books of the Bible, confining themselves to the events of five hundred years, an average of less than one hundred years apiece, the whole period covered by them being about one-fifth that embraced in the book of Genesis, do nevertheless preserve total silence respecting the Sabbath?

No one will adduce this silence as evidence of total neglect of the Sabbath during this period; yet why should they not? Is it because that when the narrative after this long silence brings in the Sabbath again, it does this incidentally and not as a new institution? Precisely such is the case with the second mention of the Sabbath in the Mosaic record, that is, with its mention after the silence in Genesis.<sup>3</sup> Is it because the fourth commandment had been given to the Hebrews whereas no such precept had previously been given to mankind? This answer cannot be admitted, for we have seen that the substance of the fourth commandment was given to the head of the human family; and it is certain that when the Hebrews came out of Egypt they were under obligation to keep the Sabbath in consequence of existing law.<sup>4</sup> The argument therefore is certainly more conclusive that there were no Sabbath-keepers from Moses to David, than that there were none from Adam to Moses; yet no one will attempt to maintain the first position, however many there will be to affirm the latter.

Several facts are narrated in the history of this period of five centuries that have a claim to our notice. The first of these is found in the record of the siege of Jericho.<sup>5</sup> By the command of God the city was encompassed by the Hebrews each day for seven days; on the last day of the seven they encompassed it seven times, when by divine interposition the walls were thrown down before them and the city taken by assault. One day of this seven must have been the Sabbath of the Lord. Did not the people of God therefore violate the Sabbath in their acting thus? Let the following facts answer: 1. That which they did in this case was by direct command of God. 2. That which is forbidden in the fourth commandment is OUR OWN work: "Six days shalt thou labor, and do ALL THY WORK; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." He who reserved the seventh day unto himself, had the right to require its appropriation to his service as he saw fit. 3. The act of encompassing the city was strictly as a religious procession. The ark of the covenant of the Lord was borne before the people; and before the ark went seven priests blowing with trumpets of rams' horns. 4. Nor could the city have been very extensive, else the going round it seven times on the last day, and their having time left for its complete destruction, would have been impossible. 5. Nor can it be believed that the Hebrews, by God's command carrying the ark before them, which contained simply the ten words of the Most High, were violating the fourth of those words, "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." It is certain that one of those seven days on which they encompassed Jericho was the Sabbath; but there is no necessity for supposing this to have been the day in which the city was taken. Nor is this a reasonable conjecture when all the facts in the case are considered. On this incident Dr. Clarke remarks as follows:

"It does not appear that there could be any breach in the Sabbath by the people simply going round the city, the ark in company, and the priests sounding the sacred trumpets. This was a mere religious procession, performed at the command of God, in which no servile work was done."<sup>6</sup>

At the word of Joshua it pleased God to arrest the earth in its revolution, and thus to cause the sun to remain stationary for a season, that the Canaanites might be overthrown before Israel.<sup>7</sup> Did not this great miracle derange the Sabbath? Not at all; for the lengthening of one of the six days by God's intervention could not prevent the actual arrival of the seventh day, though it would delay it; nor could it destroy its identity. The case involves a difficulty for those who hold the theory that God sanctified the seventh part of time, and not the seventh day; for in this case the seventh part of time was not allotted to the Sabbath; but there is no difficulty involved for those who believe that God set apart the seventh day to be kept as it arrives, in memory of his own rest. One of the six days was allotted a greater length than ever before or since; yet this did not in the slightest degree conflict with the seventh day, which nevertheless did come. Moreover all this was while inspired men were upon the stage of action; and it was by the direct providence of God; and what is also to be particularly remembered, it was at a time when no one will deny that the fourth commandment was in full force.

The case of David's eating the shew-bread is worthy of notice, as it probably took place upon the Sabbath, and because it is cited by our Lord in a memorable conversation with the Pharisees.<sup>8</sup> The law of the shew-bread enjoined the setting forth of twelve loaves in the sanctuary upon the pure table before the Lord EVERY Sabbath.<sup>9</sup> When new bread was thus placed before the Lord each Sabbath, the old was taken away to be eaten by the priests<sup>10</sup> It appears that the shew-bread which was given to David had that day been taken from before the Lord to put hot bread in its place, and consequently that day was the Sabbath. Thus, when David asked bread, the priest said, "There is no common bread under mine hand, but there is hallowed bread." And David said, "The bread is in a manner common, especially [as the margin has it] when THIS DAY there is other sanctified in the vessel." And so the sacred writer adds: "The priest gave him hallowed bread; for there was no bread there but the shew-bread, that was taken from before the Lord, to put hot bread in the day when it was taken away." The circumstances of this case all favor the view that this was upon the Sabbath. 1. There was NO COMMON bread with the priest. This is not strange when it is remembered that the shew-bread was to be taken from before the Lord each Sabbath and eaten by the priests. 2. That the priest did not offer to prepare other bread is not singular if it be understood that this was the Sabbath. 3. The surprise of the priest in meeting David may have been in part owing to the fact that it was the Sabbath. 4. This also may account for the detention of Doeg that day before the Lord. 5. When our Lord was called upon to pronounce upon the conduct of his disciples who had plucked and eaten the ears of corn upon the Sabbath to satisfy their hunger, he cited this case of David, and that of the priests offering sacrifices in the temple upon the Sabbath as justifying the disciples. There is a wonderful propriety and fitness in this citation, if it be understood that this act of David's took place upon the Sabbath. It will be found to present the matter in a very different light from that in which anti-Sabbatarians present it<sup>11</sup>

A distinction may be here pointed out, which should never be lost sight of. The presentation of the shew-bread and the offering of burnt sacrifices upon the Sabbath as ordained in the ceremonial law, formed no part of the original Sabbatic institution. For the Sabbath was made before the fall of man; while burnt-offerings and ceremonial rites in the sanctuary were introduced in consequence of the fall. While these rites were in force they necessarily, to some extent, connected the Sabbath with the festivals of the Jews in which the like offerings were made. This is seen only in those scriptures which record the provision made for these offerings<sup>12</sup> When the ceremonial law was nailed to the cross, all the Jewish festivals ceased to exist; for they were ordained by it<sup>13</sup> but the abrogation of that law could only take away those rites which it had appended to the Sabbath, leaving the original institution precisely as it came at first from its author.

The earliest reference to the Sabbath after the days of Moses is found in what David and Samuel ordained respecting the offices of the priests and Levites at the house of God. It is as follows:

"And other of their brethren, of the sons of the Kohathites, were over the shew-bread, to prepare it every Sabbath."<sup>14</sup>

It will be observed that this is only an incidental mention of the Sabbath. Such an allusion, occurring after so long a silence, is decisive proof that the Sabbath had not been forgotten or lost during the five centuries in which it had not been mentioned by the sacred historians. After this no direct mention of the Sabbath is found from the days of David to those of Elisha the prophet, a period of about one hundred and fifty years. Perhaps the ninety-second psalm is an exception to this statement, as its title, both in Hebrew and English, declares that it was written for the Sabbath day<sup>15</sup> and it is not improbable that it was composed by David, the sweet singer of Israel.

The son of the Shunammite woman being dead, she sought the prophet Elisha. Her husband not knowing that the child was dead said to her:

"Wherefore wilt thou go to him to-day? It is neither new moon, nor Sabbath. And she said, It shall be well."<sup>16</sup>

It is probable that the Sabbath of the Lord is here intended, as it is thrice used in a like connection.<sup>17</sup> If this be correct, it shows that the Hebrews were accustomed to visit the prophets of God upon that day for divine instruction; a very good commentary upon the words used relative to gathering the manna: "Let no man go out of his place on the seventh day."<sup>18</sup> Incidental allusion is made to the Sabbath at the accession of Jehoash to the throne of Judah,<sup>19</sup> about B.C. 778. In the reign of Uzziah, the grandson of Jehoash, the prophet Amos, B.C. 787, uses the following language:

"Hear this, O ye that swallow up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail, saying, When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and the Sabbath, that we may set forth wheat, making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit? that we may buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes; yea, and sell the refuse of the wheat?"<sup>20</sup>

These words were spoken more directly concerning the ten tribes, and indicate the sad state of apostasy which soon after resulted in their overthrow as a people. About fifty years after this, at the close of the reign of Ahaz, another allusion to the Sabbath is found.<sup>21</sup> In the days of Hezekiah, about B.C. 712, the prophet Isaiah uses the following language in enforcing the Sabbath:

"Thus saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment and do justice; for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed. Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil. Neither let the son of the stranger, that hath joined himself to the Lord, speak, saying, The Lord hath utterly separated me from his people; neither let the eunuch say, Behold I am a dry tree. For thus saith the Lord unto the eunuchs that keep my Sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and take hold of my covenant, even unto them will I give in mine house and within my walls, a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters; I will give them an everlasting name that shall not be cut off. Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer; their burnt-offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called a house of prayer for all people. The Lord God which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him, beside those that are gathered unto him."<sup>22</sup>

This prophecy presents several features of peculiar interest. 1. It pertains to a time when the salvation of God is near at hand.<sup>23</sup> 2. It most distinctly shows that the Sabbath is not a Jewish institution; for it pronounces a blessing upon that man without respect of nationality who shall keep the Sabbath; and it then particularizes the son of the stranger, that is, the Gentile,<sup>24</sup> and makes a peculiar promise to him if he will keep the Sabbath. 3. And this prophecy relates to Israel when they are outcasts, that is, when they are in their dispersion, promising to gather them, and others, that is, the Gentiles, with them. Of course the condition of being gathered to God's holy mountain must be complied with, namely, to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, and to keep the Sabbath from polluting it. 4. And hence it follows that the Sabbath is not a local institution, susceptible of being observed in the promised land alone, like the annual sabbaths,<sup>25</sup> but one made for mankind and capable of being observed by the outcasts of Israel when scattered in every land under heaven.<sup>26</sup>

Isaiah again presents the Sabbath; and this he does in language most emphatically distinguishing it from all ceremonial institutions. Thus he says:

"If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."<sup>27</sup>

This language is an evangelical commentary upon the fourth commandment. It appends to it an exceeding great and precious promise that takes hold upon the land promised to Jacob, even the new earth.<sup>28</sup>

In the year B. C. 601, thirteen years before the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, God made to the Jewish people through Jeremiah the gracious offer, that if they would keep his Sabbath, their city should stand forever. At the same time he testified unto them that if they would not do this, their city should be utterly destroyed. Thus said the prophet:

"Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye kings of Judah, and all Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, that enter in by these gates: Thus saith the Lord: Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden on the Sabbath day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem;<sup>29</sup> neither carry forth a burden<sup>30</sup> out of your houses on the Sabbath day, neither do ye any work, but hallow ye the Sabbath day, as I commanded your fathers. But they obeyed not, neither inclined their ears, but made their necks stiff, that they might not hear, nor receive instruction.<sup>31</sup> And it shall come to pass, if ye diligently hearken unto me, saith the Lord, to bring in no burden through the gates of this city on the Sabbath day, but hallow the Sabbath day, to do no work therein; then shall there enter into the gates of this city kings and princes sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, they, and their princes, the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and this city shall *REMAIN FOREVER.* And they shall come from the cities of Judah, and from the places about Jerusalem, and from the land of Benjamin, and from the plain, and from the mountains, and from the south, bringing burnt-offerings, and sacrifices, and meat-offerings, and incense, and bringing sacrifices of praise, unto the house of the Lord. But if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the Sabbath day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the Sabbath day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched."<sup>32</sup>

This gracious offer of the Most High to his rebellious people was not regarded by them; for eight years after this Ezekiel testifies thus:

"In thee have they set light by father and mother: in the midst of thee have they dealt by oppression with the stranger: in thee have they vexed the fatherless and the widow. Thou hast despised mine holy things, and hast profaned my Sabbaths. . . . Her priests have violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they showed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my Sabbaths, and I am profaned among them. . . . Moreover this they have done unto me: they have defiled my sanctuary in the same day, and have profaned my Sabbaths. For when they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it; and, lo, thus have they done in the midst of mine house."<sup>33</sup>

Idolatry and Sabbath-breaking, which were besetting sins with the Hebrews in the wilderness, and which there laid the foundation for their dispersion from their own land,<sup>34</sup> had ever cleaved unto them. And now when their destruction was impending from the overwhelming power of the king of Babylon, they were so deeply attached to these and kindred sins, that they would not regard the voice of warning. Before entering the sanctuary of God upon his Sabbath, they first slew their own children in sacrifice to their idols!<sup>35</sup> Thus iniquity came to its hight, and wrath came upon them to the uttermost.

"They mocked the messengers of God, and despised his words, and misused his prophets, until the wrath of the Lord arose against his people, till there was no remedy. Therefore he brought upon them the king of the Chaldees, who slew their young men with the sword in the house of their sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man, or him that stooped for age: he gave them all into his hand. And all the vessels of the house of God, great and small, and the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the kind, and of his princes; all these he brought to Babylon, and they burnt the house of God, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem, and burnt all the palaces thereof with fire, and destroyed all the goodly vessels thereof. And them that had escaped from the sword carried he away to Babylon; where they were servants to him and his sons until the reign of the king of Persia."<sup>36</sup>

While the Hebrews were in captivity at Babylon, God made to them an offer of restoring them to their own land and giving them again a city and a temple under circumstances of wonderful glory.<sup>37</sup> The condition of that offer being disregarded,<sup>38</sup> the offered glory was never inherited by them. In this offer were several allusions to the Sabbath of the Lord, and also to the festivals of the Hebrews.<sup>39</sup> One of these allusions is worthy of particular notice for the distinctness with which it discriminates between the Sabbath and the other days of the week:

"Thus saith the Lord God: The gate of the inner court that looketh toward the east, shall be shut THE SIX WORKING DAYS; but on the Sabbath it shall be opened, and in the day of the new moon it shall be opened."<sup>40</sup>

Six days of the week are by divine inspiration called "the six working days;" the seventh is called the Sabbath of the Lord. Who shall dare confound this marked distinction?

After the Jews had returned from their captivity in Babylon, and had restored their temple and city, in a solemn assembly of the whole people they recount in an address to the Most High all the great events of God's providence in their past history. Thus they testify respecting the Sabbath:

"Thou camest down also upon Mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments: and madest known unto them thy holy Sabbath, and commandest them precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of Moses thy servant."<sup>41</sup>

Thus were all the people reminded of the great events of Mount Sinai - the giving of the ten words of the law of God, and the making known of his holy Sabbath. So deeply impressed was the whole congregation with the effect of their former disobedience, that they entered into a solemn covenant to obey God.<sup>42</sup> They pledged themselves to each other thus:

"And if the people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the Sabbath day to sell, that we would not buy it of them on the Sabbath, or on the holy day; and that we would leave the seventh year, and the exaction of every debt."<sup>43</sup>

In the absence of Nehemiah at the Persian court, this covenant was in part, at least, forgotten. Eleven years having elapsed, Nehemiah thus testifies concerning things at his return about B.C. 434:

"In those days saw I in Judah some treading winepresses on the Sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses; as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the Sabbath day; and I testified against them in the day wherein they sold victuals. There dwelt men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish, and all manner of ware, and sold on the Sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem. Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the Sabbath day? Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the Sabbath. And it came to pass, that, when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark before the Sabbath,<sup>44</sup> I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the Sabbath: and some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the Sabbath day. So the merchants and sellers of all kind of ware lodged without Jerusalem once or twice. Then I testified against them, and said unto them, Why lodge ye about the wall? if ye do so again, I will lay hands on you. From that time forth came they no more on the Sabbath. And I commanded the Levites that they should cleanse themselves, and that they should come and keep the gates, to sanctify the Sabbath day. Remember me, O my God, concerning this also, and spare me according to the greatness of thy mercy."<sup>45</sup>

This scripture is an explicit testimony that the destruction of Jerusalem and the captivity of the Jews at Babylon were in consequence of their profanation of the Sabbath. It is a striking confirmation of the language of Jeremiah, already noticed, in which he testified to the Jews that if they would hallow the Sabbath their city should stand forever; but that it should be utterly destroyed if they persisted in its profanation. Nehemiah bears testimony to the accomplishment of Jeremiah's prediction concerning the violation of the Sabbath; and with his solemn appeal in its behalf ends the history of the Sabbath in the Old Testament.

1 2Kings 4:23.

2 1Chron.9:32. It is true that this text relates to the order of things after the return from Babylon; yet we learn from verse 22, that this order was originally ordained by David and Samuel. See verses 1-32.

3 Compare these two cases; Ex.16:23; 1Chron.9:32.

4 See chapters ii and iii.

5 Josh.6.

6 See Dr. A. Clarke's commentary on Josh.6:15.

7 Josh.10:12-14.

8 1Sam.21:1-6; Matt.12:3,4; Mark 2:25,26; Luke 6:3,4.

9 Lev.24:5-9; 1Chron.9:32.

10 1Sam.21:5,6; Matt.12:4.

11 See the tenth chapter of this work.

12 1Chron.23:31; 2Chron.2:4; 8:13; 31:3; Neh.10:31, 33; Eze.45:17.

13 See chapter vii. of this work.

14 1Chron.9:32.

15 Cotton Mather says: "There is a psalm in the Bible whereof the title is, 'A Psalm or Song for the Sabbath day.' Now 'tis a clause in that psalm, 'O Lord, how great are thy works! thy thoughts are very deep.' Ps.92:5. That clause intimates what we should make the subject of our meditations on the Sabbath day. Our thoughts are to be on God's works." - Discourse on the Lord's Day, p 30, A.D. 1703. And Hengstenberg says: "This psalm is according to the heading, 'A Song for the Sabbath day.' The proper positive employment of the Sabbath appears here to be a thankful contemplation of the works of God, a devotional absorption in them which could only exist when ordinary occupations are laid aside." - The Lord's Day, pp. 36,37.

16 2Kings 4:23.

17 Isa.66:23; Eze.46:1; Amos 8:5.

18 Ex.16:29.

19 2Kings 11:5-9; 2Chron.23 4-8.

20 Amos 8:4-6.

21 2Kings 16:18.

22 Isa.56.1-8.

23 For the coming of this salvation see Heb.9:28; 1Pet.1:9.

24 Ex.12:48,49; Isa.14:1; Eph.2:12.

25 See chapter vii.

26 Deut.28:64; Luke 21:24.

27 Isa.58:13,14.

28 Matt.8:11; Heb.11:8-16; Rev.21.

29 On this text Dr. A. Clarke comments thus: "From this and the following verses we find the ruin of the Jews attributed to the breach of the Sabbath: as this led to a neglect of sacrifice, the ordinances of religion, and all public worship; so it necessarily brought with it all immorality. The breach of the Sabbath was that which let in upon them all the waters of God's wrath."

30 For an inspired commentary on this language, see Neh.13:15-18.

31 This language strongly implies that the violation of the Sabbath had ever been general with the Hebrews. See Jer.7:23-28.

32 Jer.17:20-27

33 Eze.22:7,8,26; 23:38,39.

34 Eze.20:23,24; Deut.32:16-35.

35 Eze.23:38,39.

36 2Chron.36:16-20.

37 Eze., chapters 40-43.

38 Eze.43:7-11.

39 Eze.44:24; 45:17; 46:1,3,4,12.

40 Eze.46:1.

41 Neh.9:13,14.

42 Neh.9:38; 10:1-31.

43 Neh.10:31.

44 A few words relative to the time of beginning the Sabbath are here demanded. 1. The reckoning of the first week of time necessarily determines that of all succeeding weeks. The first division of the first day was night; and each day of the first week began with evening; the evening and the morning, an expression equivalent to the night and the day, constituted the day of twenty-four hours. Gen.1. Hence, the first Sabbath began and ended with evening. 2. That the night is in the Scriptures reckoned a part of the day of twenty-four hours, is proved by many texts. Ex.12:41,42; 1Sam.26:7,8; Luke 2:8-11; Mark 14:30; Luke 22:34, and many other testimonies. 3. The 2300 days, symbolizing 2300 years are each constituted like the days of the first week of time. Dan.8:14. The margin, which gives the literal Hebrew, calls each of these days an "evening morning." 4. The statute defining the great day of atonement is absolutely decisive that the day begins with evening, and that the night is a part of the day. Lev.23:32. "It shall be unto you a Sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls: in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath" 5. That evening is at sunset is abundantly proved by the following scriptures: Deut.16:6; Lev.22:6,7; Deut.23:2; 24:13,15; Josh.8:29; 10:26,27; Judges 14:18; 2Sam.3:35; 2Chron.18:34; Matt.8:16; Mark 1:32; Luke 4:40. But does not Neh.13:19. conflict with this testimony, and indicate that the Sabbath did not begin until after dark? I think not. The text does not say, "When it began to be dark at Jerusalem before the Sabbath," but it says, "When the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark." If it be remembered that the gates of Jerusalem were placed under wide and high walls, it will not be found difficult to harmonize this text with the many here adduced, which prove that the day begins with sunset.

Calmet, in his Bible Dictionary, article, Sabbath, thus states the ancient Jewish method of beginning the Sabbath: "About half an hour before the sunset all work is quitted and the Sabbath is supposed to be begun." He speaks thus of the close of the Sabbath; "When night comes, and they can discern in the heaven three stars of moderate magnitude, then the Sabbath is ended, and they may return to their ordinary employments."

45 Neh.13:15-22.

---

CHAPTER 9

THE SABBATH FROM NEHEMIAH TO CHRIST

---

Great change in the Jewish people respecting idolatry and Sabbath-breaking after their return from Babylon - Decree of Antiochus Epiphanes against the Sabbath - Massacre of a thousand Sabbath-keepers in the wilderness - Similar massacre at Jerusalem - Decree of the Jewish elders relative to resisting attacks upon the Sabbath - Other martyrdoms - Victories of Judas Maccabeus - How Pompey captured Jerusalem - Teaching of the Jewish doctors respecting the Sabbath - State of the Sabbatic institution at the first advent of the Saviour.

---

The period of almost five centuries intervenes between the time of Nehemia and the commencement of the ministry of the Redeemer. During this time an extraordinary change came over the Jewish people. Previously, they had been to an alarming extent idolaters, and outbreaking violators of the Sabbath. But after their return from Babylon they were never guilty of idolatry to any extent, the chastisement of that captivity effecting a cure of this evil.<sup>1</sup> In like manner did they change their conduct relative to the Sabbath; and during this period they loaded the Sabbatic institution with the most burdensome and rigorous ordinances. A brief survey of this period must suffice. Under the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, the king of Syria, B.C. 170, the Jews were greatly oppressed.

"King Antiochus wrote to his whole kingdom, that all should be one people, and every one should leave his laws: so all the heathen agreed according to the commandment of the king. Yea, many also of the Israelites consented to his religion, and sacrificed unto idols, and profaned the Sabbath."<sup>2</sup>

The greater part of the Hebrews remained faithful to God, and, as a consequence, were obliged to flee for their lives. Thus the historian continues:

"Then many that sought after justice and judgment went down into the wilderness, to dwell there: both they, and their children, and their wives, and their cattle; because afflictions increased sore upon them. Now when it was told the king's servants, and the host that was at Jerusalem, in the city of David, that certain men, who had broken the king's commandment, were gone down into the secret places in the wilderness, they pursued after them a great number, and having overtaken them, they camped against them, and made war against them on the Sabbath day. And they said unto them, Let that which ye have done hitherto suffice; come forth, and do according to the commandment of the king, and ye shall live. But they said, We will not come forth, neither will we do the king's commandment, to profane the Sabbath day. So then they gave them the battle with all speed. Howbeit they answered them not, neither cast they a stone at them, nor stopped the places where they lay hid. But said, Let us die all in our innocency: heaven and earth shall testify for us, that ye put us to death wrongfully. So they rose up against them in battle on the Sabbath, and they slew them, with their wives and children, and their cattle, to the number of a thousand people."<sup>3</sup>

In Jerusalem itself a like massacre took place. King Antiochus sent Appollonius with an army of twenty-two thousand,

"Who, coming to Jerusalem, and pretending peace, did forbear till the holy day of the Sabbath, when taking the Jews keeping holy day, he commanded his men to arm themselves. And so he slew all them that were gone to the celebrating of the Sabbath, and running through the city with weapons, slew great multitudes."<sup>4</sup>

In view of these dreadful acts of slaughter, Mattathias, "an honorable and great man," the father of Judas Maccabeus, with his friends decreed thus:

"Whosoever shall come to make battle with us on the Sabbath day we will fight against him; neither will we die all, as our brethren that were murdered in the secret places."<sup>5</sup>

Yet were some martyred after this for observing the Sabbath. Thus we read:

"And others, that had run together into caves near by, to keep the Sabbath day secretly, being discovered to Philip, were all burnt together, because they made a conscience to help themselves for the honor of the most sacred day."<sup>6</sup>

After this, Judas Maccabeus did great exploits in defense of the Hebrews, and in resisting the dreadful oppression of the Syrian government. Of one of these battles we read:

"When he had given them this watchword, The help of God, himself leading the first band, he joined battle with Nicanor. And by the help of the Almighty they slew above nine thousand of their enemies, and wounded and maimed the most part of Nicanor's host, and so put all to flight; and took their money that came to buy them, and pursued them far; but lacking time, they returned: for it was the day before the Sabbath, and therefore they would no longer pursue them. So when they had gathered their armor together, and spoiled their enemies, they occupied themselves about the Sabbath, yielding exceeding praise and thanks to the Lord, who had preserved them unto that day, which was the beginning of mercy distilling upon them. And after the Sabbath, when they had given part of the spoils to the maimed, and the widows, and orphans, the residue they divided among themselves and their servants."<sup>7</sup>

After this the Hebrews being attacked upon the Sabbath by their enemies, defeated them with much slaughter.<sup>8</sup>

About B.C. 63, Jerusalem was besieged and taken by Pompey, the general of the Romans. To do this, it was necessary to fill an immense ditch, and to raise against the city a bank on which to place the engines of assault. Thus Josephus relates the event:

"And had it not been our practice, from the days of our forefathers, to rest on the seventh day, this bank could never have been perfected, by reason of the opposition the Jews would have made; for though our law gives us leave then to defend ourselves against those that begin to fight with us, and assault us, yet does it not permit us to meddle with our enemies while they do anything else. Which thing when the Romans understood, on those days which we call Sabbaths, they threw nothing at the Jews, nor came to any pitched battle with them, but raised up their earthen banks, and brought their engines into such forwardness, that they might do execution the next days." <sup>9</sup>

From this it is seen that Pompey carefully refrained from any attack upon the Jews on each Sabbath during the siege, but spent that day in filling the ditch and raising the bank, that he might attack them on the day following each Sabbath, that is, upon Sunday. Josephus further relates that the priests were not at all hindered from their sacred ministrations by the stones thrown among them from the engines of Pompey, even "if any melancholy accident happened;" and that when the city was taken and the enemy fell upon them, and cut the throats of those that were in the temples, yet did not the priests run away or desist from the offering of the accustomed sacrifices.

These quotations from Jewish history are sufficient to indicate the extraordinary change that came over that people concerning the Sabbath, after the Babylonish captivity. A brief view of the teaching of the Jewish doctors respecting the Sabbath at the time when our Lord began his ministry will conclude this chapter:

"They enumerated about forty primary works, which they said were forbidden to be done on the Sabbath. Under each of these were numerous secondary works, which they said were also forbidden. . . . Among the primary works which were forbidden, were ploughing, sowing, reaping, winnowing, cleaning, grinding, etc. Under the head of grinding, was included the breaking or dividing of things which were before united. . . . Another of their traditions was, that, as threshing on the Sabbath was forbidden, the bruising of things, which was a species of threshing, was also forbidden. Of course, it was violation of the Sabbath to walk on green grass, for that would bruise or thresh it. So, as a man might not hunt on the Sabbath, he might not catch a flea; for that was a species of hunting. As a man might not carry a burden on the Sabbath, he might not carry water to a thirsty animal, for that was a species of burden; but he might pour water into a trough, and lead the animal to it. . . . Yet should a sheep fall into a pit, they would readily lift him out, and bear him to a place of safety. . . . They said a man might minister to the sick for purpose of relieving their distress, but not for the purpose of healing their diseases. He might put a covering on a diseased eye, or anoint it with eye-salve for the purpose of easing the pain, but not to cure the eye."<sup>10</sup>

Such was the remarkable change in the conduct of the Jewish people towards the Sabbath; and such was the teaching of their doctors respecting it. The most merciful institution of God for mankind had become a source of distress; that which God ordained as a delight and a source of refreshment had become a yoke of bondage; the Sabbath, made for man in paradise, was now a most oppressive and burdensome institution. It was time that God should interfere. Next upon the scene of action appears the Lord of the Sabbath.

---

1 Speaking of the Babylonish captivity, in his note on Eze.23:48, Dr. Clarke says: "From that time to the present day the Jews never relapsed into idolatry."

2 1 Mac.1:41-43.

3 1 Mac.2:20-38; Josephus' Antiquities, b. xii. chap. vi.

4 2Mac.5:25,26.

5 1Mac.2:41.

6 2Mac.6:11.

7 2Mac.8:23-28.

8 1Mac.9:43-49; Josephus Antiquities, b. xiii. chap. i.; 2Mac.15.

9 Antiquities of the Jews, b. xiv. chap. iv. Here we call attention to one of those historical frauds by which Sunday is shown to be the Sabbath. Dr. Justin Edwards states this case thus: "Pompey, the Roman general, knowing this, when besieging Jerusalem, would not attack them on the Sabbath; but spent the day in constructing his works, and preparing to attack them on Monday, and in a manner that they could not withstand, and so he took the city." - Sabbath Manual, p. 216. That is to say, the next day after the Sabbath was Monday, and of course Sunday was the Sabbath! Yet Dr. E. well knew that in Pompey's time, 63 years before Christ, Saturday was the only weekly Sabbath, and that Sunday and not Monday was the day of attack.

10 Sabbath Manual of the American Tract Society, pp. 214, 215.

CHAPTER 10

THE SABBATH DURING THE LAST OF THE SEVENTY WEEKS

---

Mission of the Saviour - His qualifications as a judge of Sabbatic observance - State of the institution at his advent - The Saviour at Nazareth - At Capernaum - His discourse in the corn - field - Case of the man with a withered arm - The Saviour among his relatives - Case of the impotent man - Of the man born blind - Of the woman bound by Satan - Of the man who had the dropsy - Object of our Lord's teaching and miracles relative to the Sabbath - Unfairness of many anti Sabbatarians - Examination of Matt.24:20 - The Sabbath not abrogated at the crucifixion - Fourth commandment after that event - Sabbath not changed at the resurrection of Christ - Examination of John 20:26 - Of Acts 2:1,2 - Redemption furnishes no argument for the change of the Sabbath - Examination of Ps. 118:22 - 24 - The Sabbath neither abolished nor changed as late as the close of the Seventy weeks.

---

In the fullness of time God sent forth his Son to be the Saviour of the world. He who fulfilled this mission of infinite benevolence was both the Son of God and the Son of man. He was with the Father before the world was, and by him God created all things.<sup>1</sup> The Sabbath being ordained at the close of that great work as a memorial to keep it in lasting remembrance, the Son of God, by whom all things were created, could not be otherwise than a perfect judge of its true design, and of its proper observance. The sixty-nine weeks of Daniel's prophecy being accomplished, the Redeemer began to preach, saying, "The time is fulfilled."<sup>2</sup> The ministry of the Saviour was at a time when the Sabbath of the Lord had become utterly perverted from its gracious design, by the teaching of the Jewish doctors. As we have seen in the previous chapter, it was to the people no longer a source of refreshment and delight, but a cause of suffering and distress. It had been loaded down with traditions by the doctors of the law until its merciful and beneficent design was utterly hidden beneath the rubbish of men's inventions. It being impracticable for Satan, after the Babylonish captivity, to cause the Jewish people, even by bloody edicts, to relinquish the Sabbath and openly to profane it as before that time, he turned their doctors so to pervert it, that its real character should be utterly changed and its observance entirely unlike that which would please God. We shall find that the Saviour never missed an opportunity to correct their false notions respecting the Sabbath; and that he selected, with evident design, the Sabbath as the day on which to perform many of his merciful works. It will be found that no small share of his teaching through his whole ministry was devoted to a determination of what was lawful on the Sabbath, a singular fact for those to explain who think that he designed its abrogation. At the opening of our Lord's ministry, we read thus:

"And Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee; and there went out a fame of him through all the region round about. And he taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all. And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up; and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read."<sup>3</sup>

Such was the manner of the Saviour relative to the Sabbath. It is evident that in this he designed to show his regard for that day; for it was not necessary thus to do in order to gain a congregation, as vast multitudes were ever ready to throng his steps. His testimony being rejected, our Lord left Nazareth for Capernaum. Thus the sacred historian says:

"But he, passing through the midst of them, went his way, and came down to Capernaum, a city of Galilee, and taught them on the Sabbath days. And they were astonished at his doctrine; for his word was with power. And in the synagogue there was a man which had a spirit of an unclean devil; and he cried out with a loud voice, saying, Let us alone; what have we to do with thee, thou Jesus of Nazareth; art thou come to destroy us? I know thee who thou art; the Holy One of God. And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace, and come out of him. And when the devil had thrown him in the midst, he came out of him, and hurt him not. And they were all amazed, and spake among themselves, saying, What a word is this! for with authority and power he commandeth the unclean spirits, and they come out. And the fame of him went out into every place of the country round about. And he arose out of the synagogue, and entered into Simon's house. And Simon's wife's mother was taken with a great fever; and they besought him for her. And he stood over her, and rebuked the fever; and it left her; and immediately she rose and ministered unto them."<sup>4</sup>

These miracles are the first which stand upon record as performed by the Saviour upon the Sabbath. But the strictness of Jewish views relative to the Sabbath is seen in that they waited till sunset, that is, till the Sabbath was passed,<sup>5</sup> before they brought the sick to be healed. Thus it is added:

"And at even when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils. And all the city was gathered together at the door. And he healed many that were sick of divers diseases, and cast out many devils; and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew him."<sup>6</sup>

The next mention of the Sabbath is of peculiar interest:

"At that time Jesus went on the Sabbath day through the corn; and his disciples were an hungered, and began to pluck the ears of corn, and to eat. But when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto him, Behold thy disciples do that which is not lawful to do upon the Sabbath day. But he said unto them, Have ye not read what David did, when he was an hungered, and they that were with him; how he entered into the house of God, and did eat the shew-bread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only for the priests? Or have ye not read in the law, how that on the Sabbath day the priests in the temple profane the Sabbath, and are blameless? But I say unto you that in this place is one greater than the temple. But if ye had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless. For the Son of man is Lord even of the Sabbath day."<sup>7</sup>

The parallel text in Mark has an important addition to the conclusion as stated by Matthew:

"And he said unto them, The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath; therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath."<sup>8</sup>

The following points should be noted in examining this text:

1. That the question at issue did not relate to the act of passing through the corn on the Sabbath; for the Pharisees themselves were in the company; and hence it may be concluded that the Saviour and those with him were either going to, or returning from, the synagogue.
2. That the question raised by the Pharisees was this: Whether the disciples, in satisfying their hunger from the corn through which they were passing, were not violating the law of the Sabbath.
3. That he to whom this question was proposed was in the highest degree competent to answer it; for he was with the Father when the Sabbath was made.<sup>9</sup>
4. That the Saviour was pleased to appeal to scriptural precedents for the decision of this question, rather than to assert his own independent judgment.
5. That the first case cited by the Saviour was peculiarly appropriate. David, fleeing for his life, entered the house of God upon the Sabbath,<sup>10</sup> and ate the shew-bread to satisfy his hunger. The disciples, to relieve their hunger, simply ate of the corn through which they were passing upon the Sabbath. If David did right, though eating in his necessity of that which belonged only to the priests, how little of blame could be attached to the disciples who had not even violated a precept of the ceremonial law? Thus much for the disciples' satisfying their hunger as they did upon the Sabbath. Our Lord's next example is designed to show what labor upon the Sabbath is not a violation of its sacredness.
6. And hence the case of the priests is cited. The same God who had said in the fourth commandment, "Six days shalt thou labor and do all THY work," had commanded that the priests upon the Sabbath should offer certain sacrifices in his temple.<sup>11</sup> Herein was no contradiction; for the labor performed by the priests upon the Sabbath was simply the maintenance of the appointed worship of God in his temple, and was not doing what the commandment calls "THY WORK." Labor of this kind, therefore, the Saviour being judge, was not, and never had been, a violation of the Sabbath.
7. But it is highly probable that the Saviour, in this reference to the priests, had his mind not merely upon the sacrifices which they offered upon the Sabbath, but upon the fact that they were required to prepare new shew-bread every Sabbath; when the old was to be removed from the table before the Lord and eaten by them.<sup>12</sup> This view of the matter would connect the case of the priests with that of David, and both would bear with wonderful distinctness upon the act of the disciples. Then our Lord's argument could be appreciated when he adds: "But I say unto you, That in this place is one greater than the temple." So that if the shew-bread was to be prepared each Sabbath for the use of those who ministered in the temple, and those who did this were guiltless, how free from guilt also must be the disciples who, in following HIM that was greater than the temple, but who had not where to lay his head, had eaten of the standing corn upon the Sabbath to relieve their hunger?
8. But our Lord next lays down a principle worthy of the most serious attention. Thus he adds: "But if ye had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless." The Most High had ordained certain labor to be performed upon the Sabbath, in order that sacrifices might be offered to himself. But Christ affirms upon the authority of the Scriptures,<sup>13</sup> that there is something far more acceptable to God than sacrifices, and that this is acts of mercy. If God held those guiltless who offered sacrifices upon the Sabbath, how much less would he condemn those who extend mercy and relief to the distressed and suffering, upon that day.

9. Nor does the Saviour even leave the subject here; for he adds: "The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath; therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath." If the Sabbath was made, certain acts were necessary in order to give existence to it. What were those acts? (1) God rested upon the seventh day. This made the seventh day the rest-day or Sabbath of the Lord. (2) He blessed the day; thus it became his holy day. (3) He sanctified it, or set it apart to a holy use; thus its observance became a part of man's duty toward God. There must be a time when these acts were performed. And on this point there is really no room for controversy. They were not performed at Sinai, nor in the wilderness of Sin, but in paradise. And this is strikingly confirmed by the language here used by the Saviour: "The Sabbath was made for THE man, not THE man for the Sabbath;"<sup>14</sup> thus citing our minds to the man Adam that was made of the dust of the ground, and affirming that the Sabbath was made for him; a conclusive testimony that the Sabbath originated in paradise. This fact is happily illustrated by a statement of the apostle Paul: "Neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man."<sup>15</sup> It will not be denied that this language has direct reference to the creation of Adam and Eve. If then we turn back to the beginning, we shall find Adam made of the dust of the ground, Eve taken from his side, and the Sabbath made of the seventh day.<sup>16</sup> Thus the Saviour, to complete the solution of the question raised by the Pharisees, traces the Sabbath back to the beginning, as he does the institution of marriage when the same class proposed for his decision the lawfulness of divorce.<sup>17</sup> His careful statement of the design of the Sabbath and of marriage, tracing each to the beginning, in the one case striking down their perversion of the Sabbath, in the other, that of marriage, is the most powerful testimony in behalf of the sacredness of each institution. The argument in the one case stands thus: In the beginning God created one man and one woman, designing that they TWO should be one flesh. The marriage relation therefore was designed to unite simply two persons, and this union should be sacred and indissoluble. Such was the bearing of his argument upon the question of divorce. In relation to the Sabbath, his argument is this: God made the Sabbath for the man that he made of the dust of the ground; and being thus made for an unfallen race, it can only be a merciful and beneficent institution. He who made the Sabbath for man before the fall saw what man needed, and knew how to supply that want. It was given to him for rest, refreshment, and delight; a character that it sustained after the fall,<sup>18</sup> but which the Jews had wholly lost sight of.<sup>19</sup> And thus our Lord lays open his whole heart concerning the Sabbath. He carefully determines what works are not a violation of the Sabbath; and this he does by Old-Testament examples, that it may be evident that he is introducing no change in the institution; he sets aside their rigorous and burdensome traditions concerning the Sabbath, by tracing it back to its merciful origin in paradise; and having thus disencumbered the Sabbath of Pharisaic rigor, he leaves it upon its paradisiacal foundation, enforced by all the authority and sacredness of that law which he came not to destroy, but to magnify and make honorable.<sup>20</sup>

10. Having thus divested the Sabbath of all Pharisaic additions, our Lord concludes with this remarkable declaration: "Therefore the Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath." (1) It was not a disparagement to the Sabbath, but an honor, that God's only Son should claim to be its Lord. (2) Nor was it derogatory to the character of the Redeemer to be the Lord of the Sabbath; with all the high honors pertaining to his messiahship he is ALSO Lord of the Sabbath. Or, if we take the expression in Matthew, he is "Lord EVEN of the Sabbath day," it implies that it is not a small honor to possess such a title. (3) This title implies that the Messiah should be the protector, and not the destroyer, of the Sabbath. And hence that he was the rightful being to decide the proper nature of Sabbatic observance. With these memorable words ends our Lord's first discourse concerning the Sabbath.

From this time the Pharisees watched the Saviour to find an accusation against him of violating the Sabbath. The next example will show the malignity of their hearts, their utter perversion of the Sabbath, the urgent need of an authoritative correction of their false teachings respecting it, and the Saviour's unanswerable defense:

"And when he was departed thence, he went into their synagogue: and behold there was a man which had his hand withered. And they asked him, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath days? that they might accuse him. And he said unto them, What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it, and lift it out? How much then is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore, it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days. Then saith he to the man, Stretch forth thine hand. And he stretched it forth; and it was restored whole, like as the other. Then the Pharisees went out and held a council against him, how they might destroy him."<sup>21</sup>

What was the act that caused this madness of the Pharisees? On the part of the Saviour, it was a word; on the part of the man, it was the act of stretching out his arm. Did the law of the Sabbath forbid either of these things? No one can affirm such a thing. But the Saviour had publicly transgressed that tradition of the Pharisees that forbade the doing of anything whatever toward the healing of the sick upon the Sabbath. And how necessary that such a wicked tradition should be swept away, if the Sabbath itself was to be preserved for man. But the Pharisees were filled with such madness that they went out of the synagogue and consulted how they might destroy the Saviour. Yet Jesus only acted in behalf of the Sabbath in setting aside those traditions by which they had perverted it.

After this, our Lord returned into his own country, and thus we read of him:

"And when the Sabbath day was come, he began to teach in the synagogue; and many hearing him were astonished, saying, From whence hath this man these things? and what wisdom is this which is given unto him, that even such mighty works are wrought by his hands?"<sup>22</sup>

Not far from this time we find the Saviour at Jerusalem, and the following miracle was performed upon the Sabbath:

"And a certain man was there which had an infirmity thirty and eight years. When Jesus saw him lie, and knew that he had been there now a long time in that case, he saith unto him, Wilt thou be made whole? The impotent man answered him, Sir, I have no man, when the water is troubled, to put me into the pool; but while I am coming, another steppeth down before me. Jesus saith unto him, Rise, take up thy bed, and walk. And immediately the man was made whole, and took up his bed and walked; and on the same day was the Sabbath. The Jews therefore said unto him that was cured, It is the Sabbath day: It is not lawful for thee to carry thy bed. He answered them, He that made me whole, the same said unto me, Take up thy bed, and walk. Then asked they him, What man is that which said unto thee, Take up thy bed, and walk? . . . The man departed and told the Jews that it was Jesus, which had made him whole. And therefore did the Jews persecute Jesus, and sought to slay him, because he had done these things on the Sabbath day. But Jesus answered them, My Father worketh hitherto, and I work. Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him, because he not only had broken the Sabbath, but said also that God was his Father, making himself equal with God."<sup>23</sup>

Our Lord here stands charged with two crimes: 1. He had broken the Sabbath. 2. He had made himself equal with God. The first accusation is based on these particulars: (1) By his word he had healed the impotent man. But this violated no law of God; it only set at naught that tradition which forbade anything to be done for curing diseases upon the Sabbath. (2) He had directed the man to carry his bed. But this as a burden was a mere trifle,<sup>24</sup> like a cloak or mat, and was designed to show the reality of his cure, and thus to honor the Lord of the Sabbath who had healed him. Moreover, it was not such a burden as the Scriptures forbid upon the Sabbath.<sup>25</sup> (3) Jesus justified what he had done by comparing his present act of healing to that work which his Father had done HITHERTO, i.e., from the beginning of the creation. Ever since the Sabbath was sanctified in paradise, the Father, by his providence, had continued to mankind, even upon the Sabbath, all the merciful acts by which the human race has been preserved. This work of the Father was of precisely the same nature as that which Jesus had now done. These acts did not argue that the Father had hitherto lightly esteemed the Sabbath, for he had most solemnly enjoined its observance in the law and in the prophets;<sup>26</sup> and as our Lord had most expressly recognized their authority,<sup>27</sup> there was no ground to accuse him of disregarding the Sabbath, when he had only followed the example of the Father from the beginning. The Saviour's answer to these two charges will remove all difficulty:

"Then answered Jesus and said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do; for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise." <sup>28</sup>

This answer involves two points: 1. That he was following his Father's perfect example, who had ever laid open to him all his works; and hence as he was doing that only which had ever been the pleasure of the Father to do, he was not engaged in the overthrow of the Sabbath. 2. And by the meek humility of this answer - "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do" - he showed the groundlessness of their charge of self-exaltation. Thus, in nothing was there left a chance to answer him again.

Several months after this, the same case of healing was under discussion:

"Jesus answered and said unto them, I have done one work, and ye all marvel. Moses therefore gave unto you circumcision (not because it is of Moses, but of the fathers;) and ye on the Sabbath-day circumcise a man. If a man on the Sabbath day receive circumcision, that the law of Moses should not be broken; are ye angry at me, because I have made a man every whit whole on the Sabbath day?"<sup>29</sup>

This Scripture contains our Lord's second answer relative to healing the impotent man upon the Sabbath. In his first answer he rested his defense upon the fact that what he had done was precisely the same as that which his Father had done hitherto, that is, from the beginning of the world; which implies that the Sabbath had existed from the same point, else the example of the Father during this time would not be relevant. In this, his second answer, a similar point is involved relative to the origin of the Sabbath. His defense this time rests upon the fact that his act of healing no more violated the Sabbath than did the act of circumcising upon the Sabbath. But if circumcision, which was ordained in the time of Abraham, was older than the Sabbath - as it certainly was if the Sabbath originated in the wilderness of Sin - there would be an impropriety in the allusion; for circumcision would be entitled to the priority as the more ancient institution. It would be strictly proper to speak of the more recent institution as involving no violation of an older one; but it would be otherwise to speak of an ancient institution as involving no violation of one more recent. The language therefore implies that the Sabbath was older than circumcision; in other words, more ancient than the days of Abraham. These two answers of the Saviour are certainly in harmony with the unanimous testimony of the sacred writers, that the Sabbath originated with the sanctification of the rest-day of the Lord in Eden.

What had the Saviour done to justify the hatred of the Jewish people toward him? He had healed upon the Sabbath, with one word, a man who had been helpless thirty-eighty years. Was not this act in strict accordance with the Sabbatic institution? Our Lord has settled this point in the affirmative by weighty and unanswerable arguments,<sup>30</sup> not in this case alone, but in others already noticed, and also in those which remain to be noticed. Had he left the man in his wretchedness because it was the Sabbath, when a word would have healed him, he would have dishonored the Sabbath, and thrown reproach upon its Author. We shall find the Lord of the Sabbath still further at work in its behalf in rescuing it from the hands of those who had so utterly perverted its design; a work quite unnecessary, had he designed to nail the institution to his cross.

The next incident to be noticed is the case of the man that was born blind. Jesus seeing him said:

"I must work the works of him that sent me whilst it is day; the night cometh when no man can work. As long as I am in the world, I am the light of the world. When he had thus spoken he spat on the ground, and made clay of the spittle, and he anointed the eyes of the blind man with the clay, and said unto him, Go wash in the pool of Siloam (which is by interpretation, Sent). He went his way therefore, and washed, and came seeing. . . . And it was the Sabbath day when Jesus made the clay and opened his eyes."<sup>31</sup>

Here is the record of another of our Lord's merciful acts upon the Sabbath day. He saw a man blind from his birth; moved with compassion toward him, he moistened clay and anointed his eyes, and sent him to the pool to wash; and when he had washed he received sight. The act was alike worthy of the Sabbath and of its Lord: and it pertains only to the opponents of the Sabbath now, as it pertained only to the enemies of its Lord then, to see in this even the slightest violation of the Sabbath.

After this we read as follows:

"And he was teaching in one of the synagogues on the Sabbath. And behold there was a woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years, and was bowed together, and could in no wise lift up herself. And when Jesus saw her, he called her to him, and said unto her, Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity. And he laid his hands on her; and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God. And the ruler of the synagogue answered with indignation, because that Jesus had healed on the Sabbath day, and said unto the people, There are six days in which men ought to work: in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the Sabbath day. The Lord then answered him and said, Thou hypocrite, doth not each one of you on the Sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering? And ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years, be loosed from this bond on the Sabbath day? And when he had said these things, all his adversaries were ashamed: and all the people rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by him."<sup>32</sup>

This time a daughter of Abraham, that is, a pious woman,<sup>33</sup> who had been bound by Satan eighteen years, was loosed from that bond upon the Sabbath day. Jesus silenced the clamor of his enemies by an appeal to their own course of action in loosing the ox and leading him to water upon the Sabbath. With this answer our Lord made ashamed all his adversaries, and all the people rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by him. The last of these glorious acts with which Jesus honored the Sabbath is thus narrated:

"And it came to pass as he went into the house of one of the chief Pharisees to eat bread on the the Sabbath day, that they watched him. And, behold, there was a certain man before him which had the dropsy. And Jesus answering spake unto the lawyers and Pharisees, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath day? And they held their peace. And he took him, and healed him, and let him go; and answered them, saying, Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the Sabbath day? And they could not answer him again to these things."<sup>34</sup>

It is evident that the Pharisees and lawyers durst not answer the question, Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath day? If they said, "Yes," they condemned their own tradition. If they said, "No," they were unable to sustain their answer by fair argument. Hence they remained silent. And when Jesus had healed the man, he asked a second question equally embarrassing: Which of you shall have an ox fall into a pit and will not straightway pull him out on the Sabbath? They could not answer him again to these things. It is apparent that our Lord's argument with the Pharisees from time to time relative to the Sabbath had satisfied them at last that silence relative to their traditions was wiser than speech. In his public teaching the Saviour declared that the weightier matters of the law were judgment, MERCY, and faith;<sup>35</sup> and his long-continued and powerful effort in behalf of the Sabbath, was to vindicate it as a MERCIFUL institution, and to rid it of Pharisaic traditions, by which it was perverted from its original purpose. Those who oppose the Sabbath are here guilty of unfairness in two particulars: 1. They represent these Pharasaic rigors as actually belonging to the Sabbatic institution. By this means they turn the minds of men against the Sabbath. 2. And having done this they represent the effort of the Saviour to set aside those traditions as directed to the overthrow of the Sabbath itself.

And now we come to the Saviour's memorable discourse upon the mount of Olives, on the very eve of his crucifixion, in which for the last time he mentions the Sabbath:

"When ye therefore shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place (whoso readeth, let him understand), then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains: let him which is on the house-top not come down to take anything out of his house; neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes. And woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days! But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day; for then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be."<sup>36</sup>

In this language our Lord brings to view the dreadful calamities of the Jewish people, and the destruction of their city and temple as predicted by the Daniel the prophet;<sup>37</sup> and his watchful care over his people as their Lord leads him to point out their means of escape.

1. He gives them a token by which they should know when this terrible overthrow was immediately impending. It was "the abomination of desolation" standing "in the holy place;" or, as expressed by Luke, the token was "Jerusalem compassed with armies."<sup>38</sup> The fulfillment of this sign is recorded by the historian Josephus. After stating that Cestius, the Roman commander, at the commencement of the contest between the Jews and the Romans, encompassed the city of Jerusalem with an army, he adds:

"Who, had he but continued the siege a little longer, had certainly taken the city; but it was, I suppose, owing to the aversion God had already at the city and the sanctuary, that he was hindered from putting an end to the war that very day. It then happened that Cestius was not conscious either how the besieged despaired of success, nor how courageous the people were for him; and so he recalled his soldiers from the place, and by despairing of any expectation of taking it, without having received any disgrace, he retired from the city, without any reason in the world."<sup>39</sup>

2. This sign being seen, the disciples were to know that the desolation of Jerusalem was nigh. "Then," says Christ, "let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains." Josephus records the fulfillment of this injunction:

"After this calamity had befallen Cestius, many of the most eminent of the Jews swam away from the city, as from a ship when it was going to sink."<sup>40</sup>

Eusebius also relates its fulfillment:

"The whole body, however, of the church at Jerusalem, having been commanded by a divine revelation, given to men of approved piety there before the war, removed from the city, and dwelt at a certain town beyond the Jordan, called Pella. Here, those that believed in Christ, having removed from Jerusalem, as if holy men had entirely abandoned the royal city itself, and the whole land of Judea; the divine justice for their crimes against Christ and his apostles, finally overtook them, totally destroying the whole generation of these evil-doers from the earth."<sup>41</sup>

3. So imminent was the danger when this sign should be seen that not a moment was to be lost. He that was upon the housetop could not even come down to take a single article from his house. The man that was in the field was forbidden to return to the house for his clothes. Not a moment was to be lost; they must flee as they were, and flee for life. And pitiable indeed was the case of those who could not flee.

4. In view of the fact that the disciples must flee the moment that the promised token should appear, our Lord directed them to pray for two things: 1. That their flight should not be in the winter. 2. That it should not be upon the Sabbath day. Their pitiable situation should they be compelled to flee to the mountains in the depth of winter, without time to even take their clothes, sufficiently attest the importance of the first of these petitions, and the tender care of Jesus as the Lord of his people. The second of these petitions will be found equally expressive of his care as Lord of the Sabbath.

5. But it is replied that this last petition has reference only to the fact that the Jews would then be keeping the Sabbath strictly, and as a consequence the city gates would be closed that day, and those be punished with death who should attempt to flee; and hence this petition indicates nothing in proof of Christ's regard for the Sabbath. An assertion so often and so confidently uttered should be well founded in truth; yet a brief examination will show that such is not the case. 1. The Saviour's language has reference to the whole land of Judea, and not to Jerusalem only: "Let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains." The closing of the city gates could not therefore affect the flight of but a part of the disciples. 2. Josephus states the remarkable fact that when Cestius was marching upon Jerusalem in fulfillment of the Saviour's token and had reached Lydda, not many miles from Jerusalem, "he found the city empty of its men; for the whole multitude were gone up to Jerusalem to the feast of tabernacles."<sup>42</sup> The law of Moses required the presence of every male in Israel at this feast in Jerusalem;<sup>43</sup> and thus, in the providence of God, the disciples had no Jewish enemies left in the country to hinder their flight. 3. The Jewish nation being thus assembled at Jerusalem did most openly violate the Sabbath a few days prior to the flight of the disciples; a singular commentary on their supposed strictness in keeping it at that time.<sup>44</sup> Thus Josephus says of the march of Cestius upon Jerusalem that,

"He pitched his camp at a certain place called Gabao, fifty furlongs distant from Jerusalem. But as for the Jews, when they saw the war approaching to their metropolis, they left the feast, and betook themselves to their arms; and taking courage greatly from their multitude, went in a sudden and disorderly manner to the fight, with a great noise, and without any consideration had of the rest of the seventh day, although the Sabbath was the day to which they had the greatest regard; but that rage which made them forget the religious observation [of the Sabbath] made them too hard for their enemies in the fight; with such violence therefore did they fall upon the Romans, as to break into their ranks, and to march through the midst of them, making a great slaughter as they went,"<sup>45</sup> etc.

Thus it is seen that on the eve of the disciples' flight the rage of the Jews toward their enemies made them utterly disregard the Sabbath! 4. But after Cestius encompassed the city with his army, thus giving the Saviour's signal, he suddenly withdrew it, as Josephus says, "without any reason in the world." This was the moment of flight for the disciples, and mark how the providence of God opened the way for those in Jerusalem:

"But when the robbers perceived this unexpected retreat of his, they resumed their courage, and ran after the hinder parts of his army, and destroyed a considerable number of both their horsemen and footmen: and now Cestius lay all night at the camp which was at Scopus, and as he went off farther next day, he thereby invited the enemy to follow him, who still fell upon the hindmost and destroyed them."<sup>46</sup>

This sally of the excited multitude in pursuit of the Romans was at the very moment when the disciples were commanded to flee, and could not but afford them the needed facility of escape. Had the flight of Cestius happened upon the Sabbath, undoubtedly the Jews would have pursued him upon that day, as under less exciting circumstances they had a few days before gone out several miles to attack him upon the Sabbath. It is seen, therefore, that whether in city or country, the disciples were not in danger of being attacked by their enemies, even had their flight been upon the Sabbath day.

6. There is therefore but one view that can be taken relative to the meaning of these words of our Lord, and that is that he thus spake, out of sacred regard for the Sabbath. For in his tender care for his people he had given them a precept that would require them to violate the Sabbath, should the moment for flight happen upon that day. For the command to flee was imperative the instant the promised signal should be seen, and the distance to Pella, where they found a place of refuge, was at least sixty miles. This prayer which the Saviour left with the disciples would cause them to remember the Sabbath whenever they should come before God. It was therefore impossible that the apostolic church should forget the day of sacred rest. Such a prayer, that they might not at a future time be compelled to violate the Sabbath, was a sure and certain means of perpetuating its sacred observance for the coming forty years, until the final destruction of Jerusalem, and was never forgotten by that early church, as we shall hereafter see.<sup>47</sup> The Saviour, who had taken unwearied pains during his whole ministry to show that the Sabbath was a merciful institution and to set aside those traditions by which it had been perverted from its true design, did, in this his last discourse, most tenderly commend the Sabbath to his people, uniting in the same petition their own safety and the sacredness of the rest-day of the Lord.<sup>48</sup>

A few days after this discourse, the Lord of the Sabbath was nailed to the cross as the great sacrifice for the sins of men.<sup>49</sup> The Messiah was thus cut off in the midst of the seventieth week; and by his death he caused the sacrifice and oblation to cease.<sup>50</sup>

Paul thus describes the abrogation of the typical system at the crucifixion of the Lord Jesus:

"Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross. . . . Let no man thereof judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days; which are shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ."<sup>51</sup>

The object of this action is declared to be the handwriting of ordinances. The manner of its abrogation is thus stated: 1. Blotted out; 2. Nailed to the cross; 3. Taken out of the way. Its nature is shown in these words: "Against us" and "contrary to us." The things contained in it were meats, drinks, holy days [Gr. eorhtes a feast day], new moons and sabbaths.<sup>52</sup> The whole is declared a shadow of good things to come; and the body which casts this shadow is of Christ. That law which was proclaimed by the voice of God and written by his own finger upon the tables of stone, and deposited beneath the mercy-seat, was altogether unlike that system of carnal ordinances that was written by Moses in a book, and placed in the side of the ark.<sup>53</sup> It would be absurd to speak of the tables of STONE as NAILED to the cross; or to speak of BLOTTING out what was ENGRAVED in STONE. It would be to represent the Son of God as pouring out his blood to blot out what the finger of his Father had written. It would be to confound all the immutable principles of morality, to represent the ten commandments as "contrary" to man's moral nature. It would be to make Christ the minister of sin, to represent him as dying to utterly destroy the moral law. Nor does that man keep truth on his side who represents the ten commandments as among the things contained in Paul's enumeration of what was abolished. Nor is there any excuse for those who would destroy the ten commandments with this statement of Paul; for he shows, last of all, that what was thus abrogated was a shadow of good things to come - an absurdity if applied to the moral law.

The feasts, new moons, and sabbaths, of the ceremonial law, which Paul declared to be abolished in consequence of the abrogation of that code, have been particularly noticed already.<sup>54</sup> That the Sabbath of the Lord is not included in their number, the following facts evince:

1. The Sabbath of the Lord was made before sin entered our world. It is not therefore one of those things that shadow redemption from sin.<sup>55</sup>
2. Being made FOR man before the fall it is not one of those things that are AGAINST him and CONTRARY to him.<sup>56</sup>
3. When the ceremonial sabbaths were ordained they were carefully distinguished from the Sabbath of the Lord.<sup>57</sup>
4. The Sabbath of the Lord does not owe its existence to the handwriting of ordinances, but is found in the very bosom of that law which Jesus came not to destroy. The abrogation of the ceremonial law could not therefore abolish the Sabbath of the fourth commandment.<sup>58</sup>
5. The effort of our Lord through his whole ministry to redeem the Sabbath from the thralldom of the Jewish doctors, and to vindicate it a merciful institution, is utterly inconsistent with the idea that he nailed it to his cross, as one of those things against man and contrary to him.
6. Our Lord's petition respecting the flight of the disciples from Judea, recognizes the sacredness of the Sabbath many years after the crucifixion of the Saviour.
7. The perpetuity of the Sabbath in the new earth is not easily reconciled with the idea that it was blotted out and nailed to our Lord's cross as one of those things that were contrary to man.<sup>59</sup>
8. Because the authority of the fourth commandment is expressly recognized after the the Saviour's crucifixion.<sup>60</sup>
9. And finally, because the royal law which is unabolished embodies the ten commandments, and consequently embraces and enforces the Sabbath of the Lord.<sup>61</sup>

When the Saviour died upon the cross the whole typical system which had pointed forward to that event as the commencement of its antitype, expired with him. The Saviour being dead, Joseph of Arimathea went in unto Pilate and begged the body of Jesus, and with the assistance of Nicodemus, buried it in his own new tomb.<sup>62</sup>

"And that day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on. And the women also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulcher, and how his body was laid. And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment. Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulcher, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them."<sup>63</sup>

This text is worthy of special attention. 1. Because it is an express recognition of the fourth commandment after the crucifixion of the Lord Jesus. 2. Because it is the most remarkable case of Sabbatic observance in the whole Bible. The Lord of the Sabbath was dead; preparation being made for his embalming, when the Sabbath drew on it was suspended, and they rested, says the sacred historian, according to the commandment. 3. Because it shows that the Sabbath day according to the commandment is the day before the first day of the week; thus identifying the seventh day in the commandment with the seventh day of the New-Testament week. 4. Because it is a direct testimony that the knowledge of the true seventh day was preserved as late as the crucifixion; for they observed the day enjoined in the commandment; and that was the day on which the Most High had rested from the work of creation.

In the course of the day following this Sabbath, that is, upon the first day of the week, it was ascertained that Jesus was risen from the dead. It appears that this event must have taken place upon that day, though it is not thus stated in express terms. At this point of time it is supposed by many that the Sabbath was changed from the seventh to the first day of the week; and that the sacredness of the seventh day was then transferred to the first day of the week, which henceforth was the Christian Sabbath, enforced by all the authority of the fourth commandment. To judge of the truthfulness of these positions, let us read with care each mention of the first day found in the four evangelists. Thus writes Matthew:

"In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulcher."

Thus also Mark writes:

"And when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him. And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulcher at the rising of the sun. . . . Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene."

Luke uses the following language:

"And they returned and prepared spices and ointments, and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment. Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulcher, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them."

John bears the following testimony:

"The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulcher, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulcher. . . . Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in their midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you." <sup>64</sup>

In these texts the foundation of the "Christian Sabbath" must be sought - if indeed such an institution actually exists - for there are no other records of the first day which relate to the time when it is supposed to have become sacred. These texts are supposed to prove that at the resurrection of the Saviour, the first day absorbed the sacredness of the seventh, elevating itself from the rank of a secular to that of a sacred day, and abasing the Sabbath of the Lord to the rank of "the six working days."<sup>65</sup> Yet the following facts must be regarded as very extraordinary indeed. if this supposed change of the Sabbath here took place:

1. That these texts should contain no mention of this change of the Sabbath.
2. That they should carefully discriminate between the Sabbath of the fourth commandment and the first day of the week.

3. That they should apply no sacred title to that day; particularly that they should omit the title of Christian Sabbath.
4. That they should not mention the fact that Christ rested upon that day; an act essential to its becoming his Sabbath.<sup>66</sup>
5. That they do not relate the act of taking the blessing of God from the seventh day, and placing it upon the first; and indeed that they do not mention any act whatever of blessing and hallowing the day.
6. That they omit to mention anything that Christ did TO the first day; and that they even neglect to inform us that Christ so much as took up the first day of the week into his lips!
7. That they give no precept in support of first-day observance, nor do they contain a hint of the manner in which the first day of the week can be enforced by the authority of the fourth commandment.

Should it be asserted, however, from the words of John, that the disciples were on this occasion convened for the purpose of honoring the day of the resurrection, and that Jesus sanctioned this act by meeting with them, thus accomplishing the change of the Sabbath, it is sufficient to cite in reply the words of mark in which the same interview is narrated:

"Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen."<sup>67</sup>

This testimony of Mark shows that the inference so often drawn from the words of John is utterly unfounded. 1. The disciples were assembled for the purpose of eating supper. 2. Jesus came into their midst and upbraided them for their unbelief respecting his resurrection.

The Scriptures declare that "with God all things are possible;" yet this statement is limited by the declaration that God cannot lie.<sup>68</sup> Does the change of the Sabbath pertain to those things that are possible with God, or is excluded by that important limitation, God cannot lie? The Law-giver is the God of truth, and his law is the truth.<sup>69</sup> Whether it would still remain the truth if changed to something else, and whether the Law-giver would still continue to be the God of truth after he had thus changed it, remains to be seen. The fourth commandment, which is affirmed to have been changed, is thus expressed:

"Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. . . . The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. . . . For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."

If now we insert "first day" in place of the seventh, we shall bring the matter to a test:

"Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy. . . . The first day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. . . .

For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the first day, wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."

This changes the truth of God into a lie;<sup>70</sup> for it is false that God rested upon the first day of the week and blessed and hallowed it. Nor is it possible to change the rest-day of the Creator from that day on which he rested to one of the six days on which he did not rest.<sup>71</sup> To change a part of the commandment, and to leave the rest unchanged, will not therefore answer, as the truth which is left is still sufficient to expose the falsehood which is inserted. A more radical change is needed, like the following:

"Remember the Christian Sabbath, to keep it holy. The first day is the Sabbath of the Lord Jesus Christ. For on that day he arose from the dead; wherefore he blessed the first day of the week, and hallowed it."

After such a change, no part of the original Sabbatic institution remains. Not only is the rest-day of the Lord left out, but even the reasons on which the fourth commandment is based are of necessity omitted also. But does such an edition of the fourth commandment as this exist? Not in the Bible, certainly. Is it true that such titles as these are applied to the first day? Never, in the Holy Scriptures. Did the Law-giver bless and hallow that day? Most assuredly not. He did not even take the name of it into his lips. Such a change of the fourth commandment on the part of the God of truth is impossible; for it not merely affirms that which is false and denies that which is true, but it turns the truth of God itself into a lie. It is simply the act of setting up a rival to the Sabbath of the Lord, which, having neither sacredness nor authority of its own, has contrived to absorb that of the Bible Sabbath itself. Such is the FOUNDATION of the first-day Sabbath. The texts which are employed in rearing the institution upon this foundation will be noticed in their proper order and place. Several of these texts properly pertain to this chapter:

"And after eight days again his disciples were within, and Thomas with them; then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you."<sup>72</sup>

It is not asserted that on this occasion our Lord hallowed the first day of the week; for that act is affirmed to date from the resurrection itself on the authority of the texts already quoted. But the sacredness of the first day being assumed as the foundation, this text furnishes the first stone for the superstructure; the first pillar in the first-day temple. The argument drawn from it may be thus stated: Jesus selected this day as the one in which to manifest himself to his disciples; and by this act strongly attested his regard for the day. But it is no small defect in this argument that his next meeting with them was on a fishing occasion,<sup>73</sup> and his last and most important manifestation, when he ascended into Heaven, was upon Thursday.<sup>74</sup> The act of the Saviour in meeting with his disciples must therefore be yielded as insufficient of itself to show that any day is sacred; for it would otherwise prove the sacredness of several of the working days. But a still more serious defect in this argument is found in the fact that this meeting of Jesus with his disciples does not appear to have been upon the first day of the week. It was "after eight days" from the previous meeting of Jesus and the disciples, which, coming at the very close of the resurrection day, could not but have extended into the second day of the week.<sup>75</sup> "After eight days" from this meeting, if made to signify only one week, necessarily carries us to the second day of the week. But a different expression is used by the Spirit of inspiration when simply one week is intended. "After seven days" is the chosen term of the Holy Spirit when designating just one week.<sup>76</sup> "After eight days" most naturally implies the ninth or tenth day;<sup>77</sup> but allowing it to mean the eighth day, it fails to prove that this appearance of the Saviour upon the first day of the week. To sum the argument: The meeting first meeting of Jesus with his disciples in the evening at the close of the first day of the week was mainly if not wholly upon the second day of the week;<sup>78</sup> the second meeting could not have been earlier in the week than the second or third day, and the day seems to have been selected simply because that Thomas was present; the third meeting was upon a fishing occasion; and the fourth, was upon Thursday, when he ascended into Heaven. The argument for first-day sacredness drawn from this text is eminently fitted to the foundation of that sacredness already examined; and the institution of the first-day Sabbath itself, unless formed of more substantial frame-work than enters into its foundation, is at best only a castle in the air.

The text which next enters into the fabric of first-day sacredness is the following:

"And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting."<sup>79</sup>

This text is supposed to contribute an important pillar for the first-day temple. On this wise it is furnished: The disciples were convened on this occasion to celebrate the first-day Sabbath, and the Holy Spirit was poured out at that time in honor of that day. To this deduction there are, however, the most serious objections. 1. That there is no evidence that a first-day Sabbath was then in existence. 2. That there is no intimation that the disciples came together on this occasion for its celebration. 3. Nor that the Holy Spirit was then poured out in honor of the first day of the week. 4. That from the ascension of Jesus until the day of the Spirit's outpouring, the disciple has continued in prayer and supplication, so that their being convened on this day was nothing materially different from what had been the case for the past ten or more days.<sup>80</sup> 5. That had the sacred writer designed to show that a certain day of the week was honored by the events narrated, he would doubtless have stated that fact, and named that day. 6. That Luke was so far from naming the day of the week that it is even now a disputed point; eminent first-day authors<sup>81</sup> even asserting that the day of Pentecost that year came upon the seventh day. 7. That the one great event which the Holy Spirit designed to mark was the antitype of the feast of Pentecost; the day of the week on which that should occur being wholly immaterial. How widely, therefore, do those err who reverse this order, making the day of the week, which the Holy Spirit has not even named, but which they assume to be the first day, the thing of chief importance, and passing in silence over that fact which the Holy Spirit has so carefully noted, that this event took place upon day of Pentecost. The conclusion to which these facts lead is inevitable; viz., that the pillar furnished from this text for the first-day temple is like the foundation of that edifice, simply a thing of the imagination, and quite worthy of a place beside the pillar furnished from the record of our Lord's second appearance to his disciples.

A third pillar for the first-day edifice is the following: Redemption is greater than creation; therefore the day of Christ's resurrection should be observed instead of the day of the Creator's rest. But this proposition is open to the fatal objection that the Bible says nothing of the kind.<sup>82</sup> Who then knows that it is true? When the Creator gave existence to our world, did he not foresee the fall of man? And, foreseeing that fall, did he not entertain the purpose of redeeming man? And does it not follow that the purpose of redemption was entertained in that of creation? Who then can affirm that redemption is greater than the creation?

But as the Scriptures do not decide this point, let it be assumed that redemption is the greater. Who knows that a day should be set apart for its commemoration? The Bible says nothing on the point. But granting that a day should be set apart for this purpose, what day should have the preference? Is it said, That day on which redemption was finished? It is not true that redemption is finished; the resurrection of the saints and redemption of our earth from the curse are included in that work.<sup>83</sup> But granting that redemption should be commemorated before it is finished, by setting apart a day in its honor, the question again arises, What day shall it be? The Bible is silent in reply. If the most memorable day in the history of redemption should be selected, undoubtedly the day of the crucifixion, on which the price of human redemption was paid, must have the preference. Which is the more memorable day, that on which the infinite Law-giver gave up his only and well-beloved Son to die and ignominious death for a race of rebels who had broken his law, or that day on which he restored that beloved Son to life? The latter event, though of thrilling interest, is the most natural thing in the world; the crucifixion of the Son of God for sinful men may be safely pronounced the most wonderful event in the annals of eternity. The crucifixion day is therefore beyond all comparison the more memorable day. And that redemption itself is asserted of the crucifixion rather than of the resurrection is an undoubted fact. Thus it is written:

"In whom we have redemption through his blood." "Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us, for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree;" "Thou was slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood."<sup>84</sup>

If, therefore, any day should be observed in memory of redemption, unquestionably the day of the crucifixion should have the preference. But it is needless to pursue this point further. Whether the day of the crucifixion or the day of the resurrection should be preferred is quite immaterial. The Holy Spirit has said nothing in behalf of either of these days, but it has taken care that the event in each case should have its own appropriate memorial. Would you commemorate the crucifixion of the Redeemer? You need not change the Sabbath to the crucifixion day. It would be a presumptuous sin in you to do this. Here is the divinely appointed memorial of the crucifixion:

"The Lord Jesus, the same night in which he was betrayed, took bread; and when he had given thanks, he brake it, and said, Take, eat; this is my body, which is broken for you; this do in remembrance of me. After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, This cup is the new testament in my blood: this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come."<sup>85</sup>

It is the death of the Redeemer, therefore, and not the day of his death that the Holy Spirit has thought worthy of commemoration. Would you also commemorate the resurrection of the Redeemer? You need not change the Sabbath of the Bible for that purpose. The great Law-giver has never authorized such an act. But an appropriate memorial of that event has been ordained:

"Know ye not that so many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ, were baptized into his death? Therefore we are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in the newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection."<sup>86</sup>

To be buried in the watery grave as our Lord was buried in the tomb, and to be raised from the water to walk in newness of life, as our Lord was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father, is the divinely authorized memorial of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus. And let it be observed, it is not the day of the resurrection, but the resurrection itself, that was thought worthy of commemoration. The events which lie at the foundation of redemption are the death, burial, and resurrection, of the Redeemer. Each of these has its appropriate memorial; while the the days on which they severally occurred have no importance attached to them. It was the death of the redeemer, and not the day of his death, that was worthy of commemoration; and hence the Lord's supper was appointed for that purpose. It was the resurrection of the Saviour, and not the day of the resurrection, that was worthy of commemoration; and hence burial in baptism was ordained as its memorial. It is the change of this memorial to sprinkling that has furnished s plausible a plea for first-day observance in memory of the resurrection.

To celebrated the work of redemption by resting from labor on the first day of the week after six days of toil, it should be true that our Lord accomplished the work of human redemption in the six days prior to that of his resurrection, and that he rested on that day from the work, blessing it, and setting it apart for that reason. Yet not one of these particulars is true. Our Lord's whole life was devoted to this work. He rested temporarily from it indeed over the Sabbath following his crucifixion, but resumed the work on the morning of the first day of the week, which he has never since relinquished, and never will, until its perfect accomplishment in the resurrection of the saints and the redemption of the purchased possession. Redemption, therefore, furnishes no plea for a change of the Sabbath; its own memorials being quite sufficient, without destroying that of the great Creator. And thus the third pillar in the temple of first-day sacredness, like the other parts of that structure which have been already examined, is found to be a thing of the imagination only.

A fourth pillar in this temple is taken from an ancient prophecy in which it is claimed that the Christian Sabbath was foretold:

"The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner. This is the Lord's doing; it is marvelous in our eyes. This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it."<sup>87</sup>

This text is considered one of the strongest testimonies in support of the Christian Sabbath. Yet it is necessary to assume the very points that this text is supposed to prove. 1. It is assumed that the Saviour became the head of the corner by his resurrection. 2. That the day of his resurrection was made the Christian Sabbath in commemoration of that event. 3. And that this day thus ordained should be celebrated by abstinence from labor, and attendance upon divine worship.

To these extraordinary assumptions it is proper to reply: 1. There is no proof that Jesus became the head of the corner on the day of his resurrection. The Scriptures do not mark the day when this event took place. His being made head of the corner has reference to his becoming the chief corner stone of that spiritual temple composed of his people; in other words, it has reference to his becoming head of that living body, the saints of the Most High. It does not appear that he assumed this position until his ascension on high, where he became the chief corner stone in Zion above, elect and precious.<sup>88</sup> And hence there is no evidence that the first day of the week is even referred to in this text. 2. Nor is there the slightest evidence that that day or any other day was set apart as the Christian Sabbath in memory of Christ's resurrection. 3. Nor can there well be found a more extraordinary assumption than that this text enjoins the Sabbatic observance of the first day of the week!

This scripture has manifest reference to the Saviour's act of becoming the head of the New-Testament church; and consequently it pertains to the opening of the gospel dispensation. The day in which the people of God rejoice, in view of this relation to the Redeemer, can therefore be understood of no one day of the week; for they are commanded to "rejoice EVERMORE;"<sup>89</sup> but of the whole period of the gospel dispensation. Our Lord uses the word day in the same manner when he says:

"Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day; and he saw it, and was glad."<sup>90</sup>

To assert the existence of what is termed the Christian Sabbath on the ground that text is the prediction of such an institution, is to furnish a fourth pillar for the first-day temple quite as substantial as those already tested.

The seventieth week of Daniel's prophecy extends three and a half years beyond the death of the Redeemer, to the commencement of the great work for the Gentiles. This period of seven years through which we have been passing is the most eventful period in the history of the Sabbath. It embraces the whole history of the Lord of the Sabbath as connected with that institution: His miracles and teaching, by which it is affirmed that he weakened its authority; his death, at which many affirm that he abrogated it; and his resurrection, at which a still larger number declare that he changed it to the first day of the week. We have had the most ample evidence, however, that each of these positions is false; and that the opening of the great work for the Gentiles witnessed the Sabbath of the fourth commandment neither weakened, abrogated, nor changed.

---

1 Gal.4:4,5; John 1:1-10; 17:5,24; Heb.1.

2 Dan.9:25; Mark 1:14,15.

3 Luke 4:14-16.

4 Luke 4:30-39; Mark 1:21-31; Matt.8:5-15.

5 See, on this point, the conclusion of chapter viii.

6 Mark 1:32-34; Luke 4:40.

7 Matt.12:1-8; Mark 2:23-28; Luke 6:1-5.

8 Mark 2:27,28.

9 Comp. John 1:1-3; Gen.1:1,26; 2:1-2.

10 See chap. viii.

11 Num.28:9,10.

12 Lev.24:5-9; 1Chron.9:32.

13 Hosea 6:6.

14 Thus the Greek Testament: Kai elegen autois. To sabbaton dia ton anthropon egebeto, ech o anthropos dia to sabbaton.

15 1Cor.11:9

16 Gen.2:1-3,7,21-23.

17 Matt.19:3-9.

18 Ex.16:23; 23:12; Isa.58:13,14.

19 See conclusion of chap. ix.

20 Matt.5:17-19; Isa.42:21.

21 Matt.12:9-14; Mark 3:1-6; Luke 6:6-11.

22 Mark 6:1-6.

23 John 5:1-18.

24 Dr. Bloomfield's Greek Testament on this text; family Testament of the American Tract Society on the same; Nevins' Biblical Antiquities, pp. 62, 63.

25 Compare Jer.17:21-27 with Nehemiah 13:15-20.

26 Gen.2:1-3; Ex.20:8-11; Isa.56; 58:13,14; Eze.20.

27 Gal.4:4; Matt.5:17-19; 7:12; 19:17; Luke 16:17.

28 John 5:19.

29 John 7:21-23.

30 Grotius well says: "If he healed any on the Sabbath he made it appear, not only from the law, but also from their received opinions, that such works were not forbidden on the Sabbath." - The Truth of the Christian Religion, b. v. sect. 7.

31 John 9:1-16.

32 Luke 13:10-17.

33 1Pet.3:6.

34 Luke 14:1-6.

35 Matt.23:23.

36 Matt.24:15-21.

37 Dan.9,26,27.

38 Luke 21:20.

39 Jewish Wars, b. ii, chap. xix.

40 Id. b. ii, chap. xx.

41 Eccl. Hist. b. iii, chap. v.

42 Jewish Wars, b. ii, chap. xix.

43 Deut.16:16.

44 Thus remarks Mr. Crozier in the Advent Harbinger for Dec. 6, 1851: "The reference to the Sabbath in Matt.24:20, only shows that the Jews who rejected Christ would be keeping the Sabbath at the destruction of Jerusalem, and would, in consequence, add to the dangers of the disciples' flight by punishing them perhaps with death for fleeing on that day." And Mr. Marsh, forgetting that Christ forbade his disciples to take anything with them in their flight, uses the following language: "If the disciples should attempt to flee from Jerusalem on that day and carry their things, the Jews would embarrass their flight and perhaps put them to death. The Jews would be keeping the Sabbath, because they rejected Christ and his gospel." Advent Harbinger, Jan. 24, 1852. These quotations betray the bitterness of their authors. In honorable distinction from these anti-Sabbatarians, the following is quoted from Mr. William Miller, himself an observer of the first day of the week:

" 'Neither on the Sabbath day.' Because it was to be kept as a day of rest, and no servile work was to be done on that day, nor would it be right for them to travel on that day. Christ has in this place sanctioned the Sabbath, and clearly shows us our duty to let no trivial circumstance cause us to break the law of the Sabbath. Yet how many who profess to believe in Christ, at this present day, make it a point to visit, travel, and feast, on this day? What a false-hearted profession must that person make who can thus treat with contempt the moral law of God, and despise the precepts of the Lord Jesus! We may here learn our obligation to remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." - Exposition of Matt.24, p. 18.

45 Jewish Wars, b. ii, chap. xix.

46 Id. b. ii, chap. xix.

47 See chap. xvi.

48 President Edward says: "A further argument for the perpetuity of the Sabbath we have in Matt.24:20: 'Pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day.' Christ is here speaking of the flight of the apostles and other Christians out of Jerusalem and Judea, just before their final destruction, as is manifest by the whole context, and especially by the 16th verse: 'Then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains.' But this final destruction of Jerusalem was after the dissolution of the Jewish constitution, and after the Christian dispensation was fully set up. Yet it is plainly implied in these words of our Lord, that even then Christians were bound to a strict observation of the Sabbath." - Works of President Edwards, vol. iv, pp. 621, 622, New York, 1849.

49 Matt.27, Isa.53.

50 Dan.9:24-27.

51 Col.2:14-17.

52 For and extended view of these Jewish festivals see chapter vii.

53 Deut.10:4,5, compared with 31:24-26. Thus Morer contrasts the phrase "in the ark," which is used with reference to the two tables, with the expression "in the side of the ark," as used respecting the book of the law, and says of the latter: "In the side of the ark, or more critically, in the outside of the ark; or in a chest by itself on the right side of the ark, saith the Targum of Jonathan." - Morer's Dialogues on the Lord's Day, p. 211, London, 1701.

54 See chap. vii.

55 See chap. ii.

56 Mark 2:27.

57 Lev.23:37,38.

58 Gen.2:1-3; Ex.20; Matt.5:17,19.

59 Isa.66:22,23. See also the close of chap. xix of this work.

60 Luke 23:34-56.

61 James 2:8-12; Matt.5:17-19; Rom.3:19,31.

62 Heb.9; 10; Luke 23:46-53; John 19:38-42.

63 Luke 23:54-56.

64 Matt.28:1; Mark 16:1,2,9; Luke 23:56; 24:1; John 20:1,19.

65 Ezek.46:1.

66 See the origin of the ancient Sabbath in Gen.2:1-3.

67 Mark 16:14. That this interview was certainly the same with that in John 20:19, will be seen from a careful examination of Luke 24.

68 Matt.19:26; Titus 1:2.

69 Isa. 65:16; Ps.119:142,151.

70 Rom.1:25.

71 It is just as easy to change the crucifixion-day from that day of the week on which Christ was crucified, to one of the six days on which he was not, as to change the rest-day of the Creator from that day of the week on which he rested, to one of the six days on which he wrought in the work of creation.

72 John 20:26.

73 John 21.

74 Acts 1:3. Forty days from the day of the resurrection would expire on Thursday.

75 When the resurrection day was "far spent," the Saviour and two of the disciples drew near to Emmaus, a village seven and half miles from Jerusalem. They constrained him to go in with them to tarry for the night. While they were eating supper they discovered that it was Jesus, when he vanished from their sight. Then they arose and returned to Jerusalem; and after their arrival, the first meeting of Jesus with the eleven took place. It could not therefore have lacked but little of sunset, which closed the day, if not actually upon the second day, when Jesus came into their midst. Luke 24. In the latter case, the expression, "the same day at evening being the first day of the week," would find an exact parallel in the meaning, in the expression, "in the ninth day of the month at even," which actually signifies the evening with which the tenth day of the seventh day of the seventh month commences. Lev.23:32.

76 Those who were to come before God from Sabbath to Sabbath to minister in his temple, were said to come "after seven days." 1Chron.9:25; 2Kings 11:5.

77 "After six days," instead of being the sixth day, was about eight days after. Mark 17:1; Mark 9:2; Luke 9:28.

78 That sunset marks the close of the day, see the close of chapter viii.

79 Acts 2:1,2.

80 Luke 24:49-53; Acts 1.

81 Horatio B. Hacket, D.D., Professor of Biblical Literature, in Newton Theological Institution, thus remarks: "It is generally supposed that this Pentecost, signalized by the outpouring of the Spirit, fell on the Jewish Sabbath, our Saturday." - Commentary of the Original Text of the Acts, pp. 50, 51.

82 In 1633, William Prynne, a prisoner in the tower of London, composed a work in defense of first-day observance, entitled, "Dissertation on the Lord's Day Sabbath." He thus acknowledges the futility of the argument under consideration: "No scripture . . . prefers or advanceth the work of redemption . . . before the work of creation; both these works being very great and glorious in themselves; wherefore I cannot believe the work of redemption, or Christ's resurrection alone, to be more excellent and glorious than the work of creation, without sufficient texts and Scripture grounds to prove it; but may deny it as a presumptuous fancy or unsound assertion, till satisfactory proved, as well as peremptorily averred without proof." - Page 59. This is the judgment of a candid advocate of the first day as a Christian festival. On Acts 20:7, he will be allowed to testify again.

83 Luke 21:28; Rom.8:23; Eph.1:13,14; 4:30.

84 Eph.1:7; Gal.3:13; Rev.5:9

85 1Cor.11:23-26.

86 Rom.6:3-5; Col.2:12.

87 Ps.118:22-24.

88 Eph.1:20-23; 2:20,21; 1Pet.2:4-7.

89 1Thess.5:16.

90 John 8:56.

---

CHAPTER 11.

THE SABBATH DURING THE MINISTRY OF THE APOSTLES

---

The knowledge of God preserved in the family of Abraham - The call of the Gentiles - The new covenant puts the law of God into the heart of each Christian - The new covenant has a temple in Heaven; and an ark containing the great original of that law which was in the ark upon earth - And before that ark a priest whose offering can take away sin - The Old and New Testaments compared - The human family in all ages amenable to the law of God - The good olive tree shows the intimate relation between the church of the New Testament and the Hebrew church - The apostolic church observed the Sabbath - Examination of Acts 13 - The assembly of the apostles at Jerusalem - Sabbatarian origin of the church at Philippi - Of the church of the Thessalonians - Of the church of Corinth - The churches in Judea and in many cases among the Gentiles began with Sabbath-keepers - Examination of 1Cor.16:1,2 - Self-contradiction of Dr. Edwards - Paul at Troas - Examination of Rom.14:1-6 - Flight of the disciples from Judea - The Sabbath of the Bible at the close of the first century.

---

We have now traced the Sabbath through the period of its especial connection with the family of Abraham. The termination of the seventy weeks brings us to the call of the Gentiles, and to their admission to equal privileges with the Hebrew race. We have seen that with God there was no injustice in conferring especial blessings upon the Hebrews, and at the same time leaving the Gentiles to their own chosen ways.<sup>1</sup> Twice had he given the human family, as a while, the most ample means of grace that their age of the world admitted, and each time did it result in the almost total apostasy of mankind. Then God selected as his heritage the family of Abraham, his friend; and by means of that family preserved in the earth the knowledge of his law, his Sabbath, and himself, until the coming of the great Messiah. During his ministry, the Messiah solemnly affirmed the perpetuity of his Father's law, enjoining obedience, even to its least commandment;<sup>2</sup> at his death he broke down that middle wall of partition<sup>3</sup> by which the Hebrews had so long been preserved a separate people in the earth; and when about to ascend into Heaven commanded his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature; teaching them to observe all things which he had commanded them.<sup>4</sup> With the expiration of the seventieth week, the apostles enter upon the execution of this great commission to the Gentiles.<sup>5</sup> Several facts of deep interest should here be noticed:

1. The new covenant or testament dates from the death of the Redeemer. In accordance with the prediction of Jeremiah, it began with the Hebrews alone, and was confined exclusively to them until the expiration of the seventieth week. Then the Gentiles were admitted to a full participation with the Hebrews in its blessings, being no longer aliens and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints.<sup>6</sup> God entered into covenant this time with his people as individuals and not as a nation. The promises of this covenant embrace two points of great interest: (1) That God will put his law into the hearts of his people. (2) That he will forgive their sins. These promises being made six hundred years before the birth of Christ, there can be no question relative to what was meant by the law of God. It was the law of God then in existence that should be put into the heart of each new-covenant saint. The new covenant, then, is based upon the perpetuity of the law of God; it does not abrogate that law, but takes away sin, the transgression of the law, from the heart, and puts the law of God in its place.<sup>7</sup> The perpetuity of each precept of the moral law lies, therefore, at the very foundation of the new covenant.

2. As the first covenant had a sanctuary, and within that sanctuary an ark containing the law of God in ten commandments,<sup>8</sup> and had also a priesthood to minister before that ark, to make atonement for the sins of men,<sup>9</sup> even thus is it with the new covenant. Instead of the tabernacle erected by Moses as the pattern of the true, the new covenant has the greater and more perfect tabernacle, which the Lord pitched and not man - the temple of God in Heaven.<sup>10</sup> As the great central point in the earthly sanctuary was the ark containing that law which man had broken, even thus it is with the heavenly sanctuary. "The temple of God was opened in Heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament."<sup>11</sup> Our Lord Jesus Christ as a great High Priest presents his own blood before the ark of God's testament in the temple in Heaven. Respecting this object before which he ministers, let the following points be noted:

1. The ark in the heavenly temple is not empty; it contains the testament of God; and hence it is the great center of the sanctuary above, as the ark of God's testament was the center of the sanctuary of earth.<sup>12</sup>

2. The death of the Redeemer for the sins of men, and his work as High Priest before the ark in Heaven, have direct reference to the fact that within that ark is the law which mankind have broken.

3. As the atonement and priesthood of Christ have reference to the law within that ark before which he ministers, it follows that this law existed and was transgressed before the Saviour came down to die for men.

4. And hence, the law contained in the ark above is not a law which originated in the New Testament; for it necessarily existed long anterior to it.

5. If, therefore, God has revealed this law to mankind, that revelation must be sought in the Old Testament. For while the New Testament makes many references to that law which caused the Saviour to lay down his life for sinful men and even quotes from it it never publishes a second edition, but cites us to the Old Testament for the original code.<sup>13</sup>

6. It follows, therefore, that this law is revealed, and that this revelation is to be found in the Old Testament.

7. In that volume will be found, (1) the descent of the Holy One upon Mount Sinai; (2) The proclamation of his law in ten commandments; (3) The ten commandments written by the finger of God upon two table of stone; (4) These tables placed beneath the mercy-seat in the ark of the earthly sanctuary.<sup>14</sup>

8. That this remarkable Old-Testament law which was shut up in the ark of the earthly sanctuary was identical with that in the ark in Heaven, may be thus shown: (1) The mercy-seat which was placed over the ten commandments was the place from which pardon was expected, the great central point in the work of atonement;<sup>15</sup> (2) The law beneath the mercy-seat was that which made the work of atonement necessary; (3) There was no atonement that could take away sins; it was only a shadowy or typical atonement; (4) But there was actual sin, and hence a real law which man had broken; (5) There must therefore be an atonement that can take away sins; and that real atonement must pertain to that law which was broken, and respecting which an atonement had been shadowed forth.<sup>16</sup> (6) The ten commandments are thus set forth in the Old Testament as that law which demanded an atonement; while the fact is ever kept in view that those sacrifices there provided could not avail to take away sins.<sup>17</sup> (7) But the death of Jesus as the antitype of those sacrifices, was designed to accomplish precisely what they shadowed forth, but which they could not effect, viz., to make atonement for the transgression of that law which was placed in the ark beneath the mercy-seat.<sup>18</sup>

We are thus brought to the conclusion that the law of God contained in the ark in Heaven is identical with that law which was contained in the ark upon the earth; and that both are identical with that law which the new covenant puts in the heart of each believer.<sup>19</sup> The Old Testament, therefore, gives us the law of God and pronounces it perfect; it also provides a typical atonement, but pronounces it inadequate to take away sins.<sup>20</sup> Hence what was needed was not a new edition of the law of God; for that which was given already was perfect; but a real atonement to take away the guilt of the transgressor. So the New Testament responds precisely to this want, providing a real atonement in the death and intercession of the Redeemer, but giving no new edition of the law of God,<sup>21</sup> though it fails not to cite us to the perfect code given long before. But although the New Testament does not give a new edition of the law of God, it does show that the Christian dispensation has the great original of that law in the sanctuary in Heaven.

9. We have seen that the new covenant places the law of God in the heart of each believer, and that the original of that law is preserved in the temple in Heaven. That all mankind are amenable to the law of God, and that they ever have been, is clearly shown by Paul's epistle to the Romans. In the first chapter, he traces the origin of idolatry to the willful apostasy of the Gentiles, which took place soon after the flood. In the second chapter, he shows that although God gave them up to their own ways, and as a consequence left them without his written law, yet they were not left in utter darkness; for they had by nature the work of the law written in their hearts; and dim as was this light, their salvation would be secured by living up to it, or their ruin accomplished by sinning against it. In the third chapter, he shows what advantage the family of Abraham had in being taken as the heritage of God, while all other nations were left to their own ways. It was that the oracles of God, the written law, was given them in addition to that work of the law written in the heart, which they had by nature in common with the Gentiles. He then shows that they were no better than the Gentiles, because that both classes were transgressors of the law. This he proves by quotations from the Old Testament. Then he shows that the law of God has jurisdiction over all mankind:

"Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law, that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God."<sup>22</sup>

He then shows that the law cannot save the guilty, but must condemn them, and that justly. Next, he reveals the great fact that redemption through the death of Jesus is the only means by which God can justify those who seek pardon, and at the same time remain just himself. And finally he exclaims:

"Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea, we establish the law."<sup>23</sup>

It follows, herefore, that the law of God is unabolished; that the sentence of condemnation which it pronounces upon the guilty is as extensive as is the offer of pardon through the gospel; that its work exists in the hearts of men by nature; from which we may conclude that man in his uprightness possessed it in perfection, as is further proved by the fact that the new covenant, after delivering men from the condemnation of the law of God, puts that law perfectly into their hearts. From all of which it follows that the law of God is the great standard by which sin is shown,<sup>24</sup> and hence the rule of life, by which all mankind, both Jews and Gentiles, should walk.

That the church in the present dispensation is really a continuation of the ancient Hebrew church, is shown by the illustration of the good olive tree. That ancient church was God's olive tree, and that olive tree has never been destroyed.<sup>25</sup> Because of unbelief, some of its branches were broken off; but the proclamation of the gospel to the Gentiles does not create a new olive tree; it only grafts into the good olive tree such of the Gentiles as believe; giving them a place among the original branches, that with them they may partake of its root and fatness. This olive tree must date from the call of Abraham after the apostasy of the Gentiles; its trunk representing the patriarchs, beginning with the father of the faithful;<sup>26</sup> its branches, the Hebrew people. The ingrafting of the wild olive into the place of those branches which were broken off, represents the admission of the Gentiles to equal privileges with the Hebrews after the expiration of the seventy weeks. The Old-Testament church, the original olive tree, was a kingdom of priests and an holy nation; the New-Testament church, the olive tree after the ingrafting of the Gentiles, is described in the same terms.<sup>27</sup>

When God gave up the Gentiles to apostasy before the call of Abraham, he confounded their language, that they should not understand one another, and thus scattered them abroad upon the face of the earth. Standing over against this is the gift of tongues on the day of Pentecost, preparatory to the call of the Gentiles, and their ingrafting into the good olive tree.<sup>28</sup>

We have followed the Sabbath to the call of the Gentiles, and the opening events of the gospel dispensation. We find the law of God, of which the Sabbath is a part, to be that which made our Lord's death as an atoning sacrifice necessary; and that the great original is in the ark above, before which our Lord ministers as high priest; while a copy of that law is by the new covenant written within the heart of each believer. It is seen, therefore, that the law of God is more intimately connected with the people of God since the death of the Redeemer than before that event.

That the apostolic church did sacredly regard the Sabbath, as well as all the other precepts of the moral law, admits of no doubt. The fact is proved, not merely because the early Christians were not accused of its violation by their most inveterate enemies; nor wholly by the fact that they held sin to be the transgression of the law, and that the law was the great standard by which sin is shown, and that by which sin becomes exceeding sinful.<sup>29</sup> These points are certainly very decisive evidence that the apostolic church did keep the fourth commandment. The testimony of James relative to the ten commandments, that he who violates one of them becomes guilty of all, is yet another strong evidence that the primitive church did sacredly regard the whole law of God.<sup>30</sup> But besides these facts we have a peculiar guaranty that the Sabbath of the Lord was not forgotten by the apostolic church. The prayer which our Lord taught his disciples, that their flight from Judea should not be upon the Sabbath was, as we have seen, designed to impress its sacredness deeply upon their minds, and could not but have secured that result.<sup>31</sup> In the history of the primitive church we have several important references to the Sabbath. The first of these is as follows:

"But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and sat down."<sup>32</sup>

By invitation of the rulers of the synagogue, Paul delivered an extended address, proving that Jesus was the Christ. In the course of these remarks he used the following language:

"For they that dwell at Jerusalem, and their rulers, because they knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every Sabbath day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him."<sup>33</sup>

When Paul's discourse was concluded, we read:

"And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath."<sup>34</sup> Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God. And the next Sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God."<sup>35</sup>

These texts show, 1. That by the term Sabbath in the book of Acts is meant that day on which the Jewish people assembled in the synagogue to listen to the voices of the prophets. 2. That as this discourse was fourteen years after the resurrection of Christ, and the record of it by Luke was some thirty years after that event, it follows that the alleged change of the Sabbath at the resurrection of Christ had not, even after many years, come to the knowledge of either Luke or Paul. 3. That here was a remarkable opportunity to mention the change of the Sabbath, had it been true that the Sabbath had been changed in honor of Christ's resurrection. For when Paul was asked to preach the same words the next Sabbath, he might have answered that the following day was now the proper day for divine worship. And Luke, in placing this incident upon record, could not well avoid the mention of this new day, had it been true that another day had become the Sabbath of the Lord. 4. That as this second meeting pertained almost wholly to Gentiles, it cannot be said in this case that Paul preached upon the Sabbath out of regard to the Jews. On the contrary, the narrative strongly indicates Paul's regard for the Sabbath as the proper day for divine worship. 5. Nor can it be denied that the Sabbath was well understood by the Gentiles in this city, and that they had some degree of regard for it, a fact which will be corroborated by other texts.

Several years after these things, the apostles assembled at Jerusalem to consider the question of circumcision."<sup>36</sup> "Certain men which came down from Judea," finding the Gentiles uncircumcised, had "taught the brethren, and said, Except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses ye cannot be saved." Had they found the Gentiles neglecting the Sabbath, unquestionably this would have first called out their rebuke. It is indeed worthy of notice that no dispute at this time existed in the church relative to the observance of the Sabbath; for none was brought before this apostolic assembly. Yet had it been true that the change of the Sabbath was then advocated, or that Paul had taught the Gentiles to neglect the Sabbath, without doubt those who brought up the question of circumcision would have urged that of the Sabbath with even greater earnestness. That the law of Moses, the observance of which was under discussion in this assembly, is not the ten commandments, is evident from several decisive facts. 1. Because that Peter calls the code under consideration a yoke which neither their fathers nor themselves were able to bear. But James expressly calls that royal law, which, on his own showing, embodies the ten commandments, a law of liberty. 2. Because that this assembly did decide against the authority of the law of Moses; and yet James, who was a member of this body, did some years afterward solemnly enjoin obedience to the commandments, affirming that he who violated one was guilty of all.<sup>37</sup> 3. Because the chief feature in the law of Moses as here presented was circumcision.<sup>38</sup> But circumcision was not in the ten commandments; and were it true that the law of Moses includes these commandments, circumcision would not in that case be a chief feature of that law. 4. Finally, because that the precepts still declared obligatory are not properly either of the ten commandments. These were, first, the prohibition of meats offered to idols; second, of blood; third, of things strangled; and fourth, of fornication.<sup>39</sup> Each of these precepts may be often found in the books of Moses,<sup>40</sup> and the first and last ones come under the second and seventh commandments respectively; but neither of these cover but a part of that which is forbidden in either commandment. It is evident, therefore, that the authority of the ten commandments was not under consideration in this assembly, and that the decision of that assembly had no relation to those precepts. For otherwise the apostles released the Gentiles from all obligation to eight of the ten commandments, and from the greater prohibitions contained in the other two.

It is evident that those greatly err who represent the Gentiles as released from the obligation of the Sabbath by this assembly. The question did not come before the apostles on this occasion; a strong proof that the Gentiles had not been taught to neglect the Sabbath, as they had to omit circumcision, which was the occasion of its being brought before the apostles at Jerusalem. Yet the Sabbath was referred to in this very assembly as an existing institution, and that, too, in connection with the Gentile Christians. Thus when James pronounced sentence upon the question, he used the following language:

"Wherefore my sentence is, that we trouble not them, which from among the Gentiles are turned to God; but that we write unto them, that they abstain from pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from things strangled, and from blood. For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day."<sup>41</sup>

This last fact is given by James as a reason for the course proposed toward the brethren among the Gentiles. "For Moses of old time hath in every city them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day." From this it is apparent that the ancient custom of divine worship upon the Sabbath was not only preserved by the Jewish people and carried with them into every city of the Gentiles, but that the Gentile Christians did attend these meetings. Otherwise the reason assigned by James would lose all its force, as having no application to this case. That they did attend them strongly attests the Sabbath as the day of divine worship with the Gentile churches.

That the ancient Sabbath of the Lord had neither been abrogated nor changed prior to this meeting of the apostles, is strongly attested by the nature of the dispute here adjusted. And the close of their assembly beheld the Bible Sabbath still sacredly enthroned within the citadel of the fourth commandment. After this, in a vision of the night, Paul was called to visit Macedonia. In obedience to this call he came to Philippi, which is the chief city of that part of Macedonia. Thus Luke records the visit:

"And we were in that city abiding certain days. And on the Sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither. And a certain woman named Lydia, a seller of purple, of the city of Thyatira, which worshiped God, heard us; whose heart the Lord opened, that she attended unto the things which were spoken of Paul."<sup>42</sup>

This does not appear to have been a gathering of Jews, but of Gentiles, who, like Cornelius, were worshipers of the true God. Thus it is seen that the church of the Philippians originated with a pious assembly of Sabbath-keeping Gentiles. And it is likely that Lydia and those employed by her in business, who were evidently observers of the Sabbath, were the means of introducing the gospel into their own city of Thyatira.

"Now when they had passed through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Thessalonica, where was a synagogue of the Jews. And Paul, as his manner was,<sup>43</sup> went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures. . . . And some of them believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few."<sup>44</sup>

Such was the origin of the Thessalonian church. That it was an assembly of Sabbath-keepers at its beginning admits of no doubt. For besides the few Jews who received the gospel through the labors of Paul, there was a great multitude of devout Greeks; that is, of Gentiles who had united themselves with the Jews in the worship of God upon the Sabbath. We have a strong proof of the fact that they continued to observe the Sabbath after their reception of the gospel in the following words of Paul addressed to them as a church of Christ:

"For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus."<sup>45</sup>

The churches in Judea, as we have seen, were observers of the Sabbath of the Lord. The first Thessalonian converts, before they received the gospel, were Sabbath-keepers, and when they became a Christian church they adopted the churches in Judea as their proper examples. And this church was adopted as an example of the churches of Macedonia and Achaia. In this number were included the churches of Philippi and of Corinth. Thus writes Paul:

"And ye became followers of us, and of the Lord, having received the word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Ghost; so that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia. For from you sounded out the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in every place your faith to Godward is spread abroad."<sup>46</sup>

After these things, Paul came to Corinth. Here, he first found Aquila and Priscilla.

"And because he was of the same craft, he abode with them and wrought; for by their occupation they were tent makers. And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks."<sup>47</sup>

At this place also Paul found Gentiles as well as Jews in attendance upon the worship of God on the Sabbath. The first members of the church at Corinth were therefore observers of the Sabbath at the time when they received the gospel; and, as we have seen, they adopted as their pattern the Sabbath-keeping church of Thessalonica, who in turn patterned after the churches in Judea.

The first churches were founded in the land of Judea. All their members had from childhood been familiar with the law of God, and well understood the precept, "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy." Besides this precept, all these churches had a peculiar memento of the Sabbath. They knew from our Lord himself that the time was coming when they must all suddenly flee from that land. And in view of this fact, they were to pray that the moment of their sudden flight might not be upon the Sabbath; a prayer which was designed, as we have seen, to preserve the sacredness of the Sabbath. That the churches in Judea were composed of Sabbath-keeping members, admits therefore of no doubt.

Of the churches founded outside the land of Judea, whose origin is given in the book of Acts, nearly all began with Jewish converts. These were Sabbath-keepers when they received the gospel. Among these, the Gentile converts were engrafted. And it is worthy of notice that in a large number of cases, those Gentiles are termed "devout Greeks," "religious proselytes," persons that "worshipped God," that feared God and that "prayed to God alway."<sup>48</sup> These Gentiles, at the time of their conversion to the gospel, were, as we have seen, worshipers of God upon the Sabbath with the Jewish people. When James had proposed the kind of letter that should be addressed by the apostles to the Gentile converts, he assigned a reason for its adoption, the force of which can now be appreciated: "For Moses," said he, "of old time hath in EVERY CITY them that preach him, being read in the synagogue every Sabbath day." The Sabbatarian character of the apostolic churches is thus clearly shown.

In a letter addressed to the Corinthians, about five years after they had received the gospel, Paul is supposed to contribute a fifth pillar to the first-day temple. Thus he wrote them:

"Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."<sup>49</sup>

From this text it is argued in behalf of the first-day Sabbath, 1. That this was a public collection. 2. That hence the first day of the week was the day of public worship in the churches of Corinth and Galatia. 3. And therefore that the Sabbath had been changed to that day. Thus the change of the Sabbath is inferred from the public assemblies for divine worship on the first day at Corinth and Galatia; and the existence of these assemblies on that day is inferred from the words of Paul, "Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store."

What, then, do these words ordain? But one answer can be returned: They ordain precisely the reverse of a public collection. Each one should lay by himself on each first day of the week according as God had prospered him, that when Paul should arrive, they might have their bounty ready. Mr. J. W. Morton, late Presbyterian missionary to Haiti, bears the following testimony:

"The whole question turns upon the meaning of the expression, 'by him;' and I marvel greatly how you can imagine that it means 'in the collection box of the congregation.' Greenfield, in his Lexicon, translates the Greek term, 'With one's self, i.e., at home.' Two Latin versions, the Vulgate and that of Castellio, render it, 'apud se,' with one's self; at home. Three French translations, those of Martin, Osterwald, and De Sacy, 'chez soi,' at his own house; at home. The German of Luther, 'bei sich selbst,' by himself; at home. The Dutch, 'by hemselfen,' same as the German. The Italian of Diodati, 'appresso di se,' in his own presence; at home. The Spanish of Felipe Scio, 'en su casa,' in his own house. The Portugese of Ferreira, 'para isso,' with himself. The Swedish, 'noer sig self,' near himself."<sup>50</sup>

Dr. Bloomfield thus comments on the original: "par eanto, 'by him.' French, chez lui, 'at home.'"<sup>51</sup>

The Douay Bible reads: "Let every one of you put apart with himself." Mr. Sawyer thus translates: "Let each one of you lay aside by himself." Theodore Beza's Latin version has it:

"Apud se," i.e., at home. The Syriac reads thus: "Let everyone of you lay aside and preserve at home."

It is true that an eminent first-day writer, Justin Edwards, D.D., in a labored effort to prove the change of the Sabbath, brings forward this text to show that Sunday was the day of religious worship with the early church. Thus he says:

"This laying by in store was NOT laying by AT HOME; for that would not prevent gatherings when he should come."<sup>52</sup>

Such is his language as a theologian upon whom has fallen the difficult task of proving the change of the Sabbath by the authority of the Scriptures. But in his Notes on the New Testament, in which he feels at liberty to speak the truth, he thus squarely contradicts his own language already quoted. Thus he comments on this text:

"Lay by him in store; AT HOME. That there be no gatherings; that their gifts might be ready when the apostle should come."<sup>53</sup>

Thus even Dr. Edwards confesses that the idea of a public collection is not found in this scripture. On the contrary, it appears that each individual, in obedience to this precept, would, at the opening of each new week, be found AT HOME laying aside something for the cause of God, according as his worldly affairs would warrant. The change of the Sabbath, as proved by this text, rests wholly upon an idea which Dr. Edwards confesses is not found in it. We have seen that the church at Corinth was a Sabbath-keeping church. It is evident that the change of the Sabbath could never have been suggested to them by this text.

This is the only scripture in which Paul even mentions the first day of the week. It was written nearly thirty years after the alleged change of the Sabbath. Yet Paul omits all titles of sacredness, simply designating it as first day of the week; a name to which it was entitled as one of "the six working days."<sup>54</sup> It is also worthy of notice that this is the only precept in the Bible in which the first day is even named; and that this precept says nothing relative to the sacredness of the day to which it pertains; even the duty which it enjoins being more appropriate to a secular than to a sacred day.

Soon after writing his first epistle to the Corinthians, Paul visited Troas. In the record of this visit occurs the last instance in which the first day of the week is mentioned in the New Testament:

"And we sailed away from Philippi after the days of unleavened bread, and came unto them to Troas in five days;<sup>55</sup> where we abode seven days. And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight. And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together. And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep; and as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead. And Paul went down, and fell on him, and embracing him said, Trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him. When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed. And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted. And we went before to ship, and sailed unto Assos, there intending to take in Paul; for so had he appointed, minding himself to go afoot."<sup>56</sup>

This scripture is supposed to furnish a sixth pillar for the first-day temple. The argument may be concisely stated thus: this testimony shows that the first day of the week was appropriated by the apostolic church to meetings for the breaking of bread in honor of Christ's resurrection upon that day; from which it is reasonable to conclude that this day had become the Christian Sabbath.

If this proposition could be established as an undoubted truth, the change of the Sabbath would not follow as a necessary conclusion; it would even then amount only to a plausible conjecture. The following facts will aid us in judging of the truthfulness of this argument for the change of the Sabbath.

1. That this is the only instance of a religious meeting upon the first day of the week recorded in the New Testament.
2. That no stress can be laid upon the expression, "when the disciples came together," as proving that meetings for the purpose of breaking bread were held on each first day of the week; for there is nothing in the original answering to the word "when," the whole phrase being translated from three words, the perfect passive participle sunegmenon, "being assembled," and ton matheton, "the disciples;" the sacred writer simply stating the gathering of the disciples on this occasion.<sup>57</sup>
3. That the ordinance of breaking bread was not appointed to commemorate the resurrection of Christ, but to keep in memory his death upon the cross.<sup>58</sup> The act of breaking bread therefore upon the first day of the week, is not a commemoration of Christ's resurrection.
4. That as the breaking of bread commemorates our Lord's crucifixion, and was instituted on the evening with which the crucifixion day began, on which occasion Jesus himself and all the apostles were present,<sup>59</sup> it is evident that the day of the crucifixion presents greater claims to the celebration of this ordinance than does the day of the resurrection.
5. But as our Lord designated no day for this ordinance, and as the apostolic church at Jerusalem are recorded to have celebrated it daily,<sup>60</sup> it is evidently presumption to argue the change of the Sabbath from a single instance of its celebration upon the first day of the week.
6. That this instance of breaking bread upon first-day, was with evident reference to the immediate and final departure of Paul.
7. For it is a remarkable fact that this, the only instance of a religious meeting on the first day recorded in the New Testament, was a night meeting. This is proved by the fact that many lights were burning in that assembly, and that Paul preached till midnight.
8. And from this fact follows the important consequence that this first-day meeting was upon Saturday night.<sup>61</sup> For the days of the week being reckoned from evening to evening, and evening being at sunset,<sup>62</sup> it is seen that the first day of the week begins Saturday night at sunset, and ends at sunset on Sunday. A night meeting, therefore, upon the first day of the week could be only upon Saturday night.
9. Paul therefore preached until midnight of Saturday night - for the disciples held a night meeting at the close of the Sabbath, because he was to leave in the morning - then being interrupted by the fall of the young man, he went down and healed him, then went up and attended to the breaking of bread; and at break of day, on Sunday morning, he departed.

10. Thus are we furnished with conclusive evidence that Paul and his companions resumed their journey toward Jerusalem on the morning of the first day of the week; they taking ship to Assos, and he being pleased to go on foot. This fact is an incidental proof of Paul's regard for the Sabbath, in that he waited till it was past before resuming his journey; and it is a positive proof that he knew nothing of what in modern times is called the Christian Sabbath.

11. This narrative was written by Luke at least thirty years after the alleged change of the Sabbath. It is worthy of note that Luke omits all titles of sacredness, simply designating the day in question as the first day of the week. This is in admirable keeping with the fact that in his gospel, when recording the very event which is said to have changed the Sabbath, he not only omits the slightest hint of that fact, but designates the day itself by its secular title of first day of the week, and at the same time designates the previous day as the Sabbath according to the commandment.<sup>63</sup>

The same year that Paul visited Troas, he wrote as follows to the church at Rome:

"Him that is weak in the faith receive ye, but not to doubtful disputations. For one believeth that he may eat all things: another, who is weak, eateth herbs. Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not; and let not him which eateth not judge him that eateth; for God hath received him. Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth. Yea, he shall be holden up, for God is able to make him stand. One man esteemeth one day above another: another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord; and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it. He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks; and he that eateth not, to the Lord he eateth not, and giveth thanks."<sup>64</sup>

These words have often been quoted to show that the observance of the fourth commandment is now a matter of indifference; each individual being at liberty to act his pleasure in the matter. So extraordinary a doctrine should be thoroughly tested before being adopted. For as it pleased God to ordain the Sabbath before the fall of man, and to give it a place in his code of ten commandments, thus making it a part of that law to which the great atonement relates; and as the Lord Jesus, during his ministry, spent much time in explaining its merciful design, and took care to provide against its desecration at the flight of his people from the land of Judea, which was ten years in the future when these words were written by Paul; and as the fourth commandment itself is expressly recognized after the crucifixion of Christ; if, under these circumstances, we could suppose it to be consistent with truth that the Most High should abrogate the Sabbath, we certainly should expect that aggregation to be stated in explicit language. Yet neither the Sabbath nor the fourth commandment are here named. That they are not referred to in this language of Paul, the following reasons will show:

1. Such a view would make the observance of one of the ten commandments a matter of indifference; whereas James shows that to violate one of them is to transgress the whole.<sup>65</sup>

2. It directly contradicts what Paul had previously written in this epistle; for in treating of the law of ten commandments, he styles it holy, spiritual, just, and good; and states that sin-the transgression of the law-by the commandment becomes "EXCEEDING SINFUL."<sup>66</sup>

3. Because that Paul in the same epistle affirms the perpetuity of that law which caused our Lord to lay down his life for sinful men,<sup>67</sup> which we have seen before was the ten commandments.
4. Because that Paul in this case not only did not name the Sabbath and the fourth commandment, but certainly was not treating of the moral law.
5. Because that the topic under consideration which leads him to speak as he does of the days in question was that of eating all kinds of food, or of refraining from certain things.
6. Because that the fourth commandment did not stand associated with precepts of such a kind, but with moral laws exclusively.<sup>68</sup>
7. Because that in the ceremonial law, associated with the precepts concerning meats, was a large number of festivals, entirely distinct from the sabbath of the Lord.<sup>69</sup>
8. Because that the church of Rome, which began probably with those Jews that were present from Rome on the day of Pentecost, had many Jewish members in its communion, as may be gathered from the epistle itself;<sup>70</sup> and would therefore be deeply interested in the decision of this question relative to the ceremonial law; the Jewish members feeling conscientious in observing its distinctions, the Gentile members feeling no such scruples: hence the admirable counsel of Paul exactly meeting the case of both classes.
9. Nor can the expression, "every day," be claimed as decisive proof that the Sabbath of the Lord is included. At the very time when the Sabbath was formally committed to the Hebrews, just such expressions were used, although only the six working days were intended. Thus it was said: "The people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day;" and the narrative says, "They gathered it every morning." Yet when some of them went out to gather on the Sabbath, God says, "How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?"<sup>71</sup> The Sabbath being a great truth, plainly stated and many times repeated, it is manifest that Paul, in the expression, "every day," speaks of the six working days, among which a distinction had existed precisely coeval with that respecting meats; and that he manifestly excepts that day which from the beginning God had reserved unto himself. Just as when Paul quotes and applies to Jesus the words of David, "All things are put under him," he adds: "It is manifest that he is excepted which did put all things under him."<sup>72</sup>
10. And lastly, in the words of John, "I was in the Spirit on the Lords day,"<sup>73</sup> written many years after this epistle of Paul, we have an absolute proof that in the gospel dispensation one day is still claimed be the Most High as his own.<sup>74</sup>

About ten years after this epistle was written, occurred the memorable flight of all the people of God that were in the land of Judea. It was not in the winter; for it occurred just after the feast of tabernacles, some time in October. And it was not upon the Sabbath; for Josephus, who speaks of the sudden withdrawal of the Roman army after it had, by encompassing the city, given the very signal for flight which our Lord promised his people, tells us that the Jews rushed out of the city in pursuit of the retreating Romans, which was at the very time when our Lord's injunction of instant flight became imperative upon the disciples. The historian does not intimate that the Jews thus pursued the Romans upon the Sabbath, although he carefully notes the fact that a few days previous to this event they did, in their rage, utterly forget the Sabbath and rush out to fight the Romans upon that day. These providential circumstances in the flight of the disciples being made dependent upon their asking such interposition at the hand of God, it is evident that the disciples did not forget the prayer which the Saviour taught them relative to this event; and that, as a consequence, the Sabbath of the Lord was not forgotten by them. And thus the Lord Jesus in his tender care for his people and in his watchful care in behalf of the Sabbath, showed that he was alike the Lord of his people and the Lord of the Sabbath.<sup>75</sup>

Twenty-six years after the destruction of Jerusalem, the book of Revelation was committed to the beloved disciple. It bears the following deeply interesting date as to place and time:

"I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in THE ISLE that is called PATMOS, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ. I was in the Spirit ON THE LORD'S DAY, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last; and, What thou seest, write in a book."<sup>76</sup>

This book is dated in the isle of Patmos, and upon the Lord's day. The place, the day, and the individual, have each a real existence, and not merely a symbolical or mystical one. Thus John, almost at the close of the first century, and long after those texts were written which are now adduced to prove that no distinction in days exists, shows that the Lord's day has as real an existence, as has the isle of Patmos, or as had the beloved disciple himself.

What day, then, is intended by this designation?

Several answers have been returned to this question. 1. It is the gospel dispensation. 2. It is the day of Judgment. 3. It is the first day of the week. 4. It is the Sabbath of the Lord. The first answer cannot be the true one; for it not only renders the day a mystical term, but it involves the absurdity of representing John as writing to Christians sixty-five years after the death of Christ, that the vision which he had just had, was seen by him in the gospel dispensation; as though it were possible for them to be ignorant of the fact that if he had a vision at all he must have it in the existing dispensation.

Nor can the second answer be admitted as the truth. For while it is true that John might have a vision CONCERNING the day of Judgment, it is impossible that he should have a vision ON that day when it was yet future. If it be no more than an absurdity to represent John as dating his vision in the isle of Patmos, on the gospel dispensation, it becomes a positive untruth, if he is made to say that he was in vision at Patmos on the day of Judgment.

The third answer, that the Lord's day is the first day of the week, is now almost universally received as the truth. The text under examination is brought forward with an air of triumph as completing the temple of first-day sacredness, and proving beyond all doubt that that day is indeed the Christian Sabbath. Yet as we have examined this temple with peculiar carefulness, we have discovered that the foundation on which it rests is a thing of the imagination only; and that the pillars by which it is supported exist only in the minds of those who worship at its shrine. It remains to be seen whether the dome which is supposed to be furnished by this text is more real than the pillars on which it rests.

That the first day of the week has no claim to the title of Lord's day, the following facts will show:

1. That, as this text does not define the term Lord's day, we must look elsewhere in the Bible for the evidence that shows the first day to be entitled to such a designation.

2. That Matthew, Mark, Luke, and Paul, the other sacred writers who mention the day, use no other designation for it than first day of the week, a name to which it was entitled as one of the six working days. Yet three of these writers mention it at the very time when it is said to have become the Lord's day; and two of them mention it also some thirty years after that event.

3. That while it is claimed that the Spirit of inspiration, by simply leading John to use the term Lord's day, though he did in no wise connect the first day of the week therewith, did design to fix this as the proper title of the first day of the week, it is a remarkable fact that after John returned from the isle of Patmos he wrote his gospel;<sup>77</sup> and in that gospel he twice mentioned the first day of the week; yet in each of these instances where it is certain that first-day is intended, no other designation is used than plain first day of the week. This is a most convincing proof that John did not regard the first day of the week as entitled to this name, or any other, expressive of sacredness.

4. What still further decides the point against the first day of the week is the fact that neither the Father nor the Son have ever claimed the first day in any higher sense than they have each of the six days given to man for labor.

5. And what completes the chain of evidence against the claim of first day to this title is the fact that the testimony adduced by first-day advocates to prove that it has been adopted by the Most High in place of that day which he once claimed as his, having been examined, is found to have no such meaning or intent. In setting aside the third answer, also, as not being in accordance with truth, the first day of the week may be properly dismissed with it, as having no claim to our regard as a scriptural institution.<sup>78</sup>

That the Lord's day is the Bible Sabbath, admits of clear and certain proof. The argument stands thus: When God gave to man six days of the week for labor, he did expressly reserve unto himself the seventh, on which he placed his blessing in memory of his own act of resting upon that day, and thence forward, through the Bible, has ever claimed it as his holy day. As he has never put away this sacred day and chosen another, the Sabbath of the Lord is still his holy day. These facts may be traced in the following scriptures. At the close of the Creator's rest, it is said:

"And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made."<sup>79</sup>

After the children of Israel had reached the wilderness of Sin, Moses said to them on the sixth day:

"To-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord."<sup>80</sup>

In giving the ten commandments, the Law-giver thus stated his claim to this day:

"The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. . . . For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it."<sup>81</sup>

He gives to man the six days on which himself had labored; he reserves as his own that day upon which he had rested from all his work. About eight hundred years after this, God spoke by Isaiah as follows:

"If thou turn away thy foot from THE SABBATH, from doing thy pleasure on MY HOLY DAY, . . . then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth."<sup>82</sup>

This testimony is perfectly explicit; the Lord's day is the ancient Sabbath of the Bible. The Lord Jesus puts forth the following claim:

"The Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath."<sup>83</sup>

Thus, whether it be the Father or the Son whose title is involved, the only day that can be called "the Lord's day" is the Sabbath of the great Creator.<sup>84</sup> And here, at the close of the Bible history of the Sabbath, two facts of deep interest are presented:

1. That John expressly recognizes the existence of the Lord's day at the very close of the first century.
2. That it pleased the Lord of the Sabbath to place a signal honor upon his own day in that he selected it as the one on which to give that revelation to John, which himself alone had been worthy to receive from the Father.

---

1 See chap. iii.

2 Matt.5:17-19.

3 Eph.2:13-16; Col.2:14-17.

4 Matt.28:19,20; Mark 16:15.

5 Dan.9:24-27; Acts 9; 10; 11; 26:12-17; Rom.11:13.

6 1Cor.11:25; Jer.31:31-34; Heb.8:8,12; Dan.9:27; Eph.2:11-22.

7 Matt.5:17-19; 1John 3:4,5; Rom.4:15.

8 Heb.9:1-7; Ex.25:1-21; Deut.10:4,5; 1Kings 8:9.

9 Heb., chaps. 7-10; Lev.16.

10 Heb.8:1-5; 9:23,24.

11 Rev.11:19.

12 Ex.25:21,22.

13 Rom.3:19-31; 5:8-21; 8:3,4; 13:8-10; Gal.3:13,14; Eph.6:2,3; James 2:8-12; 1John3:4,5.

14 Ex.19; 20; 24:12; 31:18; Deut.10.

15 Lev.16.

16 Rom.3:19-31; 1John3:4,5;

17 Ps.40:6-8; Heb.10.

18 Heb.9; 10.

19 Jer.31:33; Rom.8:3,4; 2Cor.3:3.

20 Ps.19:7; James 1:25; Ps.40.

21 Rom.5.

22 Rom.3:19.

23 Rom.3:31.

24 Rom.3:20; 1John3:4,5; 2:1,2.

25 Jer.11:16; Rom.11:17-24.

26 Rom.4:16-18; Gal.3:7-9.

27 Ex.19:5,6; 1Pet.2:9,10.

28 Gen.11:1-9; Acts 2:1-11.

29 Rom.7:12,13.

30 James 2:8-12.

31 See chapter x.

32 Acts 13:14.

33 Verse 27.

34 Dr. Bloomfield has the following note on this text: "The words, eis to metaxn sabb., are by many commentators supposed to mean 'on some intermediate week-day.' But that is refuted by verse 44, and the sense expressed in our common version is, no doubt, the true one. It is adopted by the best recent commentators, and confirmed by the ancient versions." Greek Testament with English notes, vol. i. p. 521. And Prof. Hacket has a similar note. - Commentary on Acts, p. 233.

35 Verses 42-44.

36 Acts 15.

37 Acts 15:10,28,29; James 2:8-12.

38 Verses 1,5.

39 Verse 29; 21:25.

40 Ex.34:15,16; Num.25:2; Lev.17:13,14; Gen.9:4; Lev.3:17; Gen.34; Lev.19:29.

41 Acts 15:19-21.

42 Acts 16:12-14.

43 Paul's manner is exemplified by the following texts, in all of which it would appear that the meetings in question were upon the Sabbath. Acts 13:5; 14:1; 17:10,17; 18:19; 19:8.

44 Acts 17:1-4.

45 1Thess.2:14.

46 1Thess.1:7,8.

47 Acts 18:3,4.

48 Acts 10:2,4,7, 30-35; 13:43; 14:1; 16:13-15; 17:4,10-12.

49 1Cor.16:1,2.

50 Vindication of the True Sabbath, Battle Creek ed., pp. 51, 52.

51 Greek Testament with English Notes, vol. ii. p. 173.

52 Sabbath Manual of the American Tract Society, p. 116.

53 Family Testament of the American Tract Society,

54 Eze.46:1.

55 Prof. Hacket remarks on the length of this voyage: "The passage on the apostle's first journey to Europe occupied two days only; see chapter 16:11. Adverse winds or calms would be liable, at any season of the year, to occasion this variation." - Commentary on Acts, p. 329. This shows how little ground there is to claim that Paul broke the Sabbath on this voyage. There was ample time to reach Troas before the Sabbath when he started from Philippi, had not providential causes hindered.

56 Acts 20:6-13.

57 Thus Prof. Whiting renders the phrase: "The disciples being assembled." And Sawyer has it: "We being assembled."

58 1Cor.11:23-26.

59 Matt.26.

60 Acts 2:42-46.

61 This fact has been acknowledged by many first-day commentators. Thus Prof. Hacket comments upon this text: "The Jews reckoned the day from evening to morning, and on that principle the evening of the first day of the week would be our Saturday evening. It Luke reckoned so here, as many commentators suppose, the apostle then waited for the expiration of the Jewish Sabbath, and held his last religious service with the brethren at Troas, at the beginning of the Christian Sabbath, i.e., on Saturday evening, and consequently resumed his journey on Sunday morning." - Commentary on Acts, pp.329,330. But he endeavors to shield the first-day Sabbath from this fatal admission by suggesting that Luke probably reckoned time according to the pagan method, rather than by that which is ordained in the Scriptures! Kitto, in noting the fact that this was an evening meeting, speaks thus: "It has from this last circumstance been inferred that the assembly commenced after sunset on the Sabbath, at which hour the first day of the week had commenced, according to the Jewish reckoning [Jahn's Bibl. Antiq., sect. 398], which would hardly agree with the idea of a commemoration of the resurrection." - Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, article, Lord's day. And Prynne, whose testimony relative to redemption as an argument for the change of the Sabbath has been already quoted, thus states this point: "Because the text saith there were many lights in the upper room where they were gathered together, and that Paul preached from the time of their coming together till midnight, . . . this meeting of the disciples at Troas, and Paul's preaching to them, began at evening. The sole doubt will be what evening this was. . . . For my own part I conceive clearly that it was upon Saturday night, as we falsely call it, and not the coming Sunday night. . . . Because St. Luke records that it was upon the first day of the week when this meeting was . . . therefore it must needs be on the Saturday, not on our Sunday evening, since the Sunday evening in St. Luke's and the Scripture account was no part of the first, but of the second day; the day ever beginning and ending at evening." Prynne notices the objection drawn from the phrase, "ready to depart on the morrow," as indicating that this departure was not on the same day of the week with his night meeting. The substance of his answer is this: If the fact be kept in mind that the days of the week are reckoned from evening to evening, the following texts, in which in the night, the morning is spoken of as the morrow, will show at once that another day of the week is not necessarily intended by the phrase in question. 1Sam.19:11; Esth.2:14; Zeph.3:3; Acts 23:31,32. - Diss. on Lord's Day Sab., pp.36-41, 1633.

62 See the conclusion of chap. viii.

63 Luke 23:56; 24:1.

64 Rom.14:1-6.

65 James 2:8-12.

66 Rom.7:12,13; 1John 3:4,5.

67 Rom.3.

68 Ex.20.

69 Lev.23. These are particularly enumerated in Col.2, as we have already noticed in chapter vii, and in the concluding part of chapter x.

70 Acts 2:1-11; Rom.2:17; 4:1; 7:1.

71 Ex.16:4,21,27,28.

72 1Cor.15:27; Ps.8.

73 Rev.1:10.

74 To show that Paul regarded Sabbatic observance as dangerous, Gal.4:10, is often quoted; notwithstanding the same individuals claim that Rom.14 proves that it is a matter of perfect indifference; they not seeing that this is to make Paul contradict himself. But if the connection be read from verse 8 to verse 11, it will be seen that the Galatians before their conversion were not Jews, but heathen: and that these days, months, times, and years, were not those of the Levitical law, but those which they had regarded with superstitious reverence while heathen. Observe the stress which Paul lays upon the word "again," in verse 9. And how many that profess the religion of Christ at the present day superstitiously regard certain days as "lucky" or "unlucky days;" though such notions are derived only from heathen distinctions.

75 See chapter x.

76 Rev.1:9-11.

77 Dr. Bloomfield, though himself of a different opinion, speaks thus of the views of others concerning the date of John's gospel: "It has been the general sentiment, both of ancient and modern inquirers, that it was published about the close of the first century." - Greek Testament with English Notes, vol. i. p. 328. Morer says that John "penned his gospel two years later than the Apocalypse, and after his return from Patmos, as St. Augustine, St. Jerome, and Eusebius, affirm." - Dialogues on the Lord's Day, pp. 53, 54. The Paragraph Bible of the London Religious Tract Society, in its preface to the book of John, speaks thus: "According to the general testimony of ancient writers, John wrote his gospel at Ephesus, about the year 97." In support of the same view, see also Religious Encyclopedia, Barnes' Notes (gospel), Bible Dictionary, Cottage Bible, Domestic Bible, Mine Explored, Union Bible Dictionary, Comprehensive Bible, Dr. Hales, Horne, Nevins, Olshausen, &c.

78 The Encyclopedia Britannica, in its article concerning the Sabbath, undertakes to prove that the "religious observation of the first day of the week is of apostolical appointment." After citing and commenting upon all the passages that could be urged in proof of the point, it makes the following candid acknowledgment: "Still, however, it must be owned that these passages are not sufficient to prove the apostolical institution of the Lord's day, or even the actual observation of it." The absence of all scriptural testimony relative to the change of the Sabbath, is accounted for by certain advocates of that theory, not by the frank admission that it never was changed by the Lord, but by quoting John 21:25, assuming the change of the Sabbath as an undoubted truth, but that it was left out of the Bible lest it should make that book too large! They think, therefore, that we should go the Ecclesiastical history to learn this part of our duty; not seeing that, as the fourth commandment still stands in the Bible unrepealed and unchanged, to acknowledge that that change must be sustained wholly outside of the Bible, is to acknowledge that first-day observance is a tradition which makes void the commandment of God. The following chapters will, however, patiently examine the argument for first-day observance drawn from ecclesiastical history.

79 Gen.2:3.

80 Ex.16:23.

81 Ex.20:8-11.

82 Isa.58:13,14.

83 Mark 2:27,28.

84 An able opponent of Sabbatic observance thus speaks relative to the term Lord's day of Rev.1:10: "If a current day was intended, the only day bearing this definition, in either the Old or New Testament, is Saturday, the seventh day of the week."- W. B. Taylor, in the Obligation of the Sabbath, p. 296.

---

PART II - SECULAR HISTORY

CHAPTER 12

EARLY APOSTASY IN THE CHURCH

---

General purity of the apostolic churches - Early decline of their piety - False teachers arose in the church immediately after the apostles - The great Romish apostasy began before the death of Paul - An evil thing not rendered good by beginning in the apostolic age - How to decide between truth and error - Age cannot change the fables of men into the truth of God - Historical testimony concerning the early development of the great apostasy - Such an age no standard by which to correct the Bible - Testimony of Bower relative to the traditions of this age - Testimony of Dowling - Dr. Cumming's opinion of the authority of the fathers - Testimony of Adam Clarke - The church of Rome has corrupted the writings of the fathers - Nature of tradition illustrated - The two rules of faith which divide Christendom - The first-day Sabbath can only be sustained by adopting the rule of the Romanists.

---

The book of Acts is an inspired history of the church. During the period which is embraced in its record, the apostles and their fellow-laborers were upon the stage of action, and under their watchcare the churches of Christ preserved, to a great extent, their purity of life and doctrine. These apostolic churches are thus set forth as the proper examples for all coming time. This book fitly connects the narratives of the four evangelists with the apostolic epistles, and thus joins together the whole New Testament. But when we leave the period embraced in this inspired history, and the churches which were founded and governed by inspired men, we enter upon altogether different times. There is, unfortunately, great truth in the severe language of Gibbon:

"The theologian may indulge the pleasing task of describing religion as she descended from Heaven, arrayed in her native purity. A more melancholy duty is imposed on the historian. He must discover the inevitable mixture of error and corruption, which she contracted in a long residence upon earth, among a weak and degenerate race of beings."<sup>1</sup>

What says the book of Acts respecting the time immediately following the labors of Paul? In addressing the elders of the Ephesian church, Paul said:

"For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them."<sup>2</sup>

It follows from this testimony that we are not authorized to receive the teaching of any man simply because he lived immediately after the apostolic age, or even in the days of the apostles themselves. Grievous wolves were to enter the midst of the people of God, and of their own selves were men to arise, speaking perverse things. If it be asked how these are to be distinguished from the true servants of God, this is the proper answer: Those who spoke and acted in accordance with the teachings of the apostles were men of God; those who taught otherwise were of that class who should speak perverse things to draw away disciples after them.

What say the apostolic epistles relative to this apostasy? To the Thessalonians, it is written:

"Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. . . . For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."<sup>3</sup>

To Timothy, in like manner, it is said:

"Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."<sup>4</sup>

These texts are most explicit in predicting a great apostasy in the church, and in stating the fact that that apostasy had already commenced. The Romish church, the eldest in apostasy, prides itself upon its apostolic character. In the language of Paul to the Thessalonians, already quoted, that great Anti-Christian body may indeed find its claim to an origin in apostolic times vindicated, but its apostolic character most emphatically denied. And herein is found a striking illustration of the fact that an evil thing is not rendered good by the accidental circumstances of its originating in the days of the apostles. Everything, at its commencement, is either right or wrong. If right, it may be known by its agreement with the divine standard. If wrong at its origin, it can never cease to be such. Satan's great falsehood which involved our race in ruin has not yet become the truth, although six thousand years have elapsed since it was uttered. Think of this, ye who worship at the shrine of venerable error. When the fables of men obtained the place of the truth of God, he was thereby dishonored. How, then, can he accept obedience to them as any part of that pure devotion which he requires at our hands? They that worship God must worship him in Spirit and in truth. How many ages must pass over the fables of men before they become changed into divine truth? That these predictions of the New Testament respecting the great apostasy in the church were fully realized, the pages of ecclesiastical history present ample proof. Mr. Dowling, in his History of Romanism, bears the following testimony:

"There is scarcely anything which strikes the mind of the careful student of ancient ecclesiastical history with greater surprise than the comparatively early period at which many of the corruptions of Christianity, which are embodied in the Romish system, took their rise; yet it is not to be supposed that when the first originators of many of these unscriptural notions and practices planted those germs of corruption, they anticipated or even imagined they would ever grow into such a vast and hideous system of superstition and error, as is that of popery. . . . Each of the great corruptions of the latter ages took its rise in a manner which it would be harsh to say was deserving of strong reprehension. . . . The worship of images, the invocation of saints, and the superstition of relics, were but expansions of the natural feelings of veneration and affection cherished toward the memory of those who had suffered and died for the truth."<sup>5</sup>

Robinson, author of the "History of Baptism," bears the following testimony:

"Toward the latter end of the second century most of the churches assumed a new form, the first simplicity disappeared; and insensibly, as the old disciples retired to their graves, their children along with new converts, both Jews and Gentiles, came forward and new modeled the cause."<sup>6</sup>

The working of the mystery of iniquity in the first centuries of the Christian church is thus described by a recent writer:

"During these centuries the chief corruptions of popery were either introduced in principle, or the seeds of them so effectually sown as naturally to produce those baneful fruits which appeared so plentifully at a later period. In Justin Martyr's time, within fifty years of the apostolic age, the cup was mixed with water, and a portion of the elements sent to the absent. The bread, which at first was sent only to the sick, was, in the time of Tertullian and Cyprian, carried home by the people and locked up as a divine treasure for their private use. At this time, too, the ordinance of the supper was given to infants of the tenderest age, and was styled the sacrifice of the body of Christ. The custom of praying for the dead, Tertullian states, was common in the second century, and became the universal practice of the following ages; so that it came in the fourth century to be reckoned a kind of heresy to deny the efficacy of it. By this time the invocation of saints, the superstitious use of images, of the sign of the cross, and of consecrated oil, were become established practices, and pretended miracles were confidently adduced in proof of their supposed efficacy. Thus did that mystery of iniquity, which was already working in the time of the apostles, speedily after their departure, spread its corruptions among the professors of Christianity."<sup>7</sup>

Neander speaks thus of the early introduction of image worship:

"And yet, perhaps, religious images made their way from domestic life into the churches, as early as the end of the third century; and the walls of the churches were painted in the same way."<sup>8</sup>

The early apostasy of the professed church is a fact which rests upon the authority or inspiration, not less than upon that of ecclesiastical history. "The mystery of iniquity," said Paul, "doth already work." We are constrained to marvel that so large a portion of the people of God were so soon removed from the grace of God unto another gospel.

What shall be said of those who go to this period of church history, and even to later times, to correct their Bibles? Paul said that men would rise in the very midst of the elders of the apostolic church, who would speak perverse things, and that men would turn away their ears from the truth, and would be turned unto fables. Are the traditions of this period of sufficient importance to make void God's word? The learned historian of the popes, Archibald Bower, uses the following emphatic language:

"To avoid being imposed upon, we ought to treat tradition as we do a notorious and known liar, to whom we give no credit, unless what he says is confirmed to us by some person of undoubted veracity. . . . False and lying traditions are of an early date, and the greatest men have, out of a pious credulity, suffered themselves to be imposed upon by them."<sup>9</sup>

Mr. Dowling bears a similar testimony:

" `The Bible, I say, the Bible only, is the religion of Protestants!' Nor is it of any account in the estimation of the genuine Protestant how early a doctrine originated, if it is not found in the Bible. He learns from the New Testament itself that there were errors in the time of the apostles, and that their pens were frequently employed in combating those errors. Hence, if a doctrine be propounded for his acceptance, he asks, Is it to be found in the inspired word? Was it taught by the Lord Jesus Christ and his apostles? . . . More than this, we will add, that though Cyprian, or Jerome, or Augustine, or even the fathers of an earlier age, Tertullian, Ignatius, or Irenaeus, could be plainly shown to teach the unscriptural doctrines and dogmas of Popery, which, however, is by no means admitted, still the consistent Protestant would simply ask, Is the doctrine to be found in the Bible? Was it taught by Christ and his apostles? . . . He who receives a single doctrine upon the mere authority of tradition, let him be called by what name he will, by so doing steps down from the Protestant rock, passes over the line which separates Protestantism from Popery, and can give no valid reason why he should not receive all the earlier doctrines and ceremonies or Romanism upon the same authority."<sup>10</sup>

Dr. Cumming of London thus speaks of the authority of the fathers of the early church:

"Some of these were distinguished for their genius, some for their eloquence, a few for their piety, and too many for their fanaticism and superstition. It is recorded by Dr. Delahogue (who was Professor in the Roman Catholic College of Maynooth), on the authority of Eusebius, that the fathers who were really most fitted to be the luminaries of the age in which they lived, were too busy in preparing their flocks for martyrdom to commit anything to writing; and, therefore, by the admission of this Roman Catholic divine, we have not the full and fair exponent of the views of all the fathers of the earlier centuries, but only of those who were most ambitious of literary distinction, and least attentive to their charges. . . . The most devoted and pious of the fathers were busy teaching their flocks; the more vain and ambitious occupied their time in preparing treatises. If all the fathers who signalized the age had committed their sentiments to writing, we might have had a fair representation of the theology of the church of the fathers; but as only a few have done so (many even of their writings being mutilated or lost), and these not the most devoted and spiritually minded, I contend that it is as unjust to judge of the theology of the early centuries by the writings of the few fathers who are its only surviving representatives, as it would be to judge of the theology of the nineteenth century by the sermons of Mr. Newman, the speeches of Dr. Candlish, or the various productions of the late Edward Irving."<sup>11</sup>

Dr. Adam Clarke bears the following decisive testimony on the same subject:

"But of these we may safely state that there is not a truth in the most orthodox creed that cannot be proved by their authority; nor a heresy that has disgraced the Romish church, that may not challenge them as its abettors. In points of doctrine, their authority is, with me, nothing. The word of God alone contains my creed. On a number of points I can go to the Greek and Latin fathers of the church to know what they believed; and what the people of their respective communions believed; but after all this, I must return to God's word to know what he would have me to believe."<sup>12</sup>

In his life, he uses the following strong language:

"We should take heed how we quote the fathers in proof of the doctrines of the gospel; because he who knows them best, knows that on many of those subjects they blow hot and cold."<sup>13</sup>

The following testimonies will in part explain the unreliable nature of the fathers. Thus Ephraim Pagitt testifies:

"The church of Rome having been conscious of their errors and corruptions, both in faith and manners, have sundry times pretended reformations; yet their great pride and infinite profit, arising from purgatory, pardons, and such like, hath hindered all such reformations. Therefore, to maintain their greatness, errors, and new articles of faith, 1. They have corrupted many of the ancient fathers, and reprinting them, make them speak as they would have them. . . . 2. They have written many books in the names of these ancient writers, and forged many decrees, canons, and councils, to bear false witness to them."<sup>14</sup>

And Wm. Reeves testifies to the same fact:

"The church of Rome has had all the opportunities of time, place and power, to establish the kingdom of darkness; and that in coining, clipping, and washing, the primitive records to their own good liking, they have not been wanting to themselves, is notoriously evident."<sup>15</sup>

The traditions of the early church are considered by many quite as reliable as the language of the Holy Scriptures. A single instance taken from the Bible will illustrate the character of tradition, and show the amount of reliance that can be placed upon it:

"Then Peter, turning about, seeth the disciple whom Jesus loved, following (which also leaned on his breast at supper, and said, Lord, which is he that betrayeth thee?); Peter seeing him, saith to Jesus, Lord, and what shall this man do? Jesus saith unto him, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me. Then went this saying abroad among the brethren, that that disciple should not die; yet Jesus said not unto him, He shall not die; but, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee?"<sup>16</sup>

Here is the account of a tradition which actually originated in the very bosom of the apostolic church, which nevertheless handed down to the following generations an entire mistake. Observe how carefully the word of God corrects this error.

Two rules of faith really embrace the whole Christian world. One of these is the word of God alone; the other is the word of God and the traditions of the church. Here they are:

I. THE RULE OF THE MAN OF GOD, THE BIBLE ALONE.

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."<sup>17</sup>

II. THE RULE OF THE ROMANIST, THE BIBLE AND TRADITION.

"If we would have the whole rule of Christian faith and practice, we must not be content with those scriptures which Timothy knew from his infancy, that is, with the Old Testament alone; nor yet with the New Testament, without taking along with it the traditions of the apostles and the interpretation of the church, to which the apostles delivered both the book and the true meaning of it."<sup>18</sup>

It is certain that the first-day Sabbath cannot be sustained by the first of these rules; for the word of God says nothing respecting such an institution. The second of these rules is necessarily adopted by all those who advocate the sacredness of the first day of the week. For the writings of the fathers and the traditions of the church furnish all the testimony which can be adduced in support of that day. To adopt the first rule is to condemn the first-day Sabbath as a human institution. To adopt the second is virtually to acknowledge that the Romanists are right; for it is by this rule that they are able to sustain their unscriptural dogmas. Mr. W. B. Taylor, an able anti-Sabbatarian writer, states this point with great clearness:

"The triumph of the consistent Roman Catholic over all observers of Sunday, calling themselves Protestants, is indeed complete and unanswerable. . . . It should present a subject of very grave reflection to Christians of the reformed and evangelical denominations, to find that no single argument or suggestion can be offered in favor of Sunday observance that will not apply with equal force and to its fullest extent in sustaining the various other 'holy days' appointed by 'the church.'"<sup>19</sup>

Listen to the argument of a Roman Catholic:

"The word of God commandeth the seventh day to be the Sabbath of our Lord, and to be kept holy: you [Protestants] without any precept of Scripture, change it to the first day of the week, only authorized by our traditions. Divers English Puritans oppose against this point, that the observation of the first day is proved out of Scripture, where it is said 'that the first day of the week.'<sup>20</sup> Have they not spun a fair thread in quoting these places? If we should produce no better for purgatory and prayers for the dead, invocation of the saints, and the like, they might have good cause indeed to laugh us to scorn; for where is it written that these were Sabbath days in which those meetings were kept? Or where is it ordained they should be always observed? Or which is the sum of all, where is it decreed that the observation of the first day should abrogate or abolish the sanctifying of the seventh day, which God commanded everlastingly to be kept holy? Not one of those is expressed in the written word of God."<sup>21</sup>

Whoever therefore enters the lists in behalf of the first-day Sabbath, must of necessity do this - though perhaps not aware of the fact - under the banner of the Church of Rome.

---

1 Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, chap. xv.

2 Acts 20:29, 30.

3 2Thess.2:3,4,7,8.

4 2Tim.4:2-4; 2Pet.2; Jude 4; 1John2:18

5 Book ii. chap. i. sect. 1.

6 Eccl. Researches, chap. vi. p. 51, ed. 1792.

7 The Modern Sabbath Examined, pp. 123, 124.

8 Rose's Neander, p. 184.

9 Hist. of the Popes, vol. i. p. 1, Phila. ed., 1847.

10 History of Romanism, book ii. chap. i. sects. 3, 4.

11 Lectures on Romanism, p. 203.

12 Commentary on Prov.8.

13 Autobiography of Adam Clarke, LL.D., p. 134.

14 Christianography, part ii. p. 59, London, 1636.

15 Translation of the Apologies of Justin Martyr, Tertullian, and others, vol. ii. p. 375.

16 John 21:20-23.

17 2Tim.3:16,17.

18 Note of the Douay Bible on 2Tim.3:16,17.

19 Obligation of the Sabbath, pp. 254,255.

20 Acts 20:7; 1Cor.16:2; Rev.1:10.

21 A Treatise of Thirty Controversies.

CHAPTER 13

THE SUNDAY-LORD'S DAY NOT TRACEABLE TO THE APOSTLES

---

General statement respecting the Ante-Nicene fathers-The change of the Sabbath never mentioned by one of these fathers-Examination of the historical argument for Sunday as the Lord's day - This argument compared with the like argument for the Catholic festival of the Passover.

---

<sup>1</sup>The Ante-Nicene fathers are those Christian writers who flourished after the time of the apostles, and before the Council of Nice, A.D. 325. Those who govern their lives by the volume of Inspiration do not recognize any authority in these fathers to change any precept of that book, nor any authority in them to add any new precepts to it. But those whose rule of life is the Bible as modified by tradition, regard the early fathers of the church as nearly or quite equal in authority with the inspired writers. They declare that the fathers conversed with the apostles; or if they did not do this, they conversed with some who had seen some of the apostles; or at least they lived within a few generations of the apostles, and so learned by tradition, which involved only a few transitions from father to son, what was the true doctrine of the apostles.

Thus with perfect assurance they supply the lack of inspired testimony in behalf of the so-called Christian Sabbath by plentiful quotations from the early fathers. What if there be no mention of the change of the Sabbath in the New Testament? And what if there be no commandment for resting from labor on the first day of the week? Or, what if there be no method revealed in the Bible by which the first day of the week can be enforced by the fourth commandment? They supply these serious omissions in the Scriptures by testimonies which they say were written by men who lived during the first three hundred years after the apostles.

On such authority as this the multitude dare to change the Sabbath of the fourth commandment. But next to the deception under which men fall when they are made to believe that the Bible may be corrected by the fathers, is the deception practiced upon them as to what the fathers actually teach. It is asserted that the fathers bear explicit testimony to the change of the Sabbath by Christ as a historical fact, and that they knew that this was so because they had conversed with the apostles, or with some who had conversed with them. It is also asserted that the fathers called the first day of the week the Christian Sabbath, and that they refrained from labor on that day as an act of obedience to the fourth commandment.

Now it is a most remarkable fact that every one of these assertions is false. The people who trust in the fathers as their authority for departing from God's commandment are miserably deceived as to what the fathers teach.

1. The fathers are so far from testifying that the apostles told them Christ changed the Sabbath, that not even one of them ever alludes to the idea of such a change.

2. No one of them ever calls the first day the Christian Sabbath, nor indeed ever calls it a Sabbath of any kind.
3. They never represent it as a day on which ordinary labor was sinful; nor do they represent the observance of Sunday as a act of obedience to the fourth commandment.
4. The modern doctrine of the change of the Sabbath was therefore absolutely unknown in the first centuries of the Christian church.<sup>2</sup>

But though no statement asserting the change of the Sabbath can be produced from the writings of the fathers of the first three hundred years, it is claimed that their testimony furnishes decisive proof that the first day of the week is the Lord's day of Rev.1:10. The biblical argument that the Lord's day is the seventh day and no other, because that day alone is in the Holy Scriptures claimed by the Father and the Son as belonging in a peculiar sense to each, is given in chapter eleven, and is absolutely decisive. But this is set aside without answer, and the claim of the first day to this honorable distinction is substantiated out of the fathers as follows:

The term Lord's day as a name for the first day of the week can be traced back through the first three centuries, from the fathers who lived toward their close, to the ones next preceding who mention the first day, and so backward by successive steps till we come to one who lived in John's time, and was his disciple; and this disciple of John calls the first day of the week the Lord's day. It follows therefore that John must have intended the first day of the week by the term Lord's day, but did not define his meaning because it was familiarly known by that name in his time. Thus by history we prove the first day of the week to be the Lord's day of Rev.1:10; and then by Rev.1:10, we prove the first day of the week to be the sacred day of this dispensation; for the spirit of inspiration by which John wrote would not have called the first day by this name if it were only a human institution, and if the seventh day was still by divine appointment the Lord's holy day.

This is a concise statement of the strongest argument for first-day sacredness which can be drawn from ecclesiastical history. It is the argument by which first-day writers prove Sunday to be the day called by John the Lord's day. This argument rests upon the statement that Lord's day as a name for Sunday can be traced back to the disciples of John, and that it is the name by which that day was familiarly known in John's time.

But this entire statement is false. The truth is, no writer of the first century, and no one of the second, prior to A.D. 194, who is known to speak of the first day of the week, ever calls it the Lord's day! Yet the first day is seven times mentioned by the sacred writers before John's vision upon Patmos on the Lord's day, and is twice mentioned by John in his gospel which he wrote after his return from that island, and is mentioned some sixteen times by ecclesiastical writers of the second century prior to A.D. 194, and never in a single instance is it called the Lord's day! We give all the instances of its mention in the Bible. Moses, in the beginning, by divine inspiration, gave to the day its name, and though the resurrection of Christ is said to have made it the Lord's day, yet every sacred writer who mentions the day after that event still adheres to the plain name of first day of the week. Here are all the instances in which the inspired writers mention the day:

Moses, B.C. 1490. "The evening and the morning were the first day." Gen.1:5.

Matthew, A.D. 41. "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week." Matt.28:1.

Paul, A.D. 57. "Upon the first day of the week." 1Cor.16:2.

Luke, A.D. 60. "Now upon the first day of the week." Luke 24:1.

Luke, A.D. 63. "And upon the first day of the week." Acts 20:7.

Mark, A.D. 64. "And very early in the morning, the first day of the week."
Mark 16:2.

"Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week."
Verse 9.

After the resurrection of Christ, and before John's vision, A.D. 96, the day is six times mentioned by inspired men, and every time as plain first day of the week. It certainly was not familiarly known as Lord's day before the time of John's vision. To speak the exact truth, it was not called by that name at all, nor by any other name equivalent to that, nor is there any record of its being set apart by divine authority as such.

But in the year 96, John says, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Rev.1:10. Now it is evident that this must be a day which the Lord had set apart for himself, and which he claimed as his. This was all true in the case of the seventh day, but was not in any respect true in that of the first day. He could not therefore call the first day by this name, for it was not such. But if the Spirit of God designed at this point to create a new institution and to call a certain day the Lord's day which before had never been claimed by him as such, it was necessary that he should specify that new day. He did not define the term, which proves that he was not giving a sacred name to some new institution, but was speaking of a well-known, divinely appointed day. But after John's return from Patmos, he wrote his gospel,<sup>3</sup> and in that gospel he twice had occasion to mention the first day of the week. Let us see whether he adheres to the manner of the other sacred writers, or whether, when we know he means the first day, he gives to it a sacred name.

John, A.D. 97. "The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early." John 20:1.

"Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week." Verse 19.

These texts complete the Bible record of the first day of the week. They furnish conclusive evidence that John did not receive new light in vision at Patmos, bidding him call the first day of the week the Lord's day, and when taken with all the instances preceding, they constitute a complete demonstration that the first day was not familiarly known as the Lord's day in John's time, nor indeed known at all by that name then.

Let us now see whether Lord's day as a title for the first day can be traced back to John by means of the writings of the fathers.

The following is a concise statement of the testimony by which the fathers are made to prove that John used the term Lord's day as a name for the first day of the week. A chain of seven successive witnesses, commencing with one who was the disciple of John, and extending forward through several generations, is made to connect and identify the Lord's day of John with the Sunday-Lord's day of a later age. Thus, Ignatius, the disciple of John, is made to speak familiarly of the first day as the Lord's day. This is directly connecting the fathers and the apostles. Then the epistle of Pliny, A.D. 104, in connection with the Acts of the Martyrs, is adduced to prove that the martyrs in his time and forward were tested as to their observance of Sunday, the question being, "Have you kept the Lord's day?" Next, Justin Martyr, A.D. 140, is made to speak of Sunday as the Lord's day. After this, Theophilus of Antioch, A.D. 168, is brought forward to bear a powerful testimony to the Sunday-Lord's day. Then Dionysius of Corinth, A.D. 170, is made to speak to the same effect. Next Melito of Sardis, A.D. 177, is produced to confirm what the others have said. And finally, Irenaeus, A.D. 178, who had been the disciple of Polycarp, who had been the disciple of John the apostle, is brought forward to bear a decisive testimony in behalf of Sunday as the Lord's day and the Christian Sabbath.

These are the first seven witnesses who are cited to prove Sunday the Lord's day. They bring us nearly to the close of the second century. They constitute the chain of testimony by which the Lord's day of the apostle John is identified with the Sunday-Lord's day of later times.

First-day writers present these witnesses as proving positively that Sunday is the Lord's day of the Scriptures, and the Christian church accepts this testimony in the absence of that of the inspired writers. But the folly of the people, and the wickedness of those who lead them, may be set forth in one sentence:-the first, second, third, fourth, and seventh, of these testimonies are inexcusable frauds, while the fifth and sixth have no decisive bearing upon the case.

1. Ignatius, the first of these witnesses, it is said, must have known Sunday to be the Lord's day, for he calls it such, and he had conversed with the apostle John. But in the entire writings of this father the term Lord's day does not once occur, nor is there in them all a single mention of the first day of the week! The reader will find a critical examination of the epistles of Ignatius in chapter fourteen of this history.

2. It is a pure fabrication that the martyrs in Pliny's time, about A.D. 104, and thence onward, were tested by the question whether they had kept the Sunday-Lord's day. No question at all resembling this is to be found in the words of the martyrs till we come to the fourth century, and then the reference is not at all to the first day of the week. This is fully shown in chapter fifteen.

3. the Bible Dictionary of the American Tract Society, page 379, brings forward the third of these Sunday-Lord's day witnesses in the person of Justin Martyr, A.D. 140. It makes him call Sunday the Lord's day by quoting him as follows:

"Justin Martyr observes that `on the Lord's day all Christians in the city or country meet together, because that is the day of our Lord's resurrection.'"

But Justin never gave to Sunday the title of Lord's day, nor indeed any other sacred title. Here are his words correctly quoted:

"And on the day called Sunday, all who live in cities or in the country gather together to one place, and the memoirs of the apostles, or the writings of the prophets, are read, as long as time permits," etc.<sup>4</sup>

Justin speaks of the day called Sunday. But that he may be made to help establish its title to the name of Lord's day, his words are deliberately changed. Thus the third witness to Sunday as the Lord's day, like the first and the second, is made such by fraud. But the fourth fraud is even worse than the three which precede.

4. The fourth testimony to the Sunday-Lord's day is furnished in Dr. Justin Edwards' Sabbath Manual, p.114:

"Theophilus, bishop of Antioch, about A.D. 162, says: 'Both custom and reason challenge from us that we should honor the Lord's day, seeing on that day it was that our Lord Jesus completed his resurrection from the dead.' "

Dr. Edwards does not pretend to give the place in Theophilus where these words are to be found.

Having carefully and minutely examined every paragraph of the writings of Theophilus several times over, I state emphatically that nothing of the kind is to be found in that writer. He never uses the term Lord's day, and he does not even speak of the first day of the week. These words which are so well adapted to create the impression that the Sunday-Lord's day is of apostolic institution, are put into his mouth by the falsehood of some one.

Here are four frauds, constituting the first four instances of the alleged use of Lord's day as a name for Sunday. Yet it is by means of these very frauds that the Sunday-Lord's day of later ages is identified with the Lord's day of the Bible. Somebody invented these frauds. The use to which they are put plainly indicates the purpose for which they were framed. The title of Lord's day must be proved to pertain to Sunday by apostolic authority. For this purpose these frauds were a necessity. The case of the Sunday-Lord's day may be fitly illustrated by that of the long line of popes. Their apostolic authority as head of the Catholic church depends on their being able to identify the apostle Peter as the first of their line, and to prove that his authority was transmitted to them. There is no difficulty in tracing back their line to the early ages, though the earliest Roman bishops were modest, unassuming men, wholly unlike the popes of after times. But when they come to make Peter the head of their line, and to identify his authority and theirs, they can do it only by fraudulent testimonials. And such is the case with first-day observance. It may be traced back as a festival to the time of Justin Martyr, A.D. 140, but the day had then no sacred name, and at that time claimed no apostolic authority. But these must be secured at any cost, and so its title of Lord's day is by a series of fraudulent testimonials traced to the apostle John, as in like manner the authority of the popes is traced to the apostle Peter.

5. The fifth witness of this series is Dionysius of Corinth, A.D. 170. Unlike the four which have been already examined, Dionysius actually uses the term Lord's day, though he says nothing identifying it with the first day of the week. His words are these:

"To-day we have passed the Lord's holy day, in which we have read your epistle; in reading which we shall always have our minds stored with admonition, as we shall, also, from that written to us before by Clement."<sup>5</sup>

The epistle of Dionysus to Soter, bishop of Rome, from which this sentence is taken, has perished. Eusebius, who wrote in the fourth century, has preserved to us this sentence, but we have no knowledge of its connection. First-day writers quote Dionysus as the fifth of their witnesses that Sunday is the Lord's day. They say that Sunday was so familiarly known as Lord's day in the time of Dionysius, that he calls it by that name without even stopping to tell what day he meant.

But it is not honest to present Dionysius as a witness to the Sunday-Lord's day, for he makes no application of the term. But it is said he certainly meant Sunday because that was the familiar name of the day in his time, even as is indicated by the fact that he did not define the term. And how is it known that Lord's day was the familiar name of Sunday in the time of Dionysius? The four witnesses already examined furnish all the evidence in proof of this, for there is no writer this side of Dionysius who calls Sunday the Lord's day until almost the entire period of a generation has elapsed. So Dionysius constitutes the fifth witness of the series by virtue of the fact that the first four witnesses prove that in his time, Lord's day was the common name for first day of the week. But the first four testify to nothing of the kind until the words are by fraud put into their mouths! Dionysius is a witness for the Sunday-Lord's day because that four fraudulent testimonials from the generations preceding him fix this as the meaning of his words!

And the name Lord's day must have been a very common one for first day of the week because Dionysius does not define the term! And yet those who say this know that this one sentence of his epistle remains, while the connection, which doubtless fixed his meaning, has perished.

But Dionysius does not merely use the term Lord's day. He uses a stronger term than this - "the Lord's holy day." Even for a long period after Dionysius, no writer gives to Sunday so sacred a title as "the Lord's holy day." Yet this is the very title given to the Sabbath in the Holy Scriptures, and it is a well-ascertained fact that at this very time it was extensively observed, especially in Greece, the country of Dionysius, and that, too, as an act of obedience to the fourth commandment.<sup>6</sup>

6. The sixth witness in this remarkable series is Melito of Sardis, A.D. 177. The first four, who never use the term Lord's day, are by direct fraud made to call Sunday by that name; the fifth, who speaks of the Lord's holy day, is claimed on the strength of these frauds to have meant by it Sunday; while the sixth is not certainly proved to have spoken of any day! Melito wrote several books now lost, the titles of which have been preserved to us by Eusebius.<sup>7</sup> One of these, as given in the English version of Eusebius, is "On the Lord's Day." Of course, first-day writers claim that this was a treatise concerning Sunday, though down to this point no writer calls Sunday by this name. But it is an important fact that the word day formed no part of the title of Melito's book. It was a discourse on something pertaining to the Lord - d peri tes kuriakes logos - but the essential word emeras, day, is wanting. It may have been a treatise on the life of Christ, for Ignatius thus uses these words in connection: kuriaken xoen, Lord's life. Like the sentence from Dionysius, it would not even seem to help the claim of Sunday to the title of Lord's day were it not for the series of frauds in which it stands.

7. The seventh witness summoned to prove that Lord's day was the apostolic title of Sunday, is Irenaeus. Dr. Justin Edwards professes to quote him as follows:<sup>8</sup>

"Hence Irenaeus, bishop of Lyons, a disciple of Polycarp, who had been the companion of the apostles, A.D. 167 (it should be A.D. 178), says that the Lord's day was the Christian Sabbath. His words are, 'On the Lord's day every one of us Christians keeps the Sabbath, meditating on the law, and rejoicing in the works of God.' "

This witness is brought forward in a manner to give the utmost weight and authority to his words. He was the disciple of that eminent Christian martyr, Polycarp, and Polycarp was the companion of the apostles. What Irenaeus says is therefore in the estimation of many as worthy of our confidence as though we could read it in the writings of the apostles. Does not Irenaeus call Sunday the Christian Sabbath and the Lord's day? Did he not learn these things from Polycarp? And did not Polycarp get them from the fountain head? What need have we of further witness that Lord's day is the apostolic name for Sunday? What if the six earlier witnesses have failed us? Here is one that says all that can be asked, and he had his doctrine from a man who had his from the apostles!

Why then does not this establish the authority of Sunday as the Lord's day? The first reason is that neither Irenaeus nor any other man can add to or change one precept of the word of God, on any pretense whatever. We are never authorized to depart from the words of the inspired writers on the testimony of men who conversed with the apostles, or rather who conversed with some who had conversed with them. But the second reason is that every word of this pretended testimony of Irenaeus is a fraud! Nor is there a single instance in which the term Lord's day is to be found in any of his works, nor in any fragment of his works preserved in other authors!<sup>9</sup> And this completes the seven witnesses by whom the Lord's day of the Catholic church is traced back to and identified with the Lord's day of the Bible! It is not till A.D. 194, sixteen years after the latest of these witnesses, that we meet the first instance in which Sunday is called the Lord's day. In other words, Sunday is not called the Lord's day till ninety-eight years after John was upon Patmos, and one hundred and sixty-three years after the resurrection of Christ!

But is not this owing to the fact that the records of that period have perished? By no means; for the day is six times mentioned by the inspired writers between the resurrection of Christ, A.D. 31, and John's vision upon Patmos, A.D. 96; namely, by Matthew, A.D. 41; by Paul, A.D. 57; by Luke, A.D. 60, and A.D. 63; and by Mark, A.D. 64; and always as first day of the week. John, after his return from Patmos, A.D. 97, twice mentions the day, still calling it first day of the week.

After John's time, the day is next mentioned in the so-called epistle of Barnabas, written probably as early as A.D. 140, and is there called "the eighth day." Next it is mentioned by Justin Martyr in his Apology, A.D. 140, once as "the day on which we all hold our common assembly;" once as "the first day on which God . . . made the world;" once as "the same day (on which Christ) rose from the dead;" once as "the day after that of Saturn;" and three times as "Sunday," or "the day of the sun." Next the day is mentioned by Justin Martyr in his Dialogue with Trypho, A.D. 155, in which he twice calls it the "eighth day;" once "the first of all the days;" once as "the first" "of all the days of the (weekly) cycle;" and twice as "the first day after the Sabbath." Next it is once mentioned by Irenaeus, A.D. 178, who calls it simply the first day of the week." And next it is mentioned once by Bardesanes, who calls it simply "the first of the week." The variety of names by which the day is mentioned during this time is remarkable; but it is never called Lord's day, nor ever called by any sacred name.

Though Sunday is mentioned in so many different ways during the second century, it is not till we come almost to the close of that century that we find the first instance in which it is called Lord's day. Clement, of Alexandria, A.D. 194, uses this title with reference to "the eighth day." If he speaks of a natural day, he no doubt means Sunday. It is not certain, however, that he speaks of a natural day, for his explanation gives to the term an entirely different sense. Here are his words:

"And the Lord's day Plato prophetically speaks of in the tenth book of the Republic, in these words: 'And when seven days have passed to each of them in the meadow, on the eighth they are to set out and arrive in four days.' By the meadow is to be understood the fixed sphere, as being a mild and genial spot, and the locality of the pious; and by the seven days, each motion of the seven planets, and the whole practical art which speeds to the end of rest. But after the wandering orbs, the journey leads to Heaven, that is, to the eighth motion and day. And he says that souls are gone on the fourth day, pointing out the passage through the four elements. But the seventh day is recognized as sacred, not by the Hebrews only, but also by the Greeks; according to which the whole world of all animals and plants revolve."<sup>10</sup>

Clement was originally a heathen philosopher, and these strange mysticisms which he here puts forth upon the words of Plato are only modifications of his former heathen notions. Though Clement says that Plato speaks of the Lord's day, it is certain that he does not understand him to speak of literal days nor of a literal meadow. On the contrary, he interprets the meadow to represent "the fixed sphere, as being a mild and genial spot, and the locality of the pious;" which must refer to their future inheritance. The seven days are not so many literal days, but they represent "each motion of the seven planets, and the whole practical art which speeds to the end of rest." This seems to represent the present period of labor which is to end in the rest of the saints. For he adds: "But after the wandering orbs (represented by Plato's seven days) the journey leads to Heaven, that is, to the eighth motion and day." The seven days, therefore, do here represent the period of the Christian's pilgrimage, and the eighth day of which Clement here speaks is not Sunday, but Heaven itself! Here is the first instance of Lord's day as a name for the eighth day, but this eighth day is a mystical one, and means Heaven!

But Clement uses the term Lord's day once more, and this time clearly, as representing, not a literal day, but the whole period of our regenerate life. For he speaks of it in treating of fasting, and he sets forth fasting as consisting in abstinence from sinful pleasures, not only in deeds, to use his distinction, as forbidden by the law, but in thoughts, as forbidden by the gospel. Such fasting pertains to the entire life of the Christian. And thus Clement sets forth what is involved in observing this duty in the gospel sense:

"He, in fulfillment of the precept, according to the gospel, keeps the Lord's day, when he abandons an evil disposition, and assumes that of the Gnostic, glorifying the Lord's resurrection in himself."<sup>11</sup>

From this statement we learn, not merely his idea of fasting, but also that of celebrating the Lord's day, and glorifying the resurrection of Christ. This, according to Clement, does not consist in paying special honors to Sunday, but in abandoning an evil disposition, and in assuming that of the Gnostic, a Christian sect to which he belonged. Now it is plain that this kind of Lord's-day observance pertains to no one day of the week, but embraces the entire life of the Christian. Clement's Lord's day was not a literal, but a mystical, day, embracing, according to this, his second use of the term, the entire regenerate life of the Christian; and according to his first use of the term, embracing also the future life in Heaven. And this view is confirmed by Clement's statement of the contrast between the Gnostic sect to which he belonged and other Christians. He says of their worship that it was "NOT ON SPECIAL DAYS, as some others, but doing this continually in our whole life." And he speaks further of the worship of the Gnostic that it was "not in a specified place, or selected temple, or at certain festivals, and on appointed days, but during his whole life."<sup>12</sup>

It is certainly a very remarkable fact that the first writer who speaks of the Lord's day as the eighth day uses the term, not with reference to a literal, but a mystical, day. It is not Sunday, but the Christian's life, or Heaven itself! This doctrine of a perpetual Lord's day, we shall find alluded to in Tertullian, and expressly stated in Origen, who are the next two writers that use the term Lord's day. But Clement's mystical or perpetual Lord's day shows that he had no idea that John, by Lord's day, meant Sunday; for in that case, he must have recognized that as the true Lord's day, and the Gnostics' special day of worship.

Tertullian, A.D. 200, is the next writer who uses the term Lord's day. He defines his meaning, and fixes the name upon the day of Christ's resurrection. Kitto<sup>13</sup> says this is "the earliest authentic instance" in which the name is thus applied, and we have proved this true by actual examination of every writer, unless the reader can discover some reference to Sunday in Clement's mystical eighth day. Tertullian's words are these:

"We, however (just as we have received), only on the Lord's day of the resurrection (solo die dominico resurrectionis) ought to guard, not only against kneeling, but every posture and office of solicitude; deferring even our business, lest we give any place to the devil. Similarly, too, in the period of Pentecost; which period we distinguish by the same solemnity of exultation."<sup>14</sup>

Twice more does Tertullian use the term Lord's day, and once more does he define it, this time calling it the "eighth day." And in each of these two cases does he place the day which he calls Lord's day in the same rank with the Catholic festival of Pentecost, even as he does in the instance already quoted. As the second instance of Tertullian's use of Lord's day, we quote a portion of the rebuke which he addressed to his brethren for mingling with the heathen in their festivals. He says:

"Oh! better fidelity of the nations to their own sects, which claims no solemnity of the Christians for itself! Not the Lord's day, not Pentecost, even if they had known them, would they have shared with us; for they would fear lest they should seem to be Christians. We are not apprehensive lest we seem to be heathens! If any indulgence is to be granted to the flesh, you have it. I will not say your own days, but more too; for to the heathens each festive day occurs but once annually; you have a festive day every eighth day."<sup>15</sup>

The festival which Tertullian here represents as coming every eighth day was no doubt the one which he has just called the Lord's day. Though he elsewhere<sup>16</sup> speaks of the Sunday festival as observed at least by some portion of the heathen, he here speaks of the Lord's day as unknown to those heathen of whom he now writes. This strongly indicates that the Sunday festival had but recently begun to be called by the name of Lord's day. But he once more speaks of the Lord's day:

"As often as the anniversary comes round, we make offerings for the dead as birth-day honors. We count fasting or kneeling in worship on the Lord's day to be unlawful. We rejoice in the same privilege also from Easter to Whitsunday (the Pentecost). We feel pained should any wine or bread, even though our own, be cast upon the ground. At every forward step and movement, at every going in and out, when we put on our clothes and shoes, when we bathe, when we sit at table, when we light the lamps, on couch, on seat, in all the ordinary actions of daily life, we trace upon the forehead the sign [of the cross].

"If, for these and other such rules, you insist upon having positive Scripture injunction, you will find none. Tradition will be held forth to you as the originator of them, custom as their strengthener, and faith as their observer. That reason will support tradition, and custom, and faith, you will either yourself perceive, or learn from some one who has."<sup>17</sup>

This completes the instances in which Tertullian uses the term Lord's day, except a mere allusion to it in his discourse on Fasting. It is very remarkable that in each of the three cases, he puts it on a level with the festival of Whitsunday, or Pentecost. He also associates it directly with "offerings for the dead" and with the use of "the sign of the cross." When asked for authority from the Bible for these things, he does not answer, "We have the authority of John for the Lord's day, though we have nothing but tradition for the sign of the cross and offerings for the dead." On the contrary, he said there was no Scripture injunction for any of them. If it be asked, How could the title of Lord's day be given to Sunday except by tradition derived from the apostles? the answer will be properly returned, What was the origin of offerings for the dead? And how did the sign of the cross come into use among Christians? The title of Lord's day as a name for Sunday is no nearer apostolic than is the sign of the cross, and offerings for the dead; for it can be traced no nearer to apostolic times than can these most palpable errors of the great apostasy.

Clement taught a perpetual Lord's day; Tertullian held a similar view, asserting that Christians should celebrate a perpetual Sabbath, not by abstinence from labor, but from sin.<sup>18</sup> Tertullian's method of Sunday observance will be noticed hereafter.

Origen, A.D. 231, is the third of the ancient writers who call "the eighth day" the Lord's day. He was the disciple of Clement, the first writer who makes this application. It is not strange, therefore, that he should teach Clement's doctrine of a perpetual Lord's day, nor that he should state it even more distinctly than did Clement himself. Origen, having represented Paul as teaching that all days are alike, continues thus:

"If it be objected to us on this subject that we ourselves are accustomed to observe certain days, as for example the Lord's day, the Preparation, the Passover, or Pentecost, I have to answer, that to the perfect Christian, who is ever in his thoughts, words, and deeds, serving his natural Lord, God the Word, all his days are the Lord's, and he is always keeping the Lord's day."<sup>19</sup>

This was written some forty years after Clement had propounded his doctrine of the Lord's day. The imperfect Christian might honor a Lord's day which stood in the same rank with the Preparation, the Passover, and the Pentecost. But the perfect Christian observed the true Lord's day, which embraced all the days of his regenerate life. Origen uses the term Lord's day for two different days. 1. For a natural day, which in his judgment stood in the same rank with the Preparation day, the Passover, and the Pentecost. 2. For a mystical day, as did Clement, which is the entire period of the Christian's life. The mystical day, in his estimation, was the true Lord's day. It therefore follows that he did not believe Sunday to be the Lord's day by apostolic appointment. But, after Origen's time, Lord's day becomes a common name for the so-called eighth day. Yet these three men, Clement, Tertullian, and Origen, who first make this application, not only do not claim that this name was given to the day by the apostles, but do plainly indicate that they had no such idea. Offerings for the dead and the use of the sign of the cross are found as near to apostolic times as is the use of Lord's day as a name for Sunday. The three have a common origin, as shown by Tertullian's own words. Origen's views of the Sabbath, and of the Sunday festival, will be noticed hereafter.

Such is the case with the claim of Sunday to the title of Lord's day. The first instance of its use, if Clement be supposed to refer to Sunday, is not till almost one century after John was in vision upon Patmos. Those who first call it by that name had no idea that it was such by divine or apostolic appointment, as they plainly show. In marked contrast with this is the Catholic festival of the Passover. Though never commanded in the New Testament, it can be traced back to men who say that they had it from the apostles!

Thus the churches of Asia Minor had the festival from Polycarp who, as Eusebius states the claim of Polycarp, had "observed it with John the disciple of our Lord, and the rest of the apostles with whom he associated."<sup>20</sup> Socrates says of them that they maintain that this observance "was delivered to them by the apostle John."<sup>21</sup> Anatolius says of these Asiatic Christians that they received "the rule from an unimpeachable authority, to wit, the evangelist John."<sup>22</sup>

Nor was this all. The western churches also, with the church of Rome at their head, were strenuous observers of the Passover festival. They also traced the festival to the apostles. Thus Socrates says of them: "The Romans and those in the western parts assure us that their usage originated with the apostles Peter and Paul."<sup>23</sup> But he says these parties cannot prove this by written testimony. Sozomen says of the Romans, with respect to the Passover festival, that they "have never deviated from their original usage in this particular; the custom having been handed down to them by the holy apostles Peter and Paul."<sup>24</sup>

If the Sunday-Lord's day could be traced to a man who claimed to have celebrated it with John and other of the apostles, how confidently would this be cited as proving positively that it is an apostolic institution! And yet this can be done in the case of the Passover festival! Nevertheless, a single fact in the case of this very festival is sufficient to teach us the folly of trusting in tradition. Polycarp claimed that John and other of the apostles taught him to observe the festival on the fourteenth day of the first month, whatever day of the week it might be; while the elders of the Roman church asserted that Peter and Paul taught them that it must be observed on the Sunday following Good Friday!<sup>25</sup>

The Lord's day of the Catholic church can be traced no nearer to John than A.D. 194, or perhaps in strict truth to A.D. 200, and those who then use the name show plainly that they did not believe it to be the Lord's day by apostolic appointment. To hide these fatal facts by seeming to trace the title back to Ignatius the disciple of John, and thus to identify Sunday with the Lord's day of that apostle, a series of remarkable frauds has been committed which we have had occasion to examine. But even could the Sunday-Lord's day be traced to Ignatius, the disciple of John, it would then come no nearer being an apostolic institution than does the Catholic festival of the Passover, which can be traced to Polycarp, another of John's disciples, who claimed to have received it from John himself!

---

1 The writer has prepared a small work entitled, "The complete Testimony of the Fathers of the first Three Centuries concerning the Sabbath and First Day," in which, with the single exception of Origen, some of whose works were not at that time accessible, every passage in the fathers which gives their views of the Sabbath and first-day is presented. This pamphlet can be had of the publishers of the present work for fifteen cents. To save space in this History, a general statement of the doctrine of the fathers is here made with brief quotations of their words. But in "The Complete Testimony of the Fathers" every passage is given in their own words, and to this little work the reader is referred.

2 Those who dispute these statements are invited to present the words of the fathers which modify or disprove them. The reader who may not have access to the writing of the fathers is referred to the pamphlet already mentioned in which their complete testimony is given.

- 3 See the testimony on page 189 of this work.
- 4 Justin Martyr's First Apology, chap. lxvii.
- 5 Eusebius's Eccl. Hist., book iv. chap. xxiii.
- 6 See chap. xviii. of this History.
- 7 See his Ecclesiastical History, book iv. chap. xxvi.
- 8 Sabbath Manual, p. 114.
- 9 See chap. xvi. of this work; and also Testimony of the Fathers, pp. 44-52.
- 10 The Miscellanies of Clement, book v. chap. xiv.
- 11 The Miscellanies of Clement, book vii. chap. xii.; Testimony of the Fathers, p. 61.
- 12 The Miscellanies, book vii. chap. vii.; Testimony of the Fathers, p. 62.
- 13 Kitto's Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, original edition, article Lord's Day.
- 14 Tertullian on Prayer, chap. xxiii.; Testimony of the Fathers, p. 67.
- 15 On Idolatry, chap. xiv.; Testimony of the Fathers, p. 66.
- 16 Ad Nationes, book i. chap. xiii.; Testimony of the Fathers, p. 70.
- 17 De Corona, sects. 3 and 4; Testimony of the Fathers, pp. 68, 69.
- 18 An Answer to the Jews, chap. iv.; Testimony of the Fathers, p. 73.
- 19 Against Celcus, book 8. chap. xxii.; Testimony of the Fathers, p. 87.
- 20 Eusebius's Eccl. Hist., book v. chap. xxiv.
- 21 Socrates's Eccl. Hist., book v. chap. xxii.
- 22 Anatolius, Tenth Fragment.
- 23 Socrates's Eccl. Hist., book v. chap. xxii.
- 24 Sozomen's Eccl. Hist., book vii. chap. xviii.; see also Mosheim, book i. cent. 2, part ii. chap. iv. sect. 9.
- 25 Socrates's Eccl. Hist., book v. chap. xxii.; McClintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, vol. iii. p. 13; Bingham's Antiquities, p. 1149.

---

CHAPTER 14

THE FIRST WITNESSES FOR SUNDAY

---

Origin of Sunday observance the subject of present inquiry - Contradictory statements of Mosheim and Neander - The question between them stated, and the true data for deciding that question - The New Testament furnishes no support for Mosheim's statement - Epistle of Barnabas a forgery - The testimony of Pliny determines nothing in the case - the epistle of Ignatius probably spurious, and certainly interpolated so far as it is made to sustain Sunday - Decision of the question.

---

The first day of the week is now almost universally observed as the Christian Sabbath. The origin of this institution is still before us as the subject of inquiry. This is presented by two eminent church historians; but so directly do they contradict each other, that it is a question of curious interest to determine which of them states the truth. Thus Mosheim writes respecting the first century:

"All Christians were unanimous in setting apart the first day of the week, on which the triumphant Saviour arose from the dead, for the solemn celebration of public worship. This pious custom, which was derived from the example of the church of Jerusalem, was founded upon the express appointment of the apostles, who consecrated that day to the same sacred purpose, and was observed universally throughout the Christian churches, as appears from the united testimonies of the most credible writers."<sup>1</sup>

Now let us read what Neander, the most distinguished of church historians, says of this apostolic authority for Sunday observance:

"The festival of Sunday, like all other festivals, was always only a human ordinance, and it was far from the intentions of the apostles to establish a divine command in this respect, far from them, and from the early apostolic church, to transfer the laws of the Sabbath to Sunday. Perhaps at the end of the second century a false application of this kind had begun to take place; for men appear by that time to have considered laboring on Sunday as a sin."<sup>2</sup>

How shall we determine which of these historians is in the right? Neither of them lived in the apostolic age of the church. Mosheim was a writer of the eighteenth century, and Neander, of the nineteenth. Of necessity therefore they must learn the facts in the case from the writings of that period which have come down to us. These contain all the testimony which can have any claim to be admitted in deciding this case. These are, first, the inspired writings of the New Testament; second, the reputed productions of such writers of that age as are supposed to mention the first day, viz., the epistle of Barnabas; the letter of Pliny, governor of Bythinia, to the emperor Trajan; and the epistle of Ignatius. These are all the writings prior to the middle of the second century - and this is late enough to amply cover the ground of Mosheim's statement - which can be introduced as even referring to the first day of the week.

The questions to be decided by this testimony are these: Did the apostles set apart Sunday for divine worship (as Mosheim affirms)? or does the evidence in the case show that the festival of Sunday, like all other festivals, was always only a human ordinance (as is affirmed by Neander)?

It is certain that the New Testament contains no appointment of Sunday for the solemn celebration of public worship. And it is equally true that there is no example of the church of Jerusalem on which to found such observance. The New Testament therefore furnishes no support<sup>3</sup> for the statement of Mosheim.

The three epistles which have come down to us purporting to have been written in the apostolic age, or immediately subsequent to that age, next come under examination. These are all that remain to us of a period more extended than that embraced in the statement of Mosheim. He speaks of the first century only; but we summon all the writers of that century, and of the following one prior to the time of Justin Martyr, A.D. 140, who are even supposed to mention the first day of the week. Thus the reader is furnished with all the data in the case. The epistle of Barnabas speaks as follows in behalf of first-day observance:

"Lastly he saith unto them, Your new-moons and your sabbaths I cannot bear them. Consider what he means by it; the sabbaths, says he, which ye now keep, are not acceptable unto me, but those which I have made; when resting from all things, I shall begin the eighth day, that is, the beginning of the other world; for which cause we observe the eighth day with gladness, in which Jesus arose from the dead, and having manifested himself to his disciples, ascended into Heaven."<sup>4</sup>

It might be reasonably concluded that Mosheim would place great reliance upon this testimony as coming from an apostle, and as being somewhat better suited to sustain the sacredness of Sunday than anything previously examined by us. Yet he frankly acknowledges that this epistle is spurious. Thus he says:

"The epistle of Barnabas was the production of some Jew, who, most probably, lived in this century, and whose mean abilities and superstitious attachment to Jewish fables, show, notwithstanding the uprightness of his intentions, that he must have been a very different person from the true Barnabas, who was St. Paul's companion."<sup>5</sup>

In another work, Mosheim says of this epistle:

"As to what is suggested by some, of its having been written by that Barnabas who was the friend and companion of St. Paul, the futility of such a notion is easily to be made apparent from the letter itself; several of the opinions and interpretations of Scripture which it contains, having in them so little of either truth, dignity or force, as to render it impossible that they could ever have proceeded from the pen of a man divinely instructed."<sup>6</sup>

Neander speaks thus of this epistle:

"It is impossible that we should acknowledge this epistle to belong to that Barnabas who was worthy to be the companion of the apostolic labors of St. Paul."<sup>7</sup>

Prof. Stuart bears a similar testimony:

"That a man by the name of Barnabas wrote this epistle I doubt not; that the chosen associate of Paul wrote it, I with many others must doubt."<sup>8</sup>

Dr. Killen, Professor of Ecclesiastical History, to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church of Ireland, uses the following language:

"The tract known as the Epistle of Barnabas was probably composed in A.D. 135. It is the production apparently of a convert from Judaism who took special pleasure in allegorical interpretation of Scripture."<sup>9</sup>

Prof. Hackett bears the following testimony:

"The letter still extant, which was known as that of Barnabas even in the second century, cannot be defended as genuine."<sup>10</sup>

Mr. Milner speaks of the reputed epistle of Barnabas as follows:-

"It is a great injury to him to apprehend the epistle, which goes by his name, to be his."<sup>11</sup>

Kitto speaks of this production as,

"The so-called epistle of Barnabas, probably a forgery of the second century."<sup>12</sup>

Says the Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, speaking of the Barnabas of the New Testament:

"He could not be the author of a work so full of forced allegories, extravagant and unwarrantable explications of Scripture, together with stories concerning beasts, and such like conceits, as make up the first part of this epistle."<sup>13</sup>

Eusebius, the earliest of church historians, places this epistle in the catalogue of spurious books. Thus he says:

"Among the spurious must be numbered both the books called, 'The Acts of Paul,' and that called, 'Pastor,' and 'The Revelation of Peter.' Besides these the books called 'The Epistle of Barnabas,' and what are called, 'The Institutions of the Apostles.'"<sup>14</sup>

Sir Wm. Domville speaks as follows:

"But the epistle was not written by Barnabas; it was not merely unworthy of him, - it would be a disgrace to him, and what is of much more consequence, it would be a disgrace to the Christian religion, as being the production of one of the authorized teachers of that religion in the times of the apostles, which circumstance would seriously damage the evidence of its divine origin. Not being the epistle of Barnabas, the document is, as regards the Sabbath question, nothing more than the testimony of some unknown writer to the practice of Sunday observance by some Christians of some unknown community, at some uncertain period of the Christian era, with no sufficient ground for believing that period to have been the first century."<sup>15</sup>

Coleman bears the following testimony:

"The epistle of Barnabas, bearing the honored name of the companion of Paul in his missionary labors, is evidently spurious. It abounds in fabulous narratives, mystic, allegorical interpretations of the Old Testament, and fanciful conceits, and is generally agreed by the learned to be of no authority."<sup>16</sup>

As a specimen of the unreasonable and absurd things contained in this epistle, the following passage is quoted:

"Neither shalt thou eat of the hyena: that is, again, be not an adulterer; nor a corrupter of others; neither be like to such. And wherefore so? Because that creature every year changes its kind, and is sometimes male, and sometimes female."<sup>17</sup>

Thus first-day historians being allowed to decide the case, we are authorized to treat this epistle as a forgery. And whoever will read its ninth chapter - for it will not bear quoting - will acknowledge the justice of this conclusion. This epistle is the only writing purporting to come from the first century except the New Testament, in which the first day is even referred to. That this furnishes no support for Sunday observance, even Mosheim acknowledges.

The next document that claims our attention is the letter of Pliny, the Roman governor of Bythinia, to the emperor Trajan. It was written about A.D. 104. He says of the Christians of his province:

"They affirmed that the whole of their guilt or error was, that they met on a certain stated day, before it was light, and addressed themselves in a form of prayer to Christ, as to some god, binding themselves by a solemn oath, not for the purposes of any wicked design, but never to commit any fraud, theft, or adultery; never to falsify their word, nor deny a trust when they should be called upon to deliver it up; after which it was their custom to separate, and then re-assemble to eat in common a harmless meal."<sup>18</sup>

This epistle of Pliny certainly furnishes no support for Sunday observance. The case is presented in a candid manner by Coleman. He says of this extract:

"This statement is evidence that these Christians kept a day as holy time, but whether it was the last or the first day of the week, does not appear."<sup>19</sup>

Charles Buck, an eminent first-day writer, saw no evidence in this epistle of first-day observance, as is manifest from the indefinite translation which he gives it. Thus he cites the epistle:

"These persons declare that their whole crime, if they are guilty, consists in this: that on certain days they assemble before sunrise to sing alternately the praises of Christ as of God."<sup>20</sup>

Tertullian, who wrote A.D. 200, speaks of this very statement of Pliny thus:

"He found in their religious services nothing but meetings at early morning for singing hymns to Christ and God, and sealing home their way of life by a united pledge to be faithful to their religion, forbidding murder, adultery, dishonesty, and other crimes."<sup>21</sup>

Tertullian certainly found in this no reference to the festival of Sunday.

Mr. W. B. Tayler speaks of this stated day as follows:

"As the Sabbath day appears to have been quite as commonly observed at this date as the sun's day (if not even more so), it is just as probable that this 'stated day' referred to by Pliny was the seventh day, as that it was the first day; though the latter is generally taken for granted."<sup>22</sup>

Taking for granted the very point that should be proved, is no new feature in the evidence thus far examined in support of first-day observance. Although Mosheim relies on this expression of Pliny as a chief support of Sunday, yet he speaks thus of the opinion of another learned man:

"B. Just. Hen. Boehmer, would indeed have us to understand this day to have been the same with the Jewish Sabbath."<sup>23</sup>

This testimony of Pliny was written a few years subsequent to the time of the apostles. It relates to a church which probably had been founded by the apostle Peter.<sup>24</sup> It is certainly far more probable that this church, only forty years after the death of Peter, was keeping the fourth commandment, than that it was observing a day never enjoined by divine authority. It must be conceded that this testimony from Pliny proves nothing in support of Sunday observance; for it does not designate what day of the week was thus observed.

The epistles of Ignatius of Antioch so often quoted in behalf of first-day observance, next claim our attention. He is represented as saying:

"Wherefore if they who are brought up in these ancient laws came nevertheless to the newness of hope; no longer observing sabbaths, but keeping the Lord's day, in which also our life is sprung up by him, and through his death, whom yet some deny (by which mystery we have been brought to believe, and therefore wait that we may be found the disciples of Jesus Christ, our only master): how shall we be able to live different from him; whose disciples the very prophets themselves being, did by the Spirit expect him as their master."<sup>25</sup>

Two important facts relative to this quotation are worthy of particular notice: 1. That the epistles of Ignatius are acknowledged to be spurious by first-day writers of high authority; and those epistles which some of them except as possibly genuine, do not include in their number the epistle to the Magnesians from which the above quotation is made, nor do they say anything relative to first-day observance. 2. That the epistle to Magnesians would say nothing of any day, were it not that the word day had been fraudulently inserted by the translator! In support of the first of these propositions the following testimony is adduced. Dr. Killen speaks as follows:

"In the sixteenth century, fifteen letters were brought out from beneath the mantle of a hoary antiquity, and offered to the world as the productions of the pastor of Antioch. Scholars refused to receive them on the terms required, and forthwith eight of them were admitted to be forgeries. In the seventeenth century, the seven remaining letters, in a somewhat altered form, again came forth from obscurity, and claimed to be the works of Ignatius. Again discerning critics refused to acknowledge their pretensions; but curiosity was roused by this second apparition, and many expressed an earnest desire to obtain a sight of the real epistles. Greece, Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, were ransacked in search of them, and at length three letters are found. The discovery creates general gratulation; it is confessed that four of the epistles so lately asserted to be genuine, are apocryphal; and it is boldly said that the three now forthcoming are above challenge. But truth still refuses to be compromised, and sternly disowns these claimants for her approbation. The internal evidence of these three epistles abundantly attests that, like the last three books of the Sibyl, they are only the last shifts of a grave imposture."<sup>26</sup>

The same writer thus states the opinion of Calvin:

"It is no mean proof of the sagacity of the great Calvin, that, upwards of three hundred years ago, he passed a sweeping sentence of condemnation on these Ignatian epistles."<sup>27</sup>

Of the three epistles of Ignatius still claimed as genuine, Prof. C. F. Hudson speaks as follows:

"Ignatius of Antioch was martyred probably A.D. 115. Of the eight epistles ascribed to him, three are genuine; viz., those addressed to Polycarp, the Ephesians, and the Romans."<sup>28</sup>

It will be observed that the three epistles which are here mentioned as genuine do not include that epistle from which the quotation in behalf of Sunday is taken, and it is a fact also that they contain no allusion to Sunday. Sir. Wm. Domville, an anti-Sabbatarian writer, uses the following language:

"Every one at all conversant with such matters is aware that the works of Ignatius have been more interpolated and corrupted than those of any other of the ancient fathers; and also that some writings have been attributed to him which are wholly spurious."<sup>29</sup>

Robinson, an eminent English Baptist writer of the last century, expresses the following opinion of the epistles ascribed to Ignatius, Barnabas, and others:

"If any of the writings attributed to those who are called apostolical fathers, as Ignatius, teacher at Antioch, Polycarp, at Smyrna, Barnabas, who was half a Jew, and Hermas, who was brother to Pius, teacher at Rome, if any of these be genuine, of which there is great reason to doubt, they only prove the piety and illiteracy of the good men. Some are worse, and the best not better, than the godly epistles of the lower sort of Baptists and Quakers in the time of the civil war in England. Barnabas and Hermas both mention baptism; but both of these books are contemptible reveries of wild and irregular geniuses."<sup>30</sup>

The doubtful character of these Ignatian epistles is thus sufficiently attested. The quotation in behalf of Sunday is not taken from one of the three epistles that are still claimed as genuine; and what is still further to be observed, it would say nothing in behalf of any day were it not for an extraordinary license, not to say fraud, which the translator has used in inserting the word day. This fact is shown with critical accuracy by Kitto, whose Cyclopedia is in high repute among first-day scholars. Thus he presents the original of Ignatius with comments and a translation as follows:

"We must here notice one other passage . . . as bearing on the subject of the Lord's day, though it certainly contains no mention of it. It occurs in the epistle of Ignatius to the Magnesians (about A.D. 100.) The whole passage is confessedly obscure, and the text may be corrupt. . . . The passage is as follows:

Ei oun oi en palaios pragmasin anastrophentes eis kainoteta elpidos elthon-meketi sabbatixontes, alla kata kuriaken xoen xontes-(en e kai e xoe emon aneteilen oi autou, etc.)<sup>31</sup>

"Now many commentators assume (on what ground does not appear), that after kuriaken [Lord's] the word emeran [day] is to be understood. . . . Let us now look at the passage simply as it stands. The defect of the sentence is the want of a substantive to which autou can refer. This defect, so far from being remedied, is rendered still more glaring by the introduction of emera. Now if we take kuriake xon as simply 'the life of the Lord,' having a more personal meaning, it certainly goes nearer to supplying the substantive to autou. . . . Thus upon the whole the meaning might be given thus:

"If those who lived under the old dispensation have come to the newness of hope, no longer keeping sabbaths, but living according to our Lord's life (in which, as it were, our life has risen again through him, &c.). . . .

"On this view the passages does not refer at all to the Lord's day; but even on the opposite supposition it can not be regarded as affording any positive evidence to the early use of the term 'Lord's day' (for which it is often cited), since the material word emera [day] is purely conjectural."<sup>32</sup>

The learned Morer, a clergyman of the church of England, confirms this statement of Kitto. He renders Ignatius thus:

"If therefore they who were well versed in the works of ancient days came to newness of hope, not sabbatizing, but living according to the dominical life, &c. . . . The Medicean copy, the best and most like that of Eusebius, leaves no scruple, because xoen is expressed and determines the word dominical to the person of Christ, and not to the day of his resurrection."<sup>33</sup>

Sir Wm. Domville speaks on this point as follows:

"Judging therefore by the tenor of the epistle itself, the literal translation of the passage in discussion, 'no longer observing sabbaths, but living according to the Lord's life,' appears to give its true and proper meaning; and if this be so, Ignatius, whom Mr. Gurney<sup>34</sup> puts forward as a material witness to prove the observance of the Lord's day in the beginning of the second century, fails to prove any such fact, it appearing on a thorough examination of his testimony that he does not even mention the Lord's day, nor in any way allude to the religious observance of it, whether by that name or by any other."<sup>35</sup>

It is manifest, therefore, that this famous quotation has no reference whatever to the first day of the week, and that it furnishes no evidence that that day was known in the time of Ignatius by the title of Lord's day.<sup>36</sup> The evidence is now before the reader which must determine whether Moshieim or Neander spoke in accordance with the facts in the case. And thus it appears that in the New Testament, and in the uninspired writers of the period referred to, there is absolutely nothing to sustain the strong Sunday statement of Mosheim. When we come to the fourth century, we shall find a statement by him which essentially modifies what he has here said. Of the epistles ascribed to Barnabas, Pliny, and Ignatius, we have found that the first is a forgery; that the second speaks of a stated day without defining what one; and that the third, which is probably a spurious document, would say nothing relative to Sunday, if the advocates of first-day sacredness had not interpolated the word day into the document! We can hardly avoid the conclusion that Mosheim spoke on this subject as a doctor of divinity, and not as a historian; and with the firmest conviction that we speak the truth, we say with Neander, "The festival of Sunday was always only a human ordinance."

---

1 Maclaine's Mosheim, cent. 1, part ii. chap. iv. sec. 4. I have given Maclaine's translation, not because it is an accurate version of Mosheim, but because it is so much used in support of the first day Sabbath. Maclaine in his preface to Mosheim says: "I have sometimes taken considerable liberties with my author." And he tells us what these liberties were by saying that he had "often added a few sentences, to render an observation more striking, a fact more clear, a portrait more finished." The present quotation is an instance of these liberties. Dr. Murdock of New Haven who has given "a close, literal version" of Mosheim, gives the passage thus:

"The Christians of this century, assembled for the worship of God, and for their advancement in piety, on the first day of the week, the day on which Christ reassumed his life: for that this day was set apart for religious worship, by the apostles themselves, and that, after the example of the church of Jerusalem, it was generally observed, we have unexceptionable testimony." - Murdock's Mosheim, cent. 1, part ii. chap. iv. sec. 4.

2 Neander's Church History, translated by H. J. Rose, p. 186. To break the force of this strong statement of Neander that "the festival of Sunday, like all other festivals, was always only a human ordinance, and it was far from the intentions of the apostles to establish a divine command in this respect, far from them, and from the early apostolic church, to transfer the laws of the Sabbath to Sunday," two things have been said:

1. That Neander, in a later edition of his work, retracted this declaration. It is true that in re-writing his work he omitted this sentence. But he inserted nothing of a contrary character, and the general tenor of the revised edition is in this place precisely the same as in that from which this out-spoken statement is taken.

In proof of this, we cite from the later edition of Neander his statement in this very place of what constituted Sunday observance in the early church. He says:

"Sunday was distinguished as a day of joy, by being exempted from fasts, and by the circumstance that prayer was performed on this day in a standing and not in a kneeling posture, as Christ, by his resurrection, had raised up fallen man again to Heaven." - Torrey's Neander, vol. i. p. 295, ed. 1852.

This is an accurate account of early Sunday observance, as we shall hereafter show; and that such observance was only a human ordinance, of which no feature was ever commanded by the apostles, will be very manifest to every person who attempts to find any precept for any particular of it in the New Testament.

2. But the other method of setting aside this testimony of Neander is to assert that he did not mean to deny that the apostles established a divine command for Sunday as the Christian Sabbath, but meant to assert that they did not establish a divine command for Sunday as a Catholic festival! Those who make this assertion must know that it is false. Neander expressly denies that the apostles either constituted or recognized Sunday as a Sabbath, and he represents Sunday as a mere festival from the very first of its observance, and established only by human authority.

3 See chapters x. and xi., in which the New Testament has been carefully examined on this point.

4 Epistle of Barnabas 13:9, 10; or, as others divide the epistle, chapter 15.

5 Eccl. Hist., cent. 1, part ii. chap. ii. sect. 21.

6 Historical Commentaries, cent. 1, sect. 53.

7 Rose's Neander, p. 407.

8 Note appended to Gurney's History, Authority, and Use of the Sabbath, p. 86.

9 Ancient Church, pp. 367, 368.

10 Commentary on Acts, p. 251.

11 History of the Church, cent. 1, chap. xv.

12 Cyc. Bib. Lit., art. Lord's day, tenth ed. 1858.

13 Encyc. of Rel. Knowl., art. Barnabas' Epistle.

14 Eccl. Hist., Book iii. chap. xxv.

15 The Sabbath, or an Examination of the Six Texts commonly adduced from the New Testament in proof of a Christian Sabbath, p. 233.

16 Ancient Christianity, chap. i. sect. 2.

17 Epistle of Barnabas, 9:8. In some editions it is chap. 10.

18 Coleman's Ancient Christianity, pp. 35, 36.

19 Ancient Christianity Exemplified, chap. 26, sect. 2.

20 Buck's Theological Dictionary, art. Christians.

21 Tertullian's Apology, sect. 2.

22 Obligation of the Sabbath, p. 300.

23 Historical Commentaries, cent. 1, sect. 47.

24 1Pet.1:1. See Clarke's Commentary, preface to the epistles of Peter.

25 Ignatius to the Magnesians, 3:3-5; or, as others divide the epistle, chap. 9.

26 Ancient Church, pp. 413, 414.

27 Id. p. 427.

28 Future Life, p. 290.

29 Examination of the Six Tests, p. 237.

30 Ecclesiastical Researches, chap. vi. pp. 50, 51, ed. 1792.

31 Ignatius ad Magnesios, sect. 9.

32 Cyc. Bib. Lit., art. Lord's day.

33 Dialogues on the Lord's Day, pp. 206, 207.

34 A first-day writer, author of the "History, Authority, and Use, of the Sabbath."

35 Examination of the Six Texts, pp. 250, 251.

36 For a more full statement of the case of Ignatius, see the "Testimony of the Fathers," pp. 26-30. The quotation from Ignatius examined in this chapter is there shown, according to the connection, to relate, not to New Testament Christians, but to the ancient prophets.

---

CHAPTER 15

EXAMINATION OF A FAMOUS FALSEHOODE

---

Were the martyrs in Pliny's time and afterward tested by the question whether they had kept Sunday or not? - Argument in the affirmative quoted from Edwards-Its origin-No facts to sustain such an argument prior to the fourth century-A single instance at the opening of that century all that can be claimed in support of the assertion-Sunday not even alluded to in that instance-Testimony of Mosheim relative to the work in which this is found.

---

Certain doctors of divinity have made a special effort to show that the "stated day" of Pliny's epistle is the first day of the week. For this purpose they adduce a fabulous narrative which the more reliable historians of the church have not deemed worthy of record. The argument is this: That in Pliny's time and afterward, that is, from the close of the first century and onward, whenever the Christians were brought before their persecutors for examination, they were asked whether they had kept the Lord's day, this term being used to designate the first day of the week. And hence two facts are asserted to be established: 1. That when Pliny says that the Christians who were examined by him were accustomed to meet on a stated day, that day was undoubtedly the first day of the week. 2. That the observance of the first day of the week was the grand test by which Christians were known to their heathen persecutors. 3. That Lord's day was the name by which the first day of the week was known in the time of Pliny, a few years after the death of John. To prove these points, Dr. Edwards makes the following statement:

"Hence the fact that their persecutors, when they wished to know whether men were Christians, were accustomed to put to them this question, viz., 'Dominicum servasti?' - 'Hast thou kept the Lord's day?' If they had they were Christians. This was the badge of their Christianity, in distinction from Jews and pagans. And if they said they had, and would not recant, they must be put to death. And what, when they continued steadfast, was their answer? 'Christianus sum; intermittere non possum;'-'I am a Christian; I cannot omit it.' It is a badge of my religion, and the man who assumes it must of course keep the Lord's day, because it is the will of his Lord; and should he abandon it, he would be an apostate from his religion."<sup>1</sup>

Mr. Gurney, an English first-day writer of some note, uses the same argument and for the same purpose.<sup>2</sup> The importance attached to this statement, and the prominence given to it by the advocates of first-day sacredness, render it proper that its merits should be examined. Dr. Edwards gives no authority for his statement; but Mr. Gurney traces the story to Dr. Andrews, bishop of Winchester, who claimed to have taken it from the Acta Martyrum, an ancient collection of the acts of the martyrs. It was in the early part of the seventeenth century that Bishop Andrews first brought this forward in his speech in the court of Star Chamber, against Thraske, who was accused before that arbitrary tribunal of maintaining the heretical opinion that Christians are bound to keep the seventh day as the Sabbath of the Lord. The story was first produced, therefore, for the purpose of confounding an observer of the Sabbath when on trial by his enemies for keeping that day. Sir Wm. Domville, an able anti-Sabbatarian writer, thus traces out the matter:

"The bishop, as we have seen, refers to the Acta of the martyrs as justifying his assertion respecting the question, Dominicum servasti? but he does not cite a single instance from them in which that question was put. We are left therefore to hunt out the instances for ourselves, wherever, if anywhere, they are to be found. The most complete collection of the memoirs and legends still extant, relative to the lives and sufferings of the Christian martyrs, is that by Ruinart, entitled, 'Acta primorum Martyrum sincera et selecta.' I have carefully consulted that work, and I take upon myself to affirm that among the questions there stated to have been put to the martyrs in and before the time of Pliny, and for nearly two hundred years afterwards, the question, Dominicum servasti? does not once occur; nor any equivalent question."<sup>3</sup>

This shows at once that no proof can be obtained from this quarter, either that the "stated day" of Pliny was the first day of the week, or that the martyrs of the early church were tested by the question whether they had observed it or not. It also shows the statement to be false that the martyrs of Pliny's time called Sunday the Lord's day and kept it as such. After quoting all the questions put to martyrs in and before Pliny's time, and thus proving that no such question as is alleged, was put to them, Domville says:

"This much may suffice to show that Dominicum servasti? was no question in Pliny's time, as Mr. Gurney intends us to believe it was. I have, however, still other proof of Mr. Gurney's unfair dealing with the subject, but I defer stating it for the present, that I may proceed in the inquiry, What may have been the authority on which bishop Andrews relied when stating that Dominicum servasti? was ever a usual question put by the heathen persecutors? I shall with this view pass over the martyrdoms which intervened between Pliny's time and the fourth century, as they contain nothing to the purpose, and shall come at once to that martyrdom the narrative of which was, I have no doubt, the source from which Bishop Andrews derived his question, Dominicum servasti? 'Hold you the Lord's day?' This martyrdom happened A.D. 304.<sup>4</sup> The sufferers were Saturninus and his four sons, and several other persons. They were taken to Carthage, and brought before the proconsul Amulinus. In the account given of their examinations by him, the phrases, 'CELEBRARE Dominicum,' and 'AGERE Dominicum,' frequently occur, but in no instance is the verb 'servare' used in reference to Dominicum. I mention this chiefly to show that when Bishop Andrews, alluding, as no doubt he does, to the narrative of this martyrdom, says the question was, Dominicum servasti? it is very clear he had not his author at hand, and that in trusting to his memory, he coined a phrase of his own."<sup>5</sup>

Domville quotes at length the conversation between the proconsul and the martyrs, which is quite similar in most respects to Gurney's and Edwards's quotation from Andrews. He then adds:

"The narrative of the martyrdom of Saturninus being the only one which has the appearance of supporting the assertion of Bishop Andrews that, 'Hold you the Lord's day?' was the usual question to the martyrs, what if I should prove that even this narrative affords no support to that assertion? yet nothing is more easy than this proof; for Bishop Andrews has quite mistaken the meaning of the word Dominicum in translating it 'the Lord's day.' It had no such meaning. It was a barbarous word in use among some of the ecclesiastical writers in, and subsequent to, the fourth century, to express sometimes a church, and at other times the Lord's supper, but NEVER the Lord's day.<sup>6</sup> My authorities on this point, are—

"1. Ruinart, who, upon the word Dominicum, in the narrative of the martyrdom of Saturninus, has a note, in which he says it is a word signifying the Lord's supper<sup>7</sup> ('Dominicum vero desinat sacra mysteria'), and he quotes Tertullian and Cyprian in support of this interpretation.

"2. The editors of the Benedictine edition of St. Augustine's works. They state that the word Dominicum has the two meanings of a church and the Lord's supper. For the former they quote among other authorities, a canon of the council of Neo Cesarea. For the latter meaning they quote Cyprian, and refer also to St. Augustine's account of his conference with the Donatists, in which allusion is made to the narrative of the martyrdom of Saturninus.<sup>8</sup>

"3. Gesner, who, in his Latin Thesaurus published in 1749, gives both meanings to the word Dominicum. For that of the Lord's supper he quotes Cyprian; for that of a church he quotes Cyprian and also Hillary."<sup>9</sup>

Domville states other facts of interest bearing on this point, and then pays his respects to Mr. Gurney as follows:

"It thus appearing that the reference made by Bishop Andrews to the 'Acts of Martyrs' completely fails to establish his dictum respecting the question alleged to have been put to the martyrs, and it also appearing that there existed strong and obvious reasons for not placing implicit reliance upon that dictum, what are we to think of Mr. Gurney's regard for truth, when we find he does not scruple to tell his readers that the 'stated day' mentioned in Pliny's letter as that on which the Christians held their religious assemblies, was 'clearly the first day of the week,' is proved by the very question which it was customary for the Roman persecutors to address to the martyrs, Dominicum servasti?- 'Hast thou kept the Lord's day?' For this unqualified assertion, prefixed as it is by the word 'clearly,' in order to make it the more impressive, Mr. Gurney is without any excuse."<sup>10</sup>

The justice of Domville's language cannot be questioned when he characterizes this favorite first-day argument as-

"One of those daring misstatements of facts so frequent in theological writings, and which, from the confident tone so generally assumed by the writers on such occasions, are usually received without examination, and allowed, in consequence, to pass current for truth."<sup>11</sup>

The investigation to which this statement has been subjected, shows,

1. That no such question as, Hast thou kept the Lord's day? is upon record as proposed to the martyrs in the time of Pliny.
2. That no such question was asked to any martyr prior to the commencement of the fourth century.
3. That a single instance of martyrdom in which any question of the kind was asked, is all that can be claimed.
4. That in this one case, which is all that has even the slightest appearance of sustaining the story under examination, a correct translation of the original Latin shows that the question had no relation whatever to the observance of Sunday! All this has been upon the assumption that the Acta Martyrum, in which this story is found, is an authentic work. Let Mosheim testify relative to the character of this work for veracity:

"As to those accounts which have come down to us under the title of Acta Martyrum, or, the Acts of the Martyrs, their authority is certainly for the most part of a very questionable nature; indeed, speaking generally, it might be coming nearer to the truth, perhaps, were we to say that they are entitled to no sort of credit whatever."<sup>12</sup>

Such is the authority of the work from which this story is taken. It is not strange that first-day historians should leave the repetition of it to theologians.

Such are the facts respecting this extraordinary falsehood. They constitute so complete an exposure of this famous historical argument for Sunday as to consign it to the just contempt of all honest men. But this is too valuable an argument to be lightly surrendered, and moreover it is as truthful as are certain other of the historical arguments for Sunday. It will not do to give up this argument because of its dishonesty; for others will have to go with it for possessing the same character.

Since the publication of Domville's elaborate work, James Gilfillan of Scotland has written a large volume entitled, "The Sabbath," which has been extensively circulated both in Europe and in America, and is esteemed a standard work by the American Tract Society and by first-day denominations in general. Gilfillan had read Domville as appears from his statements on pages 10, 142, 143, 616, of his volume. He was therefore acquainted with Domville's exposure of the fraud respecting "Dominicum servasti?" But though he was acquainted with this exposure, he offers not oneword in reply. On the contrary, he repeats the story with as much assurance as though it had not been proved a falsehood. But as Domville had shown up the matter from the Acta Martyrum, it was necessary for Gilfillan to trace it to some other authority, and so he assigns it to Cardinal Baronius. Here are Gilfillan's words:

"From the days of the apostles downwards for many years, the followers of Christ had no enemies more fierce and unrelenting than that people [the Jews], who cursed them in the synagogue, sent out emissaries into all countries to calumniate their Master and them, and were abettors wherever they could, of the martyrdom of men, such as Polycarp, of whom the world was not worthy. Among the reasons of this deadly enmity was the change of the Sabbatic day. The Romans, though they had no objection on this score, punished the Christians for the faithful observance of their day of rest, one of the testing questions put to the martyrs being, Dominicum servasti?- Have you kept the Lord's day? - Baron. An. Eccles., A.D. 303, Num. 35, etc."<sup>13</sup>

Gilfillan having reproduced this statement and assigned as his authority the annalist Baronius, more recent first-day writers take courage and repeat the story after him. Now they are all right, as they think. What if the Acta Martyrum has failed them? Domville ought to have gone to Baronius, who, in their judgment, is the true source of information in this matter. Had he done this, they say, he would have been saved from misleading his readers. But let us ascertain what evil Domville has done in this case. It all consists in the assertion of two things out of the Acta Martyrum.<sup>14</sup>

1. That no such question as "Dominicum servasti?" was addressed to any martyr till the early part of the fourth century, some two hundred years after the time of Pliny.
2. That the question even then did not relate to what is called the Lord's day, but to the Lord's supper.

Now it is a remarkable fact that Gilfillan has virtually admitted the truth of the first of these statements, for the earliest instance which he could find in Baronius is A.D. 303, as his reference plainly shows. It differs only one year from the date assigned in Ruinart's Acta Martyrum, and relates to the very case which Domville has quoted from that work! Domville's first and most important statement is therefore vindicated by Gilfillan himself, though he has not the frankness to say this in so many words.

Domville's second point is that Dominicum, when used as a noun, as in the present case, signifies either a church or the Lord's supper, but never signifies Lord's day. He establishes the fact by incontestable evidence. Gilfillan was acquainted with all this. He could not answer Domville, and yet he was not willing to abandon the falsehood which Domville had exposed. So he turns from the Acta Martyrum in which the compiler expressly defines the word to mean precisely what Domville asserts, and brings forward the great Romish annalist, Cardinal Baronius. Now, say our first-day friends, we are to have the truth from a high authority. Gilfillan has found in Baronius an express statement that the martyrs were tested by the question, "Have you kept the Lord's day?" No matter then as to the Acta Martyrum from which Bishop Andrews first produced this story. That, indeed, has failed us, but we have in its stead the weighty testimony of the great Baronius. To be sure he fixes this test no earlier than the fourth century, which renders it of no avail as proof that Pliny's stated day was Sunday; but it is worth much to have Baronius bear witness that certain martyrs in the fourth century were put to death because they observed the Sunday-Lord's day.

But these exultant thoughts are vain. I must state a grave fact in plain language: Gilfillan has deliberately falsified the testimony of Baronius! That historian records at length the martyrdom of Saturninus and his company in northern Africa in A.D. 303. It is the very story which Domville has cited from the Acta Martyrum, and Baronius repeatedly indicates that he himself copied it from that work. He gives the various questions propounded by the proconsul, and the several answers which were returned by each of the martyrs. I copy from Baronius the most important of these. They were arrested while they were celebrating the Lord's sacrament according to custom.<sup>15</sup> The following is the charge on which they were arrested: They had celebrated the Collectam Dominicam against the command of the emperors.<sup>16</sup> The proconsul asked the first whether he had celebrated the Collectam, and he replied that he was a Christian, and had done this.<sup>17</sup> Another says, "I have not only been in the Collecta, but I have celebrated the Dominicum with the brethren because I am a Christian."<sup>18</sup> Another says we have celebrated the Dominicum, because the Dominicum cannot be neglected.<sup>19</sup> Another said that the Collecta was made (or observed) at his house.<sup>20</sup> The proconsul questioning again one of those already examined, received this answer: "The Dominicum cannot be disregarded, the law so commands."<sup>21</sup> When one was asked whether the Collecta was made (or observed) at his house, he answered, "In my house we have celebrated the Dominicum." He added, "Without the Dominicum we cannot be," or live.<sup>22</sup> To another, the proconsul said that he did not wish to know whether he was a Christian, but whether he participated in the Collecta. His reply was: "As if one could be a Christian without the Dominicum, or as if the Dominicum can be celebrated without the Christian."<sup>23</sup> And he said further to the proconsul: "We have observed the Collecta most sacredly; we have always convened in the Dominicum for reading the Lord's word."<sup>24</sup> Another said: "I have been in [literally, have made] the Collecta with my brethren, I have celebrated the Dominicum."<sup>25</sup> After him another proclaimed the Dominicum to be the hope and safety of the Christian, and when tortured as the others, he exclaimed, "I have celebrated the Dominicum with a devoted heart, and with my brethren I have made the collecta because I am a Christian."<sup>26</sup> When the proconsul again asked one of these whether he had conducted the Dominicum, he replied that he had because Christ was his Saviour.<sup>27</sup>

I have thus given the substance of this famous examination, and have set before the reader the references therein made to the Dominicum. It is to be observed that Collecta is used as another name for Dominicum. Now does Baronius use either of these words to signify Lord's day? It so happens that he has defined these words with direct reference to this very case no less than seven times. Now let us read these seven definitions:

When Baronius records the first question addressed to these martyrs, he there defines these words as follows: "By the words Collectam, Collectionem, and Dominicum, the author always understands the sacrifice of the Mass."<sup>28</sup> After recording the words of that martyr who said that the law commanded the observance of the Dominicum, Baronius defines his statement thus: "Evidently the Christian law concerning the Dominicum, no doubt about celebrating the sacrifice."<sup>29</sup> Baronius, by the Romish words sacrifice and Mass refers to the celebration of the Lord's supper by these martyrs. At the conclusion of the examination, he again defines the celebration of the Dominicum. He says: "It has been shown above in relating these things that the Christians were moved, even in the time of severe persecution, to celebrate the Dominicum. Evidently, as we have declared elsewhere in many places, it was a sacrifice without bloodshed, and of divine appointment."<sup>30</sup> He presently defines Dominicum again, saying, "Though it is a fact that the same expression was employed at times with reference to the temple of God, yet since all the churches upon the earth have united in this matter, and from other things related above, it has been sufficiently shown concerning the celebration of the Dominicum, that only the sacrifice of the Mass can be understood."<sup>31</sup> Observe this last statement. He says though the word has been employed to designate the temple of the Lord, yet in the things here related it can only signify the sacrifice of the Mass. These testimonies are exceedingly explicit. But Baronius has not yet finished. In the index to Tome 3, he explains these words again with direct reference to this very martyrdom. Thus under Collecta is this statement: "The Collecta, the Dominicum, the Mass, the same [A.D.] 303, xxxix."<sup>32</sup> Under Missa: "The Mass is the same as the Collecta, or Dominicum [A.D.], 303, xxxix."<sup>33</sup> Under Dominicum: "To celebrate the Dominicum is the same as to conduct the Mass [A.D.], 303. xxxix.; xlix.; li."<sup>34</sup>

It is not possible to mistake the meaning of Baronius. He says that Dominicum signifies the Mass! The celebration of the supper by these martyrs was doubtless very different from the pompous ceremony which the church of Rome now observes under the name of Mass. But it was the sacrament of the Lord's supper, concerning which they were tested, and for observing which they were put to a cruel death. The word Dominicum signifies "the sacred mysteries," as Ruinart defines it; and Baronius, in seven times affirming this definition, though acknowledging that it has sometimes been used to signify temple of God, plainly declares that in this record, it can have no other meaning than that service which the Romanists call the sacrifice of the Mass. Gilfillan had read all this, yet he dares to quote Baronius as saying that these martyrs were tested by the question, "Have you kept Lord's day?" He could not but know that he was writing a direct falsehood; but he thought the honor of God, and the advancement of the cause of truth, demanded this act at his hands.

Before Gilfillan wrote his work, Domville had called attention to the fact that the sentence, "Dominicum servasti?" does not occur in the Acta Martyrum, a different verb being used every time. But this is the popular form of this question, and must not be given up. So Gilfillan declares that Baronius uses it in his record of the martyrdoms in A.D. 303. But we have cited the different forms of question recorded by Baronius, and find them to be precisely the same with those of the Acta Martyrum. "Dominicum servasti?" does not occur in that historian, and Gilfillan, in stating that it does, is guilty of untruth. This, however, is comparatively unimportant. But for asserting that Baronius speaks of Lord's day under the name of Dominicum, Gilfillan stands convicted of inexcusable falsehood in matters of serious importance.

---

1 Sabbath Manual, p. 120.

2 See his "History, Authority, and Use, of the Sabbath," chap. iv. pp. 87, 88.

3 Examination of the Six Texts, pp. 258-261.

4 The date in Baronius is A.D. 303.

5 Examination of the Six Texts, pp. 263-265.

6 Note by Domville. "Dominicum is not, as may at first be supposed, and adjective, of which diem [day] is the understood substantive. It is itself a substantive, neuter as appears from the passage, 'Quia non potest intermittere Dominicum; in the narrative respecting Saturninus. The Latin adjective Dominicus, when intended to refer to the Lord's day, is never, I believe, used without its substantive dies [day] being expressed. In all the narratives contained in Ruinart's Acta Martyrum, I find but two instances of mention being made of the Lord's day, and in both these instances the substantive dies [day] is expressed."

7 This testimony is certainly decisive. It is the interpretation of the compiler of the Acta Martyrum, himself, and is given with direct reference to the particular instance under discussion. An independent confirmation of Domville's authorities, may be found in Lucius's Eccl. Hist., cent. 4, chap.vi: "Fit mentio aliquoties locorum istorum in quibus convenerint Christiani, in historia persecutionis sub Diocletiano & Maximino. Et apparet, ante Constantinum etiam, locos eos fuisse mediocriter exstructos atque exornatos: quos seu Tempia appellarunt seu Dominica; ut apud Eusebium (li.9.c.10) & Ruffinum (li. 1,c.3)." It is certain that Dominicum is here used as designating a place of divine worship. Dr. Twisse in his "Morality of the Fourth Commandment," p. 122, says: "The ancient fathers, both Greek and Latin, called temples by the name of dominica and kuriaka."

8 Domville cites St. Augustine's Works, vol. v. pp. 116, 117, Antwerp ed. A.D. 1700.

9 Examination of the Six Texts, pp. 267,268.

10 Id. pp. 270, 271.

11 Id. pp. 272, 273.

12 Historical Commentaries, cent. 1, sect. xxxii. Sabbath History.

13 The Sabbath, by James Gilfillan, p. vii.

14 To break the force of Domville's statement in which he exposes the story originally told by Bishop Andrews as coming from the Acta Martyrum, it is said that Domville used Ruinart's Acta Martyrum, and that Ruinart was not born till thirty-one years after Bishop Andrews' death, so that Domville did not go to the same book that was used by the bishop, and therefore failed to find what he found. Those who raise this point betray their ignorance or expose their dishonesty. The Acta Martyrum is a collection of the memoirs of the martyrs, written by their friends from age to age. Ruinart did not write a new work, but simply edited "the most valued collection" of these memoirs that has ever appeared. See McClintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, vol. i. pp. 56,57. Domville used Ruinart's edition, because, as he expresses it, it is "the most complete collection of the memoirs and legends still extant, relative to the lives and sufferings of the Christian martyrs." Domville's use of Ruinart was, therefore, in the highest degree just and right.

15 Ibique celebrantes ex more Dominica Sacramenta.-Baronius, Tome 3, p. 348, A.D. 303, No. xxxvi. Lucae, A.D. 1738.

16 Qui contra edictum Imperatorum, & Caesarum Collectam Dominicam celebrassent.-Baronius, Tome 3, p. 348, A.D. 303, No. xxxix.

17 Utrum Collectam fecisset. Qui cum se Christianum, & in Collecta fuisse profiteretur.-Id.Ib.

18 Nam & in Collecta fui, & Dominicum cum fratribus celebravi, quia Christiana sum.-Id. No. xliii. p. 344. This was spoken by a female martyr.

19 Dominicum celebravimus. Proconsul ait: Quare? respondit: Quia non potest intermittere Dominicum.-Id. No. xlii. p. 350.

20 In cujus domo Collecta facta fuit.-Id. No. xlvii. p. 350.

21 Intermitti Dominicum non potest, ait. Lex sic jubet.-Id. No. xlvii. p. 350.

22 In tua, inquit proconsul, domo Collectae factae sunt, contra praecepta Imperatorum? Cui Emeritus sancto Spiritu inundatus:
In domo mea, inquit, egimus Dominicum. . . . Quoniam sine Dominico esse non possumus.-Id. No. xlix. pp. 350, 351.

23 Non quaero an Christianus sis sed an Collectam feceris. . . .Quasi Christianus sine Dominico esse possit.-Id. No. li. p. 351.

24 Collectam, inquit, religiosissime celebravimus; ad scripturas Dominicas legendas in Dominicum convenimus semper.-Id. Ib. p. 351.

25 Cum fratribus feci Collectam, Dominicum celebravi.-Id. No. lii. p. 351.

26 Post quem junior Felix, spem salutemque Christianorum Dominicum esse proclamans. . . Ego, inquit, devota menta celebravi Domincum; colletam cum fratribus feci, quia Christianus sum.-Id. liii.

27 Utrum egeris dominicum. Cui respondit Saturninus: Egi Dominicum, quia Salvator est christus.-Id. Ib. p. 352.

28 Per Collectam namque, and Ciollctionem, and Dominicum, intellegit semper auctor sacrificium Missae.-Baronius, Tome 3, A.D. 303, No. xxxix. p. 348.

29 Scilicet lex Christiana de Dominico, nempe sacrificio celebrando.-Id. No. xlvii. p. 350.

30 De celebratione Dominici; quod autem superuis in recitatis actis sit demonstratum, flagrantis persecutionis etiam tempore sollicitos fuisse Christianos celebrare Dominicum, nempe (ut alias pluribus declararimus) ipsum sacrosanctum sacrificium incruentum.-Id. No. lxxxiii. p. 358.

31 Quod etsi sciamus eamdem vocem pro Dei templo interdum accipi solitam; tamen quod ecclesiae omnes solo aequitatae fuissent; ex aliis superius recitatis de celebratione Dominici, nonisi sacrificium missae posse intelligo, satis est declaratum.-Id. lxxxiv. p. 359.

32 Collecta, Dominicum, Missa, idem, 303, xxxix. p. 677.

33 Missa idem quod Collecta, sive Dominicum, 303, xxxix. p. 702.

34 Dominicum celebrare idem quod Missas agere, 303, xxxix.; xlix.; li. p. 684.

CHAPTER 16

ORIGIN OF FIRST-DAY OBSERVANCE

---

Sunday a heathen festival from remote antiquity - Origin of the name - Reasons which induced the leaders of the church to adopt this festival - It was the day generally observed by the Gentiles in the first centuries of the Christian era - To have taken a different day would have exceedingly inconvenient - They hoped to facilitate the conversion of the Gentiles by keeping the same day that they observed - Three voluntary weekly festivals in the church in memory of the Redeemer - Sunday soon elevated above the other two - Justin Martyr - Sunday observance first found in the church of Rome - Irenaeus - First act of papal usurpation was on behalf of Sunday - Tertullian - Earliest trace of abstinence from labor on Sunday - General statement of facts - The Roman church made its first great attack upon the Sabbath by turning it into a fast.

---

The festival of Sunday is more ancient than the Christian religion, its origin being lost in remote antiquity. It did not originate, however, from any divine command nor from piety toward God: on the contrary, it was set apart as a sacred day by the heathen world in honor of their chief god, the sun. It is from this fact that the first day of the week has obtained the name of Sunday, a name by which it is known in many languages. Webster thus defines the word:

"Sunday; so called because this day was anciently dedicated to the sun or to its worship. The first day of the week; the Christian Sabbath; a day consecrated to rest from secular employments, and to religious worship; the Lord's day."

And Worcester, in his large dictionary, uses similar language:

"Sunday; so named because anciently dedicated to the sun or to its worship. The first day of the week; the Christian Sabbath, consecrated to rest from labor and to religious worship; the Lord's day."

These lexicographers call Sunday the Christian Sabbath, etc., because in the general theological literature of our language, it is thus designated, though never thus in the Bible. Lexicographers do not undertake to settle theological questions, but simply to define terms as currently used in a particular language. Though all the other days of the week have heathen names, Sunday alone was a conspicuous heathen festival in the days of the early church. The North British Review, in a labored attempt to justify the observance of Sunday by the Christian world, styles that day, "THE WILD SOLAR HOLIDAY [i.e., festival in honor of the sun] OF ALL PAGAN TIMES."<sup>1</sup>

Verstegan says:

"The most ancient Germans being pagans, and having appropriated their first day of the week to the peculiar adoration of the sun, whereof that day doth yet in our English tongue retain the name of Sunday, and appropriated the next day unto it unto the especial adoration of the moon, whereof it yet retaineth with us, the name of Monday; they ordained the next day to these most heavenly planets to the particular adoration of their great reputed god, Tuisco, whereof we do yet retain in our language the name of Tuesday."<sup>2</sup>

The same author thus speaks concerning the idols of our Saxon ancestors:

"Of these, though they had many, yet seven among the rest they especially appropriated unto the seven days of the week. . . . Unto the day dedicated unto the especial adoration of the idol of the sun, they gave the name of Sunday, as much as to say the sun's day or the day of the sun. This idol was placed in a temple, and there adored and sacrificed unto, for that they believed that the sun in the firmament did with or in this idol correspond and co-operate."<sup>3</sup>

Jennings makes this adoration of the sun more ancient than the deliverance of Israel from Egypt. For, in speaking of the time of that deliverance, he speaks of the Gentiles as,

"The idolatrous nations who in honor to their chief god, the sun, began their day at his rising."<sup>4</sup>

He represents them also as setting apart Sunday in honor of the same object of adoration:

"The day which the heathens in general consecrated to the worship and honor of their chief god, the sun, which, according to our computation, was the first day of the week."<sup>5</sup>

The North British Review thus defends the introduction of this ancient heathen festival into the Christian church:

"That very day was the Sunday of their heathen neighbors and respective countrymen; and patriotism gladly united with expediency in making it at once their Lord's day and their Sabbath. . . . If the authority of the church is to be ignored altogether by Protestants, there is no matter; because opportunity and common expediency are surely argument enough for so ceremonial a change as the mere day of the week for the observance of the rest and holy convocation of the Jewish Sabbath. That primitive church, in fact, was shut up to the adoption of the Sunday, until it became established and supreme, when it was too late to make another alteration; and it was no irreverent nor undelightful thing to adopt it, inasmuch as the first day of the week was their own high day at any rate; so that their compliance and civility were rewarded by the redoubled sanctity of their quiet festival."<sup>6</sup>

It would seem that something more potent than "patriotism" and "expediency" would be requisite to transform this heathen festival into the Christian Sabbath, or even to justify its introduction into the Christian church. A further statement of the reasons which prompted its introduction, and a brief notice of the earlier steps toward transforming it into a Christian institution, will occupy the remainder of this chapter. Chafie, a clergyman of the English Church, in 1652, published a work in vindication of first-day observance, entitled, "The Seventh-day Sabbath." After showing the general observance of Sunday by the heathen world in the early ages of the church, Chafie thus states the reasons which forbid the Christians attempting to keep any other day:

"1. Because of the contempt, scorn, and derision they thereby should be had in, among all the Gentiles with whom they lived. . . . How grievous would be their taunts and reproaches against the poor Christians living with them and under their power for their new set sacred day, had the Christians chosen any other than the Sunday . . . 2. Most Christians then were either servants or of the poorer sort of people; and the Gentiles, most probably, would not give their servants liberty to cease from working on any other set day constantly, except on their Sunday. . . . 3. Because had they assayed such a change it would have been but labor in vain; . . . they could never have brought it to pass."<sup>7</sup>

Thus it is seen that at the time when the early church began to apostatize from God and to foster in its bosom human ordinances, the heathen world - as they had long done - very generally observed the first day of the week in honor of the sun. Many of the early fathers of the church had been heathen philosophers. Unfortunately they brought with them into the church many of their old notions and principles. Particularly did it occur to them that by uniting with the heathen in the day of weekly celebration they should greatly facilitate their conversion. The reasons which induced the church to adopt the ancient festival of the heathen as something made ready to hand, are thus stated by Morer:-

"It is not to be denied but we borrow the name of this day from the ancient Greeks and Romans, and we allow that the old Egyptians worshiped the sun, and as a standing memorial of their veneration, dedicated this day to him. And we find by the influence of their examples, other nations, and among them the Jews themselves, doing him homage;<sup>8</sup> yet these abuses did not hinder the fathers of the Christian church simply to repeal, or altogether lay by, the day or its name, but only to sanctify and improve both, as they did also the pagan temples polluted before with idolatrous services, and other instances wherein those good men were always tender to work any other change than what was evidently necessary, and in such things as were plainly inconsistent with the Christian religion; so that Sunday being the day on which the Gentiles solemnly adored that planet, and called it Sunday, partly from its influence on that day especially, and partly in respect to its divine body (as they conceived it), the Christians thought fit to keep the same day and the same name of it, that they might not appear causelessly peevish, and by that means hinder the conversion of the Gentiles, and bring a greater prejudice than might be otherwise taken against the gospel."<sup>9</sup>

In the time of Justin Martyr, Sunday was a weekly festival, widely celebrated by the heathen in honor of their god, the sun. And so, in presenting to the heathen emperor of Rome an "Apology" for his brethren, Justin takes care to tell him thrice that the Christians held their assemblies on this day of general observance.<sup>10</sup> Sunday therefore makes its first appearance in the Christian church as an institution identical in time with the weekly festival of the heathen, and Justin, who first mentions this festival, had been a heathen philosopher. Sixty years later, Tertullian acknowledges that it was not without an appearance of truth that men declared the sun to be the god of the Christians. But he answered that though they worshiped toward the east like the heathen, and devoted Sunday to rejoicing, it was for a reason far different from sun-worship.<sup>11</sup> And on another occasion, in defending his brethren from the charge of sun-worship, he acknowledges that these acts, prayer toward the east, and making Sunday a day of festivity, did give men a chance to think the sun was the God of the Christians.<sup>12</sup> Tertullian is therefore a witness to the fact that Sunday was a heathen festival when it obtained a foothold in the Christian church, and that the Christians, in consequence of observing it, were taunted with being sun-worshippers. It is remarkable that in his replies he never claims for their observance any divine precept or apostolic example. His principal point was that they had as good a right to do it as the heathen had. One hundred and twenty one years after Tertullian, Constantine, while yet a heathen, put forth his famous edict in behalf of the heathen festival of the sun, which day he pronounced "venerable." And this heathen law caused the day to be observed everywhere throughout the Roman Empire, and firmly established it both in Church and State. It is certain, therefore, that at the time of its entrance into the Christian church, Sunday was an ancient weekly festival of the heathen world.

That this heathen festival was upon the day of Christ's resurrection doubtless powerfully contributed to aid "patriotism" and "expediency" in transforming it into the Lord's day or Christian Sabbath. For, with pious motives, as we may reasonably conclude, the professed people of God early paid a voluntary regard to several days, memorable in the history of the Redeemer. Mosheim, whose testimony in behalf of Sunday has been presented already, uses the following language relative to the crucifixion day:

"It is also probable that Friday, the day of Christ's crucifixion, was early distinguished by particular honors from the other days of the week."<sup>13</sup>

And of the second century, he says:

"Many also observed the fourth day of the week, on which Christ was betrayed; and the sixth, which was the day of his crucifixion."<sup>14</sup>

Dr. Peter Heylyn says of those who chose Sunday:

"Because our Saviour rose that day from amongst the dead, so chose they Friday for another, by reason of our saviour's passion; and Wednesday on the which he had been betrayed: the Saturday, or ancient Sabbath, being meanwhile retained in the eastern churches."<sup>15</sup>

Of the comparative sacredness of these three voluntary festivals, the same writer testifies:

"If we consider either the preaching of the word, the ministration of the sacraments, or the public prayers: the Sunday in the eastern churches had no great prerogative above other days, especially above the Wednesday and the Friday, save that the meetings were more solemn, and the concourse of people greater than at other times, as is most likely."<sup>16</sup>

And besides these three weekly festivals, there were also two annual festivals of great sacredness. These were the Passover and the Pentecost. And it is worthy of special notice that although the Sunday festival can be traced no higher in the church than Justin Martyr, A.D. 140, the Passover can be traced to a man who claimed to have received it from the apostles. See chapter thirteen. Among these festivals, considered simply as voluntary memorials of the Redeemer, Sunday had very little pre-eminence. For it is well stated by Heylyn:-

"Take which you will, either the fathers or the moderns, and we shall find no Lord's day instituted by any apostolical mandate; no Sabbath set on foot by them upon the first day of the week."<sup>17</sup>

Domville bears the following testimony, which is worthy of lasting remembrance:

"Not any ecclesiastical writer of the first three centuries attributed the origin of Sunday observance either to Christ or to his apostles."<sup>18</sup>

"Patriotism" and "expediency," however, ere long elevated immeasurably above its fellows that one of these voluntary festivals which corresponded to "the wild solar holiday" of the heathen world, making that day at last "the Lord's day" of the Christian church. The earliest testimony in behalf of first-day observance that has any claim to be regarded as genuine is that of Justin Martyr, written about A.D. 140. Before his conversion, he was a heathen philosopher. The time, place, and occasion of his first Apology or Defense of the Christians, addressed to the Roman Emperor, is thus stated by an eminent Roman Catholic historian. He says that Justin Martyr

"Was at Rome when the persecution that was raised under the reign of Antoninus Pius, the successor of Adrian, began to break forth, where he composed an excellent apology in behalf of the Christians."<sup>19</sup>

Of the works ascribed to Justin Martyr, Milner says:

"Like many of the ancient fathers he appears to us under the greatest disadvantage. Works really his have been lost; and others have been ascribed to him, part of which are not his; and the rest, at least, of ambiguous authority."<sup>20</sup>

If the writings ascribed to him are genuine, there is little propriety in the use made of his name by the advocates of the first-day Sabbath. He taught the abrogation of the Sabbatic institution; and there is no intimation in his words that the Sunday festival which he mentions was other than a voluntary observance. Thus he addresses the emperor of Rome:

"And upon the day called Sunday, all that live either in city or country meet together at the same place, where the writings of the apostles and prophets are read, as much as time will give leave; when the reader has done, the bishop makes a sermon, wherein he instructs the people, and animates them to the practice of such lovely precepts: at the conclusion of this discourse, we all rise up together and pray; and prayers being over, as I now said, there is bread and wine and water offered, and the bishop, as before, sends up prayers and thanksgivings, with all the fervency he is able, and the people conclude all with the joyful acclamation of Amen. Then the consecrated elements are distributed to, and partaken of, by all that are present, and sent to the absent by the hands of the deacons. But the wealthy and the willing, for every one is at liberty, contribute as they think fitting; and this collection is deposited with the bishop, and out of this he relieves the orphan and the widow, and such as are reduced to want by sickness or any other cause, and such as are in bonds, and strangers that come from far; and, in a word, he is the guardian and almoner to all the indigent. Upon Sunday we all assemble, that being the first day in which God set himself to work upon the dark void, in order to make the world, and in which Jesus Christ our Saviour rose again from the dead; for the day before Saturday he was crucified, and the day after, which is Sunday, he appeared unto his apostles and disciples, and taught them what I have now proposed to your consideration."<sup>21</sup>

This passage, if genuine, furnishes the earliest reference to the observance of Sunday as a religious festival in the Christian church. It should be remembered that this language was written at Rome, and addressed directly to the emperor. It shows therefore what was the practice of the church in that city and vicinity, but does not determine how extensive this observance was. It contains strong incidental proof that apostasy had made progress at Rome; the institution of the Lord's supper being changed in part already to a human ordinance; water being now as essential to the Lord's supper as the wine or the bread. And what is still more dangerous as perverting the institution of Christ, the consecrated elements were sent to the absent, a step which speedily resulted in their becoming objects of superstitious veneration, and finally of worship. Justin tells the emperor that Christ thus ordained; but such a statement is a grave departure from the truth of the New Testament.

This statement of reasons for Sunday observance is particularly worthy of attention. He tells the emperor that they assembled upon the day called Sunday. This was equivalent to saying to him, We observe the day on which our fellow-citizens offer their adoration to the sun. Here both "patriotism" and "expediency" discover themselves in the words of Justin, which were addressed to a persecuting emperor in behalf of the Christians. But as if conscious that the observance of a heathen festival as the day of Christian worship was not consistent with their profession as worshipers of the Most High, Justin bethinks himself for reasons in defense of this observance. He assigns no divine precept nor apostolic example for this festival. For his reference to what Christ taught his disciples, as appears from the connection, was to the general system of the Christian religion, and not to the observance of Sunday. If it be said that Justin might have learned from tradition what is not to be found in the New Testament relative to Sunday observance, and that after all Sunday may be a divinely-appointed festival, it is sufficient to answer, 1. That this plea would show only tradition in favor of the Sunday festival. 2. That Justin Martyr is a very unsafe guide; his testimony relative to the Lord's supper differs from that of the New Testament. 3. That the American Tract Society, in a work which it publishes against Romanism, bears the following testimony relative to the point before us:

"Justin Martyr appears indeed peculiarly unfitted to lay claim to authority. It is notorious that he supposed a pillar erected on the island of the Tiber to Semo Sanchus, an old Sabine deity, to be a monument erected by the Roman people in honor of the impostor Simon Magus. Were so gross a mistake to be made by a modern writer in relating a historical fact, exposure would immediately take place, and his testimony would thenceforward be suspected. And assuredly the same measure should be meted to Justin Martyr, who so egregiously errs in reference to a fact alluded to by Livy the historian."<sup>22</sup>

Justin assigns the following reasons in support of Sunday observance: "That being the first day in which God set himself to work upon the dark void in order to make the world, and in which Jesus Christ our Saviour rose again from the dead." Bishop Jeremy Taylor most fittingly replies to this:

"The first of these looks more like an excuse than a just reason; for if anything of the creation were made the cause of a Sabbath, it ought to be the end, not the beginning; it ought to be the rest, not the first part of the work; it ought to be that which God assigned, not [that] which man should take by way of after justification."<sup>23</sup>

It is to be observed, therefore, that the first trace of Sunday as a Christian festival is found in the church of Rome. Soon after this time, and thenceforward, we shall find "the bishop" of that church making vigorous efforts to suppress the Sabbath of the Lord, and to elevate in its stead the festival of Sunday.

It is proper to note the fact also that Justin was a decided opponent of the ancient Sabbath. In his "Dialogue with Trypho the Jew" he thus addressed him:

"This new law teaches you to observe a perpetual Sabbath; and you, when you have spent one day in idleness, think you have discharged the duties of religion. . . . If any one is guilty of adultery, let him repent, then he hath kept the true and delightful Sabbath unto God. . . . For we really should observe that circumcision which is in the flesh, and the Sabbath, and all the feasts, if we had not known the reason why they were imposed upon you, namely, upon the account of your iniquities. . . . It was because of your iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers, that God appointed you to observe the Sabbath. . . . You see that the heavens are not idle, nor do they observe the Sabbath. Continue as ye were born. For if before Abraham there was no need of circumcision, nor of the sabbaths, nor of feasts, nor of offerings before Moses; so now in like manner there is no need of them, since Jesus Christ, the Son of God, was by the determinate counsel of God, born of a virgin of the seed of Abraham without sin."<sup>24</sup>

This reasoning of Justin deserves no reply. It shows, however, the unfairness of Dr. Edwards, who quotes Justin Martyr as a witness for the change of the Sabbath;<sup>25</sup> whereas Justin held that God made the Sabbath on account of the wickedness of the Jews, and that he totally abrogated it in consequence of the first advent of Christ; the Sunday festival of the heathen being evidently adopted by the church at Rome from motives of "expediency" and perhaps of "patriotism." The testimony of Justin, if genuine, is peculiarly valuable in one respect. It shows that as late as A.D. 140 the first day of the week had acquired no title of sacredness; for Justin several times mentions the day: thrice as "the day called Sunday;" and twice as "the eighth day;" and by other terms also, but never by any sacred name.<sup>26</sup>

The next important witness in behalf of first-day sacredness is thus presented by Dr. Edwards:

"Hence Irenaeus, bishop of Lyons, a disciple of Polycarp, who had been the companion of the apostles, A.D. 167, says that the Lord's day was the Christian Sabbath. His words are, 'On the Lord's day every one of us Christians keeps the Sabbath, meditating on the law and rejoicing in the works of God.' "<sup>27</sup>

This testimony is highly valued by first-day writers, and is often and prominently set forth in their publications. Sir Wm. Domville, whose elaborate treatise on the Sabbath has been several times quoted, states the following important fact relative to this quotation:

"I have carefully searched through all the extant works of Irenaeus and can with certainty state that no such passage, or any one at all resembling it, is there to be found. The edition I consulted was that by Massuet (Paris, 1710); but to assure myself still further, I have since looked to the editions by Erasmus (Paris, 1563), and Grabe (Oxford, 1702), and in neither do I find the passage in question."<sup>28</sup>

It is a remarkable fact that those who quote this as the language of Irenaeus, if they give any reference, cite their readers to Dwight's Theology instead of referring them to the place in the works of Irenaeus where it is to be found. It was Dr. Dwight who first enriched the theological world with this invaluable quotation. Where, then, did Dwight obtain this testimony which has so many times been given as that of Irenaeus? On this point Domville remarks:

"He had the misfortune to be afflicted with a disease in his eyes from the early age of twenty-three, a calamity (says his biographer) by which he was deprived of the capacity for reading and study. . . . The knowledge which he gained from books after the period above mentioned [by which the editor must mean his age of twenty-three] was almost exclusively at second hand, by the aid of others."<sup>29</sup>

Domville states another fact which gives us unquestionably the origin of this quotation:

"But although not to be found in Irenaeus, there are in the writings ascribed to another father, namely, in the interpolated epistle of Ignatius to the Magnesians, and in one of its interpolated passages, expressions so clearly resembling those of Dr. Dwight's quotation as to leave no doubt of the source from which he quoted."<sup>30</sup>

Such, then, is the end of this famous testimony of Irenaeus, who had it from Polycarp, who had it from the apostles! It was furnished the world by a man whose eyesight was impaired; who in consequence of this infirmity took at second hand an interpolated passage from an epistle falsely ascribed to Ignatius, and published it to the world as the genuine testimony of Irenaeus. Loss of eyesight, as we may charitably believe, led Dr. Dwight into the serious error which he has committed; but by the publication of this spurious testimony, which seemed to come in a direct line from the apostles, he has rendered multitudes as incapable of reading aright the fourth commandment, as he, by loss of natural eyesight, was of reading Irenaeus for himself. This case admirably illustrates tradition as a religious guide; it is the blind leading the blind until both fall into the ditch.

Nor is this all that should be said in the case of Irenaeus. In all his writings there is no instance in which he calls Sunday the Lord's day! And what is also very remarkable, there is no sentence extant written by him in which he even mentions the first day of the week!<sup>31</sup> It appears, however, from several statements in ancient writers, that he did mention the day, though no sentence of his in which it is mentioned is in existence. He held that the Sabbath was a typical institution, which pointed to the seventh thousand years as the great day of rest to the church;<sup>32</sup> he said that Abraham was "without observance of Sabbaths;"<sup>33</sup> and yet he makes the origin of the Sabbath to be the sanctification of the seventh day.<sup>34</sup> But he expressly asserts the perpetuity and authority of the ten commandments, declaring that they are identical with the law of nature implanted from the beginning in mankind, that they remain permanently with us, and that if any one does not observe them he has no salvation."<sup>35</sup>

It is a remarkable fact that the first instance upon record in which the bishop of Rome attempted to rule the Christian church was by AN EDICT IN BEHALF OF SUNDAY. It had been the custom of all the churches to celebrate the passover, but with this difference: that while the eastern churches observed it upon the fourteenth day of the first month, no matter what day of the week this might be, the western churches kept it upon the Sunday following that day; or rather, upon the Sunday following Good Friday. Victor, bishop of Rome, in the year 196,<sup>36</sup> took upon him to impose the Roman custom upon all the churches; that is, to compel them to observe the passover upon Sunday. "This bold attempt," says Bower, "we may call the first essay of papal usurpation."<sup>37</sup> And Dowling terms it the "earliest instance of Romish assumption."<sup>38</sup> The churches of Asia Minor informed Victor that they could not comply with his lordly mandate. Then, says Bower:

"Upon the receipt of this letter, Victor, giving the reins to an impotent and ungovernable passion, published bitter invectives against all the churches of Asia, declared them cut off from his communion, sent letters of excommunication to their respective bishops; and, at the same time, in order to have them cut off from the communion of the whole church, wrote to the other bishops, exhorting them to follow his example, and forbear communicating with their refractory brethren of Asia."<sup>39</sup>

The historian informs us that "not one followed his example or advice; not one paid any sort of regard to his letters, or showed the least inclination to second him in such a rash and uncharitable attempt." He further says:

"Victor being thus baffled in his attempt, his successors took care not to revive the controversy; so that the Asiatics peaceably followed their ancient practice till the Council of Nice, which out of complaisance to Constantine the Great, ordered the solemnity of Easter to be kept everywhere on the same day, after the custom of Rome."<sup>40</sup>

The victory was not obtained for Sunday in this struggle, as Heylyn testifies,

"Till the great Council of Nice [A.D. 325] backed by the authority of as great an emperor [Constantine] settled it better than before; none but some scattered schismatics, now and then appearing, that durst oppose the resolution of that famous synod."<sup>41</sup>

Constantine, by whose powerful influence the Council of Nice was induced to decide this question in favor of the Roman bishop that is, to fix the passover upon Sunday, urged the following strong reason for the measure:

"Let us then have nothing in common with the most hostile rabble of the Jews."<sup>42</sup>

This sentence is worthy of notice. A determination to have nothing in common with the Jews had very much to do with the suppression of the Sabbath in the Christian church. Those who rejected the Sabbath of the Lord and chose in its stead the more popular and more convenient Sunday festival of the heathen, were so infatuated with the idea of having nothing in common with the Jews, that they never even questioned the propriety of a festival in common with the heathen.

This festival was not weekly, but annual; but the removal of it from the fourteenth of the first month to the Sunday following Good Friday was the first legislation attempted in honor of Sunday as a Christian festival; and as Heylyn quaintly expresses it, "The Lord's day found it no small matter to obtain the victory."<sup>43</sup> In a brief period after the Council of Nice, by the laws of Theodosius, capital punishment was inflicted upon those who should celebrate the feast of the passover upon any other day than Sunday.<sup>44</sup> The Britons of Wales were long able to maintain their ground against this favorite project of the Roman church, and as late as the sixth century "obstinately resisted the imperious mandates of the Roman pontiffs."<sup>45</sup>

Four years after the commencement of the struggle just narrated, bring us to the testimony of Tertullian, the oldest of the Latin fathers, who wrote about A.D. 200. Dr. Clarke tells us that the fathers "blow hot and cold." Tertullian is a fair example of this. He places the origin of the Sabbath at the creation, but elsewhere says that the patriarchs did not keep it. He says that Joshua broke the Sabbath at Jericho, and afterward shows that he did not break it. He says that Christ broke the Sabbath, and in another place proves that he did not. He represents the eighth day as more honorable than the seventh, and elsewhere states the reverse. He states that the law is abolished, and in other places teaches its perpetuity and authority. He declares that the Sabbath was abrogated by Christ, and afterward asserts that "Christ did not at all rescind the Sabbath," but imparted "an additional sanctity" to "the Sabbath day itself, which from the beginning had been consecrated by the benediction of the Father." And he goes on to say that Christ "furnished to this day divine safeguards - a course which his adversary would have pursued for some other days, to avoid honoring the Creator's Sabbath."

This last statement is very remarkable. The Saviour furnished additional safeguards to the Creator's Sabbath. But "his adversary" would have done this to some other days. Now it is plain, first, that Tertullian did not believe that Christ sanctified some other day to take the place of the Sabbath; and second, that he believed the consecration of another day to be the work of the adversary of God! When he wrote these words he certainly did not believe in the sanctification of Sunday by Christ. But Tertullian and his brethren found themselves observing as a festival that day on which the sun was worshipped, and they were, in consequence, taunted with being worshipers of the sun. Tertullian denies the charge, though he acknowledges that there was some appearance of truth in it. He says:

"Others, again, certainly with more information and greater verisimilitude, believe that the sun is our God. We shall be counted Persians, perhaps, though we do not worship the orb of day painted on a piece of linen cloth, "having himself everywhere in his own disk. The idea, no doubt, has originated from our being known to turn to the east in prayer. But you, many of you, also, under pretense sometimes of worshiping the heavenly bodies, move your lips in the direction of the sunrise. In the same way, if we devote Sunday to rejoicing, from a far different reason than sun-worship, we have some resemblance to those of you who devote the day of Saturn to ease and luxury, though they, too, go far away from Jewish ways, of which they are ignorant."<sup>46</sup>

Tertullian pleads no divine command nor apostolic example for this practice. In fact, he offers no reason for the practice, though he intimates that he had one to offer. But he finds it necessary in another work to repel this same charge of sun-worship, because of Sunday observance. In this second answer to this charge he states the ground of defense more distinctly, and here we shall find his best reason. These are his words:

"Others, with greater regard to good manners, it must be confessed, suppose that the sun is the god of the Christians, because it is a well-known fact that we pray toward the east, or because we make Sunday a day of festivity. What then? Do you do less than this? Do not many among you, with an affectation of sometimes worshiping the heavenly bodies likewise, move your lips in the direction of the sunrise? It is you, at all events, who have even admitted the sun into the calendar of the week; and you have selected its day (Sunday), in preference to the preceding day, as the most suitable in the week for either an entire abstinence for the bath, or for its postponement until the evening, or for taking rest, and for banqueting. By resorting to these customs, you deliberately deviate from your own religious rites to those of strangers."<sup>47</sup>

Tertullian, in this discourse, addresses himself to the nations still in idolatry. With some of these, Sunday was an ancient festival; with others, it was of comparatively recent date. But some of these heathen reproached the Sunday Christians with being sun-worshipers. And now observe the answer. He does not say, "We Christians are commanded to celebrate the first day of the week in honor of Christ's resurrection." His answer is doubtless the best that he knew how to frame. It is a mere retort, and consists in asserting, first, that the Christians had done no more than their accusers, the heathen; and second, that they had as good a right to make Sunday a day of festivity as had the heathen!

The origin of first-day observance has been the subject of inquiry in this chapter. We have found that Sunday from remote antiquity was a heathen festival in honor of the sun, and that in the first centuries of the Christian era this ancient festival was in general veneration in the heathen world. We have learned that patriotism and expediency, and a tender regard for the conversion of the Gentile world, caused leaders of the church to adopt as their religious festival the day observed by the heathen, and to retain the same name which the heathen had given it. We have seen that the earliest instance upon record of the actual observance of Sunday in the Christian church, is found in the church of Rome about A.D. 140. The first great effort in its behalf, A.D. 196, is by a singular coincidence the first act of papal usurpation. The first instance of a sacred title being applied to this festival, and the earliest trace of abstinence from labor on that day, are found in the writings of Tertullian at the close of the second century. The origin of the festival of Sunday is now before the reader; the steps by which it has ascended to supreme power will be pointed out in their proper order and place.

One fact of deep interest will conclude this chapter. The first great effort made to put down the Sabbath was the act of the church of Rome in turning it into a fast while Sunday was made a joyful festival. While the eastern churches retained the Sabbath, a portion of the western churches, with the church of Rome at their head, turned it into a fast. As a part of the western churches refused to comply with this ordinance, a long struggle ensued, the result of which is thus stated by Heylyn:

"In this difference it stood a long time together, till in the end the Roman church obtained the cause, and Saturday became a fast almost through all the parts of the western world. I say the western world, and of that alone: the eastern churches being so far from altering their ancient custom that in the sixth council of Constantinople, A.D. 692, they did admonish those of Rome to forbear fasting on that day upon pain of censure."<sup>48</sup>

Wm. James, in a sermon before the University of Oxford, thus states the time when this fast originated:

"The western church began to fast on Saturday at the beginning of the third century."<sup>49</sup>

Thus it is seen that this struggle began with the third century, that is, immediately after the year 200. Neander thus states the motive of the Roman church:

"In the western churches, particularly the Roman, where opposition to Judaism was the prevailing tendency, this very opposition produced the custom of celebrating the Saturday in particular as a fast day."<sup>50</sup>

By Judaism, Neander meant the observance of the seventh day as the Sabbath. Dr. Charles Hase, of Germany, states the object of the Roman church in very explicit language:

"The Roman church regarded Saturday as a fast day in direct opposition to those who regarded it as a Sabbath. Sunday remained a joyful festival in which all fasting and worldly business was avoided as much as possible, but the original commandment of the decalogue respecting the Sabbath was not then applied to that day."<sup>51</sup>

Lord King attests this fact in the following words:

"Some of the western churches, that they might not seem to Judaize, fasted on Saturday, as Victorinus Petavionensis writes: We use to fast on the seventh day. And it is our custom then to fast, that we may not seem, with the Jews, to observe the Sabbath."<sup>52</sup>

Thus the Sabbath of the Lord was turned into a fast in order to render it despicable before men. Such was the first great effort of the Roman church toward the suppression of the ancient Sabbath of the Bible.

---

1 Vol. xviii. p. 409.

2 Verstegan's Antiquities, p. 10, London, 1628.

3 Antiquities, p. 68.

4 Jewish Antiquities, book iii. chap. i. See also McClintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, 4, 472, article Idolatry; Dr. A. Clarke on Job 1:26; and Dr. Gill on the same; Webster under the word Sabianism, and Worcester, under Sabian.

5 Id. book iii. chap. iii.

6 1 Vol. xviii. p. 409.

7 Pp. 61, 62.

8 2Kings 23:5; Jer.43:13, margin.

9 Dialogues on the Lord's day, pp. 22, 23.

10 Apology, chap. lxvii.; Testimony of the Fathers, pp. 34, 35.

11 Apology, sect. 16; Testimony of the Fathers, pp. 64, 65.

12 Ad Nationes, book i. chap. xiii.; Testimony of the Fathers, p. 70.

13 Eccl. Hist., cent. 1, part ii. chap. iv. note + to sect. 4.

14 Eccl. Hist. cent. 2, part ii. chap. i. sect. 12.

15 History of the Sabbath, part ii. chap. i. sect. 12.

16 Id. part ii. chap. iii. sect. 4.

17 Hist. of the Sabbath, part ii. chap. i. sect. 10.

18 Examination of the Six Texts, Supplement, pp. 6, 7.

19 Du Pin's Eccl. Hist. vol. i. p. 50.

20 Hist. Church, cent. 2, chap. iii.

21 Justin Martyr's First Apology, translated by Wm. Reeves, p. 127, sects. 87, 88, 89.

22 The Spirit of Popery, pp. 44, 45.

23 Ductor Dubitantium, part i. book ii. chap. ii. rule 6, sect. 45.

- 24 Brown's Translation, pp. 48, 44, 52, 59, 63, 64.
- 25 Sabbath Manual, p. 121.
- 26 Dialogue with Trypho, p. 65.
- 27 Sabbath Manual, p. 114.
- 28 Examination of the Six Texts, pp. 131, 132.
- 29 Id. p. 128.
- 30 Id. p. 130.
- 31 See his full testimony in the Testimony of the Fathers, pp.. 44-52.
- 32 Against Heresies, book iv. chap. xvi. sects. 1, 2; Id. book v. chap.. xxviii. sect. 3.
- 33 Id. book iv. chap. xvi. sects 1, 2.
- 34 Id. book v. chap. xxxiii. sect. 2.
- 35 Against Heresies, book iv. chap. xv. sect. 1; chap. xiii. sect. 4.
- 36 Bower's History of the Popes, vol. i. pp. 18, 19; Rose's Neander, pp. 188-190; Dowling's History of Romanism, book i, chap. ii. sect. 9.
- 37 History of the Popes, vol. i. p. 18.
- 38 History of Romanism, heading of page 32.
- 39 History of the Popes, vol. i. p. 18.
- 40 Id. pp. 18, 19; Giesler's Eccl. Hist. vol. i. sect. 57.
- 41 History of the Sabbath, part ii. chap. ii. sects. 4, 5.
- 42 Boyle's Historical View of the Council of Nice, p. 52, ed. 1842.
- 43 Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. ii. sect. 5.
- 44 Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, chap. xxvii.
- 45 Id. chap. xxxviii.
- 46 Tertullian's Apology, sect. 16.
- 47 Tertullian Ad Nationes, book i. chap. xiii.
- 48 History of the Sabbath, part 2, chap. ii. sect. 3.
- 49 Sermons on the Sacraments and Sabbath, p. 166.
- 50 Neander, p. 186.
- 51 Ancient Church History, part i. div. 2, A.D. 100-312. sect. 69.
- 52 Enquiry into the Constitution of the Primitive Church, part ii. chap.. vii. sect. 11. See also Schaff's "History of the Christian Church," vol. i. p. 373

CHAPTER 17

THE NATURE OF EARLY FIRST-DAY OBSERVANCE

---

The history of first-day observance compared with that of the popes - First-day observance defined in the very words of each of the early fathers who mention it - The reasons which each had for its observance stated in his own words - Sunday in their judgment of no higher sacredness than Easter or Whitsunday, or even than the fifty days between those festivals - Sunday not a day of abstinence from labor - The reasons which are offered by those of them who rejected the Sabbath stated in their own words.

---

The history of first-day observance in the Christian church may be fitly illustrated by that of the bishops of Rome. The Roman bishop now claims supreme power over all the churches of Christ. He asserts that this power was given to Peter, and by him was transmitted to the bishops of Rome; or rather that Peter was the first Roman bishop, and that a succession of such bishops from his time to the present have exercised this absolute power in the church. They are able to trace back their line to apostolic times, and they assert that the power now claimed by the pope was claimed and exercised by the first pastors of the church of the Romans. Those who now acknowledge the supremacy of the pope believe this assertion, and with them it is a conclusive evidence that the pope is by divine right possessed of supreme power. But the assertion is absolutely false. The early pastors, or bishops, or elders, of the church of the Romans were modest, unassuming ministers of Christ, wholly unlike the arrogant bishop of Rome, who now usurps the place of Christ as the head of the Christian church.

The first day of the week now claims to be the Christian Sabbath, and enforces its authority by means of the fourth commandment, having set aside the seventh day, which that commandment enjoins, and usurped its place. Its advocates assert that this position and this authority were given to it by Christ. As no record of such gift is found in the Scriptures, the principal argument in its support is furnished by tracing first-day observance back to the early Christians, who, it is said, would not have hallowed the day if they had not been instructed to do it by the apostles; and the apostles would not have taught them to do it if Christ had not, in their presence, changed the Sabbath.

But first-day observance can be traced no nearer to apostolic times than A.D. 140, while the bishops of Rome can trace their line to the very times of the apostles. Herein is the papal claim to apostolic authority better than is that of the first-day Sabbath. But with this exception, the historical argument in behalf of each is the same. Both began with very moderate pretensions, and gradually gaining in power and sacredness, grew up in strength together.

Let us now go to those who were the earliest observers of Sunday and learn from them the nature of that observance at its commencement. We shall find, first, that no one claimed for first-day observance any divine authority; second, that none of them had ever heard of change of the Sabbath, and none believed the first-day festival to be a continuation of the Sabbatic institution; third, that labor on that day is never set forth as sinful, and that abstinence from labor is never mentioned as a feature of its observance, nor even implied, only so far as necessary in order to spend a portion of the day in worship; fourth, that if we put together all the hints respecting Sunday observance, which are scattered through the fathers of the first three centuries, for no one of them gives more than two of these, and generally a single hint is all that is found in one writer, we shall find just four items: (1) an assembly on that day in which the Bible was read and expounded, and the supper celebrated and money collected; (2) that the day must be one of rejoicing; (3) that it must not be a day of fasting; (4) that the knee must not be bent in prayer on that day.

The following are all the hints respecting the nature of first-day observance during the first three centuries. The epistle falsely ascribed to Barnabas simply says: "We keep the eighth day with joyfulness."<sup>1</sup> Justin Martyr, in words already quoted at full length, describes the kind of meeting which they held at Rome and in that vicinity on that day, and this is all that he connects with its observance.<sup>2</sup> Irenaeus taught that to commemorate the resurrection, the knee must not be bent on that day, and mentions nothing else as essential to its honor. This act of standing in prayer was a symbol of the resurrection, which was to be celebrated only on that day, as he held.<sup>3</sup> Bardesanes the Gnostic represents the Christians as everywhere meeting for worship on that day, but he does not describe that worship, and he gives no other honor to the day.<sup>4</sup> Tertullian describes Sunday observance as follows: "We devote Sunday to rejoicing," and he adds, "We have some resemblance to those of you who devote the day of Saturn to ease and luxury."<sup>5</sup> In another work he gives us a further idea of the festive character of Sunday. Thus he says to his brethren: "If any indulgence is to be granted to the flesh, you have it. I will not say your own days, but more too; for to the heathens each festive day occurs but once annually; you have a festive day every eighth day."<sup>6</sup> Dr. Heylyn spoke the truth when he said:

"Tertullian tells us that they did devote the Sunday partly unto mirth and recreation, not to devotion altogether; when in a hundred years after Tertullian's time there was no law or constitution to restrain men from labor on this day in the Christian church."<sup>7</sup>

The Sunday festival in Tertullian's time was not like the modern first-day Sabbath, but was essentially the German festival of Sunday, a day for worship and for recreation, and one on which labor was not sinful. But Tertullian speaks further respecting Sunday observance, and the words now to be quoted have been used as proof that labor on that day was counted sinful. This is the only statement that can be found prior to Constantine's Sunday law that has such an appearance, and the proof is decisive that such was not its meaning. Here are his words:

"We, however (just as we have received), only on the day of the Lord's resurrection, ought to guard, not only against kneeling, but every posture and office of solicitude, deferring even our businesses, lest we give any place to the devil. Similarly, too, in the period of Pentecost; which period we distinguish by the same solemnity of exultation."<sup>8</sup>

He speaks of "deferring even our businesses;" but this does not necessarily imply anything more than its postponement during the hours devoted to religious services. It falls very far short of saying that labor on Sunday is a sin. But we will quote Tertullian's next mention of Sunday observance before noticing further the words last quoted. Thus he says:

"We count fasting or kneeling in worship on the Lord's day to be unlawful. We rejoice in the same privilege also from Easter to Whitsunday."<sup>9</sup>

These two things, fasting and kneeling, are the only acts which the fathers set down as unlawful on Sunday, unless, indeed, mourning may be included by some in the list. It is certain that labor is never thus mentioned. And observe that Tertullian repeats the important statement of the previous quotation that the honor due to Sunday pertains also to the "period of Pentecost," that is, to the fifty days between Easter and Passover and Whitsunday or Pentecost. If, therefore, labor on Sunday was in Tertullian's estimation sinful, the same was true for the period of Pentecost, a space of fifty days! But this is not possible. We can conceive of the deferral of business for one religious assembly each day for fifty days, and also that men should neither fast nor kneel during that time, which was precisely what the religious celebration of Sunday actually was. But to make Tertullian assert that labor on Sunday was a sin is to make him declare that such was the case for fifty days together, which no one will venture to say was the doctrine of Tertullian.

In another work Tertullian gives us one more statement respecting the nature of Sunday observance: "We make Sunday a day of festivity. What then? Do you do less than this?"<sup>10</sup> His language is very extraordinary when it is considered that he was addressing heathen. It seems that Sunday as a Christian festival was so similar to the festival which these heathen observed that he could challenge them to show wherein the Christians went further than did these heathen whom he here addressed.

The next father who gives us the nature of early Sunday observance is Peter of Alexandria. He says: "But the Lord's day we celebrate as a day of joy, because on it he rose again, on which day we have received it for a custom not even to bow the knee."<sup>11</sup> He marks two things essential. It must be a day of joy, and Christians must not kneel on that day. Zonaras, an ancient commentator on these words of Peter, explains the day of joy by saying, "We ought not to fast; for it is a day of joy for the resurrection of the Lord."<sup>12</sup> Next in order, we quote the so-called Apostolical Constitutions. These command Christians to assemble for worship every day, "but principally on the Sabbath day. And on the day of our Lord's resurrection, which is the Lord's day, meet more diligently, sending praise to God," etc. The object of assembling was "to hear the saving word concerning the resurrection," to "pray thrice standing," to have the prophets read, to have preaching and also the supper.<sup>13</sup> These "Constitutions" not only give the nature of the worship on Sunday as just set forth, but they also give us an idea of Sunday as a day of festivity:

"Now we exhort you, brethren and fellow-servants, to avoid vain talk and obscene discourses, and jestings, drunkenness, lasciviousness, luxury, unbounded passions, with foolish discourses, since we do not permit you so much as on the Lord's days, which are days of joy, to speak or act anything unseemly."<sup>14</sup>

This language plainly implies that the so-called Lord's day was a day of greater mirth than the other days of the week. Even on the Lord's day they must not speak or act anything unseemly, though it is evident that their license on that day was greater than on other days. Once more these "Constitutions" give us the nature of Sunday observance: "Every Sabbath day excepting one, and every Lord's day hold your solemn assemblies, and rejoice; for he will be guilty of sin who fasts on the Lord's day."<sup>15</sup> But no one can read so much as once that "he is guilty of sin who performs work on this day."

Next we quote the epistle to the Magnesians in its longer form, which though not written by Ignatius was actually written about the time that the Apostolical Constitutions were committed to writing. Here are the words of this epistle:

"And after the observance of the Sabbath, let every friend of Christ keep the Lord's day as a festival, the resurrection day, the queen and chief of all the days."<sup>16</sup>

The writer of the Syriac Documents concerning Edessa comes last, and he defines the services of Sunday as follows: "On the first [day] of the week, let there be service, and the reading of the Holy Scriptures, and the oblation."<sup>17</sup> These are all the passages in the writings of the first three centuries which describe early first-day observance. Let the reader judge whether we have correctly stated the nature of that observance. Next we invite attention to the several reasons offered by these fathers for celebrating the festival of Sunday.

The reputed epistle of Barnabas supports the Sunday festival by saying that it was the day "on which Jesus rose again from the dead," and it intimates that it prefigures the eighth thousand years, when God shall create the world anew.<sup>18</sup>

Justin Martyr has four reasons:

1. "It is the first day on which God having wrought a change in the darkness and matter, made the world."<sup>19</sup>
2. "Jesus Christ our Saviour on the same day rose from the dead."<sup>20</sup>
3. "It is possible for us to show how the eighth day possessed a certain mysterious import, which the seventh day did not possess, and which was promulgated by God through these rites,"<sup>21</sup> i.e., through circumcision.
4. "The command of circumcision, again, bidding [them] always circumcise the children on the eighth day, was a type of the true circumcision, by which we are circumcised from deceit and iniquity through Him who rose from the dead on the first day after the Sabbath."<sup>22</sup>

Clement, of Alexandria, appears to treat solely a mystical eighth day or Lord's day. It is perhaps possible that he has some reference to Sunday. We therefore quote what he says in behalf of this day, calling attention to the fact that he produces his testimony, not from the Bible, but from a heathen philosopher. Thus he says:

"And the Lord's day Plato prophetically speaks of in the tenth book of the Republic, in these words: 'And when seven days have passed to each of them in the meadow on the eighth day they are to set out and arrive in four days.'"<sup>23</sup>

Clement's reasons for Sunday are found outside the Scriptures. The next father will give us a good reason for Clement's action in this case. Tertullian is the next writer who gives reasons for the Sunday festival. He is speaking of "offerings for the dead," the manner of Sunday observance, and the use of the sign of the cross upon the forehead. Here is the ground on which these observances rest:

"If, for these and other such rules, you insist upon having positive Scripture injunction, you will find none. Tradition will be held forth to you as the originator of them, custom, as their strengthener, and faith, as their observer. That reason will support tradition, and custom, and faith, you will either yourself perceive, or learn from some one who has."<sup>24</sup>

Tertullian's frankness is to be commended. He had no Scripture to offer, and he acknowledges the fact. He depended on tradition, and he was not ashamed to confess it. The next of the fathers who gives Scripture evidence in support of the Sunday festival, is Origen. Here are his words:

"The manna fell on the Lord's day, and not on the Sabbath to show the Jews that even then the Lord's day was preferred before it."<sup>25</sup>

Origen seems to have been of Tertullian's judgment as to the inconclusiveness of the arguments adduced by his predecessors. He therefore coined an original argument which seems to have been very conclusive in his estimation as he offers this alone. But he must have forgotten that the manna fell on all the six working days, or he would have seen that while his argument does not elevate Sunday above the other five working days, it does make the Sabbath the least reputable day of the seven! And yet the miracle of the manna was expressly designed to set forth the sacredness of the Sabbath and to establish its authority before the people. Cyprian is the next father who gives an argument for the Sunday festival. He contents himself with one of Justin's old arguments, viz., that one drawn from circumcision. Thus he says:

"For in respect of the observance of the eighth day in the Jewish circumcision of the flesh, a sacrament was given beforehand in shadow and in usage; but when Christ came, it was fulfilled in truth. For because the eighth day, that is, the first day after the Sabbath, was to be that on which the Lord should rise again, and should quicken us, and give us circumcision of the Spirit, the eighth day, that is, the first day after the Sabbath, and the Lord's day, went before in the figure; which figure ceased when by and by the truth came, and spiritual circumcision was given to us."<sup>26</sup>

Such is the only argument adduced by Cyprian in behalf of the first-day-day festival. The circumcision of infants when eight days old was, in his judgment, a type of infant baptism. But circumcision on the eighth day of the child's life, in his estimation, did not signify that baptism need to be deferred till the infant is eight days old, but, as here stated, did signify that the eighth day was to be the Lord's day! But the eighth day, on which circumcision took place, was not the first day of the week, but the eighth day of each child's life, whatever day of the week that might be.

The next father who gives a reason for celebrating Sunday as a day of joy, and refraining from kneeling on it, is Peter of Alexandria, who simply says, "Because on it he rose again."<sup>27</sup>

Next in order come the Apostolic Constitutions, which assert that the Sunday festival is a memorial of the resurrection:

"But keep the Sabbath, and the Lord's day festival; because the former is a memorial of the creation, and the latter of the resurrection."<sup>28</sup>

The writer, however, offers no proof that Sunday was set apart by divine authority in memory of the resurrection. But the next person who gives his reasons for keeping Sunday "as a festival" is the writer of the longer form of the reputed epistle of Ignatius to the Magnesians. He finds the eighth day prophetically set forth in the title to the sixth and twelfth psalms! In the margin, the word Sheminith is translated "the eighth." Here is this writer's argument for Sunday:

"Looking forward to this, the prophet declared, 'To the end for the eighth day,' on which our life both sprang up again, and the victory over death was obtained in Christ."<sup>29</sup>

There is yet another of the fathers of the first three centuries who gives the reasons then used in support of the Sunday festival.

This is the writer of the Syriac Documents concerning Edessa. He comes next in order and closes the list. Here are four reasons:

1. "Because on the first day of the week our Lord rose from the place of the dead."<sup>30</sup>
2. "On the first day of the week he arose upon the world,"<sup>31</sup> i.e., he was born upon Sunday.
3. "On the first day of the week he ascended upon to Heaven."<sup>32</sup>
4. "On the first day of the week he will appear at last with the angels of Heaven."<sup>33</sup>

The first of these reasons is as good a one as man can devise out of his own heart for doing what God never commanded; the second and fourth are mere assertions of which mankind know nothing; while the third is a positive untruth, for the ascension was upon Thursday.

We have now presented every reason for the Sunday festival which can be found in all the writings of the first three centuries. Though generally very trivial, and sometimes worse than trivial, they are nevertheless worthy of careful study. They constitute a decisive testimony that the change of the Sabbath by Christ or by his apostles from the seventh to the first day of the week was absolutely unknown during that entire period. But were it true that such change had been made they must have known it. Had they believed that Christ changed the Sabbath to commemorate his resurrection, how emphatically would they have stated that fact instead of offering reasons for the festival of Sunday which are so worthless as to be, with one or two exceptions, entirely discarded by modern first-day writers. Or had they believed that the apostles honored Sunday as the Sabbath or Lord's day, how would they have produced these facts in triumph! But Tertullian said that they had no positive Scripture injunction for the Sunday festival, and the others, by offering reasons that were only devised in their own hearts, corroborated his testimony, and all of them together establish the fact that even in their own estimation the day was only sustained by the authority of the church. They were totally unacquainted with the modern doctrine that the seventh day in the commandment means simply one day in seven, and that the Saviour, to commemorate his resurrection, appointed that the first day of the week should be that one of the seven to which the commandment should apply!

We have given every statement in the fathers of the first three centuries in which the manner of celebrating the Sunday festival is set forth. We have also given every reason for that observance which is to be found in any of them. These two classes of testimonies show clearly that ordinary labor was not one of the things which were forbidden on that day. We now offer direct proof that other days which on all hands are accounted nothing but church festivals were expressly declared by the fathers to be equal if not superior in sacredness to the Sunday festival.

The "Lost Writings of Irenaeus" gives us his mind concerning the relative sacredness of the festival of Sunday and that of either Easter or Pentecost. This is the statement:

"Upon which [feast] we do not bend the knee, because it is of equal significance with the Lord's day, for the reason already alleged concerning it."<sup>34</sup>

Tertullian in a passage already quoted, which by omitting the sentence we are about to quote, has been used as the strongest testimony to the first-day Sabbath in the fathers, expressly equals in sacredness the period of Pentecost - a space of fifty days - with the festival which he calls Lord's day. Thus he says:

"Similarly, too, in the period of Pentecost; which period we distinguish by the same solemnity of exaltation."<sup>35</sup>

He states the same fact in another work:

"We count fasting or kneeling in worship on the Lord's day to be unlawful. We rejoice in the same privilege also from Easter to Whitsunday."<sup>36</sup>

Origen classes the so-called Lord's day with three other church festivals:

"If it be objected to us on this subject that we ourselves are accustomed to observe certain days, as for example the Lord's day, the Preparation, the Passover, or Pentecost, I have to answer, that to the perfect Christian, who is ever in his thoughts, words, and deeds, serving his natural Lord, God the Word, all his days are the Lord's, and he is always keeping the Lord's day."<sup>37</sup>

Irenaeus and Tertullian make the Sunday Lord's day equal in sacredness with the period from the Passover to the Pentecost; but Origen, after classing the day with several church festivals, virtually confesses that it has no pre-eminence above other days.

Commodianus, who once uses the term Lord's day, speaks of the Catholic festival of the Passover as "Easter, that day of ours most blessed."<sup>38</sup> This certainly indicates that in his estimation no other sacred day was superior in sanctity to Easter.

The "Apostolical Constitutions" treat the Sunday festival in the same manner that it is treated by Irenaeus and Tertullian. They make it equal to the sacredness of the period from Easter to the Pentecost. Thus they say:

"He will be guilty of sin who fasts on the Lord's day, being the day of the resurrection, or during the time of Pentecost, or in general, who is sad on a festival day to the Lord."<sup>39</sup>

These testimonies prove conclusively that the festival of Sunday, in the judgment of such men as Irenaeus, Tertullian, and others, stood in the same rank with that of Easter, or Whitsunday. They had no idea that one was commanded by God, while the others were only ordained by the church. Indeed, Tertullian, as we have seen, expressly declares that there is no precept for Sunday observance.<sup>40</sup>

Besides these important facts, we have decisive evidence that Sunday was not a day of abstinence from labor, and our first witness is Justin, the earliest witness to the Sunday festival in the Christian church. Trypho the Jew said to Justin, by way of reproof, "You observe no festivals or Sabbaths."<sup>41</sup> This was exactly adapted to bring out from Justin the statement that, though he did not observe the seventh day as the Sabbath, he did thus rest on the first day of the week, if it were true that that day was with him a day of abstinence from labor. But he gives no such answer. He sneers at the very idea of abstinence from labor, declaring that "God does not take pleasure in such observances." Nor does he intimate that this is because the Jews did not rest upon the right day, but he condemns the very idea of refraining from labor for a day, stating that "the new law," which has taken the place of the commandments given on Sinai<sup>42</sup> requires a perpetual Sabbath, and this is kept by repenting of sin and refraining from its commission. Here are his words:

"The new law requires you to keep a perpetual Sabbath, and you, because you are idle for one day, suppose you are pious, not discerning why this has been commanded you; and if you eat unleavened bread, you say the will of God has been fulfilled. The Lord our God does not take pleasure in such observances: if there is any perjured person or a thief among you, let him cease to be so; if any adulterer, let him repent; then he has kept the sweet and true Sabbaths of God."<sup>43</sup>

This language plainly implies that Justin did not believe that any day should be kept as a Sabbath by abstinence from labor, but that all days should be kept as sabbaths by abstinence from sin. This testimony is decisive, and it is in exact harmony with the facts already adduced from the fathers, and with others yet to be presented. Moreover, it is confirmed by the express testimony of Tertullian. He says:

"By us (to whom Sabbaths are strange, and the new moons, and festivals formerly beloved by God) the saturnalia and new year's and mid-winter's festivals and Matronalia are frequented."<sup>44</sup>

And he adds in the same paragraph, in words already quoted:

"If any indulgence is to be granted to the flesh, you have it. I will not say your own days, but more too; for to the heathens each festive day occurs but once annually; you have a festive day every eighth day."<sup>45</sup>

Tertullian tells his brethren in plain language that they kept no sabbaths, but did keep many heathen festivals. If the Sunday festival, which was a day of "indulgence" to the flesh, and which he here mentions as the "eighth day," was kept by them as the Christian Sabbath in place of the ancient seventh day, then he would not have asserted that to us "sabbaths are strange."

But Tertullian has precisely the same Sabbath as Justin Martyr. He does not keep the first day in place of the seventh, but he keeps a "perpetual sabbath," in which he professes to refrain from sin every day, and actually abstains from labor on none. Thus, after saying that the Jews teach that "from the beginning God sanctified the seventh day" and therefore observe that day, he says:

"Whence we [Christians] understand that we still more ought to observe a Sabbath from all 'servile work' always, and not only every seventh day, but through all time."<sup>46</sup>

Tertullian certainly had no idea that Sunday was the Sabbath in any other sense than were all the seven days of the week. We shall find a decisive confirmation of this when we come to quote Tertullian respecting the origin of the Sabbath. We shall also find that Clement expressly makes Sunday a day of labor.

Several of the early fathers wrote in opposition to the observance of the seventh day. We now give the reasons assigned by each for that opposition. The writer called Barnabas did not keep the seventh day, not because it was a ceremonial ordinance unworthy of being observed by a Christian, but because it was so pure an institution that even Christians cannot truly sanctify it till they are made immortal. Here are his words:

"Attend, my children, to the meaning of this expression, 'He finished in six days.' This implieth that the Lord will finish all things in six thousand years, for a day is with him a thousand years. And he himself testifieth, saying, 'Behold, to-day will be as a thousand years.' Therefore, my children, in six days, that is, in six thousand years, all things will be finished. 'And he rested on the seventh day.' This meaneth: When his Son, coming [again], shall destroy the time of the wicked man, and judge the ungodly, and change the sun, and the moon, and the stars, then shall he truly rest on the seventh day. Moreover, he says, 'Thou shalt sanctify it with pure hands and a pure heart.' If, therefore, any one can now sanctify the day which God hath sanctified, except he is pure in heart in all things, we are deceived. Behold, therefore: certainly then one properly resting sanctifies it, when we ourselves, having received the promise, wickedness no longer existing, and all things having been made new by the Lord, shall be able to work righteousness. Then we shall be able to sanctify it, having been first sanctified ourselves. Further he says to them, 'Your new moons and your sabbaths I cannot endure.' Ye perceive how he speaks: Your present sabbaths are not acceptable to me, but that is which I have made [namely this], when giving rest to all things, I shall make a beginning of the eighth day, that is, a beginning of another world, wherefore, also, we keep the eighth day with joyfulness, the day, also, on which Jesus rose again from the dead."<sup>47</sup>

Observe the points embodied in this statement of doctrine: 1. He asserts that the six days of creation prefigure the six thousand years which our world shall endure in its present state of wickedness. 2. He teaches that at the end of that period Christ shall come again and make an end of wickedness, and "then shall he truly rest on the seventh day." 3. That no "one can now sanctify the day which God hath sanctified, except he is pure in heart in all things." 4. But that cannot be the case until the present world shall pass away, "when we ourselves, having received the promise, wickedness no longer existing, and all things having been made new by the Lord, shall be able to work righteousness. Then we shall be able to sanctify it, having been first sanctified ourselves." Men cannot, therefore, keep the Sabbath while this wicked world lasts. 5. Therefore, he says, "Your present sabbaths are not acceptable," not because they are not pure, but because you are not now able to keep them as purely as their nature demands. 6. That is to say, the keeping of the day which God has sanctified is not possible in such a wicked world as this. 7. But though the seventh day cannot now be kept, the eighth day can be, and ought to be, because when the seven thousand years are past, there will be at the beginning of the eighth thousand, the new creation. 8. Therefore, he did not attempt to keep the seventh day, which God had sanctified; for that is too pure to be kept in the present wicked world, and can only be kept after the Saviour comes at the commencement of the seventh thousand years; but he kept the eighth day, with joyfulness on which Jesus arose from the dead. 9. So it appears that the eighth day which God never sanctified, is exactly suitable for observance in our world during its present state of wickedness. 10. But when all things have been made new, and we are able to work righteousness, and wickedness no longer exists, then we shall be able to sanctify the seventh day, having first been sanctified ourselves.

The reason of Barnabas for not observing the Sabbath of the Lord is not that the commandment enjoining it is abolished, but that the institution is so pure that men in their present imperfect state cannot acceptably sanctify it. They will keep it, however, in the new creation, but in the meantime they keep with joyfulness the eighth day, which having never been sanctified by God is not difficult to keep in the present state of wickedness.

Justin Martyr's reasons for not observing the Sabbath are not at all like those of the so-called Barnabas, for Justin seems to have heartily despised the Sabbatic institution. He denies that it was obligatory before the time of Moses, and affirms that it was abolished by the advent of Christ. He teaches that it was given to the Jews because of their wickedness, and he expressly affirms the abolition of both the Sabbath and the law. So far is he from teaching the change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week, or from making the Sunday festival a continuation of the ancient Sabbatic institution, that he sneers at the very idea of days of abstinence from labor, or days of idleness, and though God gives as his reason for the observance of the Sabbath, that that was the day on which he rested from all his work, Justin gives as his first reason for the Sunday festival that that was the day on which God began his work! Of abstinence from labor as an act of obedience to the Sabbath, Justin says:

"The Lord our God does not take pleasure in such observances."<sup>48</sup>

A second reason for not observing the Sabbath is thus stated by him:

"For we too would observe the fleshly circumcision, and the Sabbaths, and in short, all the feasts, if we did not know for what reason they were enjoined you - namely, on account of your transgressions and the hardness of your hearts."<sup>49</sup>

As Justin never discriminates between the Sabbath of the Lord and the annual sabbaths he doubtless here means to include it as well as them. But what a falsehood is it to assert that the Sabbath was given to the Jews because of their wickedness! The truth is, it was given to the Jews because of the universal apostasy of the Gentiles.<sup>50</sup> But in the following paragraph Justin gives three more reasons for not keeping the Sabbath:

"Do you see that the elements are not idle, and keep no Sabbaths? Remain as you were born. For if there was no need of circumcision before Abraham, or of the observance of Sabbaths, of feasts and sacrifices, before Moses; no more need is there of them now, after that, according to the will of God, Jesus Christ the Son of God has been born without sin, of a virgin sprung from the stock of Abraham."<sup>51</sup>

Here are three reasons: 1. "That the elements are not idle, and keep no Sabbaths." Though this reason is simply worthless as an argument against the seventh day, it is a decisive confirmation of the fact already proven, that Justin did not make Sunday a day of abstinence from labor. 2. His second reason here given is that there was no observance of Sabbath before Moses, and yet we do know that God at the beginning did appoint the Sabbath to a holy use, a fact to which as we shall see quite a number of the fathers testify, and we also know that in that age were men who kept all the precepts of God. 3. There is no need of Sabbatic observance since Christ. Though this is mere assertion, it is by no means easy for those to meet it fairly who represent Justin as maintaining the Christian Sabbath.

Another argument by Justin against the obligation of the Sabbath is that God "directs the government of the universe on this day equally as on all others!"<sup>52</sup> as though this were inconsistent with the present sacredness of the Sabbath, when it is also true that God thus governed the world in the period when Justin acknowledges the Sabbath to have been obligatory. Though this reason is trivial as an argument against the Sabbath, it does show that Justin could have attached no Sabbatic character to Sunday. But he has yet one more argument against the Sabbath. The ancient law has been done away by the new and final law, and the old covenant has been superseded by the new.<sup>53</sup> But he forgets that the design of the new covenant was not to do away with the law of God, but to put that law into the heart of every Christian. And many of the fathers, as we shall see expressly repudiate this doctrine of the abrogation of the Decalogue.

Such were Justin's reasons for rejecting the ancient sabbath.

But though he was a decided asserter of the abrogation of the law, and of the Sabbatic institution itself, and kept Sunday only as a festival, modern first-day writers cite him as a witness in support of the doctrine that the first day of the week should be observed as the Christian Sabbath on the authority of the fourth commandment.

Now let us learn what stood in the way of Irenaeus' observance of the Sabbath. It was not that the commandments were abolished, for we shall presently learn that he taught their perpetuity. Nor was it that he believed in the change of the Sabbath, for he gives no hint of such an idea. The Sunday festival in his estimation appears to have been simply of "equal significance" with the Pentecost.<sup>54</sup> Nor was it that Christ broke the Sabbath, for Irenaeus says that he did not.<sup>55</sup> But because the Sabbath is called a sign he regarded it as significant of the future kingdom, and appears to have considered it no longer obligatory, though he does not expressly say this. Thus he sets forth the meaning of the Sabbath as held by him:

"Moreover the Sabbaths of God, that is, the kingdom, was, as it were, indicated by created things," etc.<sup>56</sup>

"These [promises to the righteous] are [to take place] in the times of the kingdom, that is, upon the seventh day which has been sanctified, in which God rested from all the works which he created, which is the true Sabbath of the righteous,"<sup>57</sup> etc.

"For the day of the Lord is as a thousand years: and in six days created things were completed: it is evident, therefore, that they will come to an end at the sixth thousand year."<sup>58</sup>

But Irenaeus did not notice that the Sabbath as a sign does not point forward to the restitution, but backward to the creation, that it may signify that the true God is the Creator.<sup>59</sup> Nor did he observe the fact that when the Kingdom of God shall be established under the whole heaven all flesh shall hallow the Sabbath.<sup>60</sup>

But he says that those who lived before Moses were justified "without observance of Sabbaths," and offers as proof that the covenant at Horeb was not made with the fathers. Of course if this proves that the patriarchs were free from obligation toward the fourth commandment, it is equally good as proof that they might violate any other. These things indicate that Irenaeus was opposed to Sabbatic observance, though he did not in express language assert its abrogation, and did in most decisive terms assert the continued obligation of the ten commandments.

Tertullian offers numerous reasons for not observing the Sabbath, but there is scarcely one of these that he does not in some other place expressly contradict. Thus he asserts that the patriarchs before Moses did not observe the Sabbath.<sup>61</sup> But he offers no proof, and he elsewhere dates the origin of the Sabbath at the creation,<sup>62</sup> as we shall show hereafter. In several places he teaches the abrogation of the law, and seems to set aside moral law as well as ceremonial. But elsewhere, as we shall show, he bears express testimony that the ten commandments are still binding as the rule of the Christian's life.<sup>63</sup> He quotes the words of Isaiah in which God is represented as hating the feasts, new-moons, and sabbaths observed by the Jews,<sup>64</sup> as proof that the seventh-day Sabbath was a temporary institution which Christ abrogated. But in another place he says: "Christ did not at all rescind the Sabbath: he kept the law thereof."<sup>65</sup> And he also explains this very text by stating that God's aversion toward the Sabbaths observed by the Jews was "because they were celebrated without the fear of God by a people full of iniquities," and adds that the prophet, in a later passage speaking of Sabbaths celebrated according to God's commandment, "declares them to be true, delightful, and inviolable."<sup>66</sup> Another statement is that Joshua violated the Sabbath in the siege of Jericho.<sup>67</sup> Yet he elsewhere explains this very case, showing that the commandment forbids our own work, not God's. Those who acted at Jericho did not do their own work, but God's, which they executed, and that, too, from his express commandment."<sup>68</sup> He also both asserts and denies that Christ violated the Sabbath.<sup>69</sup> Tertullian was a double-minded man. He wrote much against the law and the Sabbath, but he also contradicted and exposed his own errors.

Origen attempts to prove that the ancient Sabbath is to be understood mystically or spiritually, and not literally. Here is his argument:

" 'Ye shall sit, every one in your dwelling: no one shall move from his place on the Sabbath day.' Which precept it is impossible to observe literally; for no man can sit a whole day so as not to move from the place where he sat down."<sup>70</sup>

Great men are not always wise. There is no such precept in the Bible. Origen referred to that which forbade the people to go out for manna on the Sabbath, but which did not conflict with another that commanded holy convocations or assemblies for worship on the Sabbath.<sup>71</sup>

Victorinus is the latest of the fathers before Constantine who offers reasons against the observance of the Sabbath. His first reason is that Christ said by Isaiah that his soul hated the Sabbath; which Sabbath he in his body abolished; and these assertions we have seen answered by Tertullian.<sup>72</sup> His second reason is that "Jesus [Joshua] the son of Nave [Nun], the successor of Moses, himself broke the Sabbath day,"<sup>73</sup> which is false. His third reason is that "Matthias [a Maccabean] also, prince of Judah, broke the Sabbath,"<sup>74</sup> which is doubtless false, but is of no consequence as authority. His fourth argument is original, and may fitly close the list of reasons assigned in the early fathers for not observing the Sabbath. It is given in full without an answer:

"And in Matthew we read, that it is written Isaiah also and the rest of his colleagues broke the Sabbath."<sup>75</sup>

---

1 Epistle of Barnabas, chap. xv.

2 Justin Martyr's First Apology, chap. 1xvii.

3 Lost Writings of Irenaeus, Fragments 7 and 50.

4 Book of the Laws of Countries.

5 Tertullian's Apology, sect. 16.

- 6 On Idolatry, chap. xiv.
- 7 Hist. Sab. part 2, chap. viii. sect. 13.
- 8 On Prayer, chap. xxiii.
- 9 De Corona, sect. 3.
- 10 Ad Nationes, book i. chap. xiii.
- 11 Canon 15.
- 12 Ante-Nicene Library, vol. xiv. p. 322.
- 13 Apostolical Constitutions, book ii. sect. 7, par. 59.
- 14 Id. book v. sect. ii. par. 10.
- 15 Id. book v. sect. iii. par. 20.
- 16 Epistle to the Magnesians (longer form), chap. ix.
- 17 Syriac Documents, p. 38.
- 18 Epistle of Barnabas, chap. xv.
- 19 Justin's First Apology, chap. lxvii.
- 20 Id.Ib.
- 21 Dialogue with Trypho, chap. xxiv.
- 22 Id. chap. xli.
- 23 Clement's Miscellanies, book v. chap. xiv.
- 24 De Corona, sect. 4.
- 25 Origen's Opera. Tome ii. p. 158, Paris, A.D. 1733, "Quod si ex Divinis Scripturis hoc constat, quod die Dominica Deus pluit manna de caelo et in Sabbato non pluit, intelligent Judaei jam tunc praelatam esse Dominicam nostram Judaico Sabbato."
- 26 Cyprian's Epistle, No. lviii. sect. 4.
- 27 Peter's Canons, No. xv.
- 28 Apostolical Constitutions, book vii. sect. ii. par. 23.
- 29 Epistle to the Magnesians, chap. ix.
- 30 Syriac Documents, p. 38.
- 31 Id.Ib.
- 32 Id.Ib.
- 33 Id.Ib.

- 34 Fragment 7.
- 35 Tertullian on Prayer, chap. xxiii.
- 36 De Corona, sect. 3.
- 37 Origen against Celsus, book viii. chap. xxii.
- 38 Instructions of Commodianus, sect. 75.
- 39 Apostolical Constitutions, book v. sect. 3, par. 20.
- 40 De Corona, sects. 3 and 4.
- 41 Dialogue with Trypho, chap. x.
- 42 Dialogue with Trypho, chap. xi.
- 43 Id. Chap. xii.
- 44 Tertullian on Idolatry, chap. xiv.
- 45 Id.Ib.
- 46 Tertullian Against the Jews, chap. iv.
- 47 Epistle of Barnabas, chap. xv.
- 48 Dialogue with Trypho, chap. xii.
- 49 Id. chap. xviii.
- 50 See the third chapter of this History.
- 51 Dialogue with Trypho, chap. xxiii.
- 52 Id. chap. xxix.
- 53 Id. chap. xi.
- 54 Lost Writings of Irenaeus, Fragment 7.
- 55 Against Heresies, book iv. chap. viii. sect. 2.
- 56 Id. book iv. chap. xvi. sect. 1.
- 57 Irenaeus against Heresies, book v. chap. xxxiii. sect. 2.
- 58 Id. book. v. chap. xxviii. sect. 3.
- 59 Ex.31:17; Eze.20:12,20.
- 60 Isa.66:22,23; Dan.7:18,27.
- 61 Answer to the Jews, chap. ii.
- 62 Tertullian against Marcion, book iv. chap. xii.

63 Compare his works as follows: Answer to the Jews, chaps. ii, iii,, iv, vi; Against Marcion, book i. chap. xx; book v. chaps. iv, xix.. with De Anima, Chap. xxxvii.; and, On Modesty, chap. v.

64 Isa.1:13,14.

65 Answer to the Jews, chap. iv.; Against Marcion, book iv. chap.. xii.

66 Isa.56:2; 58:13.

67 Answer to the Jews, chap. iv.; Against Marcion, book iv. chap.. xii.

68 Against Marcion, book ii. chap. xxi.

69 Against Marcion, book iv. chap. xii.

70 De Principiis, book iv. chap. i. sect. 17.

71 Ex.16:29; Lev.23:3.

72 Creation of the World, sect. 4.

73 Id. sect. 5.

74 Id.Ib.

75 Creation of the World, sect. 5.

---

CHAPTER 18

THE SABBATH IN THE RECORD OF THE EARLY FATHERS

---

The first reasons for neglecting the Sabbath are now mostly obsolete - A portion of the early fathers taught the perpetuity of the decalogue, and made it the standard of moral character - What they say concerning the origin of the Sabbath at Creation - Their testimony concerning the perpetuity of the ancient Sabbath, and concerning its observance - Enumeration of the things which caused the suppression of the Sabbath and the elevation of Sunday.

---

The reasons offered by the early fathers for neglecting the observance of the Sabbath show conclusively that they had no special light on the subject by reason of living in the first centuries, which we in this later age do not possess. The fact is, so many of the reasons offered by them are manifestly false and absurd that those who in these days discard the Sabbath, do also discard the most of the reasons offered by these fathers for this same course. We have also learned from such of the early fathers as mention first-day observance, the exact nature of the Sunday festival, and all the reasons which in the first centuries were offered in its support. Very few indeed of these reasons are now offered by modern first-day writers.

But some of the fathers bear emphatic testimony to the perpetuity of the ten commandments, and make their observance the condition of eternal life. Some of them also distinctly assert the origin of the Sabbath at creation. Several of them moreover either bear witness to the existence of Sabbath-keepers, or bear decisive testimony to the perpetuity and obligation of the Sabbath, or define the nature of proper Sabbatic observance, or connect the observance of the Sabbath and first day together. Let us now hear the testimony of those who assert the authority of the ten commandments. Irenaeus asserts their perpetuity, and makes them a test of Christian character. Thus he says:

"For God at the first, indeed, warning them [the Jews] by means of natural precepts, which from the beginning he had implanted in mankind, that is, by means of the DECALOGUE (which, if any one does not observe, he has no salvation,) did then demand nothing more of them."<sup>1</sup>

This is a very strong statement. He makes the ten commandments the law of nature implanted in man's being at the beginning; and so inherited by all mankind. This is no doubt true. It is the presence of the carnal mind or law of sin and death, implanted in man by the fall, that has partially obliterated this law, and made the work of the new covenant a necessity.<sup>2</sup> He again asserts the perpetuity and authority of the ten commandments:

"Preparing man for this life, the Lord himself did speak in his own person to all alike the words of the Decalogue: and therefore, in the like manner, do they remain permanently with us, receiving, by means of his advent in the flesh, extension and increase, but not abrogation."<sup>3</sup>

By the "extension" of the decalogue, Irenaeus doubtless means the exposition which the Saviour gave of the meaning of the commandments in his sermon on the mount.<sup>4</sup> Theophilus speaks in like manner concerning the decalogue:-

"For God has given us a law and holy commandments; and every one who keeps these can be saved, and, obtaining the resurrection, can inherit incorruption."<sup>5</sup>

"We have learned a holy law; but we have as lawgiver him who is really God, who teaches us to act righteously, and to be pious, and to do good."<sup>6</sup>

"Of this great and wonderful law which tends to all righteousness, the TEN HEADS are such as we have already rehearsed."<sup>7</sup>

Tertullian calls the ten commandments "the rules of our regenerate life," that is to say, the rules which govern the life of a converted man:

"They who theorize respecting numbers, honor the number ten as the parent of all the others, and as imparting perfection to the human nativity. For my own part, I prefer viewing this measure of time in reference to God, as if implying that the ten months rather initiated man into the ten commandments; so that the numerical estimate of the time needed to consummate our natural birth should correspond to the numerical classification of the rules of our regenerate life."<sup>8</sup>

In showing the deep guilt involved in the violation of the seventh commandment, Tertullian speaks of the sacredness of the commandments which precede it, naming several of them in particular, and among them the fourth, and then says of the precept against adultery that

It stands "in the very forefront of the most holy law, among the primary counts of the celestial edict."<sup>9</sup>

Clement of Rome, or rather the author whose works have been ascribed to this father, speaks thus of the decalogue as a test:

"On account of those, therefore, who, by neglect of their own salvation, please the evil one, and those who, by study of their own profit, seek to please the good One, ten things have been prescribed as a test to this present age, according to the number of the ten plagues which were brought upon Egypt."<sup>10</sup>

Novation, who wrote about A.D. 250, is accounted the founder of the sect called Cathari or Puritans. He wrote a treatise on the Sabbath, which is not extant. There is no reference to Sunday in any of his writings. He makes the following striking remarks concerning the moral law:

"The law was given to the children of Israel for this purpose, that they might profit by it, and RETURN to those virtuous manners which, although they had received them from their fathers, they had corrupted in Egypt by reason of their intercourse with a barbarous people. Finally, also, those ten commandments on the tables teach nothing new, but remind them of what had been obliterated - that righteousness in them, which had been put to sleep, might revive again as it were by the afflatus of the law, after the manner of a fire [nearly extinguished]."<sup>11</sup>

It is evident that in the judgment of Novation, the ten commandments enjoined nothing that was not sacredly regarded by the patriarchs before Jacob went down into Egypt. It follows, therefore, that, in his opinion, the Sabbath was made, not at the fall of the Manna, but when God sanctified the seventh day, and that holy men from the earliest ages observed it.

The Apostolical Constitutions, written about the third century, give us an understanding of what was widely regarded in the third century as apostolic doctrine. They speak thus of the ten commandments:

"Have before thine eyes the fear of God, and always remember the ten commandments of God, - to love the one and only Lord God with all thy strength; to give no heed to idols, or any other beings, as being lifeless gods, or irrational beings or demons."<sup>12</sup>

"He gave a plain law to assist the law of nature, such a one as is pure, saving, and holy, in which his own name was inscribed, perfect, which is never to fail, being complete in ten commands, unspotted, converting souls."<sup>13</sup>

This writer, like Irenaeus, believed in the identity of the decalogue with the law of nature. These testimonies show that in the writings of the early fathers are some of the strongest utterances in behalf of the perpetuity and authority of the ten commandments. Now let us hear what they say concerning the origin of the Sabbath at creation. The epistle ascribed to Barnabas, says:

"And he says in another place, 'If my sons keep the Sabbath, then will I cause my mercy to rest upon them.' The Sabbath is mentioned at the beginning of the creation [thus]: 'And God made in six days the works of his hands, and made an end on the seventh day, and rested on it, and sanctified it.' "<sup>14</sup>

Irenaeus seems plainly to connect the origin of the Sabbath with the sanctification of the seventh day:

"These [things promised] are [to take place] in the times of the kingdom, that is, upon the seventh day, which has been sanctified, in which God rested from all his works which he created, which is the true Sabbath, in which they shall not be engaged in any earthly occupation."<sup>15</sup>

Tertullian, likewise, refers the origin of the Sabbath to "the benediction of the Father:"

"But inasmuch as birth is also completed with the seventh month, I more readily recognize in this number than in the eighth the honor of numerical agreement with the Sabbatical period; so that the month in which Gods' image is sometimes produced in a human birth, shall in its number tally with the day on which God's creation was completed and hallowed."<sup>16</sup>

"For even in the case before us he [Christ] fulfilled the law, while interpreting its condition; [moreover] he exhibits in a clear light the different kinds of work, while doing what the law excepts from the sacredness of the Sabbath, [and] while imparting to the Sabbath day itself which from the beginning had been consecrated by the benediction of the Father, an additional sanctity by his own beneficent action."<sup>17</sup>

Origen, who, as we have seen, believed in a mystical Sabbath, did nevertheless fix its origin at the sanctification of the seventh day:

"For he [Celsus] knows nothing of the day of the Sabbath and rest of God, which follows the completion of the worlds creation, and which lasts during the duration of the world, and in which all those will keep festival with God who have done all their works in their six days."<sup>18</sup>

The testimony of Novation which has been given relative to the sacredness and authority of the decalogue plainly implies the existence of the Sabbath in the patriarchal ages, and its observance by those holy men of old. It was given to Israel that they might

"RETURN to those virtuous manners which, although they had received them from their fathers, they had corrupted in Egypt."

And he adds,

"Those ten commandments on the tables teach nothing new, but remind them of what had been obliterated."<sup>19</sup>

He did, not, therefore, believe the Sabbath to have originated at the fall of the manna, but counted it one of those things which were practiced by their fathers before Jacob went down to Egypt.

Lactantius places the origin of the Sabbath at creation:

"God completed the world and this admirable work of nature in the space of six days (as is contained in the secrets of holy Scripture) and CONSECRATED the seventh day on which he had rested from his works. But this is the Sabbath day, which, in the language of the Hebrews, received its name from the number, whence the seventh is the legitimate and complete number."<sup>20</sup>

In a poem on Genesis written about the time of Lactantius, but by an unknown author, we have an explicit testimony to the divine appointment of the seventh day to a holy use while man was yet in Eden, the garden of God:

"The seventh came, when God
At his work's end did rest, DECREEING IT
SACRED UNTO THE COMING AGE'S JOYS."<sup>21</sup>

The Apostolical Constitution, while teaching the present obligation of the Sabbath, plainly indicate its origin to have been at creation:

"O Lord Almighty, thou hast created the world by Christ, and hast appointed the Sabbath in memory thereof, because that on that day thou hast made up rest from our works, for the meditation upon thy laws."<sup>22</sup>

Such are the testimonies of the early fathers to the primeval origin of the Sabbath, and to the sacredness and perpetual obligation of the ten commandments. We now call attention to what they say relative to the perpetuity of the Sabbath, and to its observance in the centuries during which they lived. Tertullian defines Christ's relation to the Sabbath:

"He was called 'Lord of the Sabbath' because he maintained the Sabbath as his own institution."<sup>23</sup>

He affirms that Christ did not abolish the Sabbath:

"Christ did not at all rescind the Sabbath: he kept the law thereof, and both in the former case did a work which was beneficial to the life of his disciples (for he indulged them with the relief of food when they were hungry), and in the present instance cured the withered hand; in each case intimating by facts, 'I came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill it.' "<sup>24</sup>

Nor can it be said that while Tertullian denied that Christ abolished the Sabbath he did believe that he transferred its sacredness from the seventh day of the week to the first, for he continues thus:

"He [Christ] exhibits in a clear light the different kinds of work, while doing what the law excepts from the sacredness of the Sabbath, [and] while imparting to the Sabbath day itself, which from the beginning had been consecrated by the benediction of the Father, an additional sanctity by his own beneficent action. For he furnished to this day DIVINE SAFEGUARDS - a course which his adversary would have pursued for some other days, to avoid honoring the Creator's Sabbath, and restoring to the Sabbath the works which were proper for it." <sup>25</sup>

This is a very remarkable statement. The modern doctrine of the change of the Sabbath was unknown in Tertullian's time. Had it then been in existence, there could be no doubt that in the words last quoted he was aiming at it a heavy blow; for the very thing which he asserts Christ's adversary, Satan, would have had him do, that modern first-day writers assert he did do in consecrating another day instead of adding to the sanctity of his Father's Sabbath.

Archelaus of Cascar in Mesopotamia emphatically denies the abolition of the Sabbath:

"Again, as to the assertion that the Sabbath has been abolished, we deny that he has abolished it plainly; for he was himself also Lord of the Sabbath." <sup>26</sup>

Justin Martyr, as we have seen, was an outspoken opponent of Sabbatic observance, and of the authority of the law of God. He was by no means always candid in what he said. He has occasion to refer to those who observed the seventh day, and he does it with contempt. Thus he says:

"But if some, through weak-mindedness, wish to observe such institutions as were given by Moses (from which they expect some virtue, but which we believe were appointed by reason of the hardness of the people's hearts), along with their hope in this Christ, and [wish to perform] the eternal and natural acts of righteousness and piety, yet choose to live with the Christians and the faithful, as I said before, not inducing them either to be circumcised like themselves, or to keep the Sabbath, or to observe any other such ceremonies, then I hold that we ought to join ourselves to such, and associate with them in all things as kinsmen and brethren." <sup>27</sup>

These words are spoken of Sabbath-keeping Christians. Such of them as were of Jewish descent no doubt generally retained circumcision. But there were many Gentile Christians who observed the Sabbath, as we shall see, and it is not true that they observed circumcision. Justin speaks of this class as acting from "weak-mindedness," yet he inadvertently alludes to the keeping of the commandments as the performance of "the ETERNAL and NATURAL ACTS OF RIGHTEOUSNESS," a most appropriate designation indeed. Justin would fellowship those who act thus, provided they would fellowship him in the contrary course. But though Justin, on this condition could fellowship these "week-minded" brethren, he says that there are those who "do not venture to have any intercourse with, or to extend hospitality to, such persons; but I do not agree with them."<sup>28</sup> This shows the bitter spirit which prevailed in some quarters toward the Sabbath, even as early as Justin's time. Justin has no word of condemnation for these intolerant professors; he is only solicitous lest those persons who perform "the eternal and natural acts of righteousness and piety" should condemn those who do not perform them.

Clement of Alexandria, though a mystical writer, bears an important testimony to the perpetuity of the ancient Sabbath, and to man's present need thereof. He comments thus on the fourth commandment:

"And the fourth word is that which intimates that the world was created by God, and that he gave us the seventh day as a rest, on account of the trouble that there is in life. For God is incapable of weariness, and suffering, and want. But we who bear flesh need rest. The seventh day therefore, is proclaimed a rest - abstraction from ills - preparing for the primal day, our true rest."<sup>29</sup>

Clement recognized the authority of the moral law; for he treats of the ten commandments, one by one, and shows what each enjoins. He plainly teaches that the Sabbath was made for man, and that he now needs it as a day of rest, and his language implies that it was made at the creation. But in the next paragraph, he makes some curious suggestions, which deserve notice:

"Having reached this point, we must mention these things by the way; since the discourse has turned on the seventh and the eighth. For the eighth may possibly turn out to be properly the seventh, and the seventh manifestly the sixth, and the latter properly the Sabbath, and the seventh a day of work. For the creation of the world was concluded in six days."<sup>30</sup>

This language has been adduced to show that Clement called the eighth day, or Sunday, the Sabbath. But first-day writers in general have not dared to commit themselves to such an interpretation, and some of them have expressly discarded it. Let us notice this statement with especial care. He speaks of the ordinals seventh and eighth in the abstract, but probably with reference to the days of the week. Observe then,

1. That he does not intimate that the eighth day has become the Sabbath in place of the seventh which was once such, but he says that the eighth day may possibly turn out to be properly the seventh.
2. That in Clement's time, A.D. 194, there was not any confusion in the minds of men as to which day was the ancient Sabbath, and which one was the first day of the week, or eighth day, as it was often called, nor does he intimate that there was.
3. But Clement, from some cause, says that possibly the eighth day should be counted the seventh, and the seventh day the sixth. Now, if this should be done, it would change the numbering of the days, not only as far back as the resurrection of Christ, but all the way back to the creation.
4. If, therefore, in this place, designed to teach that Sunday is the Sabbath, he must also have held that it always had been such.

5. But observe that, while he changes the numbering of the days of the week, he does not change the Sabbath from one day to another. He says the eighth may possibly be the seventh, and the seventh, properly the sixth, and the latter, or this one [Greek, e men kurios einai sabbaton], properly the Sabbath, and the seventh a day of work.

6. By the latter must be understood the day last mentioned, which he says should be called, not the seventh, but the sixth; and by the seventh must certainly be intended that day which he says is not the eighth, but the seventh, that is to say, Sunday.

There remains but one difficulty to be solved, and that is why he should suggest the changing of the numbering of the days of the week by striking one from the count of each day, thus making the Sabbath the sixth day in the count instead of the seventh; and making Sunday the seventh day in the count instead of the eighth. The answer seems to have eluded the observation of the first-day and anti-Sabbatarian writers who have sought to grasp it. But there is a fact which solves the difficulty. Clement's commentary on the fourth commandment, from which these quotations are taken, is principally made up of curious observations on "the perfect number six," "the number seven motherless and childless," and the number eight, which is "a cube," and the like matters, and is taken with some change of arrangement almost word for word from Philo Judaeus, a teacher who flourished at Alexandria about one century before Clement. Whoever will take pains to compare these two writers will find in Philo nearly all the ideas and illustrations which Clement has used, and the very language also in which he has expressed them.<sup>31</sup> Philo was a mystical teacher to whom Clement looked up as to a master. A statement which we find in Philo, in immediate connection with several curious ideas, which Clement quotes from him, gives, beyond all doubt, the key to Clement's suggestion that possibly the eighth day should be called the seventh, and the seventh day called the sixth. Philo said that, according to God's purpose, the first day of time was not to be numbered with the other days of the creation week. Thus he says:

"And he allotted each of the six days to one of the portions of the whole, TAKING OUT THE FIRST DAY which he does not even call the first day, that it may not be numbered with the others, but entitling it ONE, he names it rightly, perceiving in it, and ascribing to it, the nature and appellation of the limit."<sup>32</sup>

This would simply change the numbering of the days, as counted by Philo, and afterward partially adopted by Clement, and make the Sabbath, not the seventh day, but the sixth, and Sunday, not the eighth day, but the seventh; but it would still leave the Sabbath day and the Sunday the same identical days as before. It would, however, give to the Sabbath the name of sixth day, because the first of the six days of creation was not counted; and it would cause the eighth day, so called in the early church because of its coming next after the Sabbath, to be called seventh day. Thus the Sabbath would be the sixth day, and the seventh a day of work, and yet the Sabbath would be the identical day that it had ever been, and the Sunday, though called seventh day, would still, as ever before, remain a day on which ordinary labor was lawful. Of course, Philo's idea that the first day of time should not be counted, is wholly false; for there is not one fact in the Bible to support it, but many which expressly contradict it, and even Clement, with all deference to Philo, only timidly suggests it. But when the matter is laid open, it shows that Clement had no thought of calling Sunday the Sabbath, and that he does expressly confirm what we have fully proved out of other of the fathers, that Sunday was a day on which, in their judgment, labor was not sinful.

Tertullian, at different periods of his life, held different views respecting the Sabbath, and committed them all to writing. We last quoted from him a decisive testimony to the perpetuity of the Sabbath, coupled with an equally decisive testimony against the sanctification of the first day of the week. In another work, from which we have already quoted his statement that Christians should not kneel on Sunday, we find another statement that "some few" abstained from kneeling on the Sabbath. This has probable reference to Carthage, where Tertullian lived. He speaks thus:

"In the matter of kneeling also, prayer is subject to diversity of observance, through the act of some few who abstain from kneeling on the Sabbath; and since this dissension is particularly on its trial before the churches, the Lord will give his grace that the dissentients may either yield, or else indulge their opinion without offense to others."<sup>33</sup>

The act of standing in prayer was one of the chief honors conferred upon Sunday. Those who refrained from kneeling on the seventh day, without doubt did it because they desired to honor that day. This particular act is of no consequence; for it was adopted in imitation of those who, from tradition and custom, thus honored Sunday; but we have in this an undoubted reference to Sabbath-keeping Christians. Tertullian speaks of them, however, in a manner quite unlike that of Justin in his reference to the commandment-keepers of his time.

Origen, like many other of the fathers, was far from being consistent with himself. Though he has spoken against Sabbatic observance, and has honored the so-called Lord's day as something better than the ancient Sabbath, he has nevertheless given a discourse expressly designed to teach Christians the proper method of observing the Sabbath. Here is a portion of this sermon:

"But what is the feast of the Sabbath except that of which the apostle speaks, 'There remaineth therefore a Sabbatism,' that is, the observance of the Sabbath by the people of God? Leaving the Jewish observances of the Sabbath, let us see how the Sabbath ought to be observed by a Christian. On the Sabbath day all worldly labors ought to be abstained from. If, therefore, you cease from all secular works, and execute nothing worldly, but give yourselves up to spiritual exercises, repairing to church, attending to sacred reading and instruction, thinking of celestial things, solicitous for the future, placing the Judgment to come before your eyes, not looking to things present and visible, but to those which are future and invisible, this is the observance of the Christian Sabbath."<sup>34</sup>

This is by no means a bad representation of the proper observance of the Sabbath. Such a discourse addressed to Christians is a strong evidence that many did then hallow that day. Some, indeed, have claimed that these words were spoken concerning Sunday. They would have it that he contrasts the observance of the first day with that of the seventh. But the contrast is not between the different methods of keeping two days, but between two methods of observing one day. The Jews in Origen's time spent the day mainly in mere abstinence from labor, and often added sensuality to idleness. But the Christians were to observe it in divine worship, as well as sacred rest. What day he intends cannot be doubtful. It is DIES SABBATI, a term which can signify only the seventh day. Here is the first instance of the term Christian Sabbath, Sabbati Christiani, and it is expressly applied to the seventh day observed by Christians.

The longer form of the reputed epistle of Ignatius to the Magnesians was not written till after Origen's time, but, though not written by Ignatius, it is valuable for the light which it sheds upon the existing state of things at the time of its composition, and for marking the progress which apostasy had made with respect to the Sabbath. Here is its reference to the Sabbath and first day:-

"Let us therefore no longer keep the Sabbath after the Jewish manner, and rejoice in days of idleness; for 'he that does not work, let him not eat.' For say the [holy] oracles, 'In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat thy bread.' But let every one of you keep the Sabbath after a spiritual manner, rejoicing in meditation on the law, not in relaxation of the body, admiring the workmanship of God, and not eating things prepared the day before, nor using lukewarm drinks, and walking within a prescribed space, nor finding delight in dancing and plaudits which have no sense in them. And after the observance of the Sabbath, let every friend of Christ keep the Lord's day as a festival, the resurrection day, the queen and chief of all the days [of the week]. Looking forward to this, the prophet declared, 'To the end, for the eighth day,' on which our life both sprang up again, and the victory over death was obtained in Christ."<sup>35</sup>

This writer specifies the different things which made up the Jewish observance of the Sabbath. They may be summed up under two heads. 1. Strict abstinence from labor. 2. Dancing and carousal. Now, in the light of what Origen has said, we can understand the contrast which this writer draws between the Jewish and Christian observance of the Sabbath. The error of the Jews in the first part of this was that they contented themselves with mere bodily relaxation, without raising their thoughts to God, the Creator, and this mere idleness soon gave place to sensual folly.

The Christian, as Origen draws the contrast, refrains from labor on the Sabbath that he may raise his heart in grateful worship. Or, as this writer draws it, the Christian keeps the Sabbath in a spiritual manner, rejoicing in meditation on the law; but to do thus, he must hallow it in the manner which that law commands, that is, in the observance of a sacred rest which commemorates the rest of the Creator. The writer evidently believed in the observance of the Sabbath as an act of obedience to that law on which they were to meditate on that day. And the nature of the epistle indicates that it was observed, at all events, in the country where it was written. But mark the work of apostasy. The so-called Lord's day for which the writer could offer nothing better than an argument drawn from the title of the sixth psalm (see its marginal reading) is exalted above the Lord's holy day, and made the queen of all days!

The Apostolical Constitutions, though not written in apostolic times, were in existence as early as the third century, and were then very generally believed to express the doctrine of the apostles. They do therefore furnish important historical testimony to the practice of the church at that time, and also indicate the great progress which apostasy had made. Guericke speaks thus of them:

"This is a collection of ecclesiastical statutes purporting to be the work of the apostolic age, but in reality formed gradually in the second, third, and fourth centuries, and is of much value in reference to the history of polity, and Christian archaeology generally."<sup>36</sup>

Mosheim says of them:

"The matter of this work is unquestionably ancient; since the manners and discipline of which it exhibits a view are those which prevailed amongst the Christians of the second and third centuries, especially those resident in Greece and the oriental regions."<sup>37</sup>

These Constitutions indicate that the Sabbath was extensively observed in the third century. They also show the standing of the Sunday festival in that century. After solemnly enjoining the sacred observance of the ten commandments, they thus enforce the Sabbath:

"Consider the manifold workmanship of God, which received its beginning through Christ. Thou shalt observe the Sabbath, on account of Him who ceased from his work of creation, but ceased not from his work of providence: it is a rest for meditation of the law, not for idleness of the hands."<sup>38</sup>

This is sound Sabbatarian doctrine. To show how distinctly these Constitutions recognize the decalogue as the foundation of Sabbatic authority we quote the words next preceding the above, though we have quoted them on another occasion:

"Have before thine eyes the fear of God, and always remember the ten commandments of God, - to love the one and only Lord God with all thy strength; to give no heed to idols, or any other beings, as being lifeless gods, or irrational beings or daemons."<sup>39</sup>

But though these Constitutions thus recognize the authority of the decalogue and the sacred obligation of the seventh day, they elevate the Sunday festival in some respects to higher honor than the Sabbath, though they claim for it no precept of the Scriptures. Thus they say:

"But keep the Sabbath, and the Lord's day festival; because the former is the memorial of the creation, and the latter of the resurrection."<sup>40</sup>

"For the Sabbath is the ceasing of the creation, the completion of the world, the inquiry after laws, and the grateful praise to God for the blessings he has bestowed upon men. All which the Lord's day excels, and shows the Mediator himself, the Provider, the Law-giver, the Cause of the resurrection, the First-born of the whole creation."<sup>41</sup>

"So that the Lord's day commands us to offer unto thee, O Lord, thanksgiving for all. For this is the grace afforded by thee, which, on account of its greatness, has obscured all other blessings."<sup>42</sup>

Tested by his own principles, the writer of these Constitutions was far advanced in apostasy; for he held a festival, for which he claimed no divine authority, more honorable than one which he acknowledged to be ordained of God. There could be but one step more in this course, and that would be to set aside the commandment of God for the ordinance of man, and this step was not very long afterward actually taken. One other point should be noticed. It is said:

"Let the slaves work five days; but on the Sabbath day and the Lord's day let them have leisure to go to church for instruction in piety."<sup>43</sup>

The question of the sinfulness of labor on either of these days is not here taken into the account; for the reason assigned is that the slaves may have leisure to attend public worship. But while these Constitutions elsewhere forbid labor on the Sabbath on the authority of the decalogue, they do not forbid it upon the first day of the week. Take the following as an example:

"O Lord Almighty, thou hast created the world by Christ, and hast appointed the Sabbath in memory thereof, because that on that day thou hast made us rest from our works, for the meditation upon thy laws."<sup>44</sup>

The Apostolical Constitutions are valuable to us, not as authority respecting the teaching of the apostles, but as giving us a knowledge of the views and practices which prevailed in the third century. As these Constitutions were extensively regarded as embodying the doctrine of the apostles, they furnish conclusive evidence that, at the time when they were put in writing, the ten commandments were very generally revered as the immutable rule of right, and that the Sabbath of the Lord was by many observed as an act of obedience to the fourth commandment, and as the divine memorial of the creation. They also show that the first-day festival had, in the third century, attained such strength and influence as to clearly indicate that ere long it would claim the entire ground. But observe that the Sabbath and the so-called Lord's day were then regarded as distinct institutions, and that no hint of the change of the Sabbath from the seventh day to the first is even once given.

Thus much out of the fathers concerning the authority of the decalogue, and concerning the perpetuity and observance of the ancient Sabbath. The suppression of the Sabbath of the Bible, and the elevation of Sunday to its place, has been shown to be in no sense the work of the Saviour. But so great a work required the united action of powerful causes, and these causes we now enumerate.

1. Hatred toward the Jews. This people, who retained the ancient Sabbath, had slain Christ. It was easy for men to forget that Christ, as Lord of the Sabbath, had claimed it as his own institution, and to call the Sabbath a Jewish institution which Christians should not regard.<sup>45</sup>

2. The hatred of the church of Rome toward the Sabbath, and its determination to elevate Sunday to the highest place. This church, as the chief in the work of apostasy, took the lead in the earliest effort to suppress the Sabbath by turning it into a fast. And the very first act of papal aggression was by an edict in behalf of Sunday. Thenceforward, in every possible form, this church continued this work until the pope announced that he had received a divine mandate for Sunday observance [the very thing lacking] in a roll which fell from Heaven.

3. The voluntary observance of memorable days. In the Christian church, almost from the beginning, men voluntarily honored the fourth, the sixth, and the first days of the week, and also the anniversary of the Passover and the Pentecost, to commemorate the betrayal, the death, and the resurrection, of Christ, and the descent of the Holy Spirit, which acts in themselves could not be counted sinful.

4. The making of tradition of equal authority with the Scriptures. This was the great error of the early church, and the one to which that church was specially exposed, as having in it those who had seen the apostles, or who had seen those who had seen them. It was this which rendered the voluntary observance of memorable days a dangerous thing. For what began as a voluntary observance became, after the lapse of a few years, a standing custom, established by tradition, which must be obeyed because it came from those who had seen the apostles, or from those who had seen others who had seen them. This is the origin of the various errors of the great apostasy.

5. The entrance of the no-law heresy. This is seen in Justin Martyr, the earliest witness to the Sunday festival, and in the church of Rome of which he was then a member.

6. The extensive observance of Sunday as a heathen festival. The first day of the week corresponded to the widely observed heathen festival of the sun. It was therefore easy to unite the honor of Christ in the observance of the day of his resurrection with the convenience and worldly advantage of his people in having the same festival day with their heathen neighbors, and to make it a special act of piety in that the conversion of the heathen was thereby facilitated, while the neglect of the ancient Sabbath was justified by stigmatizing that divine memorial as a Jewish institution with which Christians should have no concern.

---

1 Irenaeus Against Heresies, book iv. chap. xv. sect. 1.

2 Jer.31:33; Rom.7:21-25; 8:1-7.

3 Irenaeus Against Heresies, book iv. chap. xvi. sect. 4.

4 Matt. Chapters 5, 6, 7.

5 Theophilus to Autolycus, book ii. chap. xxvii.

6 Id. BOOK III. CHAP IX.

7 Id.Ib.

8 De Anima, chap. xxxvii.

9 On Modesty, chap. v.

10 Recognitions of Clement, book iii. chap. lv.

11 Novation on the Jewish Meats, chap. iii.

12 Apostolical Constitutions, book ii. sect. 4. par. 36.

13 Id. book vi. sect. 4, par. 19.

14 Epistle of Barnabas, chap. xv.

15 Irenaeus Against Heresies, book v. chap. xxxiii. sect. 2.

16 De Anima, chap. xxxvii.

17 Tertullian Against Marcion, book iv, chap. xii.

- 18 Origen Against Celsus, book vi. chap. lxi.
- 19 Novatian on the Jewish Meats, chap. iii.
- 20 Divine Institutes of Lactantius, book vii. chap. xiv.
- 21 Poem on Genesis, Lines 51-53.
- 22 Apostolical Constitutions, book vii. sect. 2, par. 36.
- 23 Tertullian Against Marcion, book iv. chap. xii.
- 24 Id.Ib.
- 25 Tertullian Against Marcion, book iv. chap. xii.
- 26 Disputation with Manes, sect. 42.
- 27 Dialogue with Trypho, chap. xlvii.
- 28 Id.Ib.
- 29 Clement's Miscellanies, book vi. chap. xvi.
- 30 Id.Ib.
- 31 Compare Clement of Alexandria, vol. ii. pp. 386-390, Ante-Nicene library edition, or the Miscellanies of Clement, book vi. chap. xvi. with Bohn's edition of Philo, vol. i. pp. 3, 4, 29, 30, 31, 32, 54, 55; vol. iii. p. 159; vol. iv. p. 452.
- 32 Bohn's edition of Philo Judaeus, vol. i. p. 4.
- 33 Tertullian on Prayer, chap. xxiii.
- 34 Origen's Opera, Tome 2, p. 358, Paris, 1733, "Quo est autem festivitas Sabbati nisi illa de qua Apostolus dicit, 'relinqueretur ergo Sabbatismus,' hoc est, Sabbati observatio, 'populo Dei?' Relinquentes ergo Judaicas Sabbati observationes, qualis debeat esse Christiano Sabbati observatio, videamus. Die Sabbati nihil ex omnibus mundi actibus oportet operari. Si ergo desinas ab omnibus saecularibus operibus, et nihil mundanum geras, sed spiritualibus operibus vaces, ad ecclesiam convenias, lectionibus divinis et tractatibus aurem praebeas, et de ecclestibus cogites, de futura spe sollicitudinem geras, venturum judicium prae oculis habeas, non respicias ad prae sentia et visibilia, sed ad invisibilia et futura, haec est observatio Sabbati Christiani." - Origenis in Numeras Homilia 23.
- 35 Epistle to the Magnesians (longer form) chap. ix.
- 36 Ancient church, p. 212.
- 37 Historical Commentaries, cent. 1. sect. 51.
- 38 Apostolical Constitutions, book ii. sect. 4, par. 36.
- 39 Id.Ib.
- 40 Id. book. vii. sect. 2, par. 23.

41 Id. book vii. sect. 2, par. 36.

42 Apostolical Constitutions, book ii, sec. 4. par. 36.

43 Id. book viii. sect. 4, par. 33.

44 Id. book vii. sect. 2, par. 36.

45 Victorinus says, "Let the sixth day become a rigorous fast, lest we should appear to observe any Sabbath with the Jews." - On the creation of the World, sect. 4. And Constantine says, "It becomes us to have nothing in common with the perfidious Jews." -Socrates' Eccl. Hist. book v. chap. xxii.

---

CHAPTER 19

THE SABBATH AND FIRST-DAY DURING THE FIRST FIVE CENTURIES

---

Origin of the Sabbath and of the festival of the sun contrasted - Entrance of that festival into the church - The Moderns with the Ancients - The Sabbath observed by the early Christians - Testimony of Morer - Of Twisse - Of Giesler - Of Mosheim - Of Coleman - Of Bishop Tayler - The Sabbath loses ground before the Sunday festival - Several bodies of decided Sabbatarians - Testimony of Brerewood - Constantine's Sunday law - Sunday a day of labor with the primitive church - Constantine's edict a heathen law, and himself at that time a heathen - The bishop of Rome authoritatively confers the name of Lord's day upon Sunday - Heylyn narrates the steps by which Sunday arose to power - A marked change in the history of that institution - Paganism brought into the church - The Sabbath weakened by Constantine's influence - Remarkable facts concerning Eusebius - The Sabbath recovers strength again - The council of Laodicea pronounces a curse upon the Sabbath-keepers - The progress of apostasy marked - Authority of church councils considered - Chrysostom - Jerome - Augustine - Sunday edicts - Testimony of Socrates relative to the Sabbath about the middle of the fifth century - Of Sozomen - Effectual suppression of the Sabbath at the close of the fifth century.

---

The origin of the Sabbath and of the festival of Sunday is now distinctly understood. When God made the world, he gave to man the Sabbath that he might not forget the Creator of all things. When men apostatized from God, Satan turned them to the worship of the sun, and, as a standing memorial of their veneration for that luminary, caused them to dedicate to his honor the first day of the week. When the elements of apostasy had sufficiently matured in the Christian church, this ancient festival stood forth as a rival to the Sabbath of the Lord. The manner in which it obtained a foothold in the Christian church has been already shown; and many facts which have an important bearing upon the struggle between these rival institutions have also been given. We have, in the preceding chapters, given the statements of the most ancient Christian writers respecting the Sabbath and first-day in the early church. As we now trace the history of these two days during the first five centuries of the Christian era, we shall give the statements of modern church historians, covering the same ground with the early fathers, and shall also quote in continuation of the ancient writers the testimonies of the earliest church historians. The reader can thus discover how nearly the ancients and moderns agree. Of the observance of the Sabbath in the early church, Morer speaks thus:

"The primitive Christians had a great veneration for the Sabbath, and spent the day in devotion and sermons. And it is not to be doubted but they derived this practice from the apostles themselves, as appears by several scriptures to that purpose; who, keeping both that day and the first of the week, gave occasion to the succeeding ages to join them together, and make it one festival, though there was not the same reason for the continuance of the custom as there was to begin it."<sup>1</sup>

A learned English first-day writer of the seventeenth century, William Twisse, D. D., thus states the early history of these two days:

"Yet for some hundred years in the primitive church, not the Lord's day only, but the seventh day also, was religiously observed, not by Ebion and Cerinthus only, but by pious Christians also, as Baronius writeth, and Gomarus confesseth, and Rivet also, that we are bound in conscience under the gospel, to allow for God's service a better proportion of time, than the Jews did under the law, rather than a worse."<sup>2</sup>

That the observance of the Sabbath was not confined to Jewish converts, the learned Giesler explicitly testifies:

"While the Jewish Christians of Palestine retained the entire Mosaic law, and consequently the Jewish festivals, the Gentile Christians observed also the Sabbath and the passover,<sup>3</sup> with reference to the last scenes of Jesus' life, but without Jewish superstition. In addition to these, Sunday, as the day of Christ's resurrection, was devoted to religious services."<sup>4</sup>

The statement of Mosheim may be thought to contradict that of Giesler. Thus he says:

"The seventh day of the week was also observed as a festival, not by the Christians in general, but by such churches only as were principally composed of Jewish converts, nor did the other Christians censure this custom as criminal and unlawful."<sup>5</sup>

It will be observed that Mosheim does not deny that the Jewish converts observed the Sabbath. He denies that this was done by the Gentile Christians. The proof on which he rests this denial is thus stated by him:

"The churches of Bithynia, of which Pliny speaks, in his letter to Trajan, had only one stated day for the celebration of public worship; and that was undoubtedly the first day of the week, or what we call the Lord's day."<sup>6</sup>

The proposition to be proved is this: The Gentile Christians did not observe the Sabbath. The proof is found in the following fact: The churches of Bithynia assembled on a stated day for the celebration of divine worship. It is seen therefore that the conclusion is gratuitous, and wholly unauthorized by the testimony.<sup>7</sup> But this instance shows the dexterity of Mosheim in drawing inferences, and gives us some insight into the kind of evidence which supports some of these sweeping statements in behalf of Sunday. Who can say that this "stated day" was not the very day enjoined in the fourth commandment? Of the Sabbath and first day in the early ages of the church, Coleman speaks as follows:

"The last day of the week was strictly kept in connection with that of the first day, for a long time after the overthrow of the temple and its worship. Down even to the fifth century the observance of the Jewish Sabbath was continued in the Christian church, but with a rigor and solemnity gradually diminishing until it was wholly discontinued."<sup>8</sup>

This is a most explicit acknowledgment that the Bible Sabbath was long observed by the body of the Christian church. Coleman is a first-day writer, and therefore not likely to state the case too strongly in behalf of the seventh day. He is a modern writer, but we have already proved his statements true out of the ancients. It is true that Coleman speaks also of the first day of the week, yet his subsequent language shows that it was a long while before this became a sacred day. Thus he says:

"During the early ages of the church it was never entitled 'the Sabbath,' this word being confined to the seventh day of the week, the Jewish Sabbath, which, as we have already said, continued to be observed for several centuries by the converts to Christianity."<sup>9</sup>

This fact is made still clearer by the following language, in which this historian admits Sunday to be nothing but a human ordinance:

"No law or precept appears to have been given by Christ or the apostles, either for the abrogation of the Jewish Sabbath, or the institution of the Lord's day, or the substitution of the first for the seventh day of the week."<sup>10</sup>

Coleman does not seem to realize that in making this truthful statement he has directly acknowledged that the ancient Sabbath is still in full force as a divine institution, and that first-day observance is only authorized by the traditions of men. He next relates the manner in which this Sunday festival which had been nourished in the bosom of the church usurped the place of the Lord's Sabbath; a warning to all Christians of the tendency of human institutions, if cherished by the people of God, to destroy those which are divine. Let this important language be carefully pondered. He speaks thus:

"The observance of the Lord's day was ordered while yet the Sabbath of the Jews was continued; nor was the latter superseded until the former had acquired the same solemnity and importance, which belonged, at first, to that great day which God originally ordained and blessed. . . . But in time, after the Lord's day was fully established, the observance of the Sabbath of the Jews was gradually discontinued, and was finally denounced as heretical."<sup>11</sup>

Thus is seen the result of cherishing this harmless Sunday festival in the church. It only asked toleration at first; but gaining strength by degrees, it gradually undermined the Sabbath of the Lord, and finally denounced its observance as heretical.

Jeremy Taylor, a distinguished bishop of the Church of England, and a man of great erudition, but a decided opponent of Sabbatic obligation, confirms the testimony of Coleman. He affirms that the Sabbath was observed by the Christians of the first three hundred years, but denies that they did this out of respect to the authority or the law of God. But we have shown from the fathers that those who hallowed the Sabbath did it as an act of obedience to the fourth commandment, and that the decalogue was acknowledged as of perpetual obligation, and as the perfect rule of right. As Bishop T. denies that this was their ground of observance, he should have shown some other, which he has not done. Thus he says:

"The Lord's day did not succeed in the place of the Sabbath, but the Sabbath was wholly abrogated, and the Lord's day was merely an ecclesiastical institution. It was not introduced by virtue of the fourth commandment, because they for almost three hundred years together kept that day which was in that commandment; but they did it also without any opinion of prime obligation, and therefore they did not suppose it moral."<sup>12</sup>

That such an opinion relative to the obligation of the fourth commandment had gained ground extensively among the leaders of the church, as early at least as the fourth century, and probably in the third, is sufficiently attested by the action of the council of Laodicea, A.D. 364, which anathematized those who should observe the Sabbath, as will be noticed in its place. That this loose view of the morality of the fourth commandment was resisted by many, is shown by the existence of various bodies of steadfast Sabbatharians in that age, whose memory has come down to us; and also by the fact that that council made such a vigorous effort to put down the Sabbath. Coleman has clearly portrayed the gradual depression of the Sabbath, as the first-day festival arose in strength, until Sabbath-keeping became heretical, when, by ecclesiastical authority, the Sabbath was suppressed, and the festival of Sunday became fully established as a new and different institution. The natural consequence of this is seen in the rise of distinct sects, or bodies, who were distinguished for their observance of the seventh day. That they should be denounced as heretical and falsely charged with many errors is not surprising, when we consider that their memory has been handed down to us by their opponents, and that Sabbath-keepers in our own time are not unfrequently treated in this very manner. The first of these ancient Sabbatharian bodies was the Nazarenes. Of these, Morer testifies that,

They "retained the Sabbath; and though they pretended to believe as Christians, yet they practiced as Jews, and so were in reality neither one nor the other."<sup>13</sup>

And Dr. Frances White, lord bishop of Ely, mentions the Nazarenes as one of the ancient bodies of Sabbath-keepers who were condemned by the church leaders for that heresy; and he classes them with heretics as Morer has done.<sup>14</sup> Yet the Nazarenes have a peculiar claim to our regard, as being in reality the apostolic church of Jerusalem, and its direct successors. Thus Gibbon testifies:

"The Jewish converts, or, as they were afterwards called, the Nazarenes, who had laid the foundations of the church, soon found themselves overwhelmed by the increasing multitudes, that from all the various religions of polytheism enlisted under the banner of Christ . . . The Nazarenes retired from the ruins of Jerusalem to the little town of Pella beyond the Jordan, where that ancient church languished above sixty years in solitude and obscurity."<sup>15</sup>

It is not strange that that church which fled out of Judea at the word of Christ<sup>16</sup> should long retain the Sabbath, as it appears that they did, even as late as the fourth century. Morer mentions another class of Sabbath-keepers in the following language:

"About the same time were the Hypsistarii who closed with these as to what concerned the Sabbath, yet would by no means accept circumcision as too plain a testimony of ancient bondage. All these were heretics, and so adjudged to be by the Catholic church. Yet their hypocrisy and industry were such as gained them a considerable footing in the Christian world."<sup>17</sup>

The bishop of Ely names these also as a body of Sabbath-keepers whose heresy was condemned by the church.<sup>18</sup> The learned Joseph Bingham, M. A. gives the following account of them:

"There was another sect which called themselves Hypsistarians, that is, worshipers of the most high God, whom they worshiped as the Jews only in one person. And they observed their Sabbaths and used distinction of meats, clean and unclean, though they did not regard circumcision, as Gregory Nazianzen, whose father was once one of this sect, gives the account of them."<sup>19</sup>

It must ever be remembered that these people, whom the Catholic church adjudged to be heretics, are not speaking for themselves: their enemies who condemned them have transmitted to posterity all that is known of their history. It would be well if heretics, who meet with little mercy at the hand of ecclesiastical writers, could at least secure the impartial justice of a truthful record.

Another class are thus described by Cox in his elaborate work entitled "Sabbath Laws and Sabbath Duties:"

"In this way [that is, by presenting the testimony of the Bible on the subject] arose the ancient Sabbatarians, a body it is well known of very considerable importance in respect both to numbers and influence, during the greater part of the third and the early part of the next century,"<sup>20</sup>

The close of the third century witnessed the Sabbath much weakened in its hold upon the church in general, and the festival of Sunday, although possessed of no divine authority, steadily gaining in strength and in sacredness. The following historical testimony from a member of the English Church, Edward Brerewood, professor in Gresham College, London, gives a good general view of the matter, though the author's anti-Sabbatarian views are mixed with it. He says:

"The ancient Sabbath did remain and was observed together with the celebration of the Lord's day by the Christians of the east church above three hundred years after our Saviour's death; and besides that, no other day for more hundreds of years than I spake of before, was known in the church by the name of Sabbath but that: let the collection thereof and conclusion of all be this: The Sabbath of the seventh day as touching the alligations of God's solemn worship to time was ceremonial; that Sabbath was religiously observed in the east church three hundred years and more after our Saviour's passion. That church being the great part of Christendom, and having the apostles' doctrine and example to instruct them, would have restrained it if it had been deadly."<sup>21</sup>

Such was the case in the eastern churches at the end of the third century; but in such of the western churches as sympathized with the church of Rome, the Sabbath had been treated as a fast from the beginning of that century, to express their opposition toward those who observed it according to the commandment.

In the early part of the fourth century occurred an event which could not have been foreseen, but which threw an immense weight in favor of Sunday into the balances already trembling between the rival institutions, the Sabbath of the Lord and the festival of the sun. This was nothing less than an edict from the throne of the Roman Empire in behalf of "the venerable day of the sun." It was issued by the emperor Constantine in A.D. 321, and is thus expressed:

"Let all the judges and town people, and the occupation of all trades rest on the venerable day of the sun; but let those who are situated in the country, freely and at full liberty attend to the business of agriculture; because it often happens that no other day is so fit for sowing corn and planting vines; lest, the critical moment being let slip, men should lose the commodities granted by Heaven. Given the seventh day of March; Crispus and Constantine being consuls, each of them for the second time."<sup>22</sup>

Of this law, a high authority thus speaks:

"It was Constantine the Great who first made a law for the proper observance of Sunday; and who, according to Eusebius, appointed it should be regularly celebrated throughout the Roman Empire. Before him, and even in his time, they observed the Jewish Sabbath, as well as Sunday; both to satisfy the law of Moses, and to imitate the apostles who used to meet together on the first day. By Constantine's law, promulgated in 321, it was decreed that for the future the Sunday should be kept as a day of rest in all cities and towns; but he allowed the country people to follow their work."<sup>23</sup>

Another eminent authority thus states the purport of this law:

"Constantine the Great made a law for the whole empire (A.D. 321) that Sunday should be kept as a day of rest in all cities and towns; but he allowed the country people to follow their work on that day."<sup>24</sup>

Thus the fact is placed beyond all dispute that this decree gave full permission to all kinds of agricultural labor. The following testimony of Mosheim is therefore worthy of strict attention:

"The first day of the week, which was the ordinary and stated time for the public assemblies of the Christians, was in consequence of a peculiar law enacted by Constantine, observed with greater solemnity than it had formerly been."<sup>25</sup>

What will the advocates of first-day sacredness say to this? They quote Mosheim respecting Sunday observance in the first century - which testimony has been carefully examined in this work<sup>26</sup> - and they seem to think that his language in support of first-day sacredness is nearly equal in authority to the language of the New Testament; in fact, they regard it as supplying an important omission in that book. Yet Mosheim states respecting Constantine's Sunday law, promulgated in the fourth century, which restrained merchants and mechanics, but allowed all kinds of agricultural labor on that day, that it caused the day to be "observed with greater solemnity than it had formerly been." It follows, therefore, on Mosheim's own showing, that Sunday, during the first three centuries, was not a day of abstinence from labor in the Christian church. On this point, Bishop Taylor thus testifies:

"The primitive Christians did all manner of works upon the Lord's day, even in the times of persecution, when they are the strictest observers of all the divine commandments; but in this they knew there was none; and therefore when Constantine the emperor had made an edict against working upon the Lord's day, yet he excepts and still permitted all agriculture or labors of the husbandman whatsoever."<sup>27</sup>

Morer tells us respecting the first three centuries, that is to say, the period before Constantine, that

"The Lord's day had no command that it should be sanctified, but it was left to God's people to pitch on this or that day for the public worship. And being taken up and made a day of meeting for religious exercises, yet for three hundred years there was no law to bind them to it, and for want of such a law, the day was not wholly kept in abstaining from common business; nor did they any longer rest from their ordinary affairs (such was the necessity of those times) than during the divine service."<sup>28</sup>

And Sir Wm. Domville says:

"Centuries of the Christian era passed away before the Sunday was observed by the Christian church as a Sabbath. History does not furnish us with a single proof or indication that it was at any time so observed previous to the Sabbatical edict of Constantine in A.D. 321."<sup>29</sup>

What these able modern writers set forth as to labor on Sunday before the edict of Constantine was promulgated, we have fully proved in the preceding chapters out of the most ancient ecclesiastical writers. That such an edict could not fail to strengthen the current already strongly set in favor of Sunday, and greatly to weaken the influence of the Sabbath, cannot be doubted. Of this fact, an able writer bears witness:

"Very shortly after the period when Constantine issued his edict enjoining the general observance of Sunday throughout the Roman Empire, the party that had contended for the observance of the seventh day dwindled into insignificance. The observance of Sunday as a public festival, during which all business, with the exception of rural employments, was intermitted, came to be more and more generally established ever after this time, throughout both the Greek and the Latin churches. There is no evidence however that either at this, or at a period much later, the observance was viewed as deriving any obligation from the fourth commandment; it seems to have been regarded as an institution corresponding in nature with Christmas, Good Friday, and other festivals of the church; and as resting with them on the ground of ecclesiastical authority and tradition."<sup>30</sup>

This extraordinary edict of Constantine caused Sunday to be observed with greater solemnity than it had formerly been. Yet we have the most indubitable proof that this law was a heathen enactment; that it was put forth in favor of Sunday as a heathen institution and not as a Christian festival; and that Constantine himself not only did not possess the character of a Christian, but was at that time in truth a heathen. It is to be observed that Constantine did not designate the day which he commanded men to keep, as Lord's day, Christian Sabbath, or the day of Christ's resurrection; nor does he assign any reason for its observance which would indicate it as a Christian festival. On the contrary, he designates the ancient heathen festival of the sun in language that cannot be mistaken. Dr. Hessey thus sustains this statement:

"Others have looked at the transaction in a totally different light, and refused to discover in the document, or to suppose in the mind of the enactor, any recognition of the Lord's day as a matter of divine obligation. They remark, and very truly, that Constantine designates it by its astrological or heathen title, Dies Solis, and insist that the epithet venerabilis with which it is introduced has reference to the rites performed on that day in honor of Hercules, Apollo, and Mithras."<sup>31</sup>

On this important point, Milman, the learned editor of Gibbon, thus testifies:

"The rescript commanding the celebration of the Christian Sabbath, bears no allusion to its peculiar sanctity as a Christian institution. It is the day of the sun which is to be observed by the general veneration; the courts were to be closed, and the noise and tumult of public business and legal litigation were no longer to violate the repose of the sacred day. But the believer in the new paganism, of which the solar worship was the characteristic, might acquiesce without scruple in the sanctity of the first day of the week."<sup>32</sup>

And he adds in a subsequent chapter:

"In fact, as we have before observed, the day of the sun would be willingly hallowed by almost all the pagan world, especially that part which had admitted any tendency towards the Oriental theology."<sup>33</sup>

On the seventh day of March, Constantine published his edict commanding the observance of that ancient festival of the heathen, the venerable day of the sun. On the following day, March eighth,<sup>34</sup> he issued a second decree in every respect worthy of its heathen predecessor.<sup>35</sup> The purport of it was this: That if any royal edifice should be struck by lightning, the ancient ceremonies of propitiating the deity should be practiced, and the haruspices were to be consulted to learn the meaning of the awful portent.<sup>36</sup> The haruspices were soothsayers who foretold future events by examining the entrails of beasts slaughtered in sacrifice to the gods!<sup>37</sup> The statute of the seventh of March enjoining the observance of the venerable day of the sun, and that of the eighth of the same month commanding the consultation of the haruspices, constitute a noble pair of well-matched heathen edicts. That Constantine himself was a heathen at the time these edicts were issued, is shown not only by the nature of the edicts themselves, but by the fact that his nominal conversion to Christianity is placed by Mosheim two years after his Sunday law. Thus he says:

"After well considering the subject, I have come to the conclusion, that subsequently to the death of Licinius in the years 323 when Constantine found himself sole emperor, he became an absolute Christian, or one who believes no religion but the Christian to be acceptable to God. He had previously considered the religion of one God as more excellent than the other religions, and believed that Christ ought especially to be worshiped: yet he supposed there were also inferior deities, and that to these some worship might be paid, in the manner of the fathers, without fault or sin. And who does not know, that in those times, many others also combined the worship of Christ with that of the ancient gods, whom they regarded as the ministers of the supreme God in the government of human and earthly affairs."<sup>38</sup>

As a heathen, Constantine was the worshiper of Apollo or the sun, a fact that sheds much light upon his edict enjoining men to observe the venerable day of the sun. Thus Gibbon testifies:

"The devotion of Constantine was more peculiarly directed to the genius of the sun, the Apollo of Greek and Roman mythology; and he was pleased to be represented with the symbols of the god of light and poetry. . . . The altars of Apollo were crowned with the votive offerings of Constantine; and the credulous multitude were taught to believe that the emperor was permitted to behold with mortal eyes the visible majesty of their tutelar deity. . . . The sun was universally celebrated as the invincible guide and protector of Constantine."<sup>39</sup>

His character as a professor of Christianity is thus described:

"The sincerity of the man, who in a short period effected such amazing changes in the religious world, is best known to Him who searches the heart. Certain it is that his subsequent life furnished no evidence of conversion to God. He waded without remorse through seas of blood, and was a most tyrannical prince."<sup>40</sup>

A few words relative to his character as a man will complete our view of his fitness to legislate for the church. This man, when elevated to the highest place of earthly power, caused his eldest son, Crispus, to be privately murdered, lest the fame of the son should eclipse that of the father. In the same ruin was involved his nephew Licinius, "whose rank was his only crime," and this was followed by the execution "perhaps of a guilty wife."<sup>41</sup>

Such was the man who elevated Sunday to the throne of the Roman Empire; and such the nature of the institution which he thus elevated. A recent English writer says of Constantine's Sunday law that it "would seem to have been rather to promote heathen than Christian worship." And he shows how this heathen emperor became a Christian, and how this heathen statute became a Christian law. Thus he says:

"At a LATER PERIOD, carried away by the current of opinion, he declared himself a convert to the church. Christianity, then, or what he was pleased to call by that name, became the law of the land, and the edict of A.D. 321, being unrevoked, was enforced as a Christian ordinance."<sup>42</sup>

Thus it is seen that a law, enacted in support of a heathen institution, after a few years came to be considered a Christian ordinance; and Constantine himself, four years after his Sunday edict, was able to control the church, as represented in the general council of Nice, so as to cause the members of that council to establish their annual festival of the passover upon Sunday.<sup>43</sup> Paganism had prepared the institution from ancient days, and had now elevated it to supreme power; its work was accomplished.

We have proved that the Sunday festival in the Christian church had no Sabbatical character before the time of Constantine. We have also shown that heathenism, in the person of Constantine, first gave to Sunday its Sabbatical character, and, in the very act of doing it, designated it as a heathen, and not as a Christian, festival, thus establishing a heathen Sabbath. It was now the part of popery authoritatively to effect its transformation into a Christian institution; a work which it was not slow to perform. Sylvester was the bishop of Rome while Constantine was emperor. How faithfully he acted his part in transforming the festival of the sun into a Christian institution is seen in that, by his apostolic authority, he changed the name of the day, giving it the imposing title of LORD'S DAY.<sup>44</sup> To Constantine and to Sylvester, therefore, the advocates of first-day observance are greatly indebted. The one elevated it as a heathen festival to the throne of the empire, making it a day of rest from most kinds of business; the other changed it into a Christian institution, giving it the dignified appellation of Lord's day. It is not a sufficient reason for denying that Pope Sylvester, not far from A.D. 325, authoritatively conferred on Sunday the name of Lord's day, to say that one of the fathers, as early as A.D. 200, calls the day by that name, and that some seven different writers, between A.D. 200 and A.D. 325, viz., Tertullian, Origen, Cyprian, Anatolius, Commodianus, Victorinus, and Peter of Alexandria, can be adduced, who give this name to Sunday.

No one of these fathers ever claims for this title any apostolic authority; and it has been already shown that they could not have believed the day to be the Lord's day by divine appointment. So far, therefore, is the use of this term by these persons as a name for Sunday from conflicting with the statement that Sylvester, by his apostolic authority, established this name as the rightful title of that day, that it shows the act of Sylvester to be exactly suited to the circumstances of the case. Indeed, Nicephorus asserts that Constantine, who considered himself quite as much the head of the church as was the pope, "directed that the day which the Jews considered the first day of the week, and which the Greeks dedicated to the sun, should be called the Lord's day."<sup>45</sup> The circumstances of the case render the statements of Lucius and Nicephorus in the highest degree probable. They certainly do not indicate that the pope would deem such act on his part unnecessary. Take a recent event in papal history as an illustration of this case. Only a few years since, Pius IX. decreed that the virgin Mary was born without sin. This had long been asserted by many distinguished writers in the papal church, but it lacked authority as a dogma of that church until the pope, A.D. 1854, gave it his official sanction.<sup>46</sup> It was the work of Constantine and of Sylvester in the early part of the fourth century to establish the festival of the sun, to be a day of rest, by the authority of the empire, and to render it a Christian institution by the authority of St. Peter.

The following from Dr. Heylyn, a distinguished member of the Church of England, is worthy of particular attention. In most forcible language, he traces the steps by which the Sunday festival arose to power, contrasting it in this respect with the ancient Sabbath of the Lord; and then, with equal truth and candor, he acknowledges that, as the festival of Sunday was set up by the emperor and the church, the same power can take it down whenever it sees fit. Thus he says:

"Thus do we see upon what grounds the Lord's day stands; ON CUSTOM FIRST, and VOLUNTARY consecration of it to religious meetings; that custom countenance by the authority of the church of God, which TACITLY approved the same; and FINALLY CONFIRMED and RATIFIED BY CHRISTIAN PRINCES throughout their empires. And as the day for rest from labors and restraint from business upon that day, [it] received its greatest strength from the supreme magistrate as long as he retained that power which to him belongs; as after from the canons and decree of councils, the decretals of popes and orders of particular prelates, when the sole managing of ecclesiastical affairs was committed to them.

"I hope it was not so with the former Sabbath, which neither took original from custom, that people being not so forward to give God a day; nor required any countenance or authority from the kings of Israel to confirm and ratify it. The Lord had spoke the word, that he would have one day in seven, precisely the seventh day from the world's creation, to be a day of rest unto all his people; which said, there was no more to do but gladly to submit and obey his pleasure. . . . But thus it was not done in our present business. The Lord's day had no such command that it should be sanctified, but was left plainly to God's people to pitch on this, or any other, for the public use. And being taken up amongst them and made a day of meeting in the congregation for religious exercises; yet for three hundred years there was neither law to bind them to it, nor any rest from labor or from worldly business required upon it.

"And when it seemed good unto Christian princes, the nursing fathers of God's church, to lay restraints upon their people, yet at the first they were not general; but only thus that certain men in certain places should lay aside their ordinary and daily works, to attend God's service in the church; those whose employments were most toilsome and most repugnant to the true nature of a Sabbath, being allowed to follow and pursue their labors because most necessary to the commonwealth.

"And in the following times, when as the prince and prelate, in their several places endeavored to restrain them from that also, which formerly they had permitted, and interdicted almost all kinds of bodily labor upon that day; it was not brought about without much struggling and an opposition of the people; more than a thousand years being past, after Christ's ascension, before the Lord's day had attained that state in which now it standeth. . . . And being brought into that state, wherein now it stands, it doth not stand so firmly and on such sure grounds, but that those powers which raised it up may take it lower if they please, yea take it quite away as unto the time, and settle it on any other day as to them seems best."<sup>47</sup>

Constantine's edict marks a signal change in the history of the Sunday festival. Dr. Heylyn thus testifies:

"Hitherto have we spoken of the Lord's day as taken up by the common consent of the church; not instituted or established by any text of Scripture, or edict of emperor, or decree of council. . . . In that which followeth, we shall find both emperors and councils very frequent in ordering things about this day and the service of it."<sup>48</sup>

After his professed conversion to Christianity, Constantine still further exerted his power in behalf of the venerable day of the sun, now happily transformed into the Lord's day, by the apostolic authority of the Roman bishop. Heylyn thus testifies:

"So natural a power it is in a Christian prince to order things about religion, that he not only took upon him to command the day, but also to prescribe the service."<sup>49</sup>

The influence of Constantine powerfully contributed to the aid of those church leaders who were intent upon bringing the forms of pagan worship into the Christian church. Gibbon thus places upon record the motives of these men, and the result of their action:

"The most respectable bishops had persuaded themselves that the ignorant rustics would more cheerfully renounce the superstition of paganism, if they found some resemblance, some compensation, in the bosom of Christianity. The religion of Constantine achieved in less than a century, the final conquest of the Roman Empire: but the victors themselves were insensibly subdued by the arts of their vanquished rivals."<sup>50</sup>

The body of nominal Christians, which resulted from this strange union of pagan rites with Christian worship, arrogated to itself the title of catholic church, while the true people of God, who resisted these dangerous innovations, were branded as heretics, and cast out of the church.

It is not strange that the Sabbath should lose ground in such a body, in its struggle with its rival, the festival of the sun. Indeed, after a brief period, the history of the Sabbath will be found only in the almost obliterated records of those whom the Catholic church cast out and stigmatized as heretics. Of the Sabbath in Constantine's time, Heylyn says:

"As for the Saturday, that retained its wonted credit in the eastern churches, little inferior to the Lord's day, if not plainly equal; not as a Sabbath, think not so; but as a day designed unto sacred meetings."<sup>51</sup>

There is no doubt that, after the great flood of worldliness which entered the church at the time of Constantine's pretended conversion, and after all that was done by himself and by

Sylvester in behalf of Sunday, the observance of the Sabbath became, with many, only a nominal thing. But the action of the council of Laodicea, to which we shall presently come, proves conclusively that the Sabbath was still observed, not simply as a festival, as Heylyn would have it, but as a day of abstinence from labor, as enjoined in the commandment. The work of Constantine, however, marks an epoch in the history of the Sabbath and of Sunday. Constantine was hostile to the Sabbath, and his influence told powerfully against it with all those who sought worldly advancement. The historian Eusebius was the special friend and eulogist of Constantine. This fact should not be overlooked in weighing his testimony concerning the Sabbath. He speaks of it as follows:

"They [the patriarchs] did not, therefore, regard circumcision, nor observe the Sabbath, nor do we; neither do we abstain from certain foods, nor regard other injunctions, which Moses subsequently delivered to be observed in types and symbols, because such things as these do not belong to Christians."<sup>52</sup>

This testimony shows precisely the views of Constantine and the imperial party relative to the Sabbath. But it does not give the views of Christians as a whole; for we have seen that the Sabbath had been extensively retained up to this point, and we shall soon have occasion to quote other historians, the contemporaries and successors of Eusebius, who record its continued observance. Constantine exerted a controlling influence in the church, and was determined to "have nothing in common with that most hostile rabble of the Jews." Happy would it have been had his aversion been directed against the festivals of the heathen rather than against the Sabbath of the Lord.

Before Constantine's time, there is no trace of the doctrine of the change of the Sabbath. On the contrary, we have decisive evidence that Sunday was a day on which ordinary labor was considered lawful and proper. But Constantine, while yet a heathen, commanded that every kind of business excepting agriculture should be laid aside on that day. His law designated the day as a heathen festival, which it actually was. But within four years after its enactment, Constantine had become, not merely a professed convert to the Christian religion, but, in many respects, practically the head of the church, as the course of things at the council of Nice plainly showed. His heathen Sunday law, being unrevoked, was thenceforward enforced in behalf of that day as a Christian festival. This law gave to the Sunday festival, for the first time, something of a Sabbatic character. It was now a rest-day from most kinds of business by the law of the Roman Empire. God's rest-day was thenceforward more in the way than ever before.

But now we come to a fact of remarkable interest. The way having been prepared, as we have just seen, for the doctrine of the change of the Sabbath, and the circumstances of the case demanding its production, it was at this very point brought forward for the first time. Eusebius, the special friend and flatterer of Constantine, was the man who first put forth this doctrine. In his "Commentary on the Psalms," he makes the following statement on Psalm xcii. respecting the change of the Sabbath:

"Wherefore as they [the Jews] rejected it [the Sabbath law] the Word [Christ], by the new covenant, TRANSLATED and TRANSFERRED the feast of the Sabbath to the morning light, and gave us the symbol of true rest, viz., the saving Lord's day, the first [day] of the light, in which the Saviour of the world, after all his labors among men, obtained the victory over death, and passed the portals of Heaven, having achieved a work superior to the six-days' creation."<sup>53</sup>

"On this day, which is the first [day] of light and of the true Sun, we assemble, after an interval of six days, and celebrate holy and spiritual Sabbaths, even all nations redeemed by him throughout the world, and do those things according to the spiritual law, which were decreed for the priests to do on the Sabbath."<sup>54</sup>

"And all things whatsoever that it was duty to do on the Sabbath, these we have transferred to the Lord's day, as more appropriately belonging to it, because it has a precedence and is first in rank, and more honorable than the Jewish Sabbath."<sup>55</sup>

Eusebius was under the strongest temptation to please and even to flatter Constantine; for he lived in the sunshine of imperial favor. On one occasion, he went so far as to say that the city of Jerusalem, which Constantine had rebuilt, might be the New Jerusalem predicted in the prophecies!<sup>56</sup> But perhaps there was no act of Eusebius that could give Constantine greater pleasure than his publication of such doctrine as this respecting the change of the Sabbath. The emperor had, by the civil law, given to Sunday a Sabbatical character. Though he had done this while yet a heathen, he found it to his interest to maintain this law after he obtained a commanding position in the Catholic Church. When, therefore, Eusebius came out and declared that Christ transferred the Sabbath to Sunday, a doctrine never before heard of, and in support of which he had no Scripture to quote, Constantine could not but feel in the highest degree flattered that his own Sabbatical edict pertained to the very day which Christ had ordained to be the Sabbath in place of the seventh. It was a convincing proof that Constantine was divinely called to his high position in the Catholic church, that he should thus exactly identify his work with that of Christ, though he had no knowledge at the time that Christ had done any work of the kind.

As no writer before Eusebius had ever hinted at the doctrine of the change of the Sabbath, and as there is the most convincing proof, as we have shown, that before his time Sunday possessed no Sabbatic character, and as Eusebius does not claim that this doctrine is asserted in the Scriptures, nor in any preceding ecclesiastical writer, it is certain that he was the father of the doctrine. This new doctrine was not put forth without some motive. That motive could not have been to bring forward some neglected passages of the Scriptures; for he does not quote a single text in its support. But the circumstances of the case plainly reveal the motive. The new doctrine was exactly adapted to the new order of things introduced by Constantine. It was, moreover, peculiarly suited to flatter that emperor's pride, the very thing which Eusebius was under the strongest temptation to do.

It is remarkable, however, that Eusebius, in the very connection in which he announces this new doctrine, unwittingly exposes its falsity. He first asserts that Christ changed the Sabbath, and then virtually contradicts it by indicating the real authors of the change. Thus he says:

"All things whatsoever that it was duty to do on the Sabbath, these WE have transferred to the Lord's day."<sup>57</sup>

The persons here referred to as the authors of this work are the Emperor Constantine, and such bishops as Eusebius, who loved the favor of princes, and Sylvester, the pretended successor of Saint Peter. Two facts refute the assertion of Eusebius that Christ changed the Sabbath: 1. That Eusebius, who lived three hundred years after the alleged change, is the first man who mentions such change; 2. That Eusebius testifies that himself and others made this change, which they could not have done had Christ made it at the beginning. But though the doctrine of the change of the Sabbath was thus announced by Eusebius, it was not seconded by any writer of that age. The doctrine had never been heard of before, and Eusebius had simply his own assertion, but no passage of the Holy Scriptures to offer in its support.

But after Constantine, the Sabbath began to recover strength, at least in the eastern churches. Prof. Stuart, in speaking of the period from Constantine to the council of Laodicea, A.D. 364, says:

"The practice of it [the keeping of the Sabbath] was continued by Christians who were jealous for the honor of the Mosaic law, and finally because, as we have seen, predominant throughout Christendom. It was supposed at length that the fourth commandment did require the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath (not merely a seventh part of time), and reasoning as Christians of the present day are wont to do, viz., that all which belonged to the ten commandments was immutable and perpetual, the churches in general came gradually to regard the seventh-day Sabbath as altogether sacred."<sup>58</sup>

Prof. Stuart, however, connects with this the statement that Sunday was honored by all parties. But the council of Laodicea struck a heavy blow at this Sabbath-keeping in the eastern church. Thus Mr. James, in addressing the University of Oxford, bears witness:

"When the practice of keeping Saturday Sabbaths, which had become so general at the close of this century, was evidently gaining ground in the eastern church, a decree was passed in the council held at Laodicea [A.D. 364] 'that members of the church should not rest from work on the Sabbath like Jews, but should labor on that day, and preferring in honor the Lord's day, then if it be in their power should rest from work as Christians.'<sup>59</sup>

This shows conclusively that at that period the observance of the Sabbath according to the commandment was extensive in the eastern churches. But the Laodicean council, not only forbade the observance of the Sabbath, they even pronounced a curse on those who should obey the fourth commandment! Prynne thus testifies:

"It is certain that Christ himself, his apostles, and the primitive Christians for some good space of time, did constantly observe the seventh-day Sabbath; . . . the evangelists and St. Luke in the Acts ever styling it the Sabbath day . . . and making mention of its . . . solemnization by the apostles and other Christians, . . . it being still solemnized by many Christians after the apostles' times, even till the council of Laodicea [A.D. 364], as ecclesiastical writers and the twenty-ninth canon of that council testify, which runs thus:<sup>60</sup> 'Because Christians ought not to Judaize, and to rest in the Sabbath, but to work in that day (which many did refuse at that time to do). But preferring in honor the Lord's day (there being then a great controversy among Christians which of these two days . . . should have precedency) if they desired to rest they should do this as Christians. Wherefore if they shall be found to Judaize, let them be accursed from Christ.' . . . The seventh-day Sabbath was . . . solemnized by Christ, the apostles and primitive Christians, till the Laodicean council did in a manner quite abolish the observation of it. . . . The council of Laodicea [A. D. 364] . . . first settled the observation of the Lord's day, and prohibited . . . the keeping of the Jewish Sabbath under an anathema."<sup>61</sup>

The action of this council did not extirpate the Sabbath from the eastern churches, though it did materially weaken its influence, and cause its observance to become with many only a nominal thing, while it did most effectually enhance the sacredness and the authority of the Sunday festival. That it did not wholly extinguish Sabbath-keeping is thus certified by an old English writer, John Ley:

"From the apostles' time until the council of Laodicea, which was about the year 364, the holy observation of the Jews' Sabbath continued, as may be proved out of many authors; yes, notwithstanding the decree of that council against it."<sup>62</sup>

And Gregory, Bishop of Nyssa, about A.D. 372, uses this expostulation:

"With what eyes can you behold the Lord's day, when you despise the Sabbath? Do you not perceive that they are sisters, and that in slighting the one, you affront the other?"<sup>63</sup>

This testimony is valuable in that it marks the progress of apostasy concerning the Sabbath. The Sunday festival entered the church, not as a divine institution, but as a voluntary observance. Even as late as A.D. 200, Tertullian said that it had only tradition and custom in its support.<sup>64</sup>

But in A.D. 372, this human festival had become the sister and equal of that day which God hallowed in the beginning and solemnly commanded in the moral law. How worthy to be called the sister of the Sabbath the Sunday festival actually was, may be judged from what followed. When this self-styled sister had gained an acknowledged position in the family, she expelled the other, and trampled her in the dust. In our days, the Sunday festival claims to be the very day intended in the fourth commandment.

The following testimonies exhibit the authority of church councils in its true light. Jortin is quoted by Cox as saying:

"In such assemblies, the best and the most moderate men seldom have the ascendant, and they are often led or driven by others who are far inferior to them in good qualities."<sup>65</sup>

The same writer gives us Baxter's opinion of the famous Westminster Assembly. Baxter says:

"I have lived to see an assembly of ministers, where three or four leading men were so prevalent as to form a confession in the name of the whole party, which had that in it which particular members did disown. And when about a controverted article, one man hath charged me deeply with questioning the words of the church, others, who were at the forming of that article have laid it all on that same man, the rest being loath to strive much against him; and so it was he himself was the church whose authority he so much urged."<sup>66</sup>

Such has been the nature of councils in all ages; yet they have ever claimed infallibility, and have largely used that infallibility in the suppression of the Sabbath and the establishment of the festival of Sunday. Of first-day sacredness prior to, and as late as, the time of Chrysostom, Kitto thus testifies:

"Though in later times we find considerable reference to a sort of consecration of the day, it does not seem at any period of the ancient church to have assumed the form of such an observance as some modern religious communities have contended for. Nor do these writers in any instance pretend to allege any divine command, or even apostolic practice, in support of it . . . Chrysostom (A.D. 360) concludes one of his Homilies by dismissing his audience to their respective ordinary occupations."<sup>67</sup>

It was reserved for modern theologians to discover the divine or apostolic authority for Sunday observance. The ancient doctors of the church were unaware that any such authority existed; and hence they deemed it lawful and proper to engage in usual worldly business on that day when their religious worship was concluded. Thus, Heylyn bears witness concerning St. Chrysostom that he

"Confessed it to be lawful for a man to look unto his worldly business on the Lord's day, after the congregation was dismissed."<sup>68</sup>

St. Jerome, a few years after this, at the opening of the fifth century, in his commendation of the lady Paula, shows his own opinion of Sunday labor. Thus he says:

"Paula, with the women, as soon as they returned home on the Lord's day, they sat down severally to their work, and made clothes for themselves and others."<sup>69</sup>

Morer justifies this Sunday labor in the following terms:

"If we read they did any work on the Lord's day, it is to be remembered that this application to their daily tasks was not till their worship was quite over, when they might with innocency enough resume them, because the length of time or the number of hours assigned for piety was not then so well explained as in after ages. The state of the church is vastly different from what it was in those early days. Christians then for some centuries of years were under persecution and poverty; and besides their own wants, they had many of them severe masters who compelled them to work, and made them bestow less time in spiritual matters than they otherwise would. In St. Jerome's age their condition was better, because Christianity had got into the throne as well as into the empire. Yet for all this, the entire sanctification of the Lord's day proceeded slowly; and that it was the work of time to bring it to perfection, appears from the several steps the church made in her constitutions, and from the decrees of emperors and other princes, wherein the prohibitions from servile and civil business advanced by degrees from one species to another, till the day had got a considerable figure in the world. Now, therefore, the case being so much altered, the most proper use of citing those old examples is only, in point of doctrine, to show that ordinary work, as being a compliance with providence for the support of natural life, is not sinful even on the Lord's day, when necessity is loud, and the laws of that church and nation where we live are not against it. This is what the first Christians had to say for themselves, in the works they did on that day. And if those works had been then judged a prophanation of the festival, I dare believe, they would have suffered martyrdom rather than been guilty."<sup>70</sup>

The bishop of Ely thus testifies:

"In St Jerome's days, and in the very place where he was residing, the devoutest Christians did ordinarily work upon the Lord's day, when the service of the church was ended."<sup>71</sup>

St. Augustine, the contemporary of Jerome, gives a synopsis of the argument in that age for Sunday observance, in the following words:

"It appears from the sacred Scriptures, that this day was a solemn one; it was the first day of the age, that is of the existence of our world; in it the elements of the world were formed; on it the angels were created; on it Christ rose also from the dead; on it the Holy Spirit descended from Heaven upon the apostles as manna had done in the wilderness. For these and other such circumstances the Lord's day is distinguished; and therefore the holy doctors of the church have decreed that all the glory of the Jewish Sabbath is transferred to it. Let us therefore keep the Lord's day as the ancients were commanded to do the Sabbath."<sup>72</sup>

It is to be observed that Augustine does not assign among his reasons for first-day observance, the change of the Sabbath by Christ or his apostles, or that the apostles observed that day, or that John had given it the name of Lord's day. These modern first-day arguments were unknown to Augustine. He gave the credit of the work, not to Christ or his inspired apostles, but to the holy doctors of the church, who, of their own accord, had transferred the glory of the ancient Sabbath to the venerable day of the sun. The first day of the week was considered in the fifth century the most proper day for giving holy orders, that is, for ordinations, and about the middle of the century, says Heylyn,

"A law [was] made by Leo then Pope of Rome, and generally since taken up in the western church, that they should be conferred upon no day else."<sup>73</sup>

According to Dr. Justin Edwards, this same pope made also this decree in behalf of Sunday:

"WE ORDAIN, according to the true meaning of the Holy Ghost, and of the apostles as thereby directed, that on the sacred day wherein our own integrity was restored, all do rest and cease from labor."<sup>74</sup>

Soon after this edict of the pope, the emperor Leo, A.D. 469, put forth the following decree:

"It is our will and pleasure, that the holy days dedicated to the most high God, should not be spent in sensual recreations, or otherwise prophaned by suits of law, especially the Lord's day, which we decree to be a venerable day, and therefore free it of all citations, executions, pleadings, and the like avocations. Let not the circus or theater be opened, nor combating with wild beasts be seen on it. . . . If any will presume to offend in the premises, if he be a military man, let him lose his commission; or if other, let his estate or goods be confiscated."<sup>75</sup>

And this emperor determined to mend the breach in Constantine's law, and thus prohibit agriculture on Sunday. So he adds:

"We command therefore all, as well husbandmen as others, to forbear work on this day of our restoration."<sup>76</sup>

The holy doctors of the church had by this time very effectually despoiled the Sabbath of its glory, transferring it to the Lord's day of Pope Sylvester; as Augustine testifies; yet was not Sabbatical observance wholly extinguished even in the Catholic church. The historian Socrates, who wrote about the middle of the fifth century, thus testifies:

"For although almost all churches throughout the world celebrate the sacred mysteries on the Sabbath of every week, yet the Christians of Alexandria and at Rome, on account of some ancient tradition, refuse to do this. The Egyptians in the neighborhood of Alexandria, and the inhabitants of Thebais, hold their religious meetings on the Sabbath, but do not participate of the mysteries in the manner usual among Christians in general - for after having eaten and satisfied themselves with food of all kinds, in the evening, making their oblations, they partake of the mysteries."<sup>77</sup>

As the church of Rome had turned the Sabbath into a fast some two hundred years before this, in order to oppose its observance, it is probable that this was the ancient tradition referred to by Socrates. And Sozomen, the contemporary of Socrates, speaks on the same point as follows:

"The people of Constantinople, and of several other cities, assemble together on the Sabbath, as well as on the next day; which custom is never observed at Rome, or at Alexandria. There are several cities and villages in Egypt where, contrary to the usages established elsewhere, the people meet together on Sabbath evenings; and although they have dined previously, partake of the mysteries."<sup>78</sup>

On the statement of these historians, Cox remarks:

"It was their practice to Sabbatize on Saturday, and to celebrate Sunday as a day of rejoicing and festivity. While, however, in some places a respect was thus generally paid to both of these days, the Judaizing practice of observing Saturday was by the leading churches expressly condemned, and all the doctrines connected with it steadfastly resisted." - Sabbath Laws, p. 280.

The time had now come, when, as stated by Coleman, the observance of the Sabbath was deemed heretical; and the close of the fifth century witnessed its effectual suppression in the great body of the Catholic church.

---

1 Dialogues on the Lord's Day, p. 189.

2 Morality of the Fourth Commandment, p. 9, London, 1641.

3 1Cor.5:6-8.

4 Eccl. Hist. vol. i. chap. ii. sect. 30.

5 Eccl. Hist. book i. cent. 1. part ii. chap. iv. sect. 4. Dr. Murdock's translation is more accurate than that above by Maclaine. He gives it thus:- "Moreover, those congregations, which either lived intermingled with Jews, or were composed in great measure of Jews, were accustomed also to observe the seventh day of the week, as a SACRED day: for doing which, the other Christians taxed them with no wrong.

6 Id. margin.

7 See chap. xiv. of this History.

8 Ancient Christianity Exemplified, chap. xxvi. sect. 2.

9 Anc. Christ. Exem. Chap. xxvi. sect. 2.

10 Id.Ib.

11 Id.Ib.

12 Ductor Dubitantium, part i. book ii. rule 6, sect. 51.

13 Dialogues on the Lord's day, p. 66.

14 A Treatise of the Sabbath Day, containing a "Defence of the Orthodoxal Doctrine of the Church of England against Sabbatarian Novelty," p. 8. It was written in 1635 at the command of the king in reply to Brabourne, a minister of the established church, whose work, entitled "A Defense of that most Ancient and Sacred Ordinance of God's, the Sabbath Day," was dedicated to the king with a request that he would restore the Bible Sabbath! See the preface to Dr. White's Treatise.

15 Dec. and Fall, chap. xv.

16 See chap. x.

17 Dialogues on the Lord's Day, p. 67.

18 Treatise of the Sabbath Day, p. 8.

19 Antiquities of the Christian Church, book xvi, chap. vi. sect. 2.

20 Page 280. Cox here quotes the work, entitled "The Modern Sabbath Examined.

21 Learned Treatise of the Sabbath, p. 77. Oxford, 1631.

22 This edict is the original fountain of first-day authority, and in many respects answers to the festival of Sunday, what the fourth commandment is to the Sabbath of the Lord. The original of this edict may be seen in the library of Harvard College, and is as follows:

IMP. CONSTANT. A. ELPIDIO.

Omnes Judices, urbanaeque plebes, et cunctarum artium officia venerabili die solis quiscant. Ruri tamen positi agrorum culturae libere licenterque inserviant: quoniam frequenter evenit, ut non aptius alio die frumenta sulcis, aut vineae scrobibus mandentur, ne occasione momenti pereat commoditas coelesti provisione concessa. Dat, Nonis Mart. Crispo.2 & Constantino 2. Coss. 321. Corpus Juris Civilis Condictis lib. iii tit. 12.3.

23 Encyc. Brit. art. Sunday, seventh edition, 1842.

24 Encyc. Am. art. Sabbath.

25 Eccl. Hist. cent. iv. part ii. chap. iv. sect. 5.

26 Chap. xiv.

27 Duct. Dubitant. part i. book ii. chap. ii. rule 6, sect. 59.

28 Dialogues on the Lord's Day, p. 233.

29 Examination of the Six Texts, p. 291.

30 Cox's Sabbath Laws, &c. pp. 280, 281. He quotes The Modern Sabbath Examined.

31 Hessey's Bampton Lectures, p. 60.

32 History of Christianity, book iii. chap. i.

33 Id. book iii. chap. iv.

34 These dates are worthy of marked attention. See Blair's Chronological Tables, p. 193, ed. 1856; Rosse's Index of Dates, p. 830.

35 Imp. Constantinus A. Ad Maximum. Si quid de Palatio Nostro, aut ceteris operibus publicis, degustatum fulgore esse conatiterit, retento more veteris observantiae. Quid portendat, ob Haruspibus requiratur, et diligentissime scriptura collecta ad Nostram Scientiam referatur. Ceteris etiam usurpandae huius consuetudinis licentia tribuenda: dummodo sacrificiis domesticis abstineant, quae specialiter prohibita sunt. Eam autem denunciationem adque interpretationem, quae de tactu Amphitheatri scriba est, de qua ad Heraclianum Tribunum, et Magistrum Officiorum scripseras, ad nos scias esse perlatum. Dat. xvi. Kal. Jan. Serdicae Acc. viii. Id. Mart. Crispo ii. & Constantino ii. C. C. Coss. 321. Cod. Theodos. xvi. 10, 1. - Library of Harvard College.

36 See Jortin's Eccl. Hist. vol. i. sect. 31; Milman's Hist. Christianity, book iii. chap. i.

37 See Webster; for an ancient record of the act, see Eze. xxi. 19-22.

38 Historical Commentaries, cent. iv. sect. 7.

39 Dec. and Fall of the Roman Empire, chap. xx.

40 Marsh's Eccl. Hist. period iii. chap. v.

41 Dec. and Fall of the Roman Empire, chap. xviii.

42 Sunday and the Mosaic Sabbath, p. 4, published by R. Groombridge & Sons, London.

43 See chap. xviii.

44 Omnium vero dierum per septimanam appellationes (ut Solis, Lunae, Martis, etc.), mutasse in ferias: ut Polydorus (li. 6, c. 5) indicat. Mataphrastes vero, nomina dierum Hebraeis usitata retinuisse eum, tradit; SOLIUS PRIMI DIEI APPELLATIONE MUTATA, QUEM DOMINICUM DIXIT. Historia Ecclesiastica per M. Ludovicum Lucuim, cent. iv. cap. x. pp. 739, 740, Ed. Basilea, 1624. Library of Andover Theological Seminary. The Ecclesiastical History of Lucius is simply the second edition of the famous "Magdeburg Centuries," which was published under his supervision.

45 Quoted in Elliott's Horae Apocalypticae, fifth edition, vol. iv. p. 603.

46 McClintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, vol. iv. p. 506.

47 Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. iii. sect. 12.

48 Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. iii. sect. 1.

49 Id. Ib.

50 Dec. an Fall, chap. xxviii.

51 Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. iii. sect. 5.

52 Eccl. Hist. book i. chap. iv.

53 Eusebius' Commentary on the Psalms, quoted in Cox's Sabbath Literature, vol. i. p. 361; also in Justin Edward's Sabbath Manual, pp. 125-127.

54 Id.Ib.

55 Id.Ib.

56 Eusebius' Life of Constantine, 3, 33, quoted in Elliott's Horae Apocalypticæ, vol. i. p. 256.

57 Cox's Sabbath Literature, vol. i. p. 361.

58 Appendix to Gurney's History, &c., of the Sabbath, pp. 115, 116.

59 Sermon's on the Sacraments and Sabbath, pp. 122, 123.

60 Quod non oportet Christianos Judaizare et otiare in Sabbato, sed operari in eodem die. Preferentes autem in veneratione Dominicum diem si vacare voluerint, ut Christiani hoc faciat; quod si reperti fuerint Judaizare Anathema sint a Christo.

61 Dissertation on the Lord's-day Sabbath, pp. 33, 34, 41. 1633.

62 Sunday a Sabbath, p. 163. 1640.

63 Dialogues on the Lord's day, p. 188; Hessey's Bampton Lectures, pp. 72, 304, 305.

64 Tertullian's De Corona, sections 3 and 4.

65 Sabbath Laws, &c. p. 138.

66 Sabbath Laws, &c. p. 138.

67 Cyc. Bib. Lit. art. Lord's Day; Heylyn's Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. ii. sect 7.

68 Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. iii. sect. 9.

69 Dialogues on the Lord's Day, p. 234; Hist. Sab. part. ii. chap. iii. sect. 7.

70 Dialogues on the Lord's Day, pp. 236, 237.

71 Treatise of the Sabbath, p. 219.

72 Sabbath Laws, &c. p. 284.

73 Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. iv. sect. 8.

74 Sabbath Manual, p. 123.

75 Dialogues on the Lord's day, p. 259.

76 Id p. 260.

77 Socrates, book v. chap. xxii.

78 Sozomen, book vii. chap. 19; Lardner, vol. iv. chap. lxxxv. p. 217.

CHAPTER 20

SUNDAY DURING THE DARK AGES

---

The pope becomes the head of all the churches - The people of God retire into the wilderness - Sunday to be traced through the Dark Ages in the history of the Catholic church - State of that festival in the sixth century - It did not acquire the title of Sabbath for many ages - Time when it became a day of abstinence from labor in the east - When in the west - Sunday canon of the first council of Orleans - Of the council of Arragon - Of the third council of Orleans - Of a council at Mascon - At Narbon - At Auxerre - Miracles establishing the sacredness of Sunday - The pope advises men to atone, by the pious observance of Sunday, for the sins of the previous week - The Sabbath and Sunday both strictly kept by a class at Rome who were put down by the pope - According to Twisse they were two distinct classes - The Sabbath, like its Lord, crucified between two thieves - Council of Chalons - At Toledo, in which the Jews were forbidden to keep the Sabbath and commanded to keep Sunday - First English law for Sunday - Council at Constantinople - In England - In Bavaria - Canon of the archbishop of York - Statutes of Charlemagne and canons of councils which he called - The pope aids in the work - Council at Paris originates a famous first-day argument - The councils fail to establish Sunday sacredness - The emperors besought to send out some more terrible edict in order to compel the observance of that day - The pope takes the matter in hand in earnest and gives Sunday an effectual establishment - Other statutes and canons - Sunday piety of a Norwegian king - Sunday consecrated to the mass - Curious but obsolete first-day arguments - The eating of meat forbidden upon the Sabbath by the pope - Pope Urban II. ordains the Sabbath of the Lord to be a festival for the worship of the Virgin Mary - Apparition from St. Peter - The pope sends Eustace into England with a roll that fell from Heaven commanding Sunday observance under direful penalties - Miracles which followed - Sunday established in Scotland - Other Sunday laws down to the Reformation - Sunday always only a human ordinance.

---

The opening of the sixth century witnessed the development of the great apostasy to such an extent that the man of sin might be plainly seen sitting in the temple of God.<sup>1</sup> The western Roman Empire had been broken up into ten kingdoms, and the way was now prepared for the work of the little horn.<sup>2</sup> In the early part of this century, the bishop of Rome was made head over the entire church by the emperor of the east, Justinian.<sup>3</sup> The dragon gave unto the beast his power, and his seat, and great authority. From this accession to supremacy by the Roman pontiff, date the "time, times, and dividing of time," or twelve hundred and sixty years of the prophecies of Daniel and John.<sup>4</sup>

The true people of God now retired for safety into places of obscurity and seclusion, as represented by the prophecy: "The woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath a place prepared of God, that they should feed her there a thousand two hundred and threescore days."<sup>5</sup> Leaving their history for the present, let us follow that of the Catholic church, and trace in its record the history of the Sunday festival through the period of the Dark ages. Of the fifth and sixth centuries, Heylyn bears the following testimony:

"The faithful being united better than before, became more uniform in matters of devotion; and in that uniformity did agree together to give the Lord's day all the honors of an holy festival. Yet was not this done all at once, but by degrees; the fifth and sixth centuries being well-nigh spent before it came into that height which hath since continued. The emperors and the prelates in these times had the same affections; both [being] earnest to advance this day above all other; and to the edicts of the one and ecclesiastical constitutions of the other, it stands indebted for many of those privileges and exemptions which it still enjoyeth."<sup>6</sup>

But Sunday had not yet acquired the title of Sabbath. Thus Brerewood bears testimony:

"The name of the Sabbath remained appropriated to the old Sabbath; and was never attributed to the Lord's day, not of many hundred years after our Saviour's time."<sup>7</sup>

And Heylyn says of the term Sabbath in the ancient church:

"The Saturday is called amongst them by no other name than that which formerly it had, the Sabbath. So that whenever for a thousand years and upwards, we meet with Sabbatum in any writer of what name soever, it must be understood of no day but Saturday."<sup>8</sup>

Dr. Francis White, bishop of Ely, also testifies:

"When the ancient fathers distinguish and give proper names to the particular days of the week, they always style the Saturday, Sabbatum, the Sabbath, and the Sunday, or first day of the week, Dominicum, the Lord's day."<sup>9</sup>

It should be observed, however, that the earliest mention of Sunday as the Lord's day, is in the writings of Tertullian; Justin Martyr, some sixty years before, styling it "the day called Sunday;" while the authoritative application of that term to Sunday was by Sylvester, bishop of Rome, more than one hundred years after the time of Tertullian. The earliest mention of Sunday as Christian Sabbath is thus noted by Heylyn:

"The first who ever used it to denote the Lord's day (the first that I have met with in all this search) is one Petrus Alfonsus - he lived about the time that Rupertus did - [which was the beginning of the twelfth century] who calls the Lord's day by the name of Christian Sabbath."<sup>10</sup>

Of Sunday labor in the eastern church, Heylyn says:

"It was near nine hundred years from our Saviour's birth if not quite so much, before restraint of husbandry on this day had been first thought of in the east; and probably being thus restrained did find no more obedience there than it had done before in the western parts."<sup>11</sup>

Of Sunday labor in the western church, Dr. Francis White thus testifies:

"The Catholic church for more than six hundred years after Christ, permitted labor, and gave license to many Christian people to work upon the Lord's day, at such hours as they were not commanded to be present at the public service by the precept of the church."<sup>12</sup>

But let us trace the several steps by which the festival of Sunday increased in strength until it attained its complete development. These will be found at present mostly in the edicts of emperors, and the decrees of councils. Morer tells us that,

"Under Clodoveus king of France met the bishops in the first council of Orleans [A.D. 507], where they obliged themselves and their successors, to be always at the church on the Lord's day, except in case of sickness or some great infirmity. And because they, with some other of the clergy in those days, took cognizance of judicial matters, therefore by a council at Arragon, about the year 518 in the reign of Theodorick, king of the Goths, it was decreed that 'No bishop or other person in holy orders should examine or pass judgment in any civil controversy on the Lord's day.'"<sup>13</sup>

This shows that civil courts were sometimes held on Sunday by the bishops in those days; otherwise such a prohibition would not have been put forth. Hengstenberg, in his notice of the third council of Orleans, gives us an insight into the then existing state of the Sunday festival:

"The third council of Orleans, A.D. 538, says in its twenty-ninth canon: 'The opinion is spreading amongst the people, that it is wrong to ride, or drive, or cook food, or do anything to the house, or the person on the Sunday. But since such opinions are more Jewish than Christian, that shall be lawful in future, which has been so to the present time. On the other hand agricultural labor ought to be laid aside, in order that the people may not be prevented from attending church.'"<sup>14</sup>

Observe the reason assigned. It is not lest they violate the law of the Sabbath, but it is that they may not be kept from church. Another authority states the case thus:

"Labor in the country [on Sunday] was not prohibited till the council of Orleans, A.D. 538. It was thus an institution of the church, as Dr. Paley has remarked. The earlier Christians met in the morning of that day for prayer and singing hymns in commemoration of Christ's resurrection, and then went about their usual duties."<sup>15</sup>

In A.D. 588, another council was holden, the occasion of which is thus stated:

"And because, notwithstanding all this care, the day was not duly observed, the bishops were again summoned to Mascon, a town in Burgundy, by King Gunthrum, and there they framed this canon: 'Notice is taken that Christian people, very much neglect and slight the Lord's day, giving themselves as on other days to common work, to redress which irreverence, for the future, we warn every Christian who bears not that name in vain, to give ear to our advice, knowing we have a concern on us for your good, and a power to hinder you to do evil. Keep then the Lord's day, the day of our new birth.'"<sup>16</sup>

Further legislation being necessary, we are told:

"About a year forward, there was a council at Narbon, which forbid all persons of what country or quality soever, to do any servile work on the Lord's day. But if any man presumed to disobey this canon he was to be fined if a freeman, and if a servant, severely lashed. Or as Surius represents the penalty in the edict of King Recaredus, which he put out, near the same time to strengthen the decrees of the council, 'Rich men were to be punished with the loss of a moiety of their estates, and the poorer sort with perpetual banishment,' in the year of grace 590. Another synod was held at Auxerre a city in Champain, in the reign of Clotair king of France, where it was decreed. . . . 'that no man should be allowed to plow, nor cart, or do any such thing on the Lord's day.' "17

Such were some of the efforts made in the sixth century to advance the sacredness of the Sunday festival. And Morer tells us that,

"For fear the doctrine should not take without miracles to support it, Gregory of Tours [about A.D. 590] furnishes us with several to that purpose."18

Mr. Francis West, an English first-day writer, gravely adduces one of these miracles in support of first-day sacredness:

"Gregory of Tours reporteth, 'that a husbandman, who upon the Lord's day went to plough his field, as he cleaned his plough with an iron, the iron stuck so fast in his hand that for two years he could not be delivered from it, but carried it about continually to his exceeding great pain and shame.' "19

In the conclusion of the sixth century, Pope Gregory exhorted the people of Rome to "expiate on the day of our Lord's resurrection what was remissly done for the six days before."20 In the same epistle, this pope condemned a class of men at Rome who advocated the strict observance of both the Sabbath and the Sunday, styling them the preachers of Antichrist.21 This shows the intolerant feeling of the papacy toward the Sabbath, even when joined with the strict observance of Sunday. It also shows that there were Sabbath-keepers even in Rome itself as late as the seventh century; although so far bewildered by the prevailing darkness that they joined with its observance a strict abstinence from labor on Sunday.

In the early part of the seventh century arose another foe to the Bible Sabbath in the person of Mahomet. To distinguish his followers alike from those who observed the Sabbath and those who observed the festival of Sunday, he selected Friday, the sixth day of the week, as their religious festival. And thus "the Mahometans and the Romanists crucified the Sabbath, as the Jews and the Romans did the Lord of the Sabbath, between two thieves, the sixth and first day of the week."22 For Mahometanism and Romanism each suppressed the Sabbath over a wide extent of territory. About the middle of the seventh century, we have further canons of the church in behalf of Sunday:

"At Chalons, a city in Burgundy, about the year 654, there was a provincial synod which confirmed what had been done by the third council of Orleans, about the observation of the Lord's day, namely that 'none should plow or reap, or do any other thing belonging to husbandry, on pain of the censures of the church; which was the more minded, because backed with the secular power, and by an edict menacing such as offended herein; who if bondmen, were to be soundly beaten, but if free, had three admonitions, and then if faulty, lost the third part of their patrimony, and if still obstinate were made slaves for the future. And in the first year of Eringius, about the time of Pope Agatho there sat the twelfth council of Toledo in Spain, A.D. 681, where the Jews were forbid to keep their own festivals, but so far at least observe the Lord's day as to do no manner of work on it, whereby they might express their contempt of Christ or his worship.' "23

These were weighty reasons indeed for Sunday observance. Nor can it be thought strange that in the Dark Ages a constant succession of such things should eventuate in the universal observance of that day. Even the Jews were to be compelled to desist from Sabbath observance, and to honor Sunday by resting on that day from their labor. The earliest mention of Sunday in English statutes appears to be the following:

A.D. 692. "Ina, king of the west Saxons, by the advice of Cenred his father, and Heddes and Erkenwald his bishops, with all his aldermen and sages, in a great assembly of the servants of God, for the health of their souls, and common preservation of the kingdom, made several constitutions, of which this was the third: 'If a servant do any work on Sunday by his master's orders, he shall be free, and the master pay thirty shillings; but if he went to work on his own head, he shall be either beaten with stripes, or ransom himself with a price. A freeman, if he works on this day, shall lose his freedom or pay sixty shillings; if he be a priest, double.' "<sup>24</sup>

The same year that this law was enacted in England, the sixth general council convened at Constantinople, which decreed that,

"If any bishop or other clergyman, or any of the laity, absented himself from the church three Sundays together, except in cases of very great necessity, if a clergyman, he was to be deposed; if a layman, debarred the holy communion."<sup>25</sup>

In the year 747, a council of the English clergy was called under Cuthbert, archbishop of Canterbury, in the reign of Egbert, king of Kent, and this constitution made:

"It is ordered that the Lord's day be celebrated with due veneration, and wholly devoted to the worship of God. And that all abbots and priests, on this most holy day, remain in their respective monasteries and churches, and there do their duty according to their places."<sup>26</sup>

Another ecclesiastical statute of the eighth century was enacted at Dingosolinum in Bavaria, where a synod met about 772, which decreed that,

"If any man shall work his cart on this day, or do any such common business, his team shall be presently forfeited to the public use, and if the party persists in his folly, let him be sold for a bondman."<sup>27</sup>

The English were not behind their neighbors in the good work of establishing the sacredness of Sunday. Thus we read:

A.D. 784. "Egbert, archbishop of York, to show positively what was to be done on Sundays, and what the laws designed by prohibiting ordinary work to be done on such days, made this canon: 'Let nothing else, saith he, be done on the Lord's day, but to attend on God in hymns and psalms and spiritual songs. Whoever marries on Sunday, let him do penance for seven days.' "<sup>28</sup>

In the conclusion of the eighth century further efforts were made in behalf of this favored day:

"Charles the Great summoned the bishops to Friuli, in Italy, where . . . they decreed [A.D. 791] that all people should, with due reverence and devotion, honor the Lord's day. . . . Under the same prince another council was called three years later at Frankford in Germany, and there the limits of the Lord's day were determined from Saturday evening to Sunday evening."<sup>29</sup>

The five councils of Mentz, Rheims, Tours, Chalons, and Arles, were all called in the year 813 by Charlemagne. It would be irksome to the reader to dwell upon the several acts of these councils in behalf of Sunday. They are of the same character as those already quoted. The council of Chalons, however, is worthy of being noticed in that, according to Morer,

"They entreated the help of the secular power, and desired the emperor [Charlemagne] to provide for the stricter observation of it[Sunday]. Which he accordingly did, and left no stone unturned to secure the honor of the day. His care succeeded; and during his reign, the Lord's day bore a considerable figure. But after his day, it put on another face."<sup>30</sup>

The pope lent a helping hand in checking the profanation of Sunday:

"And thereupon Pope Eugenius, in a synod held at Rome about 826, . . . gave directions that the parish priest should admonish such offenders and wish them to go to church and say their prayers, lest otherwise they might bring some great calamity on themselves and neighbors."<sup>31</sup>

All this, however, was not sufficient, and so another council was summoned. At this council was brought forward - perhaps for the first time - the famous first-day argument now so familiar to all, that Sunday is proved to be the true Sabbath because that men are struck by lightning who labor on that day. Thus we read:

"But these paternal admonitions turning to little account, a provincial council was held at Paris three years after . . . in 829, wherein the prelates complain that 'The Lord's day was not kept with reverence as became religion . . . which was the reason that God had sent several judgments on them, and in a very remarkable manner punished some people for slighting and abusing it. For, say they, many of us by our own knowledge, and some by hearsay know, that several countrymen following their husbandry on this day have been killed with lightning, others, being seized with convulsions in their joints, have miserably perished. Whereby it is apparent how high the displeasure of God was upon their neglect of this day.' And at last they conclude that 'in the first place the priests and ministers, then kings and princes, and all faithful people he beseeched to use their utmost endeavors and care that the day be restored to its honor, and for the credit of Christianity more devoutly observed for the time to come.'"<sup>32</sup>

Further legislation being necessary,

"It was decreed about seven years after in a council at Aken, under Lewis the Godly, that neither pleadings nor marriages should be allowed on the Lord's day."<sup>33</sup>

But the law of Charlemagne, though backed with the authority of the church, as expressed in the canons of the councils already quoted, by the remissness of Lewis, his successor became very feeble. It is evident that canons and decrees of councils, though fortified with the mention of terrible judgments that had befallen transgressors, were not yet sufficient to enforce the sacred day. Another and more terrific statute than any yet issued was sought at the hands of the emperor. Thus we read:

"Thereupon an address was made to the emperors, Lewis and Lotharius, that they would be pleased to take some care in it, and send out some precept or injunction more severe than what was hitherto extant, to strike terror into their subjects, and force them to forbear their ploughing, pleading, and marketing, then grown again into use; which was done about the year 853; and to that end a synod was called at Rome under the popedom of Leo IV. "<sup>34</sup>

The advocates of the first-day Sabbath have in all ages sought for a law capable of striking terror into those who do not hallow that day. They still continue the vain endeavor. But if they would honor the day which God set apart for the Sabbath, they would find in that law of fire which proceeded from his right hand a statute which renders all human legislation entirely unnecessary.<sup>35</sup>

At this synod the pope took the matter in hand in good earnest. Thus Heylyn testifies that under the emperors, Lewis and Lotharius, a synod was held at Rome A.D. 853, under pope Leo IV.,

"Where it was ordered more precisely than in former times that no man should from thenceforth dare to make any markets on the Lord's day, no, not for things that were to eat: neither to do any kind of work that belonged to husbandry. Which canon being made at Rome, confirmed at Compeigne, and afterwards incorporated as it was into the body of the canon law, became to be admitted, without further question, in most parts of Christendom; especially when the popes had attained their height, and brought all Christian princes to be at their devotion. For then the people, who before had most opposed it, might have justly said, 'Behold two kings stood not before him, how then shall we stand?' Out of which consternation all men presently obeyed, tradesmen of all sorts being brought to lay by their labors; and amongst those, the miller, though his work was easiest, and least of all required his presence."<sup>36</sup>

This was a most effectual establishment of first-day sacredness. Five years after this we read as follows:

A.D. 858. "The Bulgarians sent some questions to Pope Nicholas, to which they desired answers. And that [answer] which concerned the Lord's day was that they should desist from all secular work, etc."<sup>37</sup>

Morer informs us respecting the civil power, that,

"In this century the emperor [of Constantinople] Leo, surnamed the philosopher, restrained the works of husbandry, which, according to Constantine's toleration, were permitted in the east. The same care was taken in the west, by Theodorus, king of the Bavarians, who made this order, that 'If any person on the Lord's day yoked his oxen, or drove his wain, his right-side ox should be forthwith forfeited; or if he made hay and carried it in, he was to be twice admonished to desist, which if he did not, he was to receive no less than fifty stripes.' "<sup>38</sup>

Of Sunday laws in England in this century, we read:

A.D. 876. "Alfred the Great, was the first who united the Saxon Heptarchy, and it was not the least part of his care to make a law that among other festivals this day more especially might be solemnly kept, because it was the day whereon our Saviour Christ overcame the devil; meaning Sunday, which is the weekly memorial of our Lord's resurrection, whereby he overcame death, and him who had the power of death, that is the devil. And whereas before the single punishment for sacrilege committed on any other day, was to restore the value of the thing stolen, and withal lose one hand, he added that if any person was found guilty of this crime done on the Lord's day, he should be doubly punished."<sup>39</sup>

Nineteen years later, the pope and his council still further strengthened the sacred day. The council of Friburgh in Germany, A.D. 895, under Pope Formosus, decreed that the Lord's day, men "were to spend in prayers, and devote wholly to the service of God, who otherwise might be provoked to anger."<sup>40</sup> The work of establishing Sunday sacredness in England was carried steadily forward:

"King Athelston, . . . in the year 928, made a law that there should be no marketing or civil pleadings on the Lord's day, under the penalty of forfeiting the commodity, besides a fine of thirty shillings for each offense."<sup>41</sup>

In a convocation of the English clergy about this time, it was decreed that all sorts of traffic and holding of courts, &c., on Sunday should cease. "And whoever transgressed in any of these instances, if a freeman, he was to pay twelve orae, if a servant, be severely whipt." We are further informed that,

"About the year 943, Otho, archbishop of Canterbury, had it decreed that above all things the Lord's day should be kept with all imaginable caution, according to the canon and ancient practice."<sup>42</sup>

A.D. 967. King Edgar "commanded that the festival should be kept from three of the clock in the afternoon on Saturday, till day-break on Monday."<sup>43</sup>

"King Ethelred the younger, son of Edgar, coming to the crown about the year 1009, called a general council of all the English clergy, under Elfeagus, archbishop of Canterbury, and Wolstan, archbishop of York. And there it was required that all persons in a more zealous manner should observe the Sunday, and what belonged to it."<sup>44</sup>

Nor did the Sunday festival fail to gain a footing in Norway. Heylyn tells us of the piety of a Norwegian king by the name of Olaus, A.D. 1028.

"For being taken up one Sunday in some serious thoughts, and having in his hand a small walking stick, he took his knife and whittled it as men do sometimes, when their minds are troubled or intent on business. And when it had been told him as by way of jest how he had trespassed therein against the Sabbath, he gathered the small chips together, put them upon his hand, and set fire to them, that so, saith Crantzius, he might revenge that on himself what unawares he had committed against God's commandment."<sup>45</sup>

In Spain also the work went forward. A council was held at Coy, in Spain, A.D. 1050, under Ferdinand, king of Castile, in the days of Pope Leo IX., where it was decreed that the Lord's day "was to be entirely consecrated to hearing of mass."<sup>46</sup>

To strengthen the sacredness of this venerable day in the minds of the people, the doctors of the church were not wanting. Heylyn makes the following statement:

"It was delivered of the souls in purgatory by Petrus Damiani, who lived A.D. 1056, that every Lord's day they were manumitted from their pains and fluttered up and down the lake Avernus, in the shape of birds."<sup>47</sup>

At the same time, another argument of a similar kind was brought forward to render the observance still more strict. Morer informs us respecting that class who in this age were most zealous advocates of Sunday observance:

"Yet still the others went on in their way; and to induce their proselytes to spend the day with greater exactness and care, they brought in the old argument of compassion and charity to the damned in hell, who during the day, have some respite from their torments, and the ease and liberty they have is more or less according to the zeal and degrees of keeping it well."<sup>48</sup>

If therefore they would strictly observe this sacred festival, their friends in hell would reap the benefit, in a respite from their torments on that day! In a council at Rome, A.D. 1078, Pope Gregory VII decreed that as the Sabbath had been long regarded as a fast day, those who desired to be Christians should on that day abstain from eating meat.<sup>49</sup> In the eastern division of the Catholic church, in the eleventh century, the Sabbath was still regarded as a festival, equal in sacredness with Sunday. Heylyn contrasts with this the action of the western division of that church:

"But it was otherwise of old in the church of Rome, where they did labor and fast. . . . And this, with little opposition or interruption, save that which had been made in the city of Rome in the beginning of the seventh century, and was soon crushed by Gregory then bishop there, as before we noted. And howsoever Urban of that name the second, did consecrate it to the weekly service of the blessed virgin, and instituted in the council held at Clermont, A.D. 1095, that our lady's office should be said upon it, and that upon that day all Christian folks should worship her with their best devotion."<sup>50</sup>

It would seem that this was a crowning indignity to the Most High. The memorial of the great Creator was set apart as a festival on which to worship Mary, under the title of mother of God! In the middle of the twelfth century, the king of England was admonished not to suffer men to work upon Sunday. Henry II. entered on the government about the year 1155.

"Of him it is reported that he had an apparition at Cardiff (. . . in South Wales) which from St. Peter charged him, that upon Sundays throughout his dominions, there should be no buying or selling, and no servile work done."<sup>51</sup>

The sacredness of Sunday was not yet sufficiently established, because a divine warrant for its observance was still unprovided. The manner in which this urgent necessity was met is related by Roger Hoveden, a historian of high repute who lived at the very time when this much-needed precept was furnished by the pope. Hoveden informs us that Eustace the abbot of Flaye in Normandy, came into England in the year 1200, to preach the word of the Lord, and that his preaching was attended by many wonderful miracles. He was very earnest in behalf of Sunday. Thus Hoveden says:

"At London also, and many other places throughout England, he effected by his preaching, that from that time forward people did not dare to hold market of things exposed for sale on the Lord's Day."<sup>52</sup>

But Hoveden tells us that "the enemy of mankind raised against this man of God the ministers of iniquity," and it seems that having no commandment for Sunday he was in a strait place. The historian continues:

"However, the said abbot, on being censured by the ministers of Satan, was unwilling any longer to molest the prelates of England by his preaching, but returned to Normandy, unto his place whence he came."<sup>53</sup>

But Eustace, though repulsed, had no thought of abandoning the contest. He had no commandment from the Lord when he came into England the first time. But one year's sojourn on the continent was sufficient to provide that which he lacked. Hoveden tells us how he returned the following year with the needed precept:

"In the same year [1201], Eustace, abbot of Flaye, returned to England, and preaching therein the word of the Lord from city to city, and from place to place, forbade any person to hold a market of goods on sale upon the Lord's day. For he said that the commandment under-written, as to the observance of the Lord's day, had come down from Heaven:

"THE HOLY COMMANDMENT AS TO THE LORD'S DAY,

"Which came from Heaven to Jerusalem, and was found upon the altar of Saint Simeon, in Golgotha, where Christ was crucified for the sins of the world. The Lord sent down this epistle, which was found upon the altar of Saint Simeon, and after looking upon which, three days and three nights, some men fell upon the earth, imploring mercy of God. And after the third hour, the patriarch arose, and Acharias, the archbishop, and they opened the scroll, and received the holy epistle from God. And when they had taken the same they found this writing therein:

" 'I am the Lord, who commanded you to observe the holy day of the Lord, and ye have not kept it, and have not repented of your sins, as I have said in my gospel, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Whereas, I caused to be preached unto you repentance and amendment of life, you did not believe me, I have sent against you the pagans, who have shed your blood on the earth; and yet you have not believed; and, because you did not keep the Lord's day holy, for a few days you suffered hunger, but soon I gave you fulness, and after that you did still worse again. Once more, it is my will, that no one, from the ninth hour on Saturday until sunrise on Monday, shall do any work except that which is good.

" `And if any person shall do so, he shall with penance make amends for the same. And if you do not pay obedience to this command, verily, I say unto you, and I swear unto you, by my seat and by my throne, and by the cherubim who watch my holy seat, that I will give you my commands by no other epistle, but I will open the heavens, and for rain I will rain upon you stones, and wood, and hot water, in the night, that no one may take precautions against the same, and that so I may destroy all wicked men.

" `This do I say unto you; for the Lord's holy day, you shall die the death, and for the other festivals of my saints which you have not kept: I will send unto you beasts that have the heads of lions, the hair of women, the tails of camels, and they shall be so ravenous that they shall devour your flesh, and you shall long to flee away to the tombs of the dead, and to hide yourselves for fear of the beasts; and I will take away the light of the sun from before your eyes, and will send darkness upon you, that not seeing, you may slay one another, and that I may remove from you my face, and may not show mercy upon you. For I will burn the bodies and the hearts of you, and of all of those who do not keep as the holy day of the Lord.

" `Hear ye my voice, that so ye may not perish in the land, for the holy day of the Lord. Depart from evil, and show repentance for your sins. For, if you do not do so, even as Sodom and Gomorrah shall you perish. Now, know ye, that you are saved by the prayers of my most holy mother, Mary, and of my most holy angels, who pray for you daily. I have given unto you wheat and wine in abundance, and for the same ye have not obeyed me. For the widows and orphans cry unto you daily, and unto them you show no mercy. The pagans show mercy, but you show none at all. The trees which bear fruit, I will cause to be dried up for your sins; the rivers and the fountains shall not give water.

" `I gave unto you a law in Mount Sinai, which you have not kept. I gave you a law with mine own hands, which you have not observed. For you I was born into the world, and my festive day ye knew not. Being wicked men, ye have not kept the Lord's day of my resurrection. By my right hand I swear unto you, that if you do not observe the Lord's day, and the festivals of my saints, I will send unto you the pagan nations, that they may slay you. And still do you attend to the business of others, and take no consideration of this? For this will I send against you still worse beasts, who shall devour the breasts of your women. I will curse those who on the Lord's day have wrought evil.

" `Those who act unjustly towards their brethren, will I curse. Those who judge unrighteously the poor and the orphans upon the earth, will I curse. For me you forsake, and you follow the prince of this world. Give heed to my voice, and you shall have the blessing of mercy. But you cease not from your bad works, nor from the works of the devil. Because you are guilty of perjuries and adulteries, therefore the nations shall surround you, and shall, like beasts, devour you.' "<sup>54</sup>

That such a document was actually brought into England at this time, and in the manner here described, is so amply attested as to leave no doubt.<sup>55</sup> Matthew Paris, like Hoveden, was actually a contemporary of Eustace. Hoveden properly belongs to the twelfth century, for he died shortly after the arrival of Eustace with his roll. But Matthew Paris belongs to the thirteenth, as he was but young at the time this roll (A.D. 1201) was brought into England. Both have a high reputation for truthfulness. In speaking of the writers of that century, Mosheim bears the following testimony to the credibility of Matthew Paris:

"Among the historians, the first place is due to Matthew Paris, a writer of the highest merit, both in point of knowledge and prudence."<sup>56</sup>

And Dr. Murdock says of him:

"He is accounted the best historian of the Middle Ages, learned, independent, honest, and judicious."<sup>57</sup>

Matthew Paris relates the return of the abbot Eustachius (as he spells the name) from Normandy, and gives us a copy of the roll which he brought, and an account of its fall from Heaven as related by the abbot himself. He also tells us how the abbot came by it, tracing the history of the roll from the point when the patriarch gathered courage to take it into his hands, till the time when our abbot was commissioned to bring it into England. Thus he says:

"But when the patriarch and clergy of all the holy land had diligently examined the contents of this epistle, it was decreed in a general deliberation that the epistle should be sent to the judgment of the Roman pontiff, seeing that whatever he decreed to be done, would please all. And when at length the epistle had come to the knowledge of the lord pope, immediately he ordained heralds, who being sent through different parts of the world, preached every where the doctrine of this epistle, the Lord working with them and confirming their words by signs following. Among whom the abbot of Flay, Eustachius by name, a devout and learned man, having entered the kingdom of England did there shine with many miracles."<sup>58</sup>

Now we know what the abbot was about during the year that he was absent from England. He could not establish first-day sacredness by his first mission to England, for he had no divine warrant in its behalf. He therefore retired from the mission long enough to make known the necessities of the case to the "lord pope." But when he came the second time he brought the divine mandate for Sunday, and with the commission of the pope, authorizing him to proclaim that mandate to the people, and informing them that it was sent to His Holiness from Jerusalem by those who saw it fall from Heaven. Had Eustace framed this document himself, and then forged a commission from the pope, a few months would have discovered the imposture. But their genuineness was never questioned as shown by preservation of this roll by the best historians of that time. We therefore trace the responsibility for this roll by the best historians of that time. We therefore trace the responsibility for this roll directly to the pope of Rome. The statement of the pope that he received it from the hands of those who saw it fall from Heaven is the guaranty given by His Holiness to the people that the roll came from God. The historians then living, who record this transaction, were able to satisfy themselves that Eustace brought the roll from the pope; and they believed the pope's statement that he had received it from Heaven. It was Innocent III. who filled the office of pope at this time, of whom Bower speaks thus:

"Innocent was perfectly well qualified to raise the papal power and authority to the highest pitch, and we shall see him improving, with great address, every opportunity that offered to compass that end."<sup>59</sup>

Another eminent authority makes this statement:

"The external circumstances of his time also furthered Innocent's views, and enabled him to make his pontificate the most marked in the annals of Rome; the culminating point of the temporal as well as the spiritual supremacy of the Roman See."<sup>60</sup>

"His pontificate may be fairly considered to have been the period of the highest power of the Roman See."<sup>61</sup>

The dense darkness of the Dark Ages still covered the earth when that pontiff filled the papal throne who raised the papacy to its highest elevation. Two facts worthy of much thought should here be named in connection:

1. The first act of papal usurpation was by an edict in behalf of Sunday.<sup>62</sup>
2. The utmost height of papal usurpation was marked by the pope's act of furnishing a divine precept for Sunday observance.

The mission of Eustace was attested by miracles which are worthy of perusal by those who believe in first-day sacredness because their fathers thus believed. Here they may learn what was done six centuries since, to fix these ideas in the minds of their fathers. Eustace came to York, in the north of England, and, meeting an honorable reception,

"Preached the word of the Lord, and on the breaking of the Lord's day and the other festivals, and imposed upon the people penance and gave absolution, upon condition that, in future they would pay due reverence to the Lord's day and the other festivals of the saints, doing therein no servile work."<sup>63</sup>

"Upon this, the people who were dutiful to God at his preaching, vowed before God that, for the future, on the Lord's day, they would neither buy nor sell any thing, unless, perchance, victuals and drink of wayfarers."<sup>64</sup>

The abbot also made provision for the collection of alms for the benefit of the poor, and forbade the use of the churches for the sale of goods, and for the pleading of causes. Upon this, the king interfered as follows:

"Accordingly, through these and other warnings of this holy man, the enemy of mankind being rendered envious, he put it into the heart of the king and of the princes of darkness to command that all who should observe the before stated doctrines, and more especially all those who had discountenanced the markets on the Lord's day, should be brought before the king's court of justice, to make satisfaction as to the observance of the Lord's day."<sup>65</sup>

The markets of the Lord's day, it seems, were held in the churches, and Eustace was attempting to suppress these when he forbade the sale of goods in the churches. And now to confirm the authority of the roll, and to neutralize the opposition of the king, some very extraordinary prodigies were reported. The roll forbade labor "from the ninth hour (that is 3 P.M.) on Saturday until sunrise on Monday." Now read what happened to the disobedient:

"One Saturday, a certain carpenter of Beverly, who, after the ninth hour of the day was, contrary to the wholesome advice of his wife, making a wooden wedge, fell to the earth, being struck with paralysis. A woman also, a weaver, who, after the ninth hour, on Saturday, in her anxiety to finish a part of the web, persisted in so doing fell to the ground, struck with paralysis, and lost her voice. At Rafferton also, a vill belonging to Master Roger Arundel, a man made for himself a loaf and baked it under the ashes, after the ninth hour on Saturday, and ate thereof, and put part of it by till the morning, but when he broke it on the Lord's day blood started forth therefrom; and he who saw it bore witness, and his testimony is true.

"At Wakefield, also, one Saturday, while a miller was, after the ninth hour, attending to grinding his corn, there suddenly came forth, instead of flour, such a torrent of blood, that the vessel placed beneath was nearly filled with blood, and the mill wheel stood immovable, in spite of the strong rush of the water; and those who beheld it wondered thereat, saying, 'Spare us, O Lord, spare thy people!'

"Also, in Lincolnshire a woman had prepared some dough, and taking it to the oven after the ninth hour on Saturday, she placed it in the oven, which was then at a very great heat; but when she took it out, she found it raw, on which she again put it into the oven, which was very hot; and, both on the next day, and on Monday, when she supposed that she should find the loaves baked, she found raw dough.

"In the same county also, when a certain woman had prepared her dough, intending to carry it to the oven, her husband said to her, 'It is Saturday, and it is now past the ninth hour, put it one side till Monday:' on which the woman, obeying her husband, did as he commanded; and so, having covered over the dough with a linen cloth, on coming the next day to look at the dough, to see whether it had not, in rising, through the yeast that was in it, gone over the sides of the vessel, she found there the loaves ready made by the divine will, and well baked, without any fire of the material of this world. This was a change wrought by the right hand of Him on high."<sup>66</sup>

The historian laments that these miracles were lost upon the people, and that they feared the king more than they feared God, and so "like a dog to his vomit, returned to the holding of markets on the Lord's day."<sup>67</sup> Such was the first attempt in England after the apparition of St. Peter, A.D. 1155, to supply divine authority for Sunday observance. "It shows," as Morer quaintly observes, "how industrious men were in those times to have this great day solemnly observed."<sup>68</sup> And Gilfillan, who has occasion to mention the story of the roll from Heaven, has not one word of condemnation for the pious fraud in behalf of Sunday, but he simply speaks of our abbot as "This ardent person."<sup>69</sup>

Two years after the arrival of Eustace in England with his roll, A.D. 1203, a council was held in Scotland concerning the introduction and establishment of the Lord's day in that kingdom.<sup>70</sup> The roll that had fallen from Heaven to supply the lack of scriptural testimony in behalf of this day, was admirably adapted to the business of this council, though Dr. Heylyn informs us that the Scotch were so ready to comply with the pope's wishes that the packet from the court of Heaven and the accompanying miracles were not needed.<sup>71</sup> Yet Morer asserts that the packet was actually produced on this occasion:

"To that end it was again produced and read in a council of Scotland, held under [pope] Innocent III, . . . A.D. 1203, in the reign of King William, who . . . passed it into a law that Saturday from twelve at noon ought to be accounted holy, and that no man shall deal in such worldly business as on feast days were forbidden. As also that at the tolling of a bell, the people were to be employed in holy actions, going to sermons and the like, and to continue thus until Monday morning, a penalty being laid on those who did the contrary. About the year 1214, which was eleven years after, it was again enacted, in a parliament at Scone, by Alexander III., king of the Scots, that none should fish in any waters, from Saturday after evening prayer, till sunrising on Monday, which was afterward confirmed by King James I."<sup>72</sup>

The sacredness of this papal Lord's day seems to have been more easily established by taking in with it a part of the ancient Sabbath. The work of establishing this institution was everywhere carried steadily forward. Of England we read:

"In the year 1237, Henry III. being king, and Edmund de Abendon archbishop of Canterbury, a constitution was made, requiring every minister to forbid his parishners the frequenting of markets on the Lord's day, and leaving the church where they ought to meet and spend the day in prayer and hearing the word of God. And this on pain of excommunication."<sup>73</sup>

Of France we are informed:

"The council of Lyons sat about the year 1244, and it restrained the people from their ordinary work on the Lord's day, and other festivals on pain of ecclesiastical censures."

A.D. 1282. The council of Angeirs in France "forbid millers by water or otherwise to grind their corn from Saturday evening till Sunday evening."<sup>74</sup>

Nor were the Spaniards backward in this work:

A.D. 1322. This year "a synod was called at Valladolid in Castile, and then was ratified what was formerly required, that 'none should follow husbandry, or exercise himself in any mechanical employment on the Lord's day, or other holy days, but where it was a work of necessity or charity, of which the minister of the parish was to be judge.' "<sup>75</sup>

The rulers of the church and realm of England were diligent in establishing the sacredness of this day. Yet the following statutes show that they were not aware of any Bible authority for enforcing its observance:

A.D. 1358. "Istippe, archbishop of Canterbury, with very great concern and zeal, expresses himself thus: 'We have it from the relation of very credible persons, that in divers places within our province, a very naughty, nay, damnable custom has prevailed, to hold fairs and markets on the Lord's day. . . . Wherefore by virtue of canonical obedience, we strictly charge and command your brotherhood, that if you find your people faulty in the premises, you forthwith admonish or cause them to be admonished to refrain going to markets or fairs on the Lord's day. . . . And as for such who are obstinate and speak or act against you in this particular, you must endeavor to restrain them by ecclesiastical censures and by all lawful means put a stop to these extravagances.'

"Nor was the civil power silent; for much about that time King Edward made an act that wool should not be shown at the staple on Sundays and other solemn feasts in the year. In the reign of King Henry VI., Dr. Stafford being archbishop of Canterbury, A.D. 1444, it was decreed that fairs and markets should no more be kept in churches and church-yards on the Lord's day, or other festivals, except in time of harvest."<sup>76</sup>

Observe that fairs and markets were held in the churches in England on Sundays as late as 1444! And even later than this such fairs were allowed in harvest time. On the European continent the sacredness of Sunday was persistently urged. The council of Bourges urges its observance as follows:

A.D. 1532. "The Lord's day and other festivals were instituted for this purpose, that faithful Christians abstaining from external work, might more freely, and with greater piety devote themselves to God's worship."<sup>77</sup>

They did not seem to be aware of the fact however that when the fear of God is taught by the precepts of men such worship is vain.<sup>78</sup> The council of Rheims, which sat the next year, made this decree:

A.D. 1533. "Let the people assemble at their parish churches on the Lord's day, and other holidays, and be present at mass, sermons and vespers. Let no man on these days give himself to plays or dances, especially during service." And the historian adds: "In the same year another synod at Tours, ordered the Lord's day and other holidays to be reverently observed under pain of excommunication"<sup>79</sup>

A council which assembled the following year thus frankly confessed the divine origin of the Sabbath, and the human origin of that festival which has supplanted it:

A.D. 1584. "Let all Christians remember that the seventh day was consecrate by God, and hath been received and observed, not only by the Jews, but by all others who pretend to worship God; though we Christians have changed their Sabbath into the Lord's day. A day therefore to be kept, by forbearing all worldly business, suits, contracts, carriages, &c., and by sanctifying the rest of mind and body, in the contemplation of God and things divine, we are to do nothing but works of charity, say prayers, and sing psalms."<sup>80</sup>

We have thus traced Sunday observance in the Catholic church down to a period subsequent to the Reformation. That it is an ordinance of man which has usurped the place of the Bible Sabbath is most distinctly confessed by the council last quoted. Yet they endeavor to make amends of their violation of the Sabbath by spending Sunday in charity, prayers, and psalms: a course too often adopted at the present time to excuse the violation of the fourth commandment. Who can read this long list of Sunday laws, not from the "one Law-giver who is able to save and to destroy," but from popes, emperors, and councils, without adopting the sentiment of Neander: "The festival of Sunday, like all other festivals, was always only a human ordinance?"

---

1 2Thess.2.

2 Dan.7.

3 Shimeall's Bible Chronology, part ii. chap. ix. sect. 5, p. 175, 176; Croly on the Apocalypse, pp. 167-173.

4 Dan.7:8,24,25; Rev.13:1-5.

5 Rev.12.

6 Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. iv. sect. 1.

7 Learned Treatise of the Sabbath, p. 73, ed. 1631.

8 Hist. Sab. part ii, chap. ii, sect. 12.

9 Treatise of the Sabbath Day, p. 202.

10 Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. v. sect. 13.

11 Id. part ii. chap. v. sect. 6.

12 Treatise of the Sabbath Day, pp. 217, 218.

13 Dialogues on the Lord's Day, pp. 263, 264.

14 The Lord's Day, p. 58.

15 Dictionary of Chronology p. 813, art. Sunday.

16 Dialogues on the Lord's Day, p. 265.

17 Id. pp. 265, 266; Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. iv. sect 7.

18 Dialogues on the Lord's Day. p. 68.

19 Historical and Practical Discourse on the Lord's Day, p. 174.

20 Dialogues on the Lord's Day, p. 282.

21 Fleury, Hist. Eccl. Tome viii. Livre xxxvi. Sect 22; Heylyn's Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. v. sect. 1. Dr. Twisse, however, asserts that the pope speaks of two classes. He gives Gregory's words as follows: "Relation is made unto me that certain men of a perverse spirit, have sowed among you some corrupt doctrines contrary to our holy faith; so as to forbid any work to be done on the Sabbath day: these men we may well call the preachers of Antichrist. . . . Another report was brought unto me; and what was that? That some perverse persons preach among you, that on the Lord's day none should be washed. This is clearly another point maintained by other persons, different from the former." - Morality of the Fourth Commandment, pp. 19, 20. If Dr. Twisse is right, the Sabbath-keepers in Rome about the year 600 were not chargeable with the Sunday observance above mentioned.

22 The idea is suggested by the language of an anonymous first-day writer of the seventeenth century, Irenaeus Philalethes, in a work entitled "Sabbato-Dominica," pref. p. 11, London, 1643.

23 Dialogues on the Lord's Day, p. 267.

24 Id. p. 283.

25 Dialogues, &c. p. 268.

26 Id. pp. 283, 284.

27 Id. p. 268.

28 Id. p. 284.

29 Dialogues, &c. p. 269.

30 Id. p. 270.

31 Id. p. 271.

32 Dialogue, &c. p. 271; Hist. Sab. part ii, chap. v. sect. 7.

33 Dialogues, &c. p. 272.

34 Dialogue, &c. p. 261.

35 Ex.20:8-11; Deut.33:2.

36 Hist. Sab. part ii, chap. v, sect. 7; Morer, p. 272.

37 Hist. Sab. part. ii, chap. v, sect. 7; Morer, p. 272.

38 Dialogues, &c. pp. 261, 262.

39 Id. pp. 284, 285.

40 Dialogues, &c. p. 274.

41 Id. p. 285.

42 Id. p. 286.

43 Ib. Ib.

44 Id. pp. 286, 287.

45 Hist. Sab. part ii, chap. v, sect. 2.

46 Dialogues, &c. p. 274.

47 Hist. Sab. part ii, chap. v, sect. 2.

48 Dialogues, &c. p. 68.

49 Binius, vol. iii, p. 1285, ed. 1606.

50 Hist. Sab. part. ii, chap. v, sect. 13.

51 Morer, p. 288; Heylyn, part 2, chap. vii, sect. 6.

52 Roger de Hoveden's Annals, Bohn's ed. vol. ii, p. 487.

53 Id. Ib.

54 Hoveden, vol. ii, pp. 526-528.

55 See Matthew Paris's Historia Major, pp. 200, 201. ed. 1640; Binius' Councils, ad ann. 1201, vol. iii, pp. 1448, 1449; Wilkins' Concilia Magnae Britanniae, et Hibernae, vol. i, pp. 510, 511, London, 1737; Sir David Dalrymple's historical Memorials, pp. 7, 8, ed. 1769; Heyln's History of the Sabbath, part ii, chap. vii, sect. 5; Morer's Lord's Day, pp. 288-290; Hessey's Sunday pp. 90, 321; Gilfillan's Sabbath, p. 399.

56 Maclaine's Mosheim, cent. xiii, part ii, chap. i, sect. 5.

57 Murdock's Mosheim, cent. xiii, part ii, chap. i, sect. 5, note 19.

58 Matthew Paris's Historia Major, p. 201. His words are: "Cum autem l'atriarcha et clerus omnis Terrae sanctae, hunc epistolae tenorem diligenter examinassent; communi omnium deliberatione dectretum est, ut epistola ad iudicium Romani Pontificis transmitteretur; quatenus, quicquid ipse agendum dectrevit, placet universis. Cumque tandem epistola ad domini Papae notitiam pervenisset, continuo praedicatotes ordinavit; qui per diversas mundi partes profecti, praedicaverun ubique epistolaftenerem; Domino cooperante et sermonem eorum confirmante, sequentibus signis. Inter quos Abbos de Flai nomine Eustachius, vir religiosus et literali scientia eruditus, regnum Angliae agressus: multis ibidem miraculis corruscavit." - Library of Harvard College.

59 History of the Popes, vol. ii, p. 535.

60 M'Clintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, vol. iv, p. 590.

61 Id. vol. iv, p. 592.

62 See page 274 of this work.

63 Hoveden, vol. ii, p. 528.

64 Hoveden, vol. ii, p. 528.

65 Id. p. 529.

66 Hoveden, vol. ii. pp. 529, 530.

67 Id. Ib. Sabbath History.

68 Dialogues, &c. p. 290.

69 Gilfillan's Sabbath, p. 399.

70 Binius's Councils, vol. iii. p. 1448, 1449; Heylyn, part ii. chap. vii. sect. 7.

71 Heylyn, part ii. chap. vii. sect. 7.

72 Dialogues, &c. pp. 290, 291.

73 Id. p. 291.

74 Id. p. 275.

75 Id. Ib.

76 Id. pp. 293, 294 .

77 Id. p. 279.

78 Isa.29:13; Matt.15:9.

79 Morer, p. 280.

80 Id. pp. 281, 282.

CHAPTER 21

TRACES OF THE SABBATH DURING THE DARK AGES

---

The Dark Ages defined - Difficulty of tracing the people of God during this period - The Sabbath effectually suppressed in the Catholic church at the close of the fifth century - Sabbath-keepers in Rome about A.D. 600 - The Culdees of Great Britain - Columba probably a Sabbath-keeper - The Waldenses - Their antiquity - Their wide extent - Their peculiarities - Sabbatarian character of a part of this people - Important facts respecting the Waldenses and the Romanists - Other bodies of Sabbatarians - The Cathari - The Arnoldistae - The Passaginians - The Petrobruysians - Gregory VII. about A.D. 1074 condemns the Sabbath-keepers - The Sabbath in Constantinople in the eleventh century - A portion of the Anabaptists - Sabbatarians in Abyssinia and Ethiopia - The Armenians of the East Indies - The Sabbath retained through the Dark Ages by those who were not in the communion of the Romish church.

---

With the accession of the Roman bishop to supremacy began the Dark Ages;<sup>1</sup> and as he increased in strength, the gloom of darkness settled with increasing intensity upon the world. The highest elevation of the papal power marks the latest point in the Dark Ages before the first gray dawn of twilight.<sup>2</sup> That power was providentially weakened preparatory to the reformation of the sixteenth century, when the light of advancing day began to manifestly dissipate the gross darkness which covered the earth. The difficulty of tracing the true people of God through this period is well set forth in the following language of Benedict:

"As scarcely any fragment of their history remains, all we know of them is from accounts of their enemies, which were always uttered in the style of censure and complaint; and without which we should not have known that millions of them ever existed. It was the settled policy of Rome to obliterate every vestige of opposition to her doctrines and decrees; everything heretical, whether persons or writings, by which the faithful would be liable to be contaminated and led astray. In conformity to this their fixed determination, all books and records of their opposers were hunted up and committed to the flames. Before the art of printing was discovered in the fifteenth century, all books were made with the pen; the copies, of course, were so few that their concealment was much more difficult than it would be now; and if a few of them escaped the vigilance of the inquisitors, they would soon be worn out and gone.

None of them could be admitted and preserved in the public libraries of the Catholics, from the ravages of time and of the hands of barbarians with which all parts of Europe were at different periods overwhelmed."<sup>3</sup>

The first five centuries of the Christian era accomplished the suppression of the Sabbath in those churches which were under the special control of the Roman pontiff. Thenceforward we must look for the observers of the Sabbath outside the communion of the church of Rome. It was predicted that the Roman power should cast down the truth to the ground.<sup>4</sup> The Scriptures set forth the law of God as his truth.<sup>5</sup> The Dark Ages were the result of this work of the great apostasy. So dense and all-pervading was the darkness, that God's pure truth was more or less obscured even with the true people of God in their places of retirement.

About the year 600, as we have seen, there was in the city of Rome itself a class of Sabbath-keeping Christians who were very strict in the observance of the fourth commandment. It has been said of them that they joined with this a strict abstinence from labor on Sunday. But Dr. Twisse, a learned first-day writer who has particularly examined the record respecting them, asserts that this Sunday observance pertained to "other persons, different from the former."<sup>6</sup> These Sabbath-keepers were not Romanists, and the pope denounced them in strong language.

The Christians of Great Britain, before the mission of Augustine to that country, A.D. 596, were not in subjection to the bishop of Rome. They were in an eminent degree Bible Christians. They are thus described:

"The Scottish church, when it first meets the eye of civilization, is not Romish, nor even prelatical. When the monk Augustine, with his forty missionaries, in the time of the Saxon Heptarchy, came over to Britain under the auspices of Gregory, the bishop of Rome, to convert the barbarian Saxons, he found the northern part of the island already well-nigh filled with Christians and Christian institutions. These Christians were the Culdees, whose chief seat was the little island of Hi or Iona, on the western coast of Scotland. An Irish presbyter, Columba, feeling himself stirred with missionary zeal, and doubtless knowing the wretched condition of the savage Scots and Picts, in the year 565, took with him twelve other missionaries, and passed over to Scotland. They fixed their settlement on the little island just named, and from that point became the missionaries of all Scotland, and even penetrated into England."<sup>7</sup>

"The people in the south of England converted by Augustine and his assistants, and those in the north who had been won by Culdee labor, soon met, as Christian conquest advanced from both sides; and when they came together, it was soon seen that Roman and Culdee Christianity very decidedly differed in a great many respects.

The Culdees, for the most part, had a simple and primitive form of Christianity, while Rome presented a vast accumulation of superstitions, and was arrayed in her well-known pomp."<sup>8</sup>

"The Culdee went to Iona that in quiet, with meditation, study, and prayer, he might fit himself for going out into the world as a missionary. Indeed, Iona was a great mission institute, where preachers were trained who evangelized the rude tribes of Scotland in a very short time. To have done such a work as this in less than half a century implies apostolic activity, purity, and success."<sup>9</sup>

"After the success of Augustine and his monks in England, the Culdees had shut themselves up within the limits of Scotland, and had resisted for centuries all the efforts of Rome to win them over. At last, however, they were overthrown by their own rulers."<sup>10</sup>

There is strong incidental evidence that Columba, the leading minister of his time among the Culdees, was an observer of the ancient Sabbath of the Bible. On this point I quote two standard authors of the Roman Catholics. They certainly have no motive to put such words as I here quote, fraudulently into the mouth of Columba, for they claim him as a saint, and they are no friends of the Bible Sabbath. Nor can we see how Columba could have used these words with satisfaction, as he evidently did, when dying had he all his life long been a violator of the ancient rest-day of the Lord. Here are the words of Dr. Alvan Butler:

"Having continued his labors in Scotland thirty-four years, he clearly and openly foretold his death, and on Saturday the ninth of June said to his disciple Diermit: 'This day is called the Sabbath, that is, the day of rest, and such will it truly be to me; for it will put an end to my labors.' "<sup>11</sup>

Another distinguished Catholic author gives us his dying words thus:

"To-day is Saturday, the day which the Holy Scriptures call the Sabbath, or rest. And it will be truly my day of rest, for it shall be the last of my laborious life."<sup>12</sup>

These words show, 1. That Columba believed that Saturday was the true Bible Sabbath. 2. That he did not believe the Sabbath had been changed to Sunday. 3. That this confession of faith respecting the Bible Sabbath was made with evident satisfaction, though in view of immediate death. Did any first-day man ever recur with pleasure on his death-bed to the fact that Saturday is the Bible Sabbath?

But Gilfillan quotes these words of Columba as spoken in behalf of Sunday! In giving a list of eminent men who have asserted the change of the Sabbath, or who have called Sunday the Sabbath, and have taught that it should be observed as a day of sacred rest, he brings in Columba thus:

"The testimony of Columba is specially interesting, as it expresses the feelings of the heart at a moment which tests the sincerity of faith, and the value of a creed:

'This day,' he said to his servant, 'in the sacred volume is called the Sabbath, that is, rest; and will indeed be a Sabbath to me, for it is to me the last day of this toilsome life, the day on which I am to rest (sabbatize), after all my labors and troubles, for on this coming sacred night of the Lord (Dominica nocte), at the midnight hour, I shall, as the Scriptures speak, go the way of my fathers.'<sup>13</sup>

But this day which Columba said "will indeed be a Sabbath to me" was not Sunday but Saturday.

Among the dissenters from the Romish church in the period of the Dark Ages, the first place perhaps is due to the Waldenses, both for their antiquity and the wide extent of their influence and doctrine. Benedict quotes from their enemies respecting the antiquity of their origin:

"We have already observed from Claudius Seyssel, the popish archbishop, that one Leo was charged with originating the Waldensian heresy in the valleys, in the days of the Constantine the Great. When those severe measures emanated from the Emperor Honourius against re-baptizers, the Baptist left the seat of opulence and power, and sought retreats in the country, and in the valleys of Piedmont; which last place in particular became their retreat from imperial oppression."<sup>14</sup>

Dean Waddington quotes the following from Rainer Saccho, a popish writer, who had the best means of information respecting them:

"There is no sect so dangerous as the Leonists, for three reasons: first, it is the most ancient-some say as old as Sylvester [pope in Constantine's time], others as the apostles themselves. Secondly, it is very generally disseminated: there is no country where it has not gained some footing. Thirdly, while other sects are profane and blasphemous, this retains the utmost show of piety; they live justly before men, and believe nothing respecting God which is not good."<sup>15</sup>

Mr. Jones gives Saccho's own opinion as follows:

"Their enemies confirm their great antiquity. Reinerius Saccho, an inquisitor, and one of their most cruel persecutors, who lived only eighty years after Waldo [A.D. 1160], admits that the Waldenses flourished five hundred years before that preacher. Gretser, the Jesuit, who also wrote against the Waldenses, and had examined the subject fully, not only admits their great antiquity, but declares his firm belief that the Toulousians and Albigenses condemned in the years 1177 and 1178, were no other than the Waldenses."<sup>16</sup>

Jortin dates their withdrawal into the wilderness of the Alps as follows:

"A.D. 601. In the seventh century, Christianity was propagated in China by the Nestorians; and the Valdenses, who abhorred the papal usurptions, are supposed to have settled themselves in the valleys of Piedmont. Monks flourished prodigiously, and the monks and popes were in the firmest union."<sup>17</sup>

President Edwards says:

"Some of the popish writers themselves own, that this people never submitted to the church of Rome. One of the popish writers, speaking of the Waldenses, says, The heresy of the Waldenses is the oldest heresy in the world. It is supposed that they first betook themselves to this place among the mountains, to hide themselves from the severity of the heathen persecutions which existed before Constantine the Great. And thus the woman fled into the wilderness from the face of the serpent. Rev.12:6, 14. 'And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished for a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.' The people being settled there, their posterity continued [there] from age to age; and being, as it were, by natural walls, as well as by God's grace, separated from the rest of the world, they never partook of the overflowing corruption."<sup>18</sup>

Benedict makes other quotations relative to their origin:

"Theodore Belvedre, a popish monk, says that the heresy had always been in the valleys. In the preface to the French Bible the translators say that they [the Waldenses] have always had the full enjoyment of the heavenly truth contained in the Holy Scriptures ever since they were enriched with the same by the apostles; having in fair MSS. preserved the entire Bible in their native tongue from generation to generation."<sup>19</sup>

Of the extent to which they spread in the countries of Europe, Benedict thus speaks:

"In the thirteenth century, from the accounts of Catholic historians, all of whom speak of the Waldenses in terms of complaint and reproach, they had founded individual churches, or were spread out in colonies in Italy, Spain, Germany, the Netherlands, Bohemia, Poland, Lithuania, Albania, Lombardy, Milan, Romagna, Vicenza, Florence, Veleponetine, Constantinople, Philadelphia, Sclavonia, Bulgaria, Diognitia, Livonia, Sarmatia, Croatia, Dalmatia, Briton and Piedmont."<sup>20</sup>

And Dr. Edgar gives the words of an old historian as follows:

"The Waldensians, says Popliner, spread, not only through France, but also through nearly all the European coasts, and appeared in Gaul, Spain, England, Scotland, Italy, Germany, Bohemia, Saxony, Poland, and Lithuania."<sup>21</sup>

According to the testimony of their enemies, they were to some extent divided among themselves. Dr. Allix quotes an old Romish writer who says of that portion of them who were called Cathari:-

"They are also divided amongst themselves; so what some of them say is again denied by others."<sup>22</sup>

And Crosby make a similar statement:

"There were several sects of Waldenses or Albigenses, like as there are of Dissenters in England. Some of these did deny all baptism, others only the baptism of infants. That many of them were of this latter opinion, is affirmed in several histories of this people, as well ancient as modern."<sup>23</sup>

Some of their enemies affirm that they reject the Old Testament; but others, with much greater truthfulness, bear a very different testimony.<sup>24</sup> Thus a Romish inquisitor, as quoted by Allix, bears testimony concerning those in Bohemia:

"They can say a great part of the Old and New Testaments by heart. They despise the decretals, and the sayings and expositions of holy men, and only cleave to the text of Scripture. . . . [They say] that the doctrine of Christ and the apostles is sufficient to salvation, without any church statutes and ordinances. That the traditions of the church are no better than the traditions of the Pharisees; and that greater stress is laid on the observation of human traditions than on the keeping of the law of God. Why do you transgress the law of God by your traditions? . . . They condemn all approved ecclesiastical customs which they do not read of in the gospel, as the observation of Candlemas, Palm Sunday, the reconciliation of penitents, the adoration of the cross on Good Friday. They despise the feast of Easter, and all other festivals of Christ and the saints, because of their being multiplied to that vast number, and say that one day is as good as another, and work upon holy days, where they can do it without being taken notice of."<sup>25</sup>

Dr. Allix quotes a Waldensian document of A.D. 1100, entitled the "Noble Lesson," and remarks:

"The author upon supposal that the world was drawing to an end, exhorts his brethren to prayer, to watchfulness, to a renouncing of all worldly goods. * * *

"He sets down all the judgments of God in the Old Testament as the effects of a just and good God; and in particular the decalogue as a law given by the Lord of the whole world. He repeats the several articles of the law, not forgetting that which respects idols."<sup>26</sup>

Their religious views are further stated by Allix:-

"They declare themselves to be the apostles' successors, to have apostolical authority, and the keys of binding and loosing. They hold the church of Rome to be the whore of Babylon, and that all that obey her are dammed, especially the clergy that are subject to her since the time of Pope Sylvester. . . . They hold that none of the ordinances of the church that have been introduced since Christ's ascension ought to be observed, as being of no worth; the feasts, fasts, orders, blessings, offices of the church and the like, they utterly reject."<sup>27</sup>

A considerable part of the people called Waldenses bore the significant designation of Sabbati, or Sabbatati, or Insabbatati. Mr. Jones alludes to this fact in the following words:

"Because they would not observe saints' days, they were falsely suppose to neglect the Sabbath also, and called Insabbatati or Insabbathists."<sup>28</sup>

Mr. Benedict makes the following statement:

"We find that the Waldenses were sometimes called Insabbathos, that is, regardless of Sabbaths. Mr. Milner supposes this name was given to them because they observed not the Romish festivals, and rested from their ordinary occupations only on Sundays. A Sabbatarian would suppose that it was because they met for worship on the seventh day, and did regard not the first-day Sabbath."<sup>29</sup>

Mr. Robinson gives the statements of three classes of writers respecting the meaning of these names, which were borne by the Waldenses. But he rejects them all, alleging that these persons were led to these conclusions by the apparent meaning of the words, and not by the facts.

Here are his words:

"Some of these Christians were called Sabbati, Sabbatati, Insabbatati, and more frequently Inzabbatati. Led astray by sound without attending to facts, one says they were so named from the Hebrew word Sabbath, because they kept the Saturday for the Lord's day. Another says they were so called because they rejected all the festivals or Sabbaths in the low Latin sense of the word, which the Catholic church religiously observed. A third says, and many with various alterations and additions have said after him, they were called so from sabot or zabot, a shoe, because they distinguished themselves from other people by wearing shoes marked on the upper part with some peculiarity. Is it likely that people who could not descend from their mountains without hazarding their lives through the furious zeal of the inquisitors, should tempt danger by affixing a visible mark on their shoes? Besides the shoe of the peasants happens to be famous in this country; it was of a different fashion, and was called abarca."<sup>30</sup>

Mr. Robinson rejects these three statements, and then gives his own judgment that they were so called because they lived in the mountains.

These four views cover all that has been advanced relative to the meaning of these names.

But Robinson's own explanation is purely fanciful, and seems to have been adopted by no other writer. He offers, however, conclusive reasons for rejecting the statement that they took their name from their shoes. There remain, therefore, only the first and second of these four statements, which are that they were called by these names because they kept the Saturday for the Lord's day, and because they did not keep the sabbaths of the papists. These two statements do not conflict. In fact, if one of them be true, it almost certainly follows that the other one must be true also. There would be in such facts something worthy to give a distinguishing name to the true people of God, surrounded by the great apostasy; and the natural and obvious interpretation of the names would disclose the most striking characteristic of the people who bore them.

Jones and Benedict agree with Robinson in rejecting the idea that the Waldenses received these names from their shoes. Mr. Jones held, on the contrary, that they were given them because they did not keep the Romish festivals.<sup>31</sup> Mr. Benedict favors the view that it was because they kept the seventh day.<sup>32</sup> But let us now see who they are that make these statements respecting the observance of the Sabbath by the Waldenses, that Robinson alludes to in this place. He quotes out of Gretser the words of the historian Goldastus as follows:

"Insabbatati [they were called] not because they were circumcised, but because they kept the Jewish Sabbath."<sup>33</sup>

Goldastus was "a learned historian and jurist, born near Bischofszell in Switzerland in 1576." He died in 1635.<sup>34</sup>

He was a Calvinist writer of note.<sup>35</sup> He certainly had no motive to favor the cause of the seventh day. Gretser objects to his statement on the ground that the Waldenses exterminated every festival; but this was the most natural thing in the world for men who had God's own rest-day in their keeping. Gretser still further objects that the Waldenses denied the whole Old Testament; but this charge is an utter misrepresentation, as we have already shown in the present chapter.

Robinson also quotes on this point the testimony of Archbishop Usher. Though that prelate held that the Waldenses derived these names from their shoes, he frankly acknowledges that MANY understood that they were given to them because they worshiped on the Jewish Sabbath. This testimony is valuable in that it shows that many early writers asserted the observance of "the Saturday for the Lord's day" by the people who were called Sabbatati.<sup>36</sup>

In consequence of the persecutions which they suffered, and because also of their own missionary zeal, the people called Waldenses were widely scattered over Europe. They bore, however, various names in different ages and in different countries. We have decisive testimony that some of these bodies observed the seventh day. Others observed Sunday. Eneas Sylvius says that those in Bohemia hold "that we are to cease from working on no day except the Lord's day."<sup>37</sup> This statement, let it be observed, relates only to Bohemia. But it has been asserted that the Waldenses were so distinct from the church of Rome they could not have received the Sunday Lord's day from thence, and must, therefore, have received it from the apostles! But a few words from D'Aubigne will suffice to show that this statement is founded in error. He describes an interview between CEcolampadius and two Waldensian pastors who had been sent by their brethren from the borders of France and Piedmont, to open communication with the reformers. It was at Basle, in 1530. Many things which they said pleased CEcolampadius, but some things he disapproved. D'Aubigne makes this statement:

"The barbes [the Waldensian pastors] were at first a little confused at seeing that the elders had to learn of their juniors; however, they were humble and sincere men, and the Basle doctor having questioned them on the sacraments, they confessed that through weakness and fear they had their children baptized by Romish priests, and that they even communicated with them and sometimes attended mass. This unexpected avowal startled the meek CEcolampadius."<sup>38</sup>

When the deputation returned word to the Waldenses that the reformers demanded of them "a stricter reform," D'Aubigne says that it was "supported by some, and rejected by others." He also informs us that the demand that the Waldenses should "separate entirely from Rome" "caused divisions among them."<sup>39</sup>

This is a very remarkable statement. The light of many of these ancient witnesses was almost ready to go out in darkness when God raised up the reformers. They had suffered that woman Jezebel to teach among them, and to seduce the servants of God. They had even come to practice infant baptism, and the priests of Rome administered the rite! And in addition to all this, they sometimes joined with them in the service of the mass! If a portion of the Waldenses in southern Europe at the time of the Reformation had exchanged believers' baptism for the baptism of children by Romish priests, it is not difficult to see how they could also accept the Sunday-Lord's day from the same source in place of the hallowed rest-day of the Lord. All had not done this, but some certainly had.

D'Aubigne makes a very interesting statement respecting the French Waldenses in the fifteenth century. His language implies that they had a different Sabbath from the Catholics. He tells us some of the stories which the priests circulated against the Waldenses. These are his words:

"Picardy in the north and Dauphiny in the south were the two provinces of France best prepared [at the opening of the Protestant Reformation] to receive the gospel. During the fifteenth century many Picardins, as the story ran, went to Vaudery. Seated round the fire during the long nights, simple Catholics used to tell one another how the Vaudois (Waldenses) met in horrible assembly in solitary places, where they found tables spread with numerous and dainty viands. These poor Christians loved indeed to meet together from districts often very remote. They went to the rendezvous by night and along by-roads. The most learned of them used to recite some passages of Scriptures, after which they conversed together and prayed. But such humble conventicles were ridiculously travestied. 'Do you know what they do to get there,' said the people, 'so that the officers may not stop them? The devil has given them a certain ointment, and when they want to go to Vaudery, they smear a little stick with it. As soon as they get astride it, they are carried up through the air, and arrive at their Sabbath without meeting anybody. In the midst of them sits a goat with a monkey's tail: this is Satan, who receives their adoration.' . . . These stupid stories were not peculiar to the people: they were circulated particularly by the monks. It was thus that the inquisitor Jean de Broussart spoke in 1460 from a pulpit erected in the great square at Arras. An immense multitude surrounded him; a scaffold was erected in front of the pulpit, and a number of men and women, kneeling and wearing caps with the figure of the devil painted on them, awaited their punishment. Perhaps the faith of these poor people was mingled with error. But be that as it may, they were all burnt alive after the sermon."<sup>40</sup>

It seems that these Waldenses had a Sabbath peculiar to themselves. And D'Aubigne himself alludes to something peculiar in their faith which he cannot confess as the truth, and does not choose to denounce as error. He says, "Perhaps the faith of these poor people was mingled with error." To speak of the observance of the seventh day as the Sabbath of the Lord by New Testament Christians, subjects a conscientious first-day historian to this very dilemma. We have a further account of the Waldenses in France, just before the commencement of the Reformation of the sixteenth century:

"Louis XII., king of France, being informed by the enemies of the Waldenses inhabiting a part of the province of Provence, that several heinous crimes were laid to their account, sent the Master of Requests, and a certain doctor of the Sorbonne, who was confessor to his Majesty, to make inquiry into this matter. On their return, they reported that they had visited all the parishes where they dwelt, had inspected their places of worship, but that they had found there no images, nor signs of the ornaments belonging to the mass, nor any of the ceremonies of the Romish church; much less could they discover any traces of those crimes with which they were charged. On the contrary, they kept the Sabbath day, observed the ordinance of baptism according to the primitive church, instructed their children in the articles of the Christian faith and the commandments of God. The king having heard the report of his commissioners, said with an oath that they were better men than himself or his people."<sup>41</sup>

We further read concerning the Vaudois, or Waldenses, as follows:

"The respectable French historian, De Thou, says that the Vaudois keep the commandments of the decalogue, and allow among them of no wickedness, detesting perjuries, imprecations, quarrels, seditions, &c."<sup>42</sup>

It may be proper to add that in 1686 the Waldenses were all driven out of the valleys of Piedmont, and that those who returned and settled in those valleys three years afterward, and from whom the present race of Waldenses is descended, fought their way back, sword in hand, pursuing in all respects a course entirely different from that of the ancient Waldenses.<sup>43</sup>

Another class of witnesses to the truth during the Dark Ages, bore the name of Cathari, that is, Puritans. Jones speaks of them as follows:

"They were a plain, unassuming, harmless, and industrious race of Christians, patiently bearing the cross after Christ, and, both in their doctrines and manners, condemning the whole system of idolatry and superstition which reigned in the church of Rome, placing true religion in the faith, hope and obedience of the gospel, maintaining a supreme regard to the authority of God in his word, and regulating their sentiments and practices by that divine standard. Even in the twelfth century their numbers abounded in the neighborhood of Cologne, in Flanders, the South of France, Savoy, and Milan. 'They were increased,' says Egbert, 'to great multitudes, throughout all countries.'"<sup>44</sup>

That the Cathari did retain and observe the ancient Sabbath, is certified by their Romish adversaries. Dr. Allix quotes a Roman Catholic author of the twelfth century concerning three sorts of heretics, the Cathari, the Passagii, and the Arnoldistae. Allix says of the Romish writer that,

"He lays it down also as one of their opinions, `that the law of Moses is to be kept according to the letter, and that the keeping of the Sabbath, circumcision, and other legal observances, ought to take place. They hold also that Christ the Son of God is not equal with the Father, and that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, these three persons, are not one God and one substance; and as a surplus to these their errors, they judge and condemn all the doctors of the church, and universally the whole Roman Church. Now since they endeavor to defend this their error by testimonies drawn from the New Testament and prophets. I shall with [the] assistance of the grace of Christ stop their mouths, as David did Goliath's, with their own sword.' "45

Dr. Allix quotes another Romish author to the same effect:

"Alanus attributes to the Cathari almost the very same opinions [as those just enumerated] in his first book against heretics, which he wrote about the year 1192."46

Mr Elliott mentions an incident concerning the Cathari, which is in harmony with what these historians assert respecting their observance of the seventh day. He says:

"In this year [A.D. 1163] certain heretics of the sect of the Cathari, coming from the parts of Flanders to Cologne, took up their abode secretly in a barn near the city. But, as on the Lord's day they did not go to church, they were seized by the neighbors, and detected. On their being brought before the Catholic church, when, after long examination respecting their sect, they would be convinced by no evidence however convincing, but most pertinaciously persisted in their doctrine and resolution, they were cast out from the church, and delivered into the hands of laics. These, leading them without the city committed them to the flames: being four men and one little girl."47

These statements are made respecting three classes of Christian people who lived during the Dark Ages: The Cathari, or Puritans, the Arnoldistae, and the Passaginians. Their views are presented in the uncandid language of their enemies. But the testimony of ancient Catholic historians is decisive that they were observers of the seventh day. The charge that they observed circumcision also, will be noticed presently. Mr. Robinson understands that the Passaginians were that portion of the Waldenses who lived in the passes of the mountains. He says:

"It is very credible that the name Passageros or Passagini . . . was given to such of them as lived in or near the passes or passages of the mountains, and who subsisted in part by guiding travelers or by traveling themselves for trade."48

Mr. Elliott says of the name Passagini:-

"The explanation of the term as meaning Pilgrims, in both the spiritual and missionary sense of the word, would be but the translation of their recognized Greek appellation -----, and a title as distinctive as beautiful."49

Mosheim gives the following account of them:

"In Lombardy, which was the principal residence of the Italian heretics, there sprung up a singular sect, known, for what reason I cannot tell, by the denomination of Passaginians, and also by that of the circumcised. Like the other sects already mentioned, they had the utmost aversion to the dominion and discipline of the church of Rome; but they were at the same time distinguished by two religious tenets which were peculiar to themselves. The first was a notion that the observance of the law of Moses, in everything except the offering of sacrifices, was obligatory upon Christians; in consequence of which they circumcised their followers, abstained from those meats the use of which was prohibited under the Mosaic economy, and celebrated the Jewish Sabbath. The second tenet that distinguished this sect was advanced in opposition to the doctrine of three persons in the divine nature."<sup>50</sup>

Mr. Benedict speaks of them as follows:

"The account of their practicing circumcision is undoubtedly a slanderous story forged by their enemies, and probably arose in this way: because they observed the seventh day they were called by way of derision, Jews, as the Sabbatarians are frequently at this day; and if they were Jews, it followed of course that they either did, or ought to, circumcise their followers. This was probably the reasoning of their enemies; but that they actually practiced the bloody rite is altogether improbable."<sup>51</sup>

An eminent church historian, Michael Geddes, thus testifies:

"This [act] of fixing something that is justly abominable to all mankind upon her adversaries, has been the constant practice of the church of Rome."<sup>52</sup>

Dr. Allix states the same fact, which needs to be kept in mind whenever we read of the people of God in the records of the Dark Ages:

"I must desire the reader to consider that it is no great sin with the church of Rome to spread lies concerning those that are enemies of that faith."<sup>53</sup>

"There is nothing more common with the Romish party than to make use of the most horrid calumnies to blacken and expose those who have renounced her communion."<sup>54</sup>

Of the origin of the Petrobrusians, we have the following account by Mr. Jones:

"But the Cathari or Puritans were not the only sect which, during the twelfth century, appeared in opposition to the superstition of the church of Rome. About the year 1110, in the south of France, in the provinces of Languedoc and Provence, appeared Peter de Bruys, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of Heaven, and exerting the most laudable efforts to reform the abuses and remove the superstition which disfigured the beautiful simplicity of the gospel worship. His labors were crowned with abundant success. He converted a great number of disciples to the faith of Christ, and after a most indefatigable ministry of twenty years' continuance, he was burned at St. Giles, a city of Languedoc in France A.D. 1130, by an enraged populace, instigated by the clergy, who apprehended their traffic to be in danger from this new and intrepid reformer."<sup>55</sup>

That this body of French Christians, who, in the very midnight of the Dark Ages witnessed for the truth in opposition to the Romish church, were observers of the ancient Sabbath is expressly certified by Dr. Francis White, lord bishop of Ely. He was appointed by the king of England to write against the Sabbath in opposition to Brabourne, who had appealed to the king in its behalf. To show that Sabbatic observance is contrary to the doctrine of the Catholic church - a weighty argument with an Episcopalian - he enumerates various classes of heretics who had been condemned by the Catholic church for keeping holy the seventh day. Among these heretics he places the Petrobrusians:-

"In St. Bernard's days it was condemned in the Petrobruysans."<sup>56</sup>

We have seen that, according to Catholic writers, the Cathari held to the observance of the seventh day. Dr. Allix confirms the statement of Dr. White that the Petrobrusians observed the ancient Sabbath, by stating that the doctrines of these two bodies greatly resembled each other. These are his words:

"Petrus Cluniacensis has handled five questions against the Petrobrusians which bear a great resemblance with the belief of the Cathari of Italy."<sup>57</sup>

The Sabbath-keepers in the eleventh century were of sufficient importance to call down upon themselves the anathema of the pope. Dr. Heylyn says that,

"Gregory, of that name the seventh [about A.D. 1074], condemned those who taught that it was not lawful to do work on the day of the Sabbath."<sup>58</sup>

This act of the pope corroborates the testimonies we have adduced in proof of the existence of Sabbath-keepers in the Dark Ages. Gregory the Seventh was one of the greatest men that ever filled the papal chair. Whatever class he anathematized was of some consequence. Gregory wasted nothing on trifles.<sup>59</sup>

In the eleventh century, there were Sabbath-keepers also in Constantinople and its vicinity. The pope, in A.D. 1054, sent three legates to the emperor of the East, and to the patriarch of Constantinople, for the purpose of re-uniting the Greek and the Latin churches. Cardinal Humbert was the head of this legation. The legates, on their arrival, set themselves to the work of refuting those doctrines which distinguish the church of Constantinople from that of Rome. After they had attended to the questions which separated the two churches, they found it also necessary to discuss the question of the Sabbath. For one of the most learned men of the East had put forth a treatise, in which he maintained that ministers should be allowed to marry; that the Sabbath should be kept holy; and that leavened bread should be used in the supper; all of which the church of Rome held to be deadly heresies. We quote from Mr. Bower a concise statement of the treatment which this Sabbatarian writer received:

"Humbert, likewise answered a piece that had been published by a monk of the monastery of Studium, [near Constantinople,] named Nicetas, who was deemed one of the most learned men at the time in the east. In that piece the monk undertook to prove, that leavened bread only should be used in the eucharist, that the Sabbath ought to be kept holy, and that priests should be allowed to marry. But the emperor, who wanted by all means to gain the pope, for the reasons mentioned above, was, or rather pretended to be, so fully convinced with the arguments of the legate, confuting those alleged by Nicetas, that he obliged the monk publicly to recant, and anathematize all who held the opinion that he had endeavored to establish, with respect to unleavened bread, the Sabbath, and the marriage of priests.

"At the same time Nicetas, in compliance with the command of the emperor, anathematized all who should question the primacy of the Roman church with respect to all other Christian churches, or should presume to censure her ever orthodox faith. The monk having thus retracted all he had written against the Holy See, his book was burnt by the emperor's order, and he absolved, by the legates, from the censures he had incurred."<sup>60</sup>

This record shows that, in the dense darkness of the eleventh century, "one of the most learned men at that time in the east" wrote a book to prove that "the Sabbath ought to be kept holy," and in opposition to the papal doctrine of the celibacy of the clergy. It also shows how the church of Rome casts down the truth of God by means of the sword of emperors and kings. Though Nicetas retracted, under fear of the emperor and the pope, it appears that there were others who held the same opinions, for he was "obliged" to anathematize all such, and there is no evidence that any of these persons turned from the truth because of the fall of their leader. Indeed, if there had not been a considerable body of these Sabbatarians, the papal legate would never have deemed it worthy of his dignity to write a reply to Nicetas.

The Anabaptists are often referred to in the records of the Dark Ages. The term signifies rebaptizers, and was applied to them because they denied the validity of infant baptism. The designation is not accurate, however, because those persons whom they baptized, they considered as never having been baptized before, although they had been sprinkled or even immersed in infancy. This people have been overwhelmed in obloquy in consequence of the fanatical insurrection which broke out in their name in the time of Luther. Of those engaged in this insurrection, Buck says:

"The first insurgents groaned under severe oppressions, and took up arms in defense of their civil liberties; and of these commotions the Anabaptists seem rather to have availed themselves, than to have been the prime movers. That a great part were Anabaptists seems indisputable; at the same time it appears from history that a great part also were Roman Catholics, and a still greater part of those who had scarcely any religious principles at all."<sup>61</sup>

This matter is placed in the true light by Stebbing:-

"The overthrow of civil society, and fatal injuries to religion were threatened by those who called themselves Anabaptists. But large numbers appear to have disputed the validity of infant baptism who had nothing else in common with them, yet who for that one circumstance were overwhelmed with the obloquy, and the punishment richly due to a fanaticism equally fraudulent and licentious."<sup>62</sup>

The ancient Sabbath was retained and observed by a portion of the Anabaptists, or, to use a more proper term, Baptists. Dr. Francis White thus testifies:

"They which maintain the Saturday Sabbath to be in force, comply with some Anabaptists."<sup>63</sup>

In harmony with this statement of Dr. White, is the testimony of a French writer of the sixteenth century. He names all the classes of men who have borne the name of Anabaptists. Of one of these classes he writes thus:

"Some have endured great torments, because they would not keep Sundays and festival days, in despite of Antichrist: seeing they were days appointed by Antichrist, they would not hold forth any thing which is like unto him. Others observe these days, but it is out of charity."<sup>64</sup>

Thus it is seen that within the limits of the old Roman Empire, and in the midst of those countries that submitted to the rule of the pope, God reserved unto himself a people that did not bow the knee to Baal, and among these the Bible Sabbath was observed from age to age. We are now to search for the Sabbath among those who were never subjected to the Roman pontiff. In Central Africa, from the first part of the Christian era - possibly from the time of the conversion of the Ethiopian officer of great authority<sup>65</sup> but very certainly as early as A.D. 330<sup>66</sup> - have existed the churches of Abyssinia and Ethiopia. About the time of the accession of the Roman Bishop to supremacy, they were lost sight of by the nations of Europe. "Encompassed on all sides," says Gibbon, by the enemies of their religion, the Ethiopians slept near a thousand years, forgetful of the world, by whom they were forgotten."<sup>67</sup> In the latter part of the fifteenth century, they were again brought to the knowledge of the world by the discovery of Portuguese navigators. Undoubtedly they have been greatly affected by the dense darkness of pagan and Mahometan errors with which they are encompassed; and in many respects they have lost the pure and spiritual religion of our divine Redeemer. A modern traveler says of them: "They have divers errors and many ancient truths."<sup>68</sup> Michael Geddes says of them:

"The Abyssinians do hold the Scriptures to be the perfect rule of the Christian faith; insomuch that they deny it to be in the power of a general council to oblige people to believe anything as an article of faith without an express warrant from thence."<sup>69</sup>

They practice circumcision, but for other reasons than that of a religious duty.<sup>70</sup> Geddes further states their views:

"Transubstantiation and the adoration of the consecrated bread in the sacrament, were what the Abyssinians abhorred. . . . They deny purgatory, and know nothing of confirmation and extreme unction; they condemn graven images; they keep both Saturday and Sunday."<sup>71</sup>

Their views of the Sabbath are stated by the ambassador of the king of Ethiopia, at the court of Lisbon, in the following words, explaining their abstinence from all labor on that day:

"Because God, after he had finished the creation of the world, rested thereon; which day, as God would have it called the holy of holies, so the not celebrating thereof with great honor and devotion, seems to be plainly contrary to God's will and precept, who will suffer heaven and earth to pass away sooner than his word; and that especially, since Christ came not to destroy the law, but to fulfill it. It is not therefore in imitation of the Jews, but in obedience to Christ and his holy apostles, that we observe that day."<sup>72</sup>

The ambassador states their reasons for first-day observance in these words:

"We do observe the Lord's day after the manner of all other Christians in memory or Christ's resurrection."<sup>73</sup>

He had no scripture to offer in support of this festival, and evidently rested its observance upon tradition. This account was given by the ambassador in 1534. In the early part of the next century the emperor of Abyssinia was induced to submit to the pope in these words:- "I confess that the pope is the vicar of Christ, the successor of St. Peter, and the sovereign of the world. To him I swear true obedience, and at his feet I offer my person and kingdom."<sup>74</sup> No sooner had the Roman bishop thus brought the emperor to submit to him than that potentate was compelled to gratify the popish hatred of the Sabbath by an edict forbidding its further observance. In the words of Geddes, he "set forth a proclamation prohibiting all his subjects upon severe penalties to observe Saturday any longer."<sup>75</sup> Or as Gibbon expresses it, "The Abyssinians were enjoined to work and to play on the Sabbath." But the tyranny of the Romanists, after a terrible struggle, caused their overthrow and banishment, and the restoration of the ancient faith. The churches resounded with a song of triumph, "that the sheep of Ethiopia were now delivered from the hyenas of the West;" and the gates of that solitary realm were forever shut against the arts, the science, and the fanaticism of Europe."<sup>76</sup>

We have proved in a former chapter that the Sabbath was extensively observed as late as the middle of the fifth century in the so-called Catholic church, especially in that portion most intimately connected with the Abyssinians; and that from various causes, Sunday obtained certain Sabbatic honors, in consequence of which the two days were called sisters. We have also shown in another chapter that the effectual suppression of the Sabbath in Europe is mainly due to papal influence. And so for a thousand years we have been tracing its history in the records of those men which the church of Rome has sought to kill.

These facts are strikingly corroborated by the case of the Abyssinians. In consequence of their location in the interior of Africa, the Abyssinians ceased to be known to the rest of Christendom about the fifth century. At this point, the Sabbath and the Sunday in the Catholic church were counted sisters. One thousand years later, these African churches are visited, and though surrounded by the thick darkness of pagan and Mahometan superstition, and somewhat affected thereby, they are found at the end of this period holding the Sabbath and first-day substantially as held by the Catholic church when they were lost sight of by it. The Catholics of Europe on the contrary had, in the meantime, trampled the ancient Sabbath in the dust. Why was this great contrast? Simply because the pope ruled in Europe, while central Africa, whatever else it may have suffered, was not cursed with his presence nor with his influence. But so soon as the pope learned of the existence of the Abyssinian churches, he sought to gain control of them, and when he had gained it, one of his first acts was to suppress the Sabbath! In the end, the Abyssinians regained their independence, and thenceforward till the present time have held fast the Sabbath of the Lord.

The Armenians of the East Indies are peculiarly worthy of our attention. J.W. Massie, M.R.I.A., says of the East Indian Christians:

"Remote from the busy haunts of commerce, or the populous seats of manufacturing industry, they may be regarded as the eastern Piedmontese, the Vallois of Hindoostan, the witnesses prophesying in sackcloth through revolving centuries, though indeed their bodies lay as dead in the streets of the city which they had once peopled."<sup>77</sup>

Geddes says of those in Malabar:-

"The three great doctrines of popery, the pope's supremacy, transubstantiation, the adoration of images, were never believed nor practiced at any time in this ancient apostolical church. . . . I think one may venture to say that before the time of the late Reformation, there was no church that we know of, no, not that of the the Vaudois, . . . that had so few errors in doctrine as the church of Malabar." He adds concerning those churches "where never within the bounds of the Roman Empire," "it is in those churches that we are to meet with the least of the leaven of popery."<sup>78</sup>

Mr. Massie further describes these Christians:

"The creed with which these representatives of an ancient line of Christians cherished was not in conformity with papal decrees, and has with difficulty been squared with the thirty-nine articles of the Anglican episcopacy. Separated from the western world for a thousand years, they were naturally ignorant of many novelties introduced by the councils and decrees of the Lateran; and their conformity with the faith and practice of the first ages, laid them open to the unpardonable guilt of heresy and schism as estimated by the church of Rome. 'We are Christians and not idolators,' was their expressive reply when required to do homage to the image of the Virgin Mary. . . . La Croze states them at fifteen hundred churches, and as many towns and villages. They refused to recognize the pope, and declared they have never heard of him; they asserted the purity and primitive truth of their faith since they came, and their bishops had for thirteen hundred years been sent from the place where the followers of Jesus were first called Christians."<sup>79</sup>

The Sabbatarian character of these Christians is hinted by Mr. Yeates. He says that Saturday "amongst them in a festival day, agreeable to the ancient practice of the church."<sup>80</sup>

"The ancient practice of the church," as we have seen, was to hallow the seventh day in memory of the Creator's rest. This practice has been suppressed wherever the great apostasy has had power to do it. But the Christians of the East Indies, like those of Abyssinia, have lived sufficiently remote from Rome to be preserved in some degree from its blasting influence. The same fact is further hinted by the same writer in the following language:

"The inquisition was set up at Goa in the Indies, at the instance of Francis Xavierius [a famous Romish saint] who signified by letters to Pope John III., Nov. 10, 1545, 'That the JEWISH WICKEDNESS spread every day more and more in the parts of the East Indies subject to the kingdom of Portugal, and therefore he earnestly besought the said king, that to cure so great an evil he would take care to send the office of the inquisition into those countries.'"<sup>81</sup>

"The Jewish wickedness" was doubtless the observance of Saturday as "a festival day agreeable to the ancient practice of the church" of which this author has just spoken. The history of the past, as we have seen, shows the hatred of the papal church toward the Sabbath. And the struggle of that church to suppress the Sabbath in Abyssinia, and to subject that people to the pope which at this very point of time was just commencing, shows that the Jesuits would not willingly tolerate Sabbatic observance in the East Indies, even though united with the observance of Sunday also.

It appears therefore that this Jesuit missionary desired the pope and the king of Portugal to establish the inquisition in that part of the Indies subject to Portugal, in order to root out the Sabbath from those ancient churches. The inquisition was established in answer to this prayer, and Xavier was subsequently canonized as a saint! Nothing can more clearly show the malignity of the Roman pontiff toward the Sabbath of the Lord; and nothing more clearly illustrates the kind of men that he canonizes as saints.

Since the time of Xavier, the East Indies have fallen under British rule. A distinguished clergyman of the church of England some years since visited the British Empire in India, for the purpose of acquainting himself with these churches. He gave the following deeply interesting sketch of these ancient Christians, and in it particularly marks their Sabbatarian character:

"The history of the Armenian church is very interesting. Of all the Christians in Central Asia, they have preserved themselves most free from Mahometan and papal corruptions. The pope assailed them for a time with great violence, but with little effect. The churches in lesser Armenia indeed consented to an union, which did not long continue; but those in Persian Armenia maintained their independence; and they retain their ancient Scriptures, doctrines, and worship, to this day. 'It is marvelous,' says an intelligent traveler who was much among them, 'how the Armenian Christians have preserved their faith, equally against the vexatious oppression of the Mahometans, their sovereigns, and against the persuasions of the Romish church which for more than two centuries has endeavored, by missionaries, priests and monks, to attach them to her communion. It is impossible to describe the artifices and expenses of the court of Rome to effect this object, but all in vain.'

"The Bible was translated into the Armenian language in the fifth century, under very auspicious circumstances, the history of which has come down to us. It has been allowed by competent judges of the language, to be a most faithful translation. La Cruze calls it the 'Queen of Versions.' This Bible has ever remained in the possession of the Armenian people; and many illustrious instances of genuine and enlightened piety occur in their history. . . .

"The Armenians in Hindoostan are our own subjects. They acknowledge our government in India, as they do that of the Sophi in Persia; and they are entitled to our regard. They have preserved the Bible in its purity; and their doctrines are, as far as the author knows, the doctrines of the Bible. Besides, they maintain the solemn observance of Christian worship throughout our empire, ON THE SEVENTH DAY, and they have as many spires pointing to heaven among the Hindoos as we ourselves. Are such a people then entitled to no acknowledgment on our part, as fellow Christians? Are they forever to be ranked by us with Jews, Mahometans, and Hindoos?"<sup>82</sup>

It has been said, however, that Buchanan might have intended Sunday by the term "seventh day." This is a very unreasonable interpretation of his words. Episcopalian clergymen are not accustomed to call Sunday the seventh day. We have, however, testimony which cannot with candor be explained away. It is that of Purchas, written in the seventeenth century. The author speaks of several sects of the eastern Christian "continuing from ancient times," as Syrians, Jacobites, Nestorians, Maronites, and Armenians. Of the Syrians, or Surians, as he variously spells the name, who, from his relation, appear to be identical with the Armenians, he says:

"They keep Saturday holy, nor esteem Saturday fast lawful but on Easter even. They have solemn service on Saturdays, eat flesh, and feast it bravely like the Jews."<sup>83</sup>

This author speaks of these Christians disrespectfully, but he uses the uncandid statements of their adversaries, which, indeed, are no worse than those often made in these days concerning those who hallow the Bible Sabbath. These facts clearly attest the continued observance of the Sabbath during the whole period of the Dark Ages. The church of Rome was indeed able to exterminate the Sabbath from its own communion, but it was retained by the true people of God, who were measurably hidden from the papacy in the wilds of Central Europe; while those African and East Indian churches, that were never within the limits of the pope's dominion, have steadfastly retained the Sabbath to the present day.

---

1 Mr. Croly says: "With the title of 'Universal Bishop,' the power of the papacy, and the Dark Ages, alike began." - Croly on the Apocalypse, p. 173.

2 M'Clintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, vol. iv. p. 591.

3 History of the Baptist Denomination, p. 50, ed. 1849.

4 Dan.8:12.

5 Ps.119:142,151.

6 See chap. xx. of this work.

7 M'Clintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, vol. ii. pp. 600, 601; D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation, book xvii.

8 M'Clintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, vol. ii. p. 601.

9 Id.Ib.

10 Id.Ib.

11 Butler's Lives of the Fathers, Martyrs, and principal Saints, article, St. Columba, A.D. 597.

12 The Monks of the West, vol. ii. p. 104.

13 Gilfillan's Sabbath, p. 389.

14 Id. pp. 32, 33.

15 Waddington's History of the Church, part iv. chap. xviii.

16 Jones's History of the Church, vol. ii. chap. v. sect. 1.

17 Jortin's Eccl. Hist. vol. ii. sect. 38.

18 Edward's Hist. of Redemption, period iii. part iv. sect. 2.

19 Hist. Bapt. Denom. p. 32-33.

20 Id. p. 31.

21 Variations of Popery, p. 52.

22 Eccl. Hist. of the Ancient Churches of Piedmont, p. 167.

23 History of the English Baptists, vol. i. pref. p. 35.

24 Mr Jones, in his "Church History," vol. i. chap. iii., note at the end of the chapter, explains this charge as follows: "But this calumny is easily accounted for. The advocates of popery, to support their usurpations and innovations in the kingdom of Christ, were driven to the Old Testament for authority, adducing the kingdom of David for their example. And when their adversaries rebutted the argument, insisting that the parallel did not hold, for that the kingdom of Christ, which is not of this world, is a very different state of things from the kingdom of David, their opponents accused them of giving up the divine authority of the Old Testament."

25 Eccl. Hist. Ancient Churches of Piedmont, pp. 231, 236, 237.

26 Id. pp. 175-177.

27 Id. p. 209.

28 Hist. Church, chap. v. sect. 1.

29 Gen. Hist. Bapt. Denom. vol. ii. p. 413, ed. 1813.

30 Ecclesiastical Researches, chap. x. pp. 303, 304.

31 Jones's Hist. Church, vol. ii. chap. v. sect. 1.

32 General Hist. Baptist Denom. vol. ii. p. 413.

33 Circumcisi forsan illi fuerint, qui aliis Insabbatati, non quod circumciderentur, inquit Calvinista [Goldastus] sed quod in Sabbato judaizarent. - Eccl. Researches, chap. x. p. 303.

34 Thomas' Dictionary of Biography and Mythology, article Goldast.

35 D'Aubigne's Reformation in the time of Calvin, vol. iii. p. 456.

36 Nec quod in Sabbato colendo Judaizarent, ut MULTI PUTABANT, sed a zapata. - Eccl. Researches, chap. x. p. 304; Usher's De Christianar. Eccl. success et stat. cap. 7.

37 Jones's Church History, vol. ii. chap. v. sect. 2.

38 Reformation in the time of Calvin, vol. iii. p. 249.

39 Id. pp. 250, 251.

40 Reformation in the time of Calvin, vol. i. p. 349; D'Aubigne cites as his authority, "Histoire des Protestants de l'icardie" by L. Rossier, p. 2.

41 Jones's Church History, vol. ii. chap. v. sect. 4.

42 History of the Vaudois by Bresse. p. 126.

43 Benedict's Hist. Bapt. p. 41.

44 Hist. Church, chap. iv. sect. 3.

45 Eccl. Hist. of the Ancient Churches of Piedmont, pp. 168, 169, Boston. Pub. Lib. The author. Rev. Peter Allix. D.D., was a French Protestant, born in 1641, and was distinguished for piety and erudition. - Lempriers's Universal Biography.

46 Id. p. 170.

47 Horae Apocalypticae, vol. ii. p. 291.

48 Eccl. Researches, chap. x. pp. 305, 306.

49 Horae Apocalypticae, vol. ii. p. 342.

50 Eccl. Hist. cent. xii. part. ii. chap. v. sect. 14.

51 General Hist. Bapt. Denom. vol. ii. p. 414, ed. 1813.

52 Acts and Decrees of the Synod of Diamper, p. 158, London 1694.

53 Eccl. Hist. of the Ancient Churches of Piedmont, p. 224.

54 Id. p. 225.

55 Hist. of the Church, chap. iv. sect. 3.

56 Treatise of the Sabbath day, p. 8.

57 Eccl. Hist. of the Ancient Churches of Piedmont, p. 162.

58 History of the Sabbath, part. ii. chap. v. sect. 1.

59 Bower says of Gregory; "He was a man of most extraordinary parts, of an unbounded ambition, of a haughty and imperious temper, of resolution and courage incapable of yielding to the greatest difficulties, perfectly acquainted with the state of the western churches, as well as with the different interests of the Christian princes." - History of the Popes, vol. ii. p. 378.

60 History of the Popes, vol. ii. p. 358.

61 Theological Dict. art. Anabaptists.

62 Hist. Church, vol. i. pp. 183, 184.

63 Treatise of the Sabbath day, p. 132. He cites Hist. Anabapt. lib. 6, p. 153.

64 The Rise, Spring. and Foundation of the Anabaptists or Rebaptized of our Times. By Guy de Brez, A.D. 1565.

65 Acts 8:26-40.

66 M'Clintock and Strong's Cyclopaedia, vol. i. p. 40.

67 Dec. and Fall, chap. xlvii.

68 Maxson's Hist. Sab. p. 33, ed. 1844.

69 Church Hist. of Ethiopia. p. 31.

70 Id. p. 96; Gibbon, chap. xv. note 25; chap. xlvii. note 160. M'Clintock and Strong's Cyclopaedia. vol. i. p. 40.

71 Church Hist. Ethiopia, pp. 34, 35; Purchas's Pilgrimage, book ii. chap. v.

72 Ch. Hist. Eth. pp. 87, 88.

73 Id. Ib.

74 Gibbon, chap. xlvii.

75 Ch. Hist. Eth. pp. 311, 312; Gobat's Abyssinia, pp. 88, 93.

76 Gibbon, chap. xlvii

77 Continental India, vol. ii. p. 120.

78 Acts and Decrees of the Synod of Diamper, preface.

79 Continental India, vol. ii. pp. 116, 117.

80 East Indies Church History. pp. 133, 134.

81 Id. pp. 139, 140.

82 Buchanan's Christian Researches in Asia, pp. 159, 160.

83 Purchas His Pilgrimes, part ii. book viii. chap. vi. sect. 5., p.1269, London, 1625. The "Encyclopedia Britannica," vol. viii. p. 695, eighth ed., speaks of Purchas as "an Englishman admirably skilled in language and human and divine arts, a very great philosopher, historian, and theologian.

CHAPTER 22

POSITION OF THE REFORMERS CONCERNING THE SABBATH AND FIRST DAY

---

The Reformation arose in the Catholic church - The Sabbath had been crushed out of that church, and innumerable festivals established in its stead - Sunday as observed by Luther, Melancthon, Zwingle, Beza, Bucer, Cranmer, and Tyndale - The position of Calvin stated at length and illustrated - Knox agreed with Calvin - Sunday in Scotland A.D. 1601 - How we should view the Reformers.

---

The great Reformation of the sixteenth century arose from the bosom of the Catholic church itself. From that church the Sabbath had long been extirpated; and instead of that merciful institution ordained by the divine Lawgiver for the rest and refreshment of mankind, and that man might acknowledge God as his Creator, the papacy had ordained innumerable festivals, which, as a terrible burden, crushed the people to the earth. These festivals are thus enumerated by Dr. Heylyn:

"These holy days as they were named particularly in Pope Gregory's decretal, so was a perfect list made of them in the Synod of Lyons, A.D. 1244, which being celebrated with a great concourse of people from all parts of Christendom, the canons and decrees thereof began forthwith to find a general admittance. The holy days allowed of there, were these that follow; viz., the feast of Christ's nativity, St. Stephen, St. John the evangelist, the Innocents, St. Sylvester, the circumcision of our Lord, the Epiphany, Easter, together with the week precedent, and the week succeeding, the three days in rogation week, the day of Christ's ascension, Whitsunday, with the two days after, St. John the Baptist, the feasts of all the twelve apostles, all the festivities of our Lady, St. Lawrence, ALL THE LORD'S DAYS IN THE YEAR, St. Michael the Archangel, All Saints, St. Martin's, the wakes, or dedication of particular churches, together with the feasts of such topical or local saints which some particular people had been pleased to honor with a day particular amongst themselves. On these and every one of them, the people were restrained as before was said from many several kinds of work, on pain of ecclesiastical censures to be laid on them which did offend, unless on some emergent causes, either of charity or necessity they were dispensed with for so doing. . . . Peter de Aliaco, Cardinal of Cambray, in a discourse by him exhibited to the council of Constance [A.D. 1416] made public suit unto the fathers there assembled, that there might [be] a stop in that kind hereafter; as also that excepting Sundays and the greater festivals it might be lawful for the people, after the end of divine service to attend their business; the poor especially, as having little time enough on the working days to get their living. But these were only the expressions of well-wishing men. The popes were otherwise resolved, and did not only keep the holy days which they found established, in the same state in which they found them, but added others daily as they saw occasion. . . . Thus stood it as before I said, both for the doctrine and the practice, till men began to look into the errors and abuses in the Roman church with a more serious eye than before they did."<sup>1</sup>

Such was the state of things when the reformers began their labors. That they should give up these festivals and return to the observance of the ancient Sabbath, would be expecting too much of men educated in the bosom of the Romish church. Indeed, it ought not to surprise us that, while they were constrained to strike down the authority of these festivals, they should nevertheless retain the most important of them in their observance. The reformers spoke on this matter as follows:- The Confession of the Swiss churches declares that,

"The observance of the Lord's day is founded not on any commandment of God, but on the authority of the church; and, That the church may alter the day at pleasure."<sup>2</sup>

We further learn that,

"In the Augsburg Confession which was drawn up by Melancthon [and approved by Luther], to the question, 'What ought we to think of the Lord's day?' it is answered that the Lord's day, Easter, Whitsuntide, and other such holy days, ought to be kept because they are appointed by the church, that all things may be done in order; but that the observance of them is not to be thought necessary to salvation, nor the violation of them, if it be done without offense to others, to be regarded as a sin."<sup>3</sup>

Zwingle declared "that it was lawful on the Lord's day, after divine service, for any man to pursue his labors."<sup>4</sup> Beza taught that "no cessation of work on the Lord's day is required of Christians."<sup>5</sup> Bucer goes further yet, "and doth not only call it a superstition, but an apostasy from Christ to think that working on the Lord's day, in itself considered, is a sinful thing."<sup>6</sup> And Cranmer, in his Catechism, published in 1548, says:

"We now keep no more the Sabbath on Saturday as the Jews do; but we observe the Sunday, and certain other days as the magistrates do judge convenient, whom in this thing we ought to obey."<sup>7</sup>

Tyndale said:

"As for the Sabbath, we be lords over the Sabbath, and may yet change it into Monday, or into any other day as we see need, or may make every tenth day holy day only if we see cause why."<sup>8</sup>

It is plain that both Cranmer and Tyndale believed that the ancient Sabbath was abolished, and that Sunday was only a human ordinance which it was in the power of the magistrates and the church lawfully to change whenever they saw cause for so doing. And Dr. Hessey gives the opinion of Zwingle respecting the present power of each individual church to transfer the so-called Lord's day to another day, whenever necessity urges, as, for example, in harvest time. Thus Zwingle says:

"If we would have the Lord's day so bound to time that it shall be wickedness to transfer it to another time, in which resting from our labors equally as in that, we may hear the word of God, if necessity haply shall so require, this day so solicitously observed, would obtrude on us as a ceremony. For we are no way bound to time, but time ought so to serve us, that it is lawful, and permitted to each church, when necessity urges (as is usual to be done in harvest time), to transfer the solemnity and rest of the Lord's day, or Sabbath to some other day."<sup>9</sup>

Zwingle could not, therefore, have considered Sunday as a divinely appointed memorial of the resurrection, or indeed, as anything but a church festival.

John Calvin said, respecting the origin of the Sunday festival:

"However, the ancients have not without sufficient reason substituted what we call the Lord's day in the room of the Sabbath. For since the resurrection of the Lord is the end and consummation of that true rest, which was adumbrated by the ancient Sabbath; the same day which put an end to the shadows, admonishes Christians not to adhere to a shadowy ceremony. Yet I do not lay so much stress on the septenary number that I would oblige the church to an invariable adherence to it; nor will I condemn those churches, which have other solemn days for their assemblies, provided they keep at a distance from superstition."<sup>10</sup>

It is worthy of notice that Calvin does not assign to Christ and his disciples the establishment of Sunday in the place of the Sabbath. He says this was done by the "ancients,"<sup>11</sup> or as another translates it, "the old fathers." Nor does he say "the day which John called the Lord's day," but "the day which we call the Lord's day." And what is worthy of particular notice he did not insist that the day which should be appropriated to worship should be one day in every seven; for he was not tied to "the septenary number." The day might come once in six days, or once in eight. And this proves conclusively that he did not regard Sunday as a divine institution in the proper sense of the word; for if he had, he would most assuredly have felt that the festival must be septenary, that is, weekly, and that he must urge "the church to an invariable adherence to it." But Calvin does not leave the matter here. He condemns as "FALSE PROPHETS" those who attempt to enforce the Sunday festival by means of the fourth commandment; and who to do this say that the ceremonial part, which requires the observance of the definite seventh day, is abolished, while the moral part, which simply commands the observance of one day in seven, still remains in force. Here are his words:

"Thus vanish all the dreams of false prophets, who in past ages have infected the people with a Jewish notion, affirming that nothing but the ceremonial part of the commandment, which according to them is the appointment of the seventh day, has been abrogated, but that the moral part of it, that is the observance of one day in seven, still remains. But this is only changing the day in contempt of the Jews, while they retain the same opinion of the holiness of a day."<sup>12</sup>

Yet these very "dreams of false prophets." to use the words of Calvin, constitute the foundation of the modern doctrine of the change of the Sabbath. For whatever may be said of first-day sacredness in the New Testament, the fourth commandment can only be made to recognize that day by means of this very doctrine of one day in seven which Calvin so sharply denounces. Now I state another important fact. Calvin's commentaries on the New Testament cover all the books from which quotations are made in behalf of Sunday except the book of Revelation. What does Calvin say concerning the change of the Sabbath in the record of Christ's resurrection?<sup>13</sup> Not one word. He does not even hint at any sacredness in the day, nor any commemoration of the day. Does he say that the meeting "after eight days" was upon Sunday? He does not say what day it was.<sup>14</sup> What does he say of Sunday in treating of the day of Pentecost?<sup>15</sup> Nothing. He does not so much as say that this festival was on the first day of the week. What does he say of the breaking of bread at Troas? He thinks it took place upon the ancient Sabbath! He says:

"Either he doth mean the first day of the week, which was next after the Sabbath, or else some certain Sabbath. Which latter thing may seem to me more probable; for this cause, because that day was more fit for an assembly, according to custom."<sup>16</sup>

He says, however, that this place might "very well" be translated "the morrow after the Sabbath." But he adheres to his own translation, "one day of the Sabbaths," and not "first day of the week." He says further:

"For to what end is there mentioned of the Sabbath, save only that he may note the opportunity and choice of the time? Also, it is a likely matter that Paul waited for the Sabbath, that the day before his departure he might the more easily gather all the disciples into one place."<sup>17</sup>

"Therefore, I think thus, that they had appointed a solemn day for the celebrating of the holy supper of the Lord among themselves, which might be commodious for them all."<sup>18</sup>

This shows conclusively that Calvin believed the Sabbath, and not the first day of the week, to have been the day for meetings in the apostolic church. But what does he say of the laying by in store on the first day of the week? He says that Paul's precept relates, not to the first day of the week, but to the Sabbath! And he marks the Sabbath as the day on which the sacred assemblies were held, and the communion celebrated, and says that on account of these things this was the most convenient day for collecting their contribution. Thus he writes:

"On one of the Sabbaths. The end is this - that they may have their alms ready in time. He therefore exhorts them not to wait till he came, as any thing that is done suddenly, and in a bustle, is not done well, but to contribute on the Sabbath what might seem good, and according as every one's ability might enable - that is on the day on which they held their sacred assemblies."<sup>19</sup>

"For he has an eye, first of all, to convenience, and farther, that the sacred assembly, in which the communion of saints is celebrated, might be an additional spur to them. Nor am I inclined to admit the view taken by Chrysostom - that the term Sabbath is employed here to mean the Lord's day (Rev.1:10), for the probability is, that the apostles, at the beginning, retained the day that was already in use, but that afterwards, constrained by the superstition of the Jews, they set aside that day, and substituted another. Now the Lord's day was made choice of chiefly because our Lord's resurrection put an end to the shadows of the law. Hence the day itself puts us in mind of our Christian liberty."<sup>20</sup>

These words are very remarkable. They show first, that by the Sabbath day Calvin means, not the first day, but the seventh; second, that in his judgment as late as the time of this epistle, and of the meeting at Troas [A.D. 60], the Sabbath was the day for the sacred assemblies of the Christians, and for the celebration of the communion; third, "but that AFTERWARDS, constrained by THE SUPERSTITION OF THE JEWS, they set aside that day, and substituted another."

Calvin did not therefore believe that Christ changed the Sabbath to Sunday to commemorate his resurrection; for he says that the resurrection abolished the Sabbath,<sup>21</sup> and yet he believes that the Sabbath was the sacred day of the Christians to the entire exclusion of Sunday as late as the year 60. Nor could he believe that the apostles set apart Sunday to commemorate the resurrection of Christ, for he thinks that they did not make choice of that day till after the year 60, and even then they did it merely because constrained so to do by the superstition of the Jews!

Dr. Hessey illustrates Calvin's ideas of Sunday observance by the following incident:

"Knox was the intimate friend of Calvin - visited Calvin, and, it is said, on one occasion found him enjoying the recreation of bowls on Sunday."<sup>22</sup>

Without doubt Calvin was acting in exact harmony with his ideas of the nature of the Sunday festival. But the famous case of Michael Servetus furnishes us a still more pointed illustration of his views of the sacredness of that day. Servetus was arrested in Geneva on the personal application of John Calvin to the magistrates of that city. Such is the statement of Theodore Beza, the life-long friend of Calvin.<sup>23</sup> Beza's translator adds to this fact the following remarkable statement:

"Promptness induced him to have this heresiarch arrested on a Sunday."<sup>24</sup>

The same fact is stated by Robinson:

"While he waited for a boat to cross the lake in his way to Zurich, by some means Calvin got intelligence of his arrival; and although it was on a Sunday, yet he prevailed upon the chief syndic to arrest and imprison him. On that day by the laws of Geneva no person could be arrested except for a capital crime; but this difficulty was easily removed, for John Calvin pretended that Servetus was a heretic, and that heresy was a capital crime."<sup>25</sup>

"The doctor was arrested and imprisoned on Sunday the thirteenth of August [A.D. 1553]. That very day he was brought into court."<sup>26</sup>

Calvin's own words respecting the arrest are these:

"I will not deny but that he was made prisoner upon my application."<sup>27</sup>

The warmest friends of first-day sacredness will not deny that the least sinful part of this transaction was that it occurred on Sunday. Nevertheless the fact that Calvin caused the arrest of Servetus on that day shows that he had no conviction that the day possessed any inherent sacredness.

John Barclay,<sup>28</sup> a learned man of Scotch descent, and a moderate Roman Catholic, who was born soon after the death of Calvin, and whose early life was spent in eastern France, not very remote from Geneva, published the statement that Calvin and his friends at Geneva

"Debated whether the reformed, for the purpose of estranging themselves more completely from the Romish church, should not adopt Thursday as the Christian Sabbath."

Another reason assigned by Calvin for this proposed change was,

"That it would be a proper instance of Christian liberty."<sup>29</sup>

This statement has been credited by many learned Protestants,<sup>30</sup> some of whom must be acknowledged as men of candor and judgment. But Dr. Twisse<sup>31</sup> discredits Barclay because he did not name the individuals with whom Calvin consulted, and produce them as witnesses; and because that King James I. of England at one time suspected Barclay of treachery toward him. But no such crime was ever proved, nor does it appear that the king continued always to hold him in that light.<sup>32</sup> His veracity has never been impeached. The statement of Barclay may possibly be incorrect, but it is not inconsistent with Calvin's doctrine that the church is not tied to a festival that should come once in seven days, even as Tyndale said that they could change the Sabbath into Monday or could "make every tenth day holy day, only if we see cause why," and it is in perfect harmony with Calvin's idea of Sunday sacredness as shown in his acts already noticed. Like the other reformers, Calvin is not always consistent with himself in his statements. Nevertheless, we have his judgment concerning the several texts which are used to prove the change of the Sabbath, and also respecting the theory that the commandment may be used to enforce, not the seventh day, but one day in seven, and it is fatal to the modern first-day doctrine.

John Knox, the great Scottish reformer, was the intimate friend of Calvin, with whom he lived at Geneva during a portion of his exile from Scotland. Though the foundation of the Presbyterian church of Scotland was laid by Knox, or rather by Calvin, for Knox carried out Calvin's system, and though that church is now very strict in the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath, yet Knox himself was of Calvin's mind as to the obligation of that day. The original Confession of Faith of that church was drawn up by Knox in A.D. 1560.<sup>33</sup> In that document Knox states the duties of the first table of the law as follows:

"To have one God, to worship and honor him; to call upon him in all our troubles; to reverence his holy name; to hear his word; to believe the same; to communicate with his holy sacraments, are the works of the first table."<sup>34</sup>

It is plain that Knox believed the Sabbath commandment to have been stricken out of the first table. Dr. Hessey, after speaking of certain references to Sunday in a subsequent work of his, makes this statement respecting the present doctrine of the Sabbath in the Presbyterian church:

"On the whole, whatever the language held at present in Scotland may be, it is certainly not owing to the great man whom the Scotch regard as the apostle of the Reformation in their country."<sup>35</sup>

That church now holds Sunday to be the divinely authorized memorial of the resurrection of Christ, enforced by the authority of the fourth commandment. But not thus was it held by Calvin and Knox. A British writer states the condition of things with respect to Sunday in Scotland about the year 1601:

"At the commencement of the seventeenth century, tailors, shoemakers, and bakers in Aberdeen were accustomed to work till eight or nine every Sunday morning. While violation of the prescribed ritual observances was punished by fine, the exclusive consecration of the Sunday which subsequently prevailed was then unknown. Indeed, there were regular 'play Sundays' in Scotland till the end of the sixteenth century."<sup>36</sup>

But the Presbyterian church, after Knox's time, effected an entire change with respect to Sunday observance. The same writer says:

"The Presbyterian Kirk introduced into Scotland the Judaical observance of the Sabbath [Sunday], retaining with some inconsistency the Sunday festival of the Catholic church, while rejecting all the other feasts which its authority had consecrated."<sup>37</sup>

Dr. Hessey shows the method of doing this. He says:

"Of course some difficulties had to be got over. The Sabbath was the seventh day, Sunday was the first day of the week. But an ingenious theory that one day in seven was the essence of the fourth commandment speedily reconciled them to this."<sup>38</sup>

The circumstances under which this new doctrine was framed, the name of its author, and the date of its publication, will be given in their place. That the body of the reformers should have failed to recognize the authority of the fourth commandment, and that they did not turn men from the Romish festivals to the Sabbath of the Lord, is a matter of regret rather than of surprise. The impropriety of making them the standard of divine truth is forcibly set forth in the following language:

"Luther and Calvin reformed many abuses, especially in the discipline of the church, and also some gross corruptions in doctrine; but they left other things of far greater moment just as they found them. . . . It was great merit in them to go as far as they did, and it is not they but we who are to blame if their authority induce us to go no further. We should rather imitate them in the boldness and spirit with which they called in question and rectified so many long-established errors; and availing ourselves of their labors, make further progress than they were able to do. Little reason have we to allege their name, authority, and example, when they did a great deal and we do nothing at all. In this we are not imitating them, but those who opposed and counteracted them, willing to keep things as they were."<sup>39</sup>

---

1 Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. vi. sects. 3, 5.

2 Cox's Sabbath Laws, &c. p. 287.

3 Id.Ib.

4 Cox's Sabbath Laws, &c. p. 287.

5 Id. p. 286.

6 Id.Ib.

7 Id. p. 289.

8 Tyndale's Answer to More, book i, chap. xxv.

9 Hessey, p. 352.

10 Calvin's Institutes of the Christian Religion, book ii. chap. viii. sect. 34. translated by John Allen.

11 Quanquam non sine delectu Dominicum quem vocamus diem veteres in locum Sabbati subrogarunt.

12 Calvin's Institutes, book ii. chap. viii. sect. 34.

- 13 Calvin's Harmony of the Evangelists on Matt.28; Mark 16; Luke 24.
- 14 Calvin's Commentary on John 20.
- 15 Calvin's Commentary on Acts 2:1.
- 16 Calvin's Commentary on Acts 20:7.
- 17 Id.Ib.
- 18 Calvin's Commentary on Acts 20:7.
- 19 Calvin's Commentary on 1Cor.16:2.
- 20 Id.Ib.
- 21 Calvin's Institutes, book ii. chap. viii. sect. 34.
- 22 Hessey's Bampton Lectures on Sunday, p. 201, ed. 1866. In the notes appended, p. 366, he says: "At Geneva a tradition exists, that when John Knox visited Calvin on a Sunday, he found his austere coadjutor bowling on a green." Dr. Hessey evidently credited this tradition.
- 23 Beza's Life of Calvin, Sibson's Translation, p. 55, ed. 1836.
- 24 Id. p. 115.
- 25 Eccl. Researches, chap. x. p. 338.
- 26 Id. p. 339.
- 27 Beza's Life of Calvin, p. 168.
- 28 M'Clintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, vol. i. p. 663.
- 29 Hessey, p. 341, gives a clue to the title of Barclay's work. It was Paraenesis ad Sectarios hujus temporis, lib. 1, cap. 13. p. 160, Rome, 1617.
- 30 See Heylyn's Hist. of the Sabbath, part ii. chapter vi. sect 8; Morer's Lord's Day, pp. 216, 217, 228; An Inquiry into the Origin of Septenary Institutions, p. 55; The Modern Sabbath Examined, p. 26, Whitaker, Treacher, and Arnot, London, 1832; Cox's Sabbath Literature, vol. i. pp. 165, 166; Hessey, pp. 141, 142, 198, 341, and the authors there cited.
- 31 Morality of the Fourth Commandment, pp. 32, 36, 39, 40.
- 32 In fact, the story told by Twisse that Barclay is not to be believed in what he says of Calvin because he was treacherous toward King James I., who for that reason would not promote him at his court, appears to be wholly unfounded. The Encyclopedia Britannica, vol. iv., p. 439, eighth edition, assigns a very different reason. It says: "In those days a pension bestowed upon a Scottish papist would have been numbered among the national grievances." That is to say, public opinion would not then tolerate the promotion of a Romanist. But this writer believes that the king secretly favored Barclay. Thus on page 440 he adds: "Although it does not appear that he obtained any regular provision from the king, we may perhaps suppose that he at least received occasional gratuities." This writer knew nothing of Barclay as a detected spy at the king's court. Of his standing as a man, he says on p. 441: "If there had been any remarkable blemish in the morals of Barclay, some of his numerous adversaries would have pointed it out." M'Clintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, vol. 1, p. 663, says that he "would doubtless have succeeded at court had he not been a Romanist." See also Knight's Cyclopedia of Biography, article Barclay.

33 Cox's Sabbath Laws, &c. p. 123; M'Clintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, vol. v. pp. 137-140.

34 Quoted in Hessey's Bampton Lectures, p. 200.

35 Id. p. 201.

36 Westminster Review, July, 1858, p. 37.

37 Westminster Review, July, 1858, p. 37.

38 Hessey p. 203.

39 Dr. Priestly, as quoted in Cox's "Sabbath Laws," p. 260.

---

CHAPTER 23

LUTHER AND CARLSTADT

---

The case of Carlstadt worthy of notice - His difficulty with Luther respecting the Epistle of James - His boldness in standing with Luther against the pope - What Carlstadt did during Luther's captivity - How far he came under fanaticism - Who acted with Carlstadt in the removal of images from the churches, the suppression of masses, and the abolition of the law of celibacy - Luther on returning restored the mass and suppressed the simple ordinance of the supper - Carlstadt submitted to Luther's correction - After two years, Carlstadt felt constrained to oppose Luther respecting the supper - The grounds of their difference respecting the Reformation - Luther said Christ's flesh and blood were literally present IN the bread and wine - Carlstadt said they were simply represented by them - The controversy which followed - Carlstadt refuted by banishment - His cruel treatment in exile - He was not connected with the disorderly conduct of the Anabaptists - Why Carlstadt has been so harshly judged - D'Aubigne's estimate of this controversy - Carlstadt's labors in Switzerland - Luther writes against him - Luther and Carlstadt reconciled - D'Aubigne's estimate of Carlstadt as a scholar and a Christian - Carlstadt a Sabbatarian - Wherein Luther benefited Carlstadt - Wherein Luther might have been benefited by Carlstadt.

---

It is worthy of notice that at least one of the reformers of considerable prominence - Carlstadt - was a Sabbatarian. It is impossible to read the records of the Reformation without the conviction that Carlstadt was desirous of a more thorough work of reformation than was Luther. And that while Luther was disposed to tolerate certain abuses lest the Reformation should be endangered, Carlstadt was at all hazards for a complete return to the Holy Scriptures.

The Sabbatarian principles of Carlstadt, his intimate connection with Luther, his prominence in the early history of the Reformation, and the important bearing of Luther's decision concerning the Sabbath upon the entire history of the Protestant church, render the former worthy of notice in the history of the Sabbath. We shall give his record in the exact words of the best historians, none of whom were in sympathy with his observance of the seventh day. The manner in which they state his faults shows that they were not partial toward him. Shortly after Luther began to preach against the merit of good works, his deep interest in the work of delivering men from popish thralldom led him to deny the inspiration of some portion of those scriptures which were quoted against him. Dr. Sears thus states the case:

"Luther was so zealous to maintain the doctrine of justification by faith, that he was prepared even to call in question the authority of some portions of Scripture, which seemed to him not to be reconcilable with it. To the Epistle of James, especially, his expressions indicate the strongest repugnance."<sup>1</sup>

Before Luther's captivity in the castle of Wartburg, a dispute had arisen between himself and Carlstadt on this very subject. It is recorded of Carlstadt that in the year 1520,

"He published a treatise 'Concerning the Canon of Scripture,' which, although defaced by bitter attacks on Luther, was nevertheless an able work, setting forth the great principle of Protestantism viz., the paramount authority of Scripture. He also at this time contended for the authority of the Epistle of St. James, against Luther. On the publication of the bull of Leo X. against the reformers, Carlstadt showed a real and honest courage in standing firm with Luther. His work on 'Papal Sanctity' (1520) attacks the infallibility of the pope on the basis of the Bible."<sup>2</sup>

Luther, as is well known, while returning from the Diet of Worms, was seized by the agents of the Elector of Saxony, and hidden from his enemies in Wartburg Castle. We read of Carlstadt at this time as follows:

"In 1521, during Luther's confinement in the Wartburg, Carlstadt had almost sole control of the reform movement at Wittenberg, and was supreme in the university. He attacked monachism and celibacy in a treatise 'Concerning Celibacy, Monachism, and Widowhood.' His next point of assault was the Mass, and a riot of students and young citizens against the Mass soon followed. On Christmas, 1521, he gave the sacrament in both kinds to the laity, and in German; and in January 1522, he married. His headlong zeal led him to do whatever he came to believe right, at once and arbitrarily. But he soon outran Luther, and one of his great mistakes was in putting the Old Testament on the same footing as the New. On Jan. 24, 1522, Carlstadt obtained the adoption of a new church constitution at Wittenberg, which is of interest only as the first Protestant organization of the Reformation."<sup>3</sup>

There were present at this time in Wittenberg certain fanatical teachers, who, from the town whence they came, were called "the prophets of Zwickau." They brought Carlstadt for a time so far under their influence, that he concluded academical degrees to be sinful, and that, as the inspiration of the Spirit was sufficient, there was no need of human learning. He therefore advised the students of the university to return to their homes.<sup>4</sup> That institution was in danger of dissolution. Such was Carlstadt's course in Luther's absence. With the exception of this last movement, his acts were in themselves right.

The changes made at Wittenberg during Luther's absence, whether timely or not, are generally set down to Carlstadt's account, and said to have been made by him on his individual responsibility, and in a fanatical manner. But this was quite otherwise. Dr. Maclaine thus states the case:

"The reader may perhaps imagine, from Dr. Mosheim's account of this matter, that Carlstadt introduced these changes merely by his own authority; but this was far from being the case; the suppression of private masses, the removal of images out of the churches, the abolition of the law which imposed celibacy upon the clergy; which are the changes hinted at by our historian as rash and perilous, were effected by Carlstadt, in conjunction with Bugenhagen, Melancthon, Jonas Amsdorf, and others, and were confirmed by the authority of the Elector of Saxony; so that there is some reason to apprehend that one of the principal causes of Luther's displeasure at these changes, was their being introduced in his absence; unless we suppose that he had not so far shaken off the fetters of superstition, as to be sensible of the absurdity and the pernicious consequences of the use of images."<sup>5</sup>

Carlstadt had given the cup to the laity of which they had long been deprived by Rome. He had set aside the worship of the consecrated bread. Dr. Sears rehearses this work of Carlstadt, and then tells us what Luther did concerning it on his return. These are his words:

"He [Carlstadt] had so far restored the sacrament of the Lord's supper as to distribute the wine as well as the bread to the laity. Luther, 'in order not to offend weak consciences,' insisted on distributing the bread only, and prevailed. He [Carlstadt] rejected the practice of elevating and adoring the host. Luther allowed it, and introduced it again."<sup>6</sup>

The position of Carlstadt was at this time very trying. He had not received "many things taught by the new teachers" from Zwickau. But he had publicly taught some of their fanatical ideas relative to the influence of the Spirit of God superseding the necessity of study. But in the suppression of the idolatrous services of the Romanists, he was essentially right. He had the pain to see much of this set up again. Moreover the elector would not allow him either to preach or write upon the points wherein he differed from Luther. D'Aubigne states his course thus:

"Nevertheless, he sacrificed his self-love for the sake of peace, restrained his desire to vindicate his doctrine, was reconciled, at least in appearance, to his colleague [Luther], and soon after resumed his studies in the university."<sup>7</sup>

As Luther taught some doctrines which Carlstadt could not approve, he felt at last that he must speak. Dr. Sears thus writes:

"After Carlstadt had been compelled to keep silence, from 1522 to 1524, and to submit to the superior power and authority of Luther, he could contain himself no longer. He, therefore, left Wittenberg, and established a press at Jena, through which he could, in a series of publications, give vent to his convictions, so long pent up."<sup>8</sup>

The principles at the foundation of their ideas of the Reformation were these: Carlstadt insisted on rejecting everything in the Catholic church not authorized in the Bible; Luther was determined to retain everything not expressly forbidden. Dr. Sears thus states their primary differences:

"Carlstadt maintained, that 'we should not, in things pertaining to God, regard what the multitude say or think, but look simply to the word of God. Others,' he adds, 'say that, on account of the weak, we should not hasten to keep the commands of God; but wait till they become wise and strong.' In regard to the ceremonies introduced into the church, he judged as the Swiss reformers did, that all were to be rejected which had not a warrant in the Bible. 'It is sufficiently against the Scriptures if you can find no ground for it in them.'

"Luther asserted, on the contrary, 'Whatever is not against the Scriptures is for the Scriptures, and the Scriptures for it. Though Christ hath not commanded adoring of the host, so neither hath he forbidden it.' 'Not so,' said Carlstadt, 'we are bound to the Bible, and no one may decide after the thoughts of his own heart.' "<sup>9</sup>

It is of interest to know what was the subject which caused the controversy between them, and what was the position of each. Dr. Maclaine thus states the occasion of the conflict which now arose:

"This difference of opinion between Carlstadt and Luther concerning the eucharist, was the true cause of the violent rupture between those two eminent men, and it tended very little to the honor of the latter; for, however the explication, which the former gave of the words of the institution of the Lord's supper, may appear forced, yet the sentiments he entertained of that ordinance as a commemoration of Christ's death, and not as a celebration of his bodily presence, in consequence of a consubstantiation with the bread and wine, are infinitely more rational than the doctrine of Luther, which is loaded with some of the most palpable absurdities of transubstantiation; and if it be supposed that Carlstadt strained the rule of interpretation too far, when he alleged, that Christ pronounced the pronoun this (in the words This is my body) pointing to his body, and not to the bread, what shall we think of Luther's explaining the nonsensical doctrine of consubstantiation by the similitude of a red-hot iron, in which two elements are united, as the body of Christ is with the bread of the eucharist?"<sup>10</sup>

Dr. Sears also states the occasion of this conflict in 1524:

"The most important difference between him and Luther, and that which most embittered the latter against him, related to the Lord's supper. He opposed not only transubstantiation, but consubstantiation, the real presence, and the elevation and adoration of the host. Luther rejected the first, asserted the second and third, and allowed the other two. In regard to the real presence, he says: 'In the sacrament is the real body of Christ and the real blood of Christ, so that even the unworthy and ungodly partake of it; and "partake of it corporally" too, and not spiritually as Carlstadt will have it.' "<sup>11</sup>

That Luther was the one chiefly in error in this controversy will be acknowledged by nearly every one at the present day. D'Aubigne cannot refrain from censuring him:

"When once the question of the supper was raised, Luther threw away the proper element of the Reformation, and took his stand for himself and his church in an exclusive Lutheranism."<sup>12</sup>

The controversy is thus characterized by Dr. Sears:

"A furious controversy ensued. Both parties exceeded the bounds of Christian propriety and moderation. Carlstadt was now in the vicinity of the Anabaptist tumults, excited by Muntzer. He sympathized with them in some things, but disapproved of their disorders. Luther made the most of this."<sup>13</sup>

It is evident that in this contest Luther did not gain any decisive advantage, even in the estimation of his friends. The Elector of Saxony interfered and banished Carlstadt! D'Aubigne thus states the case:

"He issued orders to deprive Carlstadt of his appointments, and banished him, not only from Orlamund, but from the States of the electorate."<sup>14</sup>

"Luther had nothing to do with this sternness on the part of the prince: it was foreign to his disposition, - and this he afterward proved."<sup>15</sup>

Carlstadt, for maintaining the doctrine now held by almost all Protestants, concerning the supper, and for denying Luther's doctrine that Christ is personally present in the bread, was rendered a homeless wanderer for years. His banishment was in 1524. What followed is thus described:

"From this date until 1534 he wandered through Germany, pursued by the persecuting opinions of both Lutherans and Papists, and at times reduced to great straits by indigence and unpopularity. But, although he always found sympathy and hospitality among the Anabaptists, yet he is evidently clear of the charge of complicity with Muntzer's rebellion. Yet he was forbidden to write, his life was sometimes in danger, and he exhibits the melancholy spectacle of a man great and right in many respects, but whose rashness, ambition, and insincere zeal, together with many fanatical opinions, had put him under the well-founded but immoderate censure of both friends and foes."<sup>16</sup>

Such language seems quite unwarranted by the facts. There was no justice in this persecution of Carlstadt. He did for a brief time hold some fanatical ideas, but these he did not afterward maintain. The same writer speaks further in the same strain:

"It cannot be denied that in many respects he was apparently in advance of Luther, but his error lay in his haste to subvert and abolish the external forms and pomps before the hearts of the people, and doubtless his own, were prepared by an internal change. Biographies of him are numerous, and the Reformation no doubt owes him much of good for which he has not the credit, as it was overshadowed by the mischief he produced."<sup>17</sup>

Important truth relative to the services of Carlstadt is here stated, but it is connected with intimations of evil which have no sufficient foundation in fact. Dr. Sears speaks thus of the bitter language concerning him:

"For three centuries, Carlstadt's moral character has been treated somewhat as Luther's would have been, if only Catholic testimony had been heard. The party interested has been both witness and judge. What if we were to judge of Zwingle's Christian character by Luther's representations? The truth is, Carlstadt hardly showed a worse spirit, or employed more abusive terms toward Luther, than Luther did toward him. Carlstadt knew that in many things the truth was on his side; and yet, in these, no less than in others, he was crushed by the civil power, which was on the side of Luther."<sup>18</sup>

D'Aubigne speaks thus of the contest between these two men:

"Each turns against the error which, to his mind, seems most noxious, and in assailing it, goes - it may be --beyond the truth. But this being admitted, it is still true that both are right in the prevailing turn of their thoughts, and though ranking in different hosts, the two great teachers are nevertheless found under the same standard - that of Jesus Christ, who alone is TRUTH in the full import of that word."<sup>19</sup>

D'Aubigne says of them after Carlstadt had been banished:

"It is impossible not to feel a pain at contemplating these two men, once friends, and both worthy of our esteem, thus angrily opposed."<sup>20</sup>

Sometime after Carlstadt's banishment from Saxony he visited Switzerland. D'Aubigne speaks of the result of his labors in that country, and what Luther did toward him:

"His instructions soon attracted an attention nearly equal to that which had been excited by the earliest theses put forth by Luther. Switzerland seemed almost gained over to his doctrine. Bucer and Capito also appeared to adopt his views.

"Then it was that Luther's indignation rose to its height; and he put forth one of the most powerful but also most OUTRAGEOUS of his controversial writings, - his book 'Against the Celestial Prophets.' "<sup>21</sup>

Dr. Sears also mentions the labors of Carlstadt in Switzerland, and speaks of Luther's uncandid book:

"The work which he wrote against him, he entitled 'The book against the Celestial Prophets.' This was uncandid; for the controversy related chiefly to the sacrament of the supper. In the south of Germany and in Switzerland, Carlstadt found more adherents than Luther. Banished as an Anabaptist, he was received as a Zwinglian."<sup>22</sup>

Dr. Maclaine tells something which followed, which is worthy of the better nature of these two illustrious men:

"Carlstadt, after his banishment from Saxony, composed a treatise against enthusiasm in general, and against the extravagant tenets and the violent proceedings of the Anabaptists in particular. This treatise was even addressed to Luther, who was so affected by it, that, repenting of his unworthy treatment of Carlstadt, he pleaded his cause, and obtained from the elector a permission for him to return into Saxony."<sup>23</sup>

"After this reconciliation with Luther, he composed a treatise on the eucharist, which breathes the most amiable spirit of moderation and humility; and having perused the writings of Zwingli, where he saw his own sentiments on that subject maintained with the greatest perspicuity and force of evidence, he repaired the second time to Zurich, and thence to Basil, where he was admitted to the offices of pastor and professor of divinity, and where, after having lived in the exemplary and constant practice of every Christian virtue, he died, amidst the warmest effusions of piety and resignation, on the 25th of December, 1541."<sup>24</sup>

Of Carlstadt's scholarship, and of his conscientiousness, D'Aubigne speaks thus:

" 'He was well acquainted,' says Dr. Scheur, 'with Latin, Greek, and Hebrew;' and Luther acknowledged him to be his superior in learning. Endowed with great powers of mind, he sacrificed to his convictions fame, station, country, and even his bread."<sup>25</sup>

His Sabbatarian character is attested by Dr. White, lord bishop of Ely:

"The same [the observance of the seventh day] likewise being revived in Luther's time by Carolastadius, Sternebergius, and by some sectaries among the Anabaptists hath both then and ever since been censured as Jewish and heretical."<sup>26</sup>

Dr. Sears alludes to Carlstadt's observance of the seventh day, but as is quite usual with first-day historians in such cases, does it in such a manner as to leave the fact sufficiently obscure to be passed over without notice by the general reader. He writes thus:

"Carlstadt differed essentially from Luther in regard to the use to be made of the Old Testament. With him, the law of Moses was still binding. Luther, on the contrary, had a strong aversion to what he calls a legal and Judaizing religion. Carlstadt held to the divine authority of the Sabbath from the Old Testament; Luther believed Christians were free to observe any day as a Sabbath, provided they be uniform in observing it."<sup>27</sup>

We have, however, Luther's own statement respecting Carlstadt's views of the Sabbath. It is from his book "Against the Celestial Prophets:"

"Indeed, if Carlstadt were to write further about the Sabbath, Sunday would have to give way, and the Sabbath - that is to say, Saturday - must be kept holy; he would truly make us Jews in all things, and we should come to be circumcised: for that is true, and cannot be denied, that he who deems it necessary to keep one law of Moses, and keeps it as the law of Moses, must deem all necessary, and keep them all."<sup>28</sup>

The various historians who treat of the difficulty between Luther and Carlstadt, speak freely of the motives of each. But of such matters it is best to speak little; the day of Judgment will show the hearts of men, and we must wait till then. We may, however, freely speak of their acts, and may with propriety name the things wherein each would have benefited the other. Carlstadt's errors at Wittemberg were not because he rejected Luther's help, but because he was deprived of it by Luther's captivity. Luther's error in those things wherein Carlstadt was right were because he saw it best to reject Carlstadt's doctrine.

1. Carlstadt's error in the removal of the images, the suppression of masses, the abolition of monastic vows, or vows of celibacy, and in giving the wine as well as the bread in the supper, and in performing the service in German instead of Latin, if it was an error, was one of time rather than of doctrine. Had Luther been with him, probably all would have been deferred for some months or perhaps some years.

2. Carlstadt would probably have been saved by Luther's presence from coming under the influence of the Zwickau prophets. As it was, he did for a brief season accept, not their teaching in general, but their doctrine that the inspiration of the Holy Spirit in believers renders human learning vain and worthless. But in both these things Carlstadt submitted to Luther's correction. Had Luther regarded Carlstadt, he would have been benefited in the following particulars:

1. In his zeal for the doctrine of justification by faith, he would have been saved from the denial of the inspiration of the epistle of James, and would not have called it a "strawy or chaffy epistle."<sup>29</sup>

2. Instead of exchanging transubstantiation, which is the Romish doctrine that the bread and wine of the supper become Christ's literal flesh and blood, for consubstantiation, the doctrine which he fastened upon the Lutheran church that Christ's flesh and blood are actually present in the bread and wine, he would have given to that church the doctrine that the bread and wine simply represent the body and blood of Christ, and are used in commemoration of his sacrifice for our sins.

3. Instead of holding fast every thing in the Romish church not expressly forbidden in the Bible, he would have laid all aside which had not the actual sanction of that holy book.

4. Instead of the Catholic festival of Sunday, he would have observed and transmitted to the Protestant church the ancient Sabbath of the Lord.

3 Carlstadt needed Luther's help, and he accepted it. Did not Luther also need that of Carlstadt? Is it not time that Carlstadt should be vindicated from the great obloquy thrown upon him by the prevailing party? And would not this have been done long since had not Carlstadt been a decided Sabbatarian?

---

1 Life of Luther by Barnas Sears, D. D., lar er ed. pp. 400, 401.

2 M'Clintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, vol. ii. p. 123.

3 Id.Ib.

4 D'Aubigne's Hist. of the Ref. book ix.

5 Mosheim's Church Hist. book iv. cent. xvi. sect. 3, part ii. paragraph 22, note.

6 Life of Luther, p. 401.

7 D'Aubigne's Hist. Ref. book ix. p. 282. I use the excellent one-volume edition of Porter and Coates.

8 Life of Luther, pp. 402, 403.

9 Id. pp. 401, 402.

10 Mosheim's Hist. of the Church, book iv, cent. xvi. sect. 3, part ii. paragraph 22, note.

11 Life of Luther, p. 402.

12 D'Aubigne's Hist. of Ref. book x. p. 312.

13 Life of Luther, p. 403.

14 D'Aubigne's Hist. Ref. book x. pp. 314, 315.

15 Id.Ib.

16 M'Clintock and Strong's Cyclopedia, vol. ii. p. 123.

17 Id.Ib.

18 Life of Luther, p. 400.

19 D'Aubigne's Hist. Ref. book x. p. 312.

20 Id. book x. p. 315.

21 Hist. Ref. book x. p. 315

22 Life of Luther p. 403.

Chapter Twenty Three – Luther and Carlstadt

23 Mosheim's Church Hist. book iv. cent. 16, sect. 3, part ii. paragraph 22, note.

24 Id.Ib. Very nearly the same statement is made by du Pin, tome l3, chap. ii. section 20, p. 103, A.D. 1703.

25 Hist. Ref. book x. p. 315.

26 Treatise of the Sabbath Day, p. 8.

27 Life of Luther, p. 402.

28 Quoted in the Life of Martin Luther in Pictures, p. 147, Philadelphia, J.W. Moore, 195 Chestnut Street.

29 M'Clintock and Strong, vol. ii. p. 123; Dr. A. Clarke's Commentary, preface to James.

CHAPTER 24

SABBATH-KEEPERS IN THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY

---

The judgment of the martyr Frith - The Reformation brings Sabbath-keepers to light in various countries - In Transylvania - In Bohemia - In Russia - In Germany - In Holland - In France - In England.

---

John Frith, an English reformer of considerable note and a martyr, was converted by the labors of Tyndale about 1525, and assisted him in the translation of the Bible. He was burned at Smithfield, July 4, 1533. He is spoken of in the highest terms by the historians of the English Reformation.<sup>1</sup> His views respecting the Sabbath, and first-day are thus stated by himself:

"The Jews have the word of God for their Saturday, sith [since] it is the seventh day, and they were commanded to keep the seventh day solemn. And we have not the word of God for us, but rather against us; for we keep not the seventh day, as the Jews do, but the first, which is not commanded by God's law."<sup>2</sup>

When the Reformation had lifted the vail of darkness that covered the nations of Europe, Sabbath-keepers were found in Transylvania, Bohemia, Russia, Germany, Holland, France, and England. It was not the Reformation which gave existence to these Sabbatarians, for the leaders of the Reformation, as a body, were not friendly to such views. On the contrary, these observers of the Sabbath appear to be remnants of the ancient Sabbath-keeping churches that had witnessed for the truth during the Dark Ages.

Transylvania, a country which now constitutes one of the eastern divisions of the Austrian Empire, was, in the sixteenth century, an independent principality. About the middle of that century, the country was under the rule of Sigismund. The historian of the Baptists, Robinson, gives the following interesting record of events in that age and country:

"The prince received his first religious impressions under his chaplain, Alexius, who was a Lutheran. On his removal he chose Francis Davidis to succeed him, and by him was further informed of the principles of the Reformation. Davidis was a native of that extremely populous and well-fortified town which is called Coloswar by the natives, Clausenberg by the Germans, and by others, Claudiopolis. He was a man of learning, address, and piety, and reasoned in this part of his life more justly on the principles of the Reformation than many of his contemporaries. In 1563 his highness invited several learned foreigners to come into Transylvania for the purpose of helping forward the Reformation."<sup>3</sup>

"Several other foreigners, who had been persecuted elsewhere, sought refuge in this country, where persecution for religion was unknown. These refugees were Unitarian Baptists, and through their indefatigable industry and address, the prince, the greatest part of the senate, a great number of ministers, and a multitude of the people went heartily into their plan of Reformation."<sup>4</sup>

"In the end the Baptists became by far the most numerous party, and were put in possession of a printing office and an academy, and the cathedral was given to them for a place of worship. They obtained these without any violence, and while they formed their own churches according to the convictions of their members, they persecuted nobody, but allowed the same liberty to others, and great numbers of Catholics, Lutherans and Calvinists resided in perfect freedom."<sup>5</sup>

Mr. Robinson further informs us that Davidis took extreme Unitarian ground with respect to the worship of Christ, which seems to have been the only serious error that can be laid to his charge. Davidis was a Unitarian Baptist minister, intrusted by his brethren with the superintendency of the churches in Transylvania. His influence in that country at one period was very great. His views of the Sabbath are thus stated:

"He supposed the Jewish Sabbath not abrogated, and he therefore kept holy the seventh day. He believed also the doctrine of the millennium, and like an honest man, what he believed he taught. He was considered by the Transylvanian churches as an apostle, and had grown gray in their service; but the Catholics, the Lutherans, and the Calvinists, thought him a Turk, a blasphemer, and an atheist, and his Polish Baptist brethren said he was half a Jew. Had he been a whole Jew he ought not to have been imprisoned for his speculations."<sup>6</sup>

"By what means the Supreme Searcher of hearts only knows, but by some methods till then unknown in Transylvania, the old man was arrested, and by the senate condemned to die. He was imprisoned in the castle, and providence by putting a period to his life there, saved his persecutors from the disgrace of a public execution."<sup>7</sup>

Mr. Robinson says that "many have been blamed" for the death of Davidis, "but perhaps the secret springs of this event may never be known till the Judge of the world maketh inquisition for blood." There were many Sabbatarians in Transylvania at this time, for Mr. Robinson enumerates many persons of distinction who were of the same views with Davidis. The ambassador Bequessius, general of the army; the princess, sister of prince John; the privy counselor, Chaquius, and the two Quendi; general Andrassi, and many others of high rank; Somer, the rector of the academy at Claudiopolis; Matthias Glirius, Adam Neusner, and Christian Francken, a professor in the academy at Claudiopolis.

"These," says Robinson, "were all of the same sentiments as Davidis, as were many more of different ranks, who after his death in prison, defended his opinion against Socinus. Palaeologus was of the same mind; he had fled into Moravia, but was caught by the emperor, at the request of Pope Gregory XIV., and carried to Rome, where he was burnt for a heretic. He was an old man, and was terrified at first into a recantation, but he recollected himself and submitted to his fate like a Christian."<sup>8</sup>

These persons must have been Sabbatarians. Moshien, after saying that Davidis "left behind him disciples and friends, who strenuously maintained his sentiments," adds:

"The most eminent of these were Jacob Palaeologus, of the isle of Chio, who was burned at Rome in 1585; Christian Francken, who had disputed in person with Socinus; and John Somer, who was master of the academy of Clausenberg. This little sect is branded by the Socinian writers, with the ignominious appellation of SEMI-JUDAIZERS."<sup>9</sup>

We have a further record of Sabbatarians in Transylvania to the effect that in the time of Davidis,

"John Gerendi [was] head of the Sabbatarians, a people who did not keep Sunday but Saturday, and whose disciples took the name of Genoldists."<sup>10</sup>

Sabbath-keepers, also, were found in Bohemia, a country of Central Europe, at the time of the Reformation. We are dependent upon those who despised their faith and practice for a knowledge of their existence. Erasmus speaks of them as follows:

"Now we hear that among the Bohemians a new kind of Jews has arisen called Sabbatarians, who observe the Sabbath with so much superstition, that if on that day anything falls into their eyes they will not remove it; as if the Lord's day would not suffice for them instead of the Sabbath, which to the apostles also was sacred; or as if Christ had not sufficiently expressed how much should be allowed upon the Sabbath."<sup>11</sup>

We need say nothing relative to the alleged superstition of these Sabbath-keepers. The statement sufficiently refutes itself, and indicates the bitter prejudice of those who speak of them thus. But that Sabbath-keepers were found at this time in Bohemia admits of no doubt. They were of some importance, and they must also have published their views to the world; for Cox tells us that,

"Hospinian of Zurich, in his treatise 'Concerning the Feasts of the Jews and of the Gentiles,' chapter iii. (Tiguri, 1592) replies to the arguments of these Sabbatarians."<sup>12</sup>

The existence of this body of Sabbatarians in Bohemia at the time of the Reformation is strong presumptive proof that the Waldenses of Bohemia, noticed in the preceding chapter, though claimed as observers of Sunday, were actually observers of the ancient Sabbath.

In Russia, the observers of the seventh day are numerous at the present time. Their existence can be traced back nearly to the year 1400. They are, therefore, at least one hundred years older than the work of Luther. The first writer that I quote speaks of them as "having left the Christian faith." But even in our time, it is very common for people to speak of those who turn from the first day to the seventh that they have renounced Christ for Moses.<sup>13</sup> He also speaks of them as holding to circumcision. Even Carlstadt was charged with this by Luther as a necessary deduction from the fact that he observed the day enjoined in the fourth commandment. Such being a common method of characterizing Sabbath-keepers in our time, and such also having been the case in past ages - for when men lack argument, they use opprobrious terms - the historian, who makes up his record of these people from the statements of the popular party, will certainly represent them as rejecting Christ and the gospel, and accepting instead Moses and the ceremonial law. I give the statements of the historians as they are, and the reader must judge. Robert Pinkerton gives the following account of them:

"Seleznevtschini. This sect are, in modern time, precisely what the Strigolniks originally were. They are Jews in principle; maintain the divine obligation of circumcision; observe the Jewish Sabbath, and the ceremonial law. There are many of them about Tula, on the river Kuma, and in other provinces, and they are very numerous in Poland and Turkey, where, having left the Christian faith, they have joined the seed of Abraham, according to the flesh, in rejecting the Messiah and the gospel.<sup>14</sup>

The ancient Russian name of this people was Strigolniks. Dr. Murdock gives the following account of them:

"It is common to date the origin of sectarians in the Russian church, about the middle of the seventeenth century in the time of the patriarch Nikon. But according to the Russian annals, there existed schismatics in the Russian church two hundred years before the days of Nikon; and the disturbances which took place in his time, only proved the means of augmenting their numbers, and of bringing them forward into public view. The earliest of these schismatics first appeared in Novogorod, early in the fifteenth century, under the name of Strigolniks.

"A Jew named Horie preached a mixture of Judaism and Christianity; and proselyted two priests, Denis and Alexie, who gained a vast number of followers. This sect was so numerous, that a national council was called, towards the close of the fifteenth century, to oppose it. Soon afterwards, one Karp, an excommunicated deacon, joined the Strigolniks; and accused the higher clergy of selling the office of priesthood, and of so far corrupting the church, that the Holy Ghost was withdrawn from it. He was a very successful propagator of this sect."<sup>15</sup>

It is very customary with historians to speak of Sabbath-keeping Christians in one of the following ways: 1. To name their observance of the seventh day distinctly, but to represent them as turning from Christ to Moses and the ceremonial law; or, 2. To speak of their Sabbatarian principles in so vague a manner that the reader will not be likely to suspect them of being Sabbath-keepers. Pinkerton speaks of these Russian Sabbath-keepers after the first of these methods; Murdock, after the second. It is plain that Murdock did not regard these people as rejecting Christ, and it is certain from Pinkerton that the two writers are speaking of the same people.

What was the origin of these Russian Sabbath-keepers? Certainly it was not from the Reformation of the sixteenth century; for they were in existence at least one century before that event. We have seen that the Waldenses, during the Dark Ages, were dispersed through many of the countries of Europe. And so also were the people called Cathari, if, indeed, the two were not one people. In particular, we note the fact that they were scattered through Poland, Lithuania, Sclavonia, Bulgaria, Livonia, Albania, and Sarmatia.<sup>16</sup> These countries are now parts of the Russian Empire. Sabbath-keepers were numerous in Russia before the time of Luther. The Sabbath of the Lord was certainly retained by many of the ancient Waldenses and Cathari, as we have seen. In fact, the very things said of the Russian Sabbath-keepers, that they held to circumcision and the ceremonial law, were also said of the Cathari, and of that branch of the Waldenses called Passaginians.<sup>17</sup> Is there any reasonable doubt that in these ancient Christians we have the ancestors of the Russian Sabbath-keepers of the fifteenth century?

Mr. Maxson makes the following statement:

"We find that Sabbath-keepers appear in Germany late in the fifteenth or early in the sixteenth century according to 'Ross's Picture of All Religions.' By this we are to understand that their numbers were such as to lead to organization, and attract attention. A number of these formed a church, and emigrated to America, in the early settlement of this country."<sup>18</sup>

Mr. Utter makes the following statement respecting Sabbath-keepers in Germany and in Holland:

"Early in the sixteenth century there are traces of Sabbath-keepers in Germany. The Old Dutch Martyrology gives an account of a Baptist minister named Stephen Benedict, somewhat famous for baptizing during a severe persecution in Holland, who is supposed by good authorities to have kept the seventh day as the Sabbath. One of the persons baptized by him was Barbary von Thiers, wife of Hans Borzen, who was executed on the 16th of September, 1529. At her trial she declared her rejection of the idolatrous sacrament of the priest, and also the Mass."<sup>19</sup>

We give her declaration of faith respecting Sundays and holy days:

"God has commanded us to rest on the seventh day. Beyond this she did not go: but with the help and grace of God she would persevere therein, and in death abide thereby; for it is the true faith, and the right way in Christ."<sup>20</sup>

Another martyr, Christina Tolingerin, is mentioned thus:

"Concerning holy days and Sundays, she said: 'In six days the Lord made the world, on the seventh day he rested. The other holy days have been instituted by popes, cardinals, and archbishops.'"<sup>21</sup>

There were at this time Sabbath-keepers in France:

"In France also there were Christians of this class, among whom were M. de la Roque, who wrote in defense of the Sabbath against Bossuet, Catholic bishop of Meaux."<sup>22</sup>

M. de la Roque is referred to by Dr. Wall in his famous history of infant baptism "as a learned man in other points," but in great error for asserting that "the primitive church did not baptize infants."<sup>23</sup> It is worthy of notice that Sabbath-keepers are always observers of scriptural baptism - the burial of penitent believers in the watery grave. No people retaining infant baptism, or the sprinkling of believers, have observed the seventh day.<sup>24</sup>

The origin of the Sabbatarians of England cannot now be definitely ascertained. Their observance of believers' baptism and the keeping of the seventh day as the Sabbath of the Lord, strongly attest their descent from the persecuted heretics of the Dark Ages, rather than from the reformers of the sixteenth century, who retained infant baptism and the festival of Sunday. That these heretics had long been numerous in England, is thus certified by Crosby:

"For in the time of William the Conqueror [A.D. 1070] and his son William Rufus, it appears that the Waldenses and their disciples out of France, Germany, and Holland, had their frequent recourse, and did abound in England. . . . The Beringarian, or Waldensian heresy, as the chronologer calls it, had, about A.D. 1080, generally corrupted all France, Italy, and England."<sup>25</sup>

Mr. Maxson says of the English Sabbatarians:

"In England we find Sabbath-keepers very early. Dr. Chambers says: 'They arose in England in the sixteenth century,' from which we understand that they then became a distinct denomination in that kingdom."<sup>26</sup>

Mr. Benedict speaks thus of the origin of English Sabbatarians:

"At what time the Seventh-day Baptists began to form churches in this kingdom does not appear; but probably it was at an early period; and although their churches have never been numerous, yet there have been among them almost for two hundred years past, some very eminent men."<sup>27</sup>

---

1 M'Clintock and Strong, vol. iii. p. 679; D'Aubigne's Hist. Ref book xviii. pp. 672, 689, 706, 707; book xx. pp. 765, 766; Fox's Acts and Monuments, book viii. pp. 524-527.

2 Frith's works, p. 69, quoted in Hessey, p. 198.

3 Eccl. Researches, chap. xvi. p. 630.

4 Id.Ib.

5 Id. p. 631.

6 Eccl. Researches, chap. xvi. p. 636.

7 Id. pp. 636, 637.

8 Eccl. Researches, chap. xvi. p. 640.

9 Mosheim's Hist. Church, book iv. cent. 16. sect. 3. part ii. chap. iv. par. 23.

10 Lamy's History of Socinianiam p. 60.

11 "Nune audimus apud Bohemos exoriri novum Judaeorum genus Sabbatarios appellant, qui tanta superstitione servant Sabbatum, ut si quid eo die inciderit in oculum, nolint eximere: quasi non sufficiat eis pro Sabbato Dies Dominicus, qui Apostolis etiam erat sacer, aut quasi Christus non satis expresserit quantum tribuen dum sit Sabbato." De Atnabili Ecclesiae Concordia; Opera, tome 5, p. 506, Lugd. Bat. 1704; quoted in Cox's Sabbath Literature, vol. ii. pp. 201, 202; Hessey, p. 374.

12 Cox, vol. ii. p. 202.

13 Such statements respecting the observers of the seventh day are very common. Even those who first commenced to keep the Sabbath in Newport were said to "have left Christ and gone to Moses in the observation of days, and times, and seasons, and such like." - Seventh-day Baptist Memorial, vol. i. p. 32. The pastor of the first-day Baptist church of Newport said to them: "I do judge you have and still do deny Christ." - Id. p. 37.

14 The Present State of the Greek Church in Russia, Appendix. p. 273, New York, 1815.

15 Murdock's Mosheim, book iv. cent. xvii. sect. 2, part i. chap. ii. note 12.

16 See the twenty-first chapter of this work.

17 Id.Ib.

18 Maxson's Hist. Sab. p. 41.

19 Manual of the Seventh-day Baptists, p. 16.

20 Martyrology of the Churches of Christ, commonly called Baptists, during the era of the Reformation. From the Dutch of T. J. van Braght, London, 1850, vol. i. pp. 113, 114.

21 Id. p. 113.

22 Manual of the S.D. Baptists, p. 16.

23 Wall's History of Infant Baptism, vol. ii. p. 379, Oxford, 1835.

24 I know of no exception to this statement. If there be any it must be found in the cases of those observing both seventh and first days. Even here, there is certainly no such thing as sprinkling for baptism, but possibly there may be the baptism of young children.

25 Hist. English Baptists, vol. pref. pp. 43, 44.

26 Maxson's Hist. Sab. p. 42.

27 Gen. Hist. Bapt. Denom. vol. ii. p. 414, ed. 1813.

CHAPTER 25

HOW AND WHEN SUNDAY APPROPRIATED THE FOURTH COMMANDMENT

---

The light of the Reformation destroyed many of the best Sunday arguments of the preceding Dark Ages - The controversy between the Presbyterians and Episcopalians of England brings Sunday sacredness to the test - The former discover the means of enforcing the observance of Sunday by the fourth commandment - How this can be done - Effects of this extraordinary discovery - History of the Sunday festival concluded.

---

The light of the Reformation necessarily dissipated into thin air many of the most substantial arguments by which the Sunday festival had been built up during the Dark Ages. The roll that fell from Heaven - the apparition of St. Peter - the relief of souls in purgatory, and even of the damned in hell - and many prodigies of fearful portent - none of these, nor all of them combined, were likely longer to sustain the sacredness of the venerable day. True it was that when these were swept away there remained to sustain the festival of Sunday, the canons of councils, the edicts of kings and emperors, the decrees of the holy doctors of the church, and, greatest of all, the imperious mandates of the Roman pontiff. Yet these could be adduced also in behalf of the innumerable festivals ordained by the same great apostate church. Such authority would answer for the Episcopalian, who devoutly accepts of all these festivals, because commanded so to do by the church; but for those who acknowledge the Bible as the only rule of faith, the case was different. In the latter part of the sixteenth century, the Presbyterians and Episcopalians of England were involved in such a controversy as brought this matter to an issue. The Episcopalians required men to observe all the festivals of the church; the Presbyterians observed Sunday, and rejected all the rest. The Episcopalians showed the inconsistency of this discrimination, inasmuch as the same church authority had ordained them all. As the Presbyterians rejected the authority of the church, they would not keep Sunday upon that ground, especially as it would involve the observance also of all the other festivals. They had to choose therefore between the giving up of Sunday entirely, and the defense of its observance by the Bible. There was indeed another and a nobler choice that they might have made, viz., to adopt the Sabbath of the Lord, but it was too humiliating for them to unite with those who retained that ancient and sacred institution. The issue of this struggle is thus related by a distinguished German theologian, Hengstenberg:-

"The opinion that the Sabbath was transferred to the Sunday was first broached in its perfect form, and with all its consequences, in the controversy which was carried on in England between the Episcopalians and Presbyterians. The Presbyterians, who carried to extremes the principle, that every institution of the church must have its foundation in the Scripture, and would not allow that God had given, in this respect, greater liberty to the church of the New Testament, which his Spirit had brought to maturity, than to that of the Old, charged the Episcopalians with popish leaven, and superstition, and subjection to the ordinances of men, because they retained the Christian feasts. The Episcopalians, on the other hand, as a proof that greater liberty was granted to the New Testament church in such matters as these, appealed to the fact that even the observance of the Sunday was only an arrangement of the church. The Presbyterians were now in a position which compelled them either to give up the observance of Sunday, or to maintain that a divine appointment from God separated it from the other festivals. The first day could not do, for their Christian experience was too deep for them not to know how greatly the weakness of human nature stands in need of regularly returning periods, devoted to the service of God. They therefore decided upon the latter."<sup>1</sup>

Thus much for the occasion of that wonderful discovery by which the Scriptures are made to sustain the divine appointment of Sunday as the Christian Sabbath. The date of the discovery, the name of the discoverer, and the manner in which he contrived to enforce the first day of the week by the authority of the fourth commandment, are thus set forth by a candid first-day historian, Lyman Coleman:

"The true doctrine of the Christian Sabbath was first promulgated by an English dissenter, the Rev. Nicholas Bound, D. D., of Norton, in the county of Suffolk. About the year 1595, he published a famous book, entitled, 'Sabbathum Veteris et Novi Testamenti,' or the True Doctrine of the Sabbath. In this book he maintained 'that the seventh part of our time ought to be devoted to God - that Christians are bound to rest on the Lord's day as much as the Jews were on the Mosaic Sabbath, the commandment about rest being moral and perpetual; and that it was not lawful for persons to follow their studies or worldly business on that day, nor to use such pleasures and recreations as are permitted on other days. This book spread with wonderful rapidity. The doctrine which it propounded called forth from many hearts a ready response, and the result was a most pleasing reformation in many parts of the kingdom. 'It is almost incredible,' says Fuller, 'how taking this doctrine was, partly because of its own purity, and partly for the eminent piety of such persons as maintained it; so that the Lord's day, especially in corporations, began to be precisely kept; people becoming a law unto themselves, forbearing such sports as yet by statute permitted; yea, many rejoicing at their own restraint herein.' The law of the Sabbath was indeed a religious principle, after which the Christian church had, for centuries, been darkly groping. Pious men of every age had felt the necessity of divine authority for sanctifying the day. Their conscience had been in advance of their reason. Practically they had kept the Sabbath better than their principles required.

"Public sentiment, however, was still unsettled in regard to this new doctrine respecting the Sabbath, though a few at first violently opposed it. 'Learned men were much divided in their judgments about these Sabbatarian doctrines; some embraced them as ancient truths consonant to Scripture, long disused and neglected, now seasonably revived for the increase of piety. Others conceived them grounded on a wrong bottom; but because they tended to the manifest advance of religion, it was a pity to oppose them; seeing none have just reason to complain, being deceived unto their own good. But a third sort flatly fell out with these propositions, as galling men's necks with a Jewish yoke against the liberty of Christians; that Christ, as Lord of the Sabbath, had removed the rigor thereof, and allowed men lawful recreations; that this doctrine put an unequal lustre on the Sunday, on set purpose to eclipse all other holy days, to the derogation of the authority of the church; that this strict observance was set up out of faction, to be a character of difference to brand all for libertines who did not entertain it.' No open opposition, however, was at first manifested against the sentiments of Dr. Bound. No reply was attempted for several years, and 'not so much as a feather of a quill in print did wag against him.'

"His work was soon followed by several other treatises in defense of the same sentiments. 'All the Puritans fell in with this doctrine, and distinguished themselves by spending that part of sacred time in public, family, and private devotion.' Even Dr. Heylyn certified the triumphant spread of those puritanical sentiments respecting the Sabbath. . . .

" 'This doctrine,' he says, 'carrying such a fair show of piety, at least in the opinion of the common people, and such as did not examine the true grounds of it, induced many to embrace and defend it; and in a very little time it became the most bewitching error and the most popular infatuation that ever was embraced by the people of England.' "<sup>2</sup>

Dr. Bound was not absolutely the inventor of the seventh-part-of-time theory; but he may be said rather to have gathered up and combined the scattered hints of his predecessors, and to have added to these something of his own production. His grounds for asserting Sunday to be the Sabbath of the fourth commandment are these:

"That which is natural, namely, that every seventh day should be kept holy unto the Lord, that still remaineth: that which is positive, namely, that day which was the seventh day from the creation, should be the Sabbath, or day of rest, that is now changed in the church of God."<sup>3</sup>

He says that the meaning of the declaration, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God," is this:

"There must be one [day] of seven and not [one] of eight."<sup>4</sup>

But the special key to the whole theory is in the statement that the seventh day in the commandment was "genus," that is to say, it was a kind of seventh day which comprehended several species of seventh days, at least two. Thus he says:

"So he maketh the seventh day to be genus in this commandment, and to be perpetual: and in it by virtue of the commandment to comprehend these two species or kinds: the Sabbath of the Jews and of the Gentiles, of the law and of the gospel: so that both of them were comprehended in the commandment, even as genus comprehendeth both his species."<sup>5</sup>

He enforces the first day by the fourth commandment, as follows:

"So that we have not in the gospel a new commandment for the Sabbath, diverse from that that was in the law; but there is a diverse time appointed; namely, not the seventh day from the creation, but the day of Christ's resurrection, and the seventh from that: both of them at several times being comprehended in the fourth commandment."<sup>6</sup>

He means to say that the fourth commandment enforces the seventh day from the creation to the resurrection of Christ, and since that enforces a different seventh day, namely, the seventh from Christ's resurrection. Such is the perverse ingenuity by which men can evade the law of God and yet make it appear that they are faithfully observing it.

Such was the origin of the seventh-part-of-time theory, by which the seventh day is dropped out of the fourth commandment, and one day in seven slipped into its place; a doctrine most opportunely framed at the very period when nothing else could save the venerable day of the sun. With the aid of this theory, the Sunday of "Pope and Pagan" was able coolly to wrap itself in the fourth commandment, and then in the character of a divine institution, to challenge obedience from all Bible Christians. It could now cast away the other frauds on which its very existence had depended, and support its authority by this one alone. In the time of Constantine it ascended the throne of the Roman Empire, and during the whole period of the Dark Ages it maintained its supremacy from the chair of St. Peter; but now it had ascended the throne of the Most High. And thus a day which God "commanded not nor spake it, neither came it into" his "mind," was enjoined upon mankind with all the authority of his holy law. The immediate effect of Dr. Bound's work upon the existing controversy is thus described by an Episcopalian eye-witness, Dr. Heylyn:

"For by inculcating to the people these new Sabbath speculations [concerning Sunday], teaching that that day only 'was of God's appointment, and all the rest observed in the church of England, a remnant of the will-worship in the church of Rome;' the other holy days in this church established, were so shrewdly shaken that till this day they are not well recovered of the blow them given. Nor came this on the by or besides their purpose, but as a thing that specially was intended from the first beginning."<sup>7</sup>

In a former chapter, we called attention to the fact that Sunday can be maintained as a divine institution only by adopting the rule of faith acknowledged in the church of Rome, which is, the Bible with the traditions of the church added thereto. We have seen that in the sixteenth century the Presbyterians of England were brought to decide between giving up Sunday as a church festival and maintaining it as a divine institution by the Bible. They chose the latter course. Yet while apparently avoiding the charge of observing a Catholic festival, by claiming to prove the Sunday institution out of the Bible, the utterly unsatisfactory nature of the several inferences adduced from the Scriptures in support of that day, compelled them to resort to the traditions of the church, and to add these to their so-called biblical evidences in its behalf. It would be no worse to keep Sunday while frankly acknowledging it to be a festival of the Catholic church, not commanded in the Bible, than it is to profess that you observe it as a biblical institution, and then prove it to be such by adopting the rule of faith of the Romanists. Joaunes Peronne, an eminent Italian Catholic theologian, in an important doctrinal work, entitled, "Theological Lessons," makes a very impressive statement respecting the acknowledgment of tradition by Protestant Sunday-keepers. In his chapter "Concerning the Necessity and Existence of Tradition," he lays down the proposition that it is necessary to admit doctrines which we can prove only from tradition, and cannot sustain from the Holy Scriptures. Then he says:

"It is not possible, indeed, if traditions of such character are rejected, that several doctrines, which the Protestants held with us since they withdrew from the Catholic church, could, in any possible manner, be established. The fact is placed beyond a venture of a doubt, for they themselves hold with us the validity of baptism administered by heretics or infidels, the validity also of infant baptism, the true form of baptism [sprinkling]; they held, too, that the law of abstaining from blood and anything strangled is not in force; also concerning the substitution of the Lord's day for the Sabbath; besides those things which I have mentioned before, and not a few others."<sup>8</sup>

Dr. Bound's theory of the seventh part of time has found general acceptance in all those churches which sprung from the church of Rome. Most forcibly did old Cotton Mather observe:

"The reforming churches, flying from Rome, carried, some of them more, some of them less, all of them something, of Rome with them."<sup>9</sup>

One sacred treasure which they all drew from the venerable mother of harlots is the ancient festival of the sun. She had crushed out of her communion the Sabbath of the lord, and having adopted the venerable day of the sun, had transformed it into the Lord's day of the Christian church. The reformed, flying from her communion, and carrying with them this ancient festival, now found themselves able to justify its observance as being indeed the veritable Sabbath of the Lord! As the seamless coat of Jesus, the Lord of the Sabbath, was torn from him before he was nailed to the cross, so has the fourth commandment been torn from the rest-day of the lord, around which it was placed by the great Law-giver, and given to this papal Lord's day; and this Barabbas the robber, thus arrayed in the stolen fourth commandment, has from that time to the present day, and with astonishing success, challenged the obedience of the world as the divinely appointed Sabbath of the most high God. Here we close the history of the Sunday festival, now fully transformed into the Christian Sabbath. A rapid survey of the history of English and American Sabbath-keepers will conclude this work.

---

1 Hengstenberg's Lord's Day, p. 66.

2 Coleman's Ancient Christianity Exemplified, chap. xxvi. sect. 2; Heylyn's Hist. Sab. part ii. chap. viii. sect. 7; Neal's Hist. Puritans, part. i. chap. viii.

3 Sabbathum Veteris et Novi Testamenti; or, the True Doctrine of the Sabbath, by Nicholas Bound, D. D., sec. ed. London, 1606, p. 51.

4 Id. p. 66.

5 True Doc. of the Sab. p. 71.

6 Id. p. 72.

7 Hist. Sab. Part ii. Chap. viii. sect. 8.

8 Praelectiones Theologicae, vol. i. part ii. sect. 2, cap. i. p. 194. Propositio. Praeter sacram Scripturam admitti necessario debent Traditiones divinae dogmaticae ab illa prorsus distincte." "Non posse praeterea, rejectis ejusmodi traditionibus, plura dogmata, quae nobiscum retinuerunt protestantes cum ab Ecclesia catholica recesserunt, ullo modo adstruis, res est citra comnis dubitationis aleam posita. Etenim ipsi nobiscum retinuerunt valorem baptismi ab haereticis aut intidelibus administrati, valorem item paedobaptismi, germanam baptismi formam, cessationem legis de abstinence a sanguine et suffocato, de die dominico Sabbatis suffecto, praeter ea quae superius commemoravimus aliaque haud pauca."

9 Backus Hist. of the Baptists in New England, p. 63, ed. 1777.

CHAPTER 26

ENGLISH SABBATH-KEEPERS

---

English Sabbatarians in the sixteenth century - Their doctrines - John Trask for these doctrines pilloried, whipt, and imprisoned - He recants - Character of Mrs. Trask - Her crime - Her indomitable courage - She suffers fifteen year's imprisonment, and dies in the prison - Principles of the Traskites - Brabourne writes in behalf of the seventh day - Appeals to King Charles I. to restore the ancient Sabbath - The king employs Dr. White to write against Brabourne, and Dr. Heylyn to write the History of the Sabbath - The king intimidates Brabourne and he recants - He returns again to the Sabbath - Philip Tandy - James Ockford writes "The Doctrine of the Fourth Commandment" - His book burned - Edward Stennett - Wm. Sellers - Cruel Treatment of Francis Bampfield - Thomas Bampfield - Martyrdom of John James - How the Sabbath cause was prostrated in England.

---

Chambers speaks thus of Sabbath-keepers in the sixteenth century:

"In the reign of Elizabeth, it occurred to many conscientious and independent thinkers (as it had previously done to some Protestants in Bohemia), that the fourth commandment required of them the observance, not of the first, but of the specified seventh day of the week, and a strict bodily rest, as a service then due to God; while others, though convinced that the day had been altered by divine authority, took up the same opinion as to the scriptural obligation to refrain from work. The former class became numerous enough to make a considerable figure for more than a century in England, under the title of 'Sabbatarians' - a word now exchanged for the less ambiguous appellation of 'Seventh-day Baptists.' "<sup>1</sup>

Gilfillan quotes an English writer of the year 1584, John Stockwood, who says that there were then

"A great diversity of opinion among the vulgar people and simple sort, concerning the Sabbath day, and the right use of the same."

And Gilfillan states one of the grounds of controversy thus:

"Some maintaining the unchanged and unchangeable obligation of the seventh-day Sabbath."<sup>2</sup>

In 1607, an English first-day writer, John Sprint, gave the views of the Sabbath-keepers of that time, which in truth have been substantially the same in all ages:

"They allege reasons drawn, 1. From the precedence of the Sabbath before the law, and before the fall; the laws of which nature are immutable. 2. From the perpetuity of the moral law. 3. And from the large extent thereof appertaining to [the Sabbath above] all [the other precepts]. 4. . . . And of the cause of [this precept of] the law which maketh it perpetual, which is the memorial and meditation of the works of God; which belong unto the Christians as well as to the Jews."<sup>3</sup>

John Trask began to speak and write in favor of the seventh day as the Sabbath of the Lord, about the time that King James I., and the archbishop of Canterbury, published the famous "Book of Sports for Sunday," in 1618. His field of labor was London, and being a very zealous man, he was soon called to account by the persecuting authority of the church of England. He took high ground as to the sufficiency of the Scriptures to direct in all religious services, and that the civil authorities ought not to constrain men's consciences in matters of religion. He was brought before the infamous Star Chamber, where a long discussion was held respecting the Sabbath. It was on this occasion that Bishop Andrews first brought forward that now famous first-day argument, that the early martyrs were tested by the question, "Hast thou kept the Lord's day?"<sup>4</sup>

Gilfillan, quoting the words of contemporary writers, says of Trask's trial that,

"For 'making of conventicles and factions, by that means which may tend to sedition and commotion, and for scandalizing the king, the bishops, and the clergy,' 'he was censured in the Star Chamber to be set upon the pillory at Westminster, and from thence to be whipt to the fleet, there to remain a prisoner.' "<sup>5</sup>

This cruel sentence was carried into execution, and finally broke his spirit. After enduring the misery of his prison for one year, he recanted his doctrine.<sup>6</sup> The case of his wife is worthy of particular mention. Pagitt gives her character thus:

"She was a woman endued with many particular virtues, well worthy the imitation of all good Christians, had not error in other things, especially a spirit of strange unparalleled opinionativeness and obstinacy in her private conceits, spoiled her."<sup>7</sup>

Pagitt says that she was a school teacher of superior excellence. She was particularly careful in her dealings with the poor. He gives her reasons thus:

"This she professed to do out of conscience, as believing she must one day come to be judged for all things done in the flesh. Therefore she resolved to go by the safest rule, rather against than for her private interests."<sup>8</sup>

Pagitt gives her crime in the following words:

"At last for teaching only five days in the week, and resting upon Saturday, it being known upon what account she did it, she was carried to the new prison in Maiden lane, a place then appointed for the restraint of several other persons of different opinions from the church of England."<sup>9</sup>

Observe the crime: it was not what she did, for a first-day person might have done the same, but because she did it to obey the fourth commandment. Her motive exposed her to the vengeance of the authorities. She was a woman of indomitable courage, and would not purchase her liberty by renouncing the Lord's Sabbath. During her long imprisonment, Pagitt says that some one wrote her thus:

"Your constant suffering would be praiseworthy, were it for truth; but being for error, your recantation will be both more acceptable to God, and laudable before men."<sup>10</sup>

But her faith and patience held out till she was released by death.

"Mrs. Trask lay fifteen or sixteen years a prisoner for her opinion about the Saturday Sabbath; in all which time she would receive no relief from anybody, notwithstanding she wanted much: alleging that it was written, 'It is more blessed . . . to give than to receive.' Neither would she borrow, because it was written, 'Thou shalt lend to many nations, and shall not borrow.' So she deemed it a dishonor to her head, Christ, either to beg or borrow. Her diet for the most part during her imprisonment, that is, till a little before her death, was bread and water, roots and herbs; no flesh, nor wine, nor brewed drink. All her means was an annuity of forty shillings a year; what she lacked more to live upon she had of such prisoners as did employ her sometimes to do business for them."<sup>11</sup>

Pagitt, who was the contemporary of Trask, thus states the principles of the Sabbatarians of that time, whom he calls Traskites:

"The positions concerning the Sabbath by them maintained were these:

"1. That the fourth commandment of the Decalogue, 'Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy' [Ex. 20], is a divine precept, simply and entirely moral, containing nothing legally ceremonial in whole or in part, and therefore the weekly observation thereof ought to be perpetual, and to continue in force and virtue to the world's end.

"2. That the Saturday, or seventh day in every week, ought to be an everlasting holy day in the Christian church, and the religious observation of this day obligeth Christians under the gospel, as it did the Jews before the coming of Christ.

3. That the Sunday, or Lord's day, is an ordinary working day, and it is superstition and will-worship to make the same the Sabbath of the fourth commandment."<sup>12</sup>

It was for this noble confession of faith that Mrs. Trask was shut up in prison till the day of her death. For the same, Mr. Trask was compelled to stand in the pillory, and was whipped from thence to the fleet, and then shut up in a wretched prison, from which he escaped by recantation after enduring the miseries of more than a year.<sup>13</sup>

Mr. Utter mentions the next Sabbatarian minister as follows:

"Theophilus Brabourne, a learned minister of the gospel in the established church, wrote a book, which was printed at London in 1628, wherein he argued 'that the Lord's day is not the Sabbath day by divine institution,' but 'that the seventh-day Sabbath is now in force.' Mr. Brabourne published another book in 1632, entitled, 'A Defense of that most Ancient and Sacred Ordinance of God's, the Sabbath Day.'"<sup>14</sup>

Brabourne dedicated his book to King Charles I., requesting him to use his royal authority for the restoration of the ancient Sabbath. But those who put their trust in princes are sure to be disappointed. Dr. F. White, bishop of Ely, thus states the occasion of his own work against the Sabbath:

"Now because this Brabourne's treatise of the Sabbath was dedicated to his Royal Majesty, and the principles upon which he grounded all his arguments (being commonly preached, printed, and believed throughout the kingdom), might have poisoned and infected many people either with this Sabbatarian error, or with some other of like quality; it was the king, our gracious master, his will and pleasure, that a treatise should be set forth, to prevent further mischief, and to settle his good subjects (who have long time been distracted about Sabbatarian questions) in the old and good way of the ancient and orthodoxal Catholic church. Now that which his sacred Majesty commanded, I have by your Grace's direction [Archbishop Laud] obediently performed."<sup>15</sup>

The king not only wished by this appointment to overthrow those who kept the day enjoined in the commandment, but also those who by means of Dr. Bound's new theory pretended that Sunday was that day. He therefore joined Dr. Heylyn with Bishop White in this work:

"Which burden being held of too great weight for any one to undergo, and the necessity of the work requiring a quick dispatch, it was held fit to divide the employment betwixt two. The argumentative and scholastical part was referred to the right learned Dr. White, then bishop of Ely, who had given good proof of his ability in polemical matters in several books and disputations against the papists. The practical and historical [was to be written], by Heylyn of Westminster, who had gained some reputation for his studies in the ancient writers."<sup>16</sup>

The works of White and Heylyn were published simultaneously in 1635. Dr. White, in addressing himself to those who enforce Sunday observance by the fourth commandment, speaks thus of Brabourne's arguments, that not Sunday, but the ancient seventh day, is there enjoined:

"Maintaining your own principles that the fourth commandment is purely and simply moral and of the law of nature, it will be impossible for you either in English or in Latin, to solve Theophilus Brabourne's objections."<sup>17</sup>

But the king had something besides argument for Brabourne. He was brought before Archbishop Laud and the court of High Commission, and, moved by the fate of Mrs. Trask, he submitted for the time to the authority of the church of England, but sometime afterward wrote other books in behalf of the seventh day.<sup>18</sup> Dr. White's book has this pithy notice of the indefinite-time theory:

"Because an indefinite time must either bind to all moments of time, as a debt, when the day of payment is not expressly dated, is liable to payment every moment; or else it binds to no time at all."<sup>19</sup>

Mr. Utter, after the statement of Brabourne's case, continues thus:

"About this time Philip Tandy began to promulgate in the northern part of England the same doctrine concerning the Sabbath. He was educated in the established church, of which he became a minister. Having changed his views respecting the mode of baptism and the day of the Sabbath, he abandoned that church and 'became a mark for many shots.' He held several public disputes about his peculiar sentiments, and did much to propagate them. James Ockford was another early advocate in England of the claims of the seventh day as the Sabbath. He appears to have been well acquainted with the discussions in which Trask and Brabourne had been engaged. Being dissatisfied with the pretended conviction of Brabourne, he wrote a book in defense of Sabbatarian views, entitled, 'The Doctrine of the Fourth Commandment.' This book, published about the year 1642, was burnt by order of the authorities in the established church."<sup>20</sup>

The famous Stennett family furnished, for four generations, a succession of able Sabbatarian ministers. Mr. Edward Stennett, the first of these, was born about the beginning of the seventeenth century. His work entitled, "The Royal Law Contended For," was first published at London in 1658. "He was an able and devoted minister, but dissenting from the established church, he was deprived of the means of support." "He suffered much of the persecution which the Dissenters were exposed to at that time, and more especially for his faithful adherence to the cause of the Sabbath. For this truth he experienced tribulation, not only from those in power, by whom he was kept a long time in prison, but also much distress from unfriendly, dissenting brethren, who strove to destroy his influence, and ruin his cause." In 1664, he published a work entitled, "The Seventh Day is the Sabbath of the Lord."<sup>21</sup> In 1671, Wm. Sellers wrote a work in behalf of the seventh day in reply to Dr. Owen. Cox states its object thus:

"In opposition to the opinion that some one day in seven is all that the fourth commandment requires to be set apart, the writer maintains the obligation of the Saturday Sabbath on the ground that 'God himself directly in the letter of the text calls the seventh day the Sabbath day, giving both the names to one and the self-same day, as all men know that ever read the commandments.' "<sup>22</sup>

One of the most eminent Sabbatarian ministers of the last half of the seventeenth century was Francis Bampfield. He was originally a clergyman of the Church of England. The Baptist historian, Crosby, speaks of him thus:

"But being utterly unsatisfied in his conscience with the conditions of conformity, he took his leave of his sorrowful and weeping congregation in . . . 1662, and was quickly after imprisoned for worshiping God in his own family. So soon was his unshaken loyalty to the king forgotten, . . . that he was more frequently imprisoned and exposed to greater hardships for his nonconformity, than most other dissenters."<sup>23</sup>

Of his imprisonment, Neale says:

"After the act of uniformity, he continued preaching as he had opportunity in private, till he was imprisoned for five days and nights, with twenty-five of his hearers in one room . . . where they spent their time in religious exercises, but after some time he was released. Soon after, he was apprehended again and lay nine years in Dorchester jail, though he was a person of unshaken loyalty to the king."<sup>24</sup>

During his imprisonment, he preached almost every day, and gathered a church even under his confinement. And when he was at liberty, he ceased not to preach in the name of Jesus. After his release, he went to London, where he preached with much success.<sup>25</sup> Neale says of his labors in that city:

"When he resided in London he formed a church on the principles of the Sabbatarian Baptist, at Pinner's hall, of which principles he was a zealous asserter. He was a celebrated preacher, and a man of serious piety."<sup>26</sup>

On Feb. 17, 1682, he was arrested while preaching, and on March 28, was sentenced to forfeit all his goods and to be imprisoned in Newgate for life. In consequence of the hardships which he suffered in that prison, he died, Feb. 16, 1683.<sup>27</sup> "Bampfield," says Wood, "dying in the said prison of Newgate . . . aged seventy years, his body was . . . followed with a very great company of factious and schismatical people to his grave."<sup>28</sup> Crosby says of him:

"All that knew him will acknowledge that he was a man of great piety. And he would in all probability have preserved the same character, with respect to his learning and judgment, had it not been for his opinion in two points, viz., that infants ought not to be baptized, and that the Jewish Sabbath ought still to be kept."<sup>29</sup>

Mr. Bampfield published two works in behalf of the seventh day as the Sabbath, one in 1672, the other in 1677. In the first of these he thus sets forth the doctrine of the Sabbath:

"The law of the seventh-day Sabbath was given before the law was proclaimed at Sinai, even from the creation, given to Adam, . . . and in him to all the world.<sup>30</sup> . . . The Lord Christ's obedience unto this fourth word in observing in his lifetime the seventh day as a weekly Sabbath day, . . . and no other day of the week as such, is a part of that perfect righteousness which every sound believer doth apply to himself in order to his being justified in the sight of God; and every such person is to conform unto Christ in all the acts of his obedience to the ten words."<sup>31</sup>

His brother, Mr. Thomas Bampfield, who had been speaker in one of Cromwell's parliaments, wrote also in behalf of seventh-day observance, and was imprisoned for his religious principles in Ilchester jail.<sup>32</sup> About the time of Mr. Bampfield's first imprisonment, severe persecution arose against the Sabbath-keepers in London. Crosby thus bears testimony:

"It was about this time [A.D. 1661], that a congregation of Baptists holding the seventh day as a Sabbath, being assembled at their meeting-house in Bull-stake alley, the doors being open, about three o'clock P.M. [Oct. 19], whilst Mr. John James was preaching, one Justice Chard, with Mr. Wood, an headborough, came into the meeting-place. Wood commanded him in the king's name to be silent and come down, having spoken treason against the king. But Mr. James, taking little or no notice thereof, proceeded in his work. The headborough came nearer to him in the middle of the meeting-place and commanded him again in the king's name to come down or else he would pull him down; whereupon the disturbance grew so great that he could not proceed."<sup>33</sup>

The officer having pulled him down from the pulpit, led him away to the court under a strong guard. Mr. Utter continues this narrative as follows:

"Mr. James was himself examined and committed to Newgate, on the testimony of several profligate witnesses, who accused him of speaking treasonable words against the king. His trial took place about a month afterward, at which he conducted himself in such a manner as to create much sympathy. He was, however, sentenced to be hanged, drawn and quartered.<sup>34</sup> This awful sentence did not dismay him in the least. He calmly said, 'Blessed be God; whom man condemneth, God justifieth.' While he lay in prison, under sentence of death, many persons of distinction visited him, who were greatly affected by his piety and resignation, and offered to exert themselves to secure his pardon. But he seems to have had little hope of their success. Mrs. James, by advice of her friends, twice presented petitions to the king [Charles II.], setting forth the innocence of her husband, the character of the witnesses against him, and entreating His Majesty to grant a pardon. In both instances she was repulsed with scoffs and ridicule. At the scaffold, on the day of his execution, Mr. James addressed the assembly in a very noble and affecting manner. Having finished his address, and kneeling down, he thanked God for covenant mercies, and for conscious innocence; he prayed for the witnesses against him, for the executioner, for the people of God, for the removal of divisions, for the coming of Christ, for the spectators, and for himself, that he might enjoy a sense of God's favor and presence, and an entrance into glory. When he had ended, the executioner said, 'The Lord receive your soul;' to which Mr. James replied, 'I thank thee.' A friend observing to him, 'This is a happy day,' he answered, 'I bless God it is.' Then having thanked the sheriff for his courtesy, he said, 'Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit.' . . . After he was dead his heart was taken out and burned, his quarters were affixed to the gates of the city, and his head was set up in White chapel on a pole opposite to the alley in which his meeting-house stood."<sup>35</sup>

Such was the experience of English Sabbath-keepers in the seventeenth century. It cost something to obey the fourth commandment in such times as those. The laws of England during that century were very oppressive to all Dissenters, and bore exceedingly hard upon the Sabbath-keepers. But God raised up able men, eminent for piety, to defend his truth during those troublous times, and, if need be, to seal their testimony with their blood. In the seventeenth century, eleven churches of Sabbatarians flourished in England, while many scattered Sabbath-keepers were to be found in various parts of that kingdom. Now, but three of these churches are in existence! And only remnants, even of these, remain!

To what cause shall we assign this painful fact? It is not because their adversaries were able to confute their doctrine; for the controversial works on both sides still remain, and speak for themselves. It is not that they lacked men of piety and of learning; for God gave them these, especially in the seventeenth century. Nor is it that fanaticism sprang up and disgraced the cause; for there is no record of anything of this kind. They were cruelly persecuted, but the period of their persecution was that of their greatest prosperity. Like Moses' bush, they stood unconsumed in the burning fire. The prostration of the Sabbath cause in England is due to none of these things.

The Sabbath was wounded in the house of its own friends. They took upon themselves the responsibility, after a time, of making the Sabbath of no practical importance, and of treating its violation as no very serious transgression of the law of God. Doubtless they hoped to win men to Christ and his truth by this course; but, instead of this, they simply lowered the standard of divine truth into the dust. The Sabbath-keeping ministers assumed the pastoral care of first-day churches, in some cases as their sole charge, in others, they did this in connection with the oversight of Sabbatarian churches. The result need surprise no one; as these Sabbath-keeping ministers and churches said to all men, in thus acting, that the fourth commandment might be broken with impunity, the people took them at their word. Mr. Crosby, a first-day historian, sets this matter in a clear light:

"If the seventh day ought to be observed as the Christian Sabbath, then all congregations that observe the first day as such must be Sabbath-breakers. . . . I must leave those gentlemen on the contrary side to their own sentiments; and to vindicate the practice of becoming pastors to a people whom in their conscience they must believe to be breakers of the Sabbath."<sup>36</sup>

Doubtless there have been noble exceptions to this course; but the body of English Sabbatarians for many years have failed to faithfully discharge the high trust committed to them.

---

1 Chambers' Cyclopedia, article, Sabbath, vol. viii. p. 402, London, 1867.

2 Gilfillan's Sabbath, p. 60.

3 Observation of the Christian Sabbath, p. 2.

4 See the fifteenth chapter of this work.

5 Gilfillan's Sabbath, p. 88.

6 Id.Ib.

7 Pagitt's Heresiography, p. 209, London, 1661.

8 Pagitt's Heresiography, p. 209.

9 Id. p. 210.

10 Id. p. 164.

11 Pagitt's Heresiography, pp. 196, 197.

12 Id. p. 161.

13 Manual of the Seventh-day Baptists, pp. 17, 18; Heylyn's Hist. of the Sab. part ii. chap. viii. sect. 10; Gilfillan's Sabbath, pp. 88, 89; Cox's Sabbath Literature, vol. i. pp. 152, 153.

14 Manual of the S.D. Baptists, p. 18.

15 Dr. Francis White's Treatise of the Sabbath Day, quoted in Cox's Sab. Lit. vol. i. p. 167.

16 Heylyn's Cyprianus Anglicus, quoted in Cox, vol. i. p. 173.

17 Treatise of the Sabbath Day, p. 110.

18 Hessey's Bampton Lectures, pp. 373, 374; Cox's Sab. Lit. vol. ii. p. 6; A.H. Lewis's Sabbath and Sunday, pp. 197-184. This work contains much valuable information respecting English and American Sabbatarians.

19 Treatise of the Sabbath Day, p. 73.

20 Manual of the S.D. Baptists, pp. 19, 20.

21 Cox, vol. i. p. 268; vol. ii. p. 10.

22 Id. vol. ii. p. 35.

23 Hist. English Baptists, vol. i. pp. 365, 366.

24 Hist. Puritans, part 2. chap. x.

25 Crosby's Hist. Eng. Baptists, vol. i. pp. 366, 367.

26 Hist. Puritans, part 2, chap. x.

27 Calamy's Ejected Ministers, vol. ii. pp. 258, 259; Lewis' Sabbath and Sunday, pp. 188-193.

28 Wood's Athenae Oxonienses, vol. iv. p. 123.

29 Crosby, vol. i. p. 367.

30 Ex.16:23; Gen.2:3.

31 Judgment for the Observation of the Jewish or Seventh-day Sabbath, pp. 6-8, 1672.

32 Calamy, vol. 2, p. 260.

33 Crosby, vol. 2. pp. 165-171.

34 When asked what he had to say why sentence should not be pronounced, he said he would leave with them these scriptures: Jer.26:14,15; Ps.116:15.

35 Manual, &c. pp. 21-23.

36 Crosby's Hist. Eng. Bapt. vol. iii. pp. 138, 139.

---

CHAPTER 27

THE SABBATH IN AMERICA

---

The first Sabbath-keeping church in America - Names of its members - Origin of the second - Organization of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference - Statistics of the Denomination at that time - Nature of its organization - Present Statistics - Educational facilities - Missionary work - The American Sabbath Tract Society - Responsibility for the light of the Sabbath - The German S.D. Baptists of Pennsylvania - Reference to Sabbath-keepers in Hungary - In Siberia - The Seventh-day Adventists - Their origin - Labors of Joseph Bates - Of James White - The Publishing Association - Systematic Benevolence - The work of the preachers mainly in new fields - Organization of the S.D. Adventists - Statistics - Peculiarities of their faith - Their object - The S.D. Adventists of Switzerland - Why the Sabbath is of priceless value to mankind - The nations of the saved observe the Sabbath in the new earth.

---

The first Sabbatarian church in America originated at Newport, R.I. The first Sabbath-keeper in America was Stephen Mumford, who left London three years after the martyrdom of John James, and forty-four years after the landing of the pilgrim fathers at Plymouth. Mr. Mumford, it appears, came as a missionary from the English Sabbath-keepers.<sup>1</sup> Mr. Isaac Backus, the historian of the early New England Baptists, makes the following record:

"Stephen Mumford came over from London in 1664, and brought the opinion with him that the whole of the ten commandments, as they were delivered from Mount Sinai, were moral and immutable; and that it was the Antichristian power which thought to change times and laws, that changed the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. Several members of the first church in Newport embraced this sentiment, and yet continued with the church for some years, until two men and their wives who had so done, turned back to the keeping of the first day again."<sup>2</sup>

Mr. Mumford, on his arrival, went earnestly to work to convert men to the observance of the fourth commandment, as we infer from the following record:

"Stephen Mumford, the first Sabbath-keeper in America, came from London in 1664. Tacy Hubbard commenced keeping the Sabbath, March 11, 1665. Samuel Hubbard commenced April 1, 1665. Rachel Langworthy, January 15, 1666. Roger Baxter, April 15, 1666, and William Hiscox, April 28, 1666. These were the first Sabbath-keepers in America. a controversy, lasting several years, sprung up between them and members of the church. They desired to retain their connection with the church, but were, at last, compelled to withdraw, that they might peaceably enjoy and keep God's holy day."<sup>3</sup> [Baxter is Baster in the S.D.B. Memorial.]

Though Mr. Mumford faithfully taught the truth, he seems to have cherished the ideas of the English Sabbatarians, that it was possible for first-day and seventh-day observers to walk together in church fellowship. Had the first-day people been of the same mind, the light of the Sabbath would have been extinguished within a few years, as the history of English Sabbath-keepers clearly proves. But, in the providence of God, the danger was averted by the opposition which these commandment-keepers had to encounter.

Besides the persons above enumerated, four others embraced the Sabbath in 1666, but in 1668 they renounced it. These four were also members of the first-day Baptist church of Newport. Though the Sabbath-keepers who retained their integrity thought that they might lawfully commune with the members of the church who were fully persuaded to observe the first day, yet they felt otherwise with respect to these who had clearly seen the Sabbath, and had for a time observed it, and then apostatized from it. These persons "both wrote and spoke against it, which so grieved them that they could not sit down at the table of the Lord with them, nor with the church because of them." But as they were members of a first-day church, and had "no power to deal with them as of themselves without the help of the church," they "found themselves barred as to proceeding with them, as being but private brethren. So they concluded not to bring the case to the church to judge of the fact, viz., in turning from the observation of the seventh day, being contrary-minded as to that." They therefore sent to the London Sabbath-keepers for advice, and in the mean time refrained from communing with the church.

Dr. Edward Stennet wrote them in behalf of the London Sabbath-keepers: "If the church will hold communion with these apostates from the truth, you ought then to desire to be fairly dismissed from the church; which if the church refuse, you ought to withdraw yourselves."<sup>4</sup> They decided, however, not to leave the church. But they told "the church publicly that they could not have comfortable communion with those four persons that had sinned." "And thus for several months they walked with little or no offense from the church; after which the leading or ministering brethren began to declare themselves concerning the ten precepts." Mr. Tory "declared the law to be done away." Mr. Luker and Mr. Clarke "made it their work to preach the non-observation of the law, day after day." But the Sabbath-keepers replied "that the ten precepts were still as holy, just, good, and spiritual, as ever." Mr. Tory "with some unpleasant words said 'that their tune was only the fourth precept,' to which they answered, 'that the whole ten precepts were of equal force with them, and that they did not plead for one without the other.' And they for several years, went on with the church in a halvish kind of fellowship."<sup>5</sup>

Mr. Bailey thus states the result:

"At the time of their change of sentiment and practice, [respecting the Bible Sabbath], they had no intention of establishing a church with this distinctive feature. God, evidently, had a different mission for them, and brought them to it, through the severe trial of persecution. They were forced to leave the fellowship of the Baptist church, or abandon the Sabbath of the Lord their God."<sup>6</sup>

"These left the Baptist church on December 7, 1671."<sup>7</sup>

"On the 23d of December, just sixteen days after withdrawing from the Baptist church, they covenanted together in a church organization."<sup>8</sup>

Such was the origin of the first Sabbath-keeping church in America.<sup>9</sup> The second of these churches owes its origin to this circumstance: About the year 1700, Edmund Dunham of Piscataway, N.J., reproved a person for labor on Sunday. He was asked for his authority from the Scriptures. On searching for this, he became satisfied that the seventh day is the only weekly Sabbath in the Bible, and began to observe it.

"Soon after, others followed his example, and in 1707 a Seventh-day Baptist church was organized, with seventeen members. Edmund Dunham was chosen pastor and sent to Rhode Island to receive ordination."<sup>10</sup>

The S.D. Baptist General Conference was organized in 1802. At its first annual session, it included in its organization eight churches, nine ordained ministers, and 1130 members.<sup>11</sup> The Conference was organized with only advisory powers, the individual churches retaining the matters of discipline and church government in their own hands.<sup>12</sup> The Conference now embraces some eighty churches, and about 8000 members. These churches are found in most of the northern and western States, and are divided into five associations, which, however, have no legislative nor disciplinary power over the churches which compose them. There are, belonging to the denomination, five academies, one college, "and a university with academic, collegiate, mechanical, and theological departments in operation."<sup>13</sup> The S.D. Baptist missionary society sustains several home missionaries who labor principally on the western and southern borders of the denomination. They have within a few years past met with a good degree of success in this work. It has also a missionary station at Shanghai, China, and a small church there of faithful Christians.

The American Sabbath Tract Society is the publishing agency of the denomination. Its headquarters are at Alfred Center, N.Y. It publishes the Sabbath Recorder, the organ of the S.D. Baptists, and it also publishes a series of valuable works relating to the Sabbath and the law of God.

During the two hundred years which have elapsed since the organization of the first Sabbatarian church in America, God has raised up among this people men of eminent talent and moral worth. He has also in providential ways called attention to the sacred trust which he so long since confided to the S.D. Baptists, and which they have been slow to realize in its immense importance.

Among those converted to the Sabbath through the agency of this people, the name of J.W. Morton is particularly worthy of honorable mention. He was sent in 1847 a missionary to the island of Haiti by the Reformed Presbyterians. Here he came in contact with Sabbatarian publications, and after a serious examination became satisfied that the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord. As an honest man, what he saw to be truth he immediately obeyed, and returning home to be tried for his heresy, was summarily expelled from the Reformed Presbyterian church without being suffered to state the reasons which had governed his conduct. He has given to the world a valuable work, entitled, "Vindication of the True Sabbath," in which his experience is related, and his reasons for observing the seventh day set forth with great force and clearness.

The S.D. Baptists do not lack men of education and of talent, and they have ample means in their possession with which to sustain the cause of God. If in time past they have not fully realized that they were debtors to all mankind because of the great truth which God committed to their trust, there is reason to believe that they are now to some extent awakening to this vast indebtedness.<sup>14</sup>

There is also in the State of Pennsylvania a small body of German S.D. Baptist found in the counties of Lancaster, York, Franklin, and Bedford, and in the central and western parts of the State. They originated in 1728 from the teaching of Conrad Beissel, a native of Germany. They practice trine immersion, and the washing of feet, and observe open communion. They encourage celibacy, but make it obligatory upon none. Even those who have chosen this manner of life are at liberty to marry if at any time they choose so to do. They established and successfully maintained a Sabbath-school at Ephrata, their head-quarters, forty years before Robert Raikes had introduced the system of Sunday-schools. This people have suffered much persecution because of their observance of the seventh day, the laws of Pennsylvania being particularly oppressive toward Sabbatarians.<sup>15</sup> The German S.D. Baptists do not belong to the S.D. Baptist General Conference.

We have already noticed the fact that Sabbath-keepers are numerous in Russia, in Poland, and in Turkey. We find the following statement respecting Sabbath-keepers in Hungary:

"A Congregation of seventh-day Christians in Hungary, being refused tolerance by the laws, has embraced Judaism, in order to be allowed to exist in connection with one of the 'received religions.' "<sup>16</sup>

The probability is that as the laws of the Austrian Empire bear very heavily upon all religious bodies not belonging to some one of the tolerated sects or orders, these "Seventh-day Christians" on "being refused tolerance" in their own name, secured the privilege of observing the seventh day by allowing their doctrine to be classed by the civil authorities under the head of Judaism, and so bringing themselves under the tolerance accorded to the "received religions." We do not say that this was right, even as a technicality, but it is evidently the extent of what they did. There is no reason to believe that they abjured Christ. We also learn that there are Sabbath-keepers in the north of Asia:

"There is a sect of Greek Christians in Siberia who keep the Jewish Sabbath (Saturday). Such sects already exist in the United States, in Germany, and we believe in England."<sup>17</sup>

The Sabbath was first introduced to the attention of the Advent people at Washington, N.H. A faithful Seventh-day Baptist sister, Mrs. Rachel D. Preston, from the State of New York, having removed to this place, brought with her the Sabbath of the Lord. Here she became interested in the doctrine of the glorious advent of the Saviour at hand. Being instructed in this subject by the Advent people, she in turn instructed them in the commandments of God, and as early as 1844, nearly the entire church in that place, consisting of about forty persons, became observers of the Sabbath of the Lord.<sup>18</sup> The oldest body of Sabbath-keepers among the Seventh-day Adventists is therefore at Washington, N.H. Its present number is small, for it has been thinned by emigration and by the ravages of death; but there still remains a small company to bear witness to this ancient truth of the Bible.

From this place, several Advent ministers received the Sabbath truth during the year 1844. One of these was Eld. T.M. Preble, who has the honor of first bringing this great truth before the Adventists through the medium of the press. His essay was dated Feb. 13, 1845. He presented briefly the claims of the Bible Sabbath, and showed that it was not changed by the Saviour, but was changed by the great apostasy. He then said:

"Thus we see Dan. 7:25, fulfilled, the little horn changing 'times and laws.' Therefore it appears to me that all who keep the first day for the Sabbath, are Pope's Sunday-keepers, and God's Sabbath breakers."<sup>19</sup>

Within a few months many persons began to observe the Sabbath as the result of the light thus shed on their pathway. Eld. J.B. Cook, a man of decided talent as a preacher and a writer, was one of these early converts to the Sabbath. Elders Preble and Cook were at this time in full vigor of their mental powers, and were possessed of talent and a reputation for piety, which gave them great influence among the Adventists in behalf of the Sabbath. These men were called in the providence of God to fill an important place in the work of Sabbath reform.

But both of them, while preaching and writing in its behalf, committed the fatal error of making it of no practical importance. They had apparently the same fellowship for those who rejected the Sabbath that they had for those who observed it. Such a course of action produced its natural result. After two or three years of this kind of Sabbath observance, each of these men apostatized from it, and thenceforward used what influence they possessed in warring against the fourth commandment. The larger part of those who embraced the Sabbath from their labors were not sufficiently impressed with its importance to become settled and grounded in its weighty evidences, and, after a brief period, they turned back from its observance. But enough had been done to excite bitter opposition toward the Sabbath on the part of many Adventists, and to bring out the ingenious and plausible arguments by which men attempt to prove that God has abolished his own sacred law.

Such was the fruit of their course, and such the condition of things at the time of their defection. But the result of their plan of action taught the Advent Sabbath-keepers a lesson of value, which they have never forgotten. They learned that the fourth commandment must be treated as a part of the moral law, if men are ever to be led to its sacred observance.

Eld. Preble's first article in behalf of the Sabbath was the means of calling the attention of our venerable brother, Joseph Bates, to this divine institution. He soon became convinced of its obligation, and at once began to observe it. He had acted quite a prominent part in the Advent movement of 1843-4, and now, with self-sacrificing zeal, he took hold of the despised Sabbath truth to set it before this fellow-men. He did not do it in the half-way manner of Elders Preble and Cook, but as a man thoroughly in earnest and fully alive to the importance of his subject.

The subject of the heavenly Sanctuary began about this time to interest many Adventists, and especially Eld. Bates. He was one of the first to see that the central object of that Sanctuary is the ark of God. He also called attention to the proclamation of the third angel relative to God's commandments. He girded on the armor to lay it down only when his work should be accomplished. He has been instrumental in leading many to the observance of the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus, and few who have received the Sabbath from his teaching have apostatized from it.<sup>20</sup>

It was but a few months after Eld. Bates, that our esteemed and efficient brother, Eld. James White, also embraced the Sabbath. He had labored with much success in the great Advent movement, and he now entered heartily into the work of Sabbath reform. Uniting with Eld. Bates in the proclamation of the doctrine of the advent and the Sabbath as connected together in the Sanctuary and the message of the third angel, he has, with the blessing of God, accomplished great results in behalf of the Sabbath.

The publishing interests of the Seventh-day Adventists originated through his instrumentality. He began the work of publishing in 1849, without resources, and with very few friends, but with much toil, self-sacrifice, and anxious care; and with the blessing of God upon his efforts, he has been the means of establishing an efficient office of publication, and of disseminating many important works throughout our country, and, to some extent, to other nations also. The publication of the Advent Review and Herald of the Sabbath, the organ of the Seventh-day Adventists, was commenced by him in 1850. For most of the years of its existence, he has served as one of its editors; and for all its earlier years, he was both publisher and sole editor. During this time, he has also labored with energy as a minister of the gospel of Christ.

The wants of the cause demanding an enlargement of capital and more extensive operations, to this end an Association was incorporated in the city of Battle Creek, Michigan, May 3, 1861, under the name of the Seventh-day Adventist Publishing Association. This Association owns three commodious publishing houses, with engine, power presses, and all the fixtures necessary for doing an extensive business. There are about fifty persons constantly employed in this work of publication. The Association has a capital of about $70,000. Under God, it owes its prosperity to the prudent management and untiring energy of Eld. James White.

The Advent Review has at the present time (Nov., 1873) a circulation of about 5000 copies. The Youth's Instructor, a monthly paper designed for the children of Sabbath-keeping Adventists, began to be issued in 1852, and has now attained a circulation of nearly 5000 copies.

The Advent Tidende, a Danish monthly with a circulation of 800, is published for the benefit of those who speak the Danish and Norwegian tongues, of whom a considerable number have embraced the Sabbath.

The S.D. Adventists have taken a strong interest in the subject of hygiene and the laws of health, and have established a Health Institute at Battle Creek, Mich., which publishes the Health Reformer, a monthly journal, magazine form, having a circulation of nearly 5000 copies.

Numerous publications on Prophecy, the Signs of the Times, the Coming of Christ, the Sabbath, the Law of God, the Sanctuary, &c., &c., have been issued within the past twenty years, and have had an extensive circulation, amounting, in the aggregate, to many millions of pages.

The ordinary financial wants of the cause are sustained by a method of collecting means known as Systematic Benevolence. By this system, it is designed that each friend of the cause shall pay a certain sum weekly proportioned to the property which he possesses. But there is no compulsion in this matter. In this manner the burden is borne by all, so that it rests heavily upon none; and the means needed for the work flows with a steady stream into the treasury of the several churches, and finally into that of the State Conferences. A settlement is instituted each year at the State Conferences, in which the labors, receipts, and expenditures, of each minister are carefully considered. Thus none are allowed to waste means, and none who are recognized as called of God to the ministry are allowed to suffer.

The churches sustain their meetings for the most part without the aid of preaching. They raise means to sustain the servants of Christ, but bid them mainly devote their time and strength to save those who have not the light of these important truths shining upon their pathway. So they go out everywhere preaching the word of God, as his providence guides their feet. During the summer months, the work in new fields is carried forward principally by means of large tents, which enable the preacher to provide a suitable place of worship, wherever he may think it desirable to labor.

The Seventh-day Adventists have thirteen State Conferences, which assemble annually in their respective States. These bear the names of Maine, Vermont, New England, New York and Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri and Kansas, and California. These Conferences are designed to meet the local wants of the cause. There is also a General Conference, which assembles yearly, composed of delegates from the State Conferences. This Conference takes the general oversight of the work in all the State Conferences, supplying the more destitute with laborers as far as possible, and uniting the whole strength of the body for the accomplishment of the work. It also takes the charge of missionary labor in those States which have no organized Conferences.

There are about fifty ministers who devote their whole time to the work of the gospel. There is also a considerable number who preach a portion of the time and devote the remainder to secular labor. There are about 6000 members in the several Conference organizations. But such is the scattered condition of this people (for they are found in all the northern States and in several of the southern), that a very large portion have no connection with its organization. They are to be found in single families scattered all the way from Maine to California and Oregon. The Review and Instructor constitute, in a great number of cases, the only preachers of their faith.

Those subjects which more especially interest this people, are the fulfillment of prophecy, the second personal advent of the Saviour as an event now near at hand, immortality through Christ alone, a change of heart through the operation of the Holy Spirit, the observance of the Sabbath of the fourth commandment, the divinity and mediatorial work of Christ, and the development of a holy character by obedience to the perfect and holy law of God.<sup>21</sup>

They are very strict with regard to the ordinance of baptism, believing not only that it requires men to be buried in the watery grave, but that even such baptism is faulty if administered to those who are breaking one of the ten commandments. They also believe that our Lord's direction in John 13 should be observed in connection with the supper.

They teach that the gifts of the Spirit set forth in 1Cor.12 and Eph.4, were designed to remain in the church till the end of time. They believe that these were lost in consequence of the same apostasy that changed the Sabbath. They also believe that in the final restoration of the commandments by the work of the third angel, the gifts of the Spirit of God are restored with them. So the remnant of the church, or last generation of its members, is said to "keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ."<sup>22</sup> And the angel of God explains this by saying, "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy."<sup>23</sup> The spirit of prophecy therefore has a distant place assigned to it in the final work of Sabbath reform. Such are their views of this portion of Scripture; and their history from the beginning has been marked by the influence of this sacred gift.

In the face of strong opposition, the people known as Seventh-day Adventists have arisen to bear their testimony for the Sabbath of the Lord. They have had perils from open foes, and from false brethren; but they have thus far overcome the difficulties of the way, and from each have gathered strength for the conflict before them. They have a definite work which they hope to accomplish. It is to make ready a people prepared for the advent of the Lord.

Honorable mention should be made of the Seventh-day Adventists of Switzerland. They first learned these precious truths from Elder M.B. Czechowski, who a few years since instructed them in the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus. Since his labors with them ceased, God has given them strength to stand with firmness for his truth, and has added to their numbers. They have a heart to obey the truth and to sacrifice for its advancement. They number about sixty persons. There are a few individuals of this faith also in Italy, Germany, and Denmark.

The observance of the Sabbath is sometimes advocated on the ground that man needs a day of rest and will grow prematurely old if he labor seven days in each week, which is doubtless true; and it has also been advocated on the ground that God will bless in basket and in store those who hallow his Sabbath, which may be true in many cases; but the Bible does not urge motives of this kind in respect to this sacred institution. Without doubt there are great incidental advantages in the observance of the Sabbath. But these are not what God sets before us as the reasons for its observance. The true reason is infinitely higher than all considerations of this kind, and should constrain men to obey, even were it certain that it would cost them all that is dear in the present life.

The Sabbath has been advocated on the ground that it secures to men a day for divine worship in which by common consent they may appear before God. This is a very important consideration, and yet the Bible says little concerning it. It is one of the incidental blessings of the Sabbath, and not the chief reason for its observance. The Sabbath was ordained to commemorate the creation of the heavens and the earth.

The importance of the Sabbath as the memorial of creation is that it keeps ever present the true reason why worship is due to God. For the worship of God is based upon the fact that he is the Creator and that all other beings were created by him. The Sabbath therefore lies at the very foundation of divine worship, for it teaches this great truth in the most impressive manner, and no other institution does this. The true ground of divine worship, not of that on the seventh day merely, but of all worship, is found in the distinction between the Creator and his creatures. This great fact can never become obsolete, and must never be forgotten. To keep it in man's mind, God gave to him the Sabbath. He received it in his innocence, and notwithstanding the perversity of his professed people, God has preserved this sacred institution through the entire period of man's fallen state.

The four and twenty elders in the very act of worshipping Him who sits upon the throne, state the reason why worship is due to God:

"Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created."<sup>24</sup>

This great truth is therefore worthy to be remembered even in the glorified state. And we shall presently learn that what God gave to man in Paradise, to keep this great truth before his mind, shall be honored by him in Paradise restored.

The future is given to us in the prophetic Scriptures. From them we learn our earth is reserved unto fire, and that from its ashes shall spring new heavens and earth, and ages of endless date.<sup>25</sup> Over this glorified inheritance, the second Adam, the Lord of the Sabbath, shall bear rule, and under his gracious protection the nations of them which are saved shall inherit the land forever.<sup>26</sup> When the glory of the Lord shall thus fill the earth as the waters cover the sea, the Sabbath of the Most High is again and for the last time brought to view:

"For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord."<sup>27</sup>

Does not Paul refer to these very facts set forth by Isaiah when he says, "There remaineth therefore a rest [Greek, Sabbatismos, literally "A KEEPING OF THE SABBATH"] to people of God"?<sup>28</sup> The reason for this monthly gathering to the New Jerusalem of all the host of the redeemed from every part of the new earth may be found in the language of the Apocalypse:

"And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits and yielded her fruit every month; and the leaves of the tree were for the healing [literally, the service]<sup>29</sup> of the nations."<sup>30</sup>

The gathering of the nations that are saved to the presence of the Creator, from the whole face of the new earth on each successive Sabbath, even in that holy state, and sets the seal of the Most High to the perpetuity of this ancient institution.

1 "When the London Seventh-day Baptists, in 1664, sent Stephen Mumford to America, and in 1675 sent Eld. William Gibson, they did as much, in proportion to their ability, as had been done by any society for propagating the gospel in foreign parts." - Seventh-day Baptist Memorial, vol. i. p. 43.

2 Ch. Hist. of N. England from 1783 to 1796, chap. xi. sect. 10.

3 Hist. of the S.D. Bapt. Gen. Conf. by Jas. Bailey, pp. 237, 238.

4 Seventh-day Baptist Memorial, vol. i. pp. 27, 28, 29.

5 Records of the First Baptist Church in Newport, quoted in the S.D. Baptist Memorial, vol. i. pp. 28-39.

6 Bailey's Hist. pp. 9, 10.

7 Id. p. 237.

8 Id. p. 238.

9 Manual of the S.D. Baptists, pp. 39, 40; Backus, chap. xi. sect. 10.

10 Hist. S.D. Baptist Gen. Conf. pp. 15, 238.

11 Id. pp. 46-55.

12 Id. pp. 57, 58, 62, 74, 82.

13 Sabbath and Sunday, p. 232.

14 Much interesting matter pertaining to the Seventh-day Baptists of America may be found in Utter's Manual of the S.D. Baptists; Bailey's Hist. of the S.D. Bapt. Gen. Conf.; Lewis's Sabbath and Sunday, and in the S.D.B. Memorial.

15 Rupp's History of all the Religious Denominations in the United States, pp. 109-123, second edition; Bailey's Hist. Gen. Conf. pp. 255-258.

16 New York Independent, March 1869.

17 Semi-Weekly Tribune, May 4, 1869.

18 This sister was born at Vernon, Vt. Her maiden name was Rachel D. Harris. At the age of seventeen, she was converted and soon after joined the Methodist church. After her marriage, she removed with her husband to central New York. There, at the age of twenty-eight, she became an observer of the Bible Sabbath. The Methodist minister, her pastor, did what he could to turn her from the Sabbath, but finally told her she might keep it if she would not leave them. But she was faithful to her convictions of duty and united with the first Seventh-day Baptist church of Verona, Oneida Co., N.Y. Her first husband bore the name of Oaks; her second, that of Preston. She and her daughter, Delight Oaks, were members of the first Verona church at the time of their removal to Washington, N.H. The mother died Feb. 1, 1868; the daughter, several years earlier.

19 Eld. Preble's article appeared in the Hope of Israel of Feb. 28, 1845, published at Portland, Maine. This article was reprinted in the Advent Review of Aug. 23, 1870. The article, as rewritten by Eld. Preble and published in tract form, was also printed in the Review of Dec. 21, 1869.

20 He fell asleep March 19, 1872, in the eightieth year of his age.

21 For a further knowledge of their views, see their weekly paper, the Advent Review and Herald of the Sabbath, published at Battle Creek, Michigan, at $2.00 per year, and the list of publications advertised in its columns.

22 Rev.12:17; 14:12.

23 Rev.19:10.

24 Rev.4:10,11.

25 2Pet.3; Isa.65; Rev.21, 22. Milton thus states this doctrine:

"The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring
New heaven and earth, wherein the just shall dwell,
And after all their tribulation long,
See golden days, fruitful of golden deeds,
With joy and love triumphing, and fair truth."
-Paradise Lost, book iii, lines 234-338.

"So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign;
Under her own weight, groaning; till the day
Appear of respiration to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked, at return
Of Him so lately promised to thy aid,
The woman's seed; obscurely then foretold,
Now ampler known thy Saviour and thy Lord:
Last, in the clouds, from heaven to be revealed
In glory of the Father, to dissolve
Satan with his perverted world; then raise
From the conflagrant mass, purged and refined,
New heaven, new earth, ages of endless date,
Founded in righteousness, and peace, and love;
To bring forth fruits, joy, and eternal bliss."
-Id. book xii, lines 537-551.

26 Dan.7:9,10,13,14, 17-27; Ps.2:7-9; 37:9-11, 18-22, 34; Mal.4:1-3.

27 Isa.66:22,23.

28 Heb.4:9. The margin renders it "a keeping of a Sabbath." Liddell and Scott define Sabbatismos "a keeping of the Sabbath." They give no other definition, but derive it from the verb Sabbatizo, which they define by these words only, "to keep the Sabbath." Schrevelius defines Sabbatismos by this one phrase: "Observance of the Sabbath." He also derives it from Sabbatizo. Sabbatismos is therefore the noun in Greek which signifies the act of Sabbath-keeping, while Sabbatizo, from which it is derived, is the verb which expresses the act.

29 See the Lexicons of Liddell and Scott, Schrevelius, and Greenfield.

30 Rev.22:1,2.

---

WHAT I SAW IN ROME

BY JOHN F. COLTHEART – 1958

CONTENTS

- 1. The Centre of the World
- 2. The Colosseum
- 3. Rome in History and Prophecy
- 4. The "Wonders" of Rome
- 5. An Amazing Revelation
- 6. Strange "Goings On"
- 7. I Asked the Priest Some Questions
- 8. The "Mother" Church
- 9. The Waldenses
- 10. St. Peter's and the Vatican
- 11. A Monk's Eyes Are Opened
- 12. The Jesuit Priest's Question

Appendix I - Authoritative Quotations on Sabbath And Sunday

Appendix II – The Origin OF Sunday Observance

Appendix III – The Seventh Day Through The Centuries

Appendix IV – Rome Speaks About Sunday Sacredness

1. The Centre of the World

"All roads lead to Rome," and my road had led me almost there. As I stood gazing over the City of the Tiber standing on her seven ancient hills, her new and her old buildings breaking the beautiful blue skyline, I thought of what those words had meant back in the days of Imperial Rome when the legions of the Empire controlled the world. Then, those great quarried-stone roads reached out in all directions through the length and breadth of the known world like arteries carrying life to the distant provinces or else like the tentacles of an octopus sucking at the wealth of the lands and channelling it to one great centre-depending of course on one's political viewpoint and one's vantage point in the stream of Time-second century or sixteenth century.

It seemed impossible that this one city could have seen so much. What great happenings had taken place within her walls, How much of history had been shaped there and with what strange authority had edicts gone forth, from this place, that were to topple thrones or change the fate of distant peoples.

The "official" date for the founding of Rome is 753 B.C. but Rome was soon doomed to fall into the hands of the Etruscan kings (6th Century B.C.).

Republican Rome.

The reign of the kings gave way in 510 B.C. to Republican Rome in whose day Julius Caesar conquered Britain, Caesar and Pompey fought for mastery and Octavian (Augustus) waged war on Antony and the fickle Cleopatra. The Senate House can still be seen in the Roman Forum, where Julius Caesar, stepping forward to receive the crown, met the twenty three daggers of the conspirators. And so the age old words of the prophet Daniel were fulfilled, " Then he shall turn his face toward the fort of his own land: but he shall stumble and fall, and not be found." Daniel 11: 19.

Imperial Rome

Remarkably enough, the prophet also described Julius Caesar's successor and foretold that he would reign in the days of Rome's glory and be remembered in history as a "raiser of taxes." "Then shall stand up in his estate a raiser of taxes in the glory of the Kingdom." Daniel 11: 20. The beginning of Augustus' reign saw the beginning of Imperial Rome which lasted from B.C. 28 until 476 A.D. Augustus' reign has been justly styled " The Golden Age " and arts and learning reached their highest peak. The Emperor himself declared that he " found Rome a city of brick, and left it a city of marble." True to Daniel's prediction, Augustus reigned in the " glory of the kingdom." The Bible chapter that describes the birth of Christ, also tells of Augustus' tax-raising propensities.

"And it came to pass in those days that there went out a decree from Caesar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed. And all went to be taxed, everyone into his own city. And Joseph also went up from Galilee out of the city of Nazareth, unto the city of David which is called Bethlehem . . . to be taxed with Mary. And so it was that while they were there . . . she brought forth her first-born son . . . and laid him in a manger." Luke 2: 1-7.

Daniel predicted that after Julius Caesar, a "raiser of taxes" would "stand up in the glory of the kingdom," and here in these verses we find Luke verifying it all. Augustus' tax plans were the most ambitious that the world had ever seen up to that time. Perhaps our Minister of Finance got his ideas from Augustus. At any rate ambitious tax plans apparently did not die with Caesar and it would seem that others are aspiring to be known in history as "a raiser of taxes."

The prophet then went on to foretell the character of Augustus' successor. "And in his estate shall stand up a vile person, to whom they shall not give the honour of the kingdom: but he shall come in peaceably, and obtain the kingdom by flatteries." Daniel 11: 21. History attests the utter truthfulness of this prophecy concerning Tiberius. It is recorded that as Augustus was about to nominate his successor, his wife Livia besought him to name Tiberius (her son by a former husband); but the emperor replied, " Your son is too vile to wear the purple of Rome "; and the nomination went to Agrippa. Agrippa soon died and Augustus was again under the necessity of choosing his successor. Now weakened by age and sickness, he succumbed to Livia's flatteries and the 99 vile one " became emperor. One writer of history says, " Tyranny, hypocrisy, debauchery and uninterrupted intoxication-if these traits and practices show a man to be vile, Tiberius exhibited that character in disgusting perfection."

Not long ago my attention was drawn to a "Digest" article on Tiberius and after referring to his infamous and dissolute retirement AD. 26 to the Isle of Capri, it drew to a close with these words, "

And what was the end of this vile old man? " And so there we have popular writer, historian and Augustus himself all unconsciously verifying Daniel the prophet who, six hundred years before, had said that a "vile person" would obtain the kingdom by " flatteries." The next verse, Daniel 11: 22 told how the " Prince of the Covenant " (identified in Daniel 9: 26, 27 as being the Messiah) would die during this emperor's reign, and the Book of Luke, chapter 3, and history make it plain that that was the time of Christ's death.

My eyes roved round the skyline trying to absorb in minutes the history of the centuries. Here was some modern government building and there a famous old arch. Yonder stood the beautiful Victor Emanuel Monument and close by, the traditional tower on which Nero stood when he watched the burning of Rome on the night of 18th June, 64 AD. The fire served a two-fold purpose for Nero; it wiped out the slums of Rome where he had looked forward to building, for despite his megalomania, Nero was a promoter of modern town planning. It also allowed him to put the blame on the Christians and thus organize a systematic persecution against them.

Although the remains of Republican Rome are fairly few, the reminders of Imperial Rome's greatness are on every hand. There are monuments to Titus, conqueror of Jerusalem, and to Nerva, Trajan and Hadrian, the latter being remembered in Britain because of the remains of Hadrian's Wall.

There are monuments to the wise Antoninus Pius (A.D. 138-161), builder of mighty Baalbek in Lebanon, to Marcus Aurelius, Septimus Severus (193-211), Diocletian (284-305), Constantine the Great (311-337), and many others. It was Constantine who, in 313, popularised Christianity in the Empire by professing to have become a convert. There is very real reason to doubt the genuineness of his conversion and many real proofs that his heart still lay with Mithraism, the sun-worshipping religion of the Roman Legions, but his so-called conversion was elastic enough to keep him popular with his troops and with the Christians as well. For political ends, Constantine sought to weld together these two great religious systems. The Christian Church which had been founded by Christ and the apostles and which had successfully weathered many storms of persecution found herself unable to stand against the compromise that came with popularity. The Church sank quickly into an abyss of corruption and simony, although one must not forget that in more outlying regions of the world primitive Christianity still continued.

Papal Rome

It was during the reign of these last emperors that the Bishop of Rome succeeded in asserting his authority over the four bishops of the Christian Church-the bishops of Jerusalem, Antioch, Constantinople and Alexandria. This primacy was further strengthened by the Sack of Rome in 410 AD. by the Goths under Alaric the first capture of Rome by a foreign foe in more than eight centuries. Then came the raids of Genseric and his vandals in 455 and finally in 476 the deposition of the western emperor by the Teuton, Odoacer. As each barbarian incursion took place, the position of the emperor declined, while the power of the bishop, who became known as the pope, was enhanced. A Catholic writer tells how the Popes of Rome succeeded to the seat of the Caesars: "Long ages ago when Rome through the neglect of the Western emperors was left to the mercy of the barbarous hordes, the Romans turned to one figure for aid and protection and asked him to rule them; and thus commenced the temporal sovereignty of the Popes. And meekly stepping to the throne of Caesar, the Vicar of Christ took up the sceptre to which the emperors and kings of Europe were to bow in reverence through so many ages." American Catholic Quarterly Review, April, 1911

With the fall of Western Rome, there was no sudden break with the Eastern emperor at Constantinople, or New Rome. Theodoric, king of the Ostrogoths who revered the ancient city, tried to establish an Italian state to carry on the Roman tradition. After his death in 526 the Eastern emperor Justinian reconquered Italy at great cost. Rome was captured and recaptured five times in eighteen years and by the middle of the sixth century the city finally came under the control of the Eastern emperor and was administered by the Exarch of Ravenna as part of the Byzantine empire.

As civic powers waned, the popes gradually gained in authority. Pope Gregory the Great (590-604) assumed very great power and others followed on. Tiring of the restraints of Byzantine rule, Pope Leo III turned to the Frankish king Charlemagne and on Christmas Day of the year 800 crowned him head of the Holy Roman Empire which, as some wit has remarked, was neither holy, nor Roman, nor an empire.

The next few centuries were dark for Rome. The forces of Islam were knocking on her gates. In the ninth century the Saracens plundered two of her outer churches. Then followed years of bitter contest between popes and emperors and popes with rival popes. The sixteenth century dawned brilliantly, with Raphael and Michelangelo both working on their beautiful frescoes in the Vatican, but Rome soon again became the pawn in the struggle between rival powers. The French kings and the Spanish Hapsburgs both claimed the Italian states as rightful inheritance. Fierce warfare broke out between Francis I of France and the Hapsburg emperor Charles V of Spain, during which in 1527 the city once again suffered terrible plunder.

The succeeding centuries saw much of Rome's efforts to crush the rising surge of the Reformation that was now being felt very strongly in Germany, France, England, Switzerland and the Alps of Italy. Great Church Councils were called against those who dared follow the Reformers. Edicts were issued and anathemas hurled against the leaders. The fires of persecution were kept burning brightly and great crusades called together by the various popes to exterminate whole peoples like the Waldensians of Northern Italy and the Huguenots of France. In 1798 the temporal power of the Papacy was ended when Napoleon's General Berthier battered on the doors of the Sistine Chapel and took the pope prisoner. Today, the axe marks are still to be seen on that famous doorway. The pope died in exile and, although with the failure of plans to create a republic, more popes were later appointed, the old power was gone for ever and they were not to reign again with any temporal authority until 1929, when Mussolini signed the famous Concordat with the Vatican,

Capital of Italy

In 1870 Rome became the capital of modern Italy. And so it was to the heart of modern Rome that I now made my way. Her beautiful glass railway station seemed a logical centre where I could collect my bearings and make arrangements for a stopping place. I wanted to use the telephone, but was a little unsure of its workings. I could read enough Italian to realise that one did not put coins in the thing, but rather a small token which was on sale at a neighbouring bookstall. For that matter Italy scarcely uses coins at all. Her paper money is more convenient, while her bright aluminium coins are almost useless. At the present rate of exchange a thousand lire are worth about twelve and sixpence. However, although I was now armed with my necessary token, I was still not clear whether one dropped it in the receptacle before dialling or after the "number" answered, as different countries vary and I did not relish the walk back to the shop to purchase another token should the first be "lost." I saw a smartly-dressed young man standing near by so asked him. It soon became apparent that he didn't know a great deal about this phone either, so I went ahead on "horse sense" and contacted our office and learned of where I was to stay. Imagine my surprise, after finishing my conversation, to find him still standing there, and this time with hand outstretched, strangely reminiscent of the beggars of India and the East through which I had recently passed. It could not be-but yet it was, for now he was saying, "Something for me, signor, for showing you telephone." I had gladly parted out to many of the pitiful beggars of Madras and Dhanushkodi, in famine-ridden India, but to find this well-groomed mendicant in this modern city was just a bit too much. Putting on alternately my most puzzled expression and my fiercest expression, I told him how thoroughly ashamed of himself he should be and how, if he ever came to Nuovo Zelandie, just how happy people there would be to help him, etc., etc., and then I made my way to the famous Piazza di Spagna.

In this piazza, or square, stands the old palace of the Spanish Ambassador. It was the most important square and the heart of old Papal Rome. In its centre stands Bernini's fountain of the Barcaccia, commemorating the great flood of 1598, and just to the right of its famous "Artists' Steps" is the Shelley-Keats Museum in the house where John Keats died in 1821. The modest pensione where I was to stay was just next door to the Keats House. So, thanks to the arrangements of kind friends, I was to stay right in the heart of old Papal Rome and in her most celebrated piazza.

That night as I slept, it all became so confusing. Shelley wouldn't listen to my reasoning, but would persist in writing his Adonais to Nero instead of Keats. Augustus, Tiberius and Caligula were all in the Forum shouting at their very loudest, "Friends, Romans, countrymen," while Julius lay dying. And away off in the middle of the Colosseum I could see the figure of a well-dressed young man in a blue suit feeding telephone tokens to a hungry group of lions while I told him he should be ashamed of himself. Perhaps the morrow would sort things out.

2. The Colosseum

Rome is celebrated for her beautiful blue skies. Like Athens, she enjoys a Mediterranean climate, and in the case of both cities, visitors are quite at a loss to describe the strange balmy lightness of the air. But now her sky was an azure backdrop to set off to perfection that giant of all Rome's remains-the Colosseum-and as I gazed with enraptured awe, I remembered one writer has said that here the very air is heavy with memories. This great oval of masonry has looked upon so much in its lifetime of nineteen centuries.

The Colosseum was built about five years after the apostle Paul's death, by Emperor Vespasian, who first drained away an artificial lake in the gardens of Nero's Golden House to begin upon the site this vast theatre for games. It was almost ready for use in AD. 79 when Vespasian died. His son Titus opened it in AD. 80, although it was still unfinished. Actually it was Domitian, Titus' brother and successor, who put the finishing touches to it. Years before it had been the dream of Augustus to erect something like this, but it seemed that this great builder and beautifier was never able to get the project started.

Josephus, the Jewish historian who described the terrible siege of Jerusalem as he saw it, declared that more than 1,000,000 Jews perished and 97,000 were taken prisoner. The Colosseum was built by 12,000 of these prisoners. The opening ceremonies were ostentatious to say the least and lasted for a hundred days, and the Roman historian, Dion Cassius, describes the rivers of blood as 9000 wild animals were slain during that time.

It was not called the Colosseum from the beginning; in fact, it is not until we come to the eighth century that we first find that name applied to it. To the Romans it was the Flavian Amphitheatre, named after the Flavian family of emperors who built it. Nero was the last of the line of Caesar and Augustus, and he was universally hated. Just before he took his own life, he was declared by the Senate to be the public enemy. With the coming of the Flavian line, Vespasian and Titus sought to build up prestige by embarking on public works and restoring to the populace the recreation centres taken by Nero. Hence the draining away of Nero's artificial lake and the building of the amphitheatre in the gardens of the Golden House.

As I moved around the outside taking pictures from different positions, I was greatly impressed by its solidity and size. Its circumference is a third of a mile and the diameter along the longer axis 658 feet, the smaller axis being 558 feet. Its original height was 200 feet. Standing isolated beyond the Forum in the depression between the Palatine, Esquiline and Caelian hills, it was easily accessible from the heart of the ancient city. Its outer masonry was once covered with glistening marble, but that has long disappeared-taken by wealthy patricians to build their villas. The holes can be seen where metal pins held the marble in place. Larger holes show where the rival popes of the middle ages, anxious to make war with each other, had the great metal cramps taken out from the masonry itself in order to get the lead for bullets. Pope Clement IX in the seventeenth century stored saltpetre in the building for use in his neighbouring gunpowder factory. The structure has been damaged by earthquake in the fifth century, the sixth century, AD. 847 and AD. 1703. Restoration due to lightning damage has also been necessary on several occasions. When one takes into consideration its outer wall, that has largely crumbled and been used through the ages as an easy quarry for building materials, one finds that less than one-half of the original amphitheatre is standing, although this is not at once obvious.

The Romans were justly proud of this edifice as seen by the proverb quoted by eighth century historian Bede, in which, incidentally, we have the first use of the name "Coliseum." Byron's translation of it reads: "While stands the Coliseum, Rome shall stand; When falls the Coliseum, Rome shall fall; And when Rome falls-the world."

Gladiators and Christians

I walked in through one of its 80 arcades. Seventy-six entrances were numbered so that ticket-holders could go almost straight to their seats and the remaining four were main entrances. Two were for imperial use only; the third was for the Pompa Circensis, or procession of gladiators; and the last and opposite one was the Libitinensis, named after Libitina, the goddess of death and funerals. It was through this gateway that the corpses were hooked and dragged out. This place certainly saw some corpses. Although mainly used at first for naval contests (for which purpose the inside space could be flooded), the Colosseum soon degenerated into a venue for gladiatorial combats and often a place for the persecution of Christians. Here giant slaves, stripped to the waist, were made to fight with sword against fellow-slaves or with their bare hands against wild beasts. Every Roman victory procession included hundreds of these gladiators brought from conquered lands to make a Roman holiday.

The remains of the royal box, where the Emperor sat, can still be seen, while rising up behind are the great tiers of seats; for this place could hold 50,000 people. The central portion was called the arena, from the sand (arena) which covered it to absorb the blood. Underneath were tunnels, passages, dens, trap-doors and even crude lifts for bringing the animals up. I could still see, as I walked about, the remains of where the huge awnings were once hung to give protection to those enjoying the hideous spectacles.

How many of God's faithful martyrs died in this place we will never know, but we are told that, as far as can be computed, the torn and mangled bodies of 80,000 Christians were dragged out through this Libitinensis, or "Death Path," before being reverently collected by fellow Christian friends and buried in the Catacombs. Here in this arena where I was now standing little groups of Christians once stood singing their hymns as they were set upon by hunger maddened animals. Many are the instances we have of the persecutors themselves becoming so touched by the steadfastness of those they beheld that they too accepted Christianity, sometimes even on the spot, thus dying with those they had set out to torment. "The blood of the martyrs became the seed of the church" and Christianity grew at an astonishing rate, bursting forth from the prison of Judaism. in the East and the iron prison of Rome in the West and rapidly spreading itself over all the known earth.

The Catacombs

I made my way to the Catacombs, those dark underground passages running beneath large sections of Rome. More than 600 miles of galleries had been tunnelled out of the sandstone rock by the early Christians, and here they lived during times of persecution, here they had their meetings and here they buried their dead. I came across whole chapels carved out where large numbers could be accommodated. Inscriptions and paintings were here and there. In fact, it is claimed that our modern likeness of Christ, that is the accepted picture to-day, had its origin in the catacombs. The guide showed me fourth century paintings of the Master, but I did not see much resemblance, I must confess. The long maze of galleries became the place for burial. Little cubicles about six feet long and two feet high were dug into the sides of the tunnels, often in tiers of three and four, and a marble slab was placed across the front. On these slabs epitaphs were written. When the graves have been opened the skeletons tell their own terrible tale. Many times heads are found severed from the body, shoulder blades are broken and bones are often calcined by fire, but nevertheless the hope of the Resurrection always shone through and there are references and signs pointing to that glad day. Some inscriptions read:

"Victorious in peace and in Christ."

"Being called away, he went in peace."

"Resting until He shall come."

The most frequent symbols of the Catacombs are the Good Shepherd with a lamb on his shoulder, crowns, vines and the fish. What a contrast when one thinks of pagan epitaphs around the city:

"Live for the present hour since we are sure of nothing else."

"Once I was not. Now I am not. I know nothing about it, and it is no concern of mine."

"I lift my hands against the gods who took me away at the age of twenty though I had done no harm."

The hopelessness of pagan despair can be seen in these lines. It was the glorious hope of the Resurrection and the coming of Jesus that enabled those 80,000 to witness for their faith in the Colosseum and the untold thousands to die in other places during those early centuries of blood. It was that bright faith, that enabled them to bravely carry on though Marcus Aurelius might tear them apart with wild horses and Diocletian might put hundreds of them into vats of boiling oil. Nero cover them with tar and use them as flaming torches to light his carriage-way at night. But prophecy had said that other centuries of blood would follow, this time inflicted, not by a pagan world, but by a so-called Christian church, upon fellow Christians. The same "Blessed Hope" was to be the mainspring of their faith too as they lived and died away down through the centuries.

3. Rome in History and Prophecy

Many years before the rise of Rome the prophet Daniel had been shown in a vision the sequence of the four great world powers stretching from his day in Babylon's empire to the last world monarchy-pagan Rome. Daniel, chapter 7, records the rise of four great beasts, a lion with two wings, a cruel bear, a four headed leopard with four wings and a "dreadful and terrible beast that beggared description. Verse 17 says: "These great beasts, which are four, are four kings which shall arise out of the earth." Verse 23 continues, "Thus he said, the fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth." So the first beast was the first kingdom.

The lion-like kingdom was the empire of Babylon (606-538 BC.), the wings on the beast denoting the speed with which this power would conquer the known world. After the lion arose the bear, and history tells how the Babylonian kingdom gave way to the cruel Medo-Persian power (538-331). The four-winged leopard brings us to the very rapid conquests of Alexander the Great, that dynamo of energy, who in less than eight years established domination over the world in the name of Greece (331-168 BC.). The first beast was like a lion, the second like a bear and the third like a leopard, but the fourth was like nothing on earth.

"After this I saw in the night visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly; and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns." - Daniel 7 :7.

The iron monarchy of Rome overthrew Greece and became greater than all those before it. Rome crushed the world under her feet and ruled with absolute power.

The Ten Horns.

Thus far we have noted the succession of world kingdoms to be the same as pictured in Daniel, chapter 2. where the figure of the metal image is used. Just as the fourth division of the image, the legs of iron, gave way to the ten toes (10 kingdoms), so in the vision of Daniel 7 the fourth beast with the iron teeth gave way to 10 kingdoms. Verse 7 describes the beast as having 10 horns. Verse 24 says, "And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise." Rome was never conquered by any nation, but the empire was gradually reduced in power by the barbarian invasions from the north and the east. The Anglo-Saxons settled in England; the Franks became the French; the Alermanni, the Germans; the Burgundians, the Swiss, and so on. The fourth beast passed away with the deposition of the emperor in 476 AD., and the "10 horns" (10 kingdoms) reigned in Europe.

The Little Horn

But the prophet's interest was greatly attracted by "another little horn" that came up after the 10 kingdoms were established.

"I considered the horns, and behold there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things" Daniel 7: 8.

"And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings. And he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hands until a time and times and the dividing of time."-Daniel 7 : 24, 25.

This new power that would arise from Pagan Rome just after the establishment of the 10 kingdoms was none but the power of the Papacy, or Catholic Rome. Three of the 10 Kingdoms opposed her rise so they were "plucked u-p," as the prophecy says. These were the Heruli, the Vandals and the Ostrogoths. The last of these Arian powers was subdued by Justinian in 538, and in that year began the temporal reign of the popes. The prophecy states that this power would be different from all the other kingdoms. They were purely political powers, while the Papacy was a religious and political power.

Papacy an Outgrowth of Pagan Rome

It is important to note that this "Little 'Horn'" power of Papal Rome was an outgrowth of Pagan Rome. Revelation 1,2 and 13 make it clear that the Dragon who sought to destroy the babe Jesus in Bethlehem at the time of Herod (Pagan Rome) handed over his "power and seat and great authority" to the Papacy and so Papal Rome occupies the seat of government or capital city of old Pagan Rome. To requote a portion, the American Catholic Quarterly Review, April, 1911, said:

"And meekly stepping to the throne of Caesar, the vicar of Christ (one of the titles of the Pope) took up the sceptre to which emperors and kings of Europe were to bow in reverence through so many years." Adolf Harnack in "What is Christianity," p. 251, says:

"The Roman Church pushed itself into the place of the Roman Empire, of which it is the actual continuation; the Empire has not perished but has only undergone a transformation. . . . The Pope who calls himself 'King' and 'Pontifex Maximus' is Caesar's successor."

1260 Years of Power

The "little horn" of Dan. 7 :8, 25, was to reign for a ---time and times and the dividing of time." This same period of time is mentioned in Revelation 12 :14, and in the sixth verse it is said to be 12~60 "days." In accordance with the well-known principle of interpreting Bible prophecy, where a day stands for a year (Ezekiel 4 :6), this period then is 1260 years. We have noticed that the temporal reign of the popes began in 538 AD. when Justinian subdued the last of the three "horns," or kingdoms, that opposed the rise of the Papacy. At this time Roman Catholicism was made the state religion and all other forms of worship were forbidden. Dr Summerbell says:

"Justinian . . . enriched himself with the property of all 'heretics'-that is non-Catholics; published edicts in 538 compelling all to join the Catholic Church in ninety days or leave the empire, and confiscated all their goods."-History of the Christian Church, p. 310. Edward Gibbon states the same in "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire " chapter 47, par. 24.

The Papacy reigned with absolute power during the 1260 years of the Dark Ages. How did this period end? It was Napoleon who brought it about. In 1798 a French army led by General Berthier entered the city of Rome, proclaimed a republic, and carried away the pontiff a prisoner to France, where he died the following year.

Pope Pius VI was sitting on his throne in the Sistine Chapel receiving the congratulations of his cardinals on the anniversary of his election when the blow struck. Arthur R. Pennington, M.A., F.R. Historical Society., says of this event:

"On a sudden, the shouts of an angry multitude penetrated to the conclave, intermingled with the strokes of axes and hammers on the doors. Very soon a band of soldiers burst into the hall, who tore away from his finger his pontifical ring and hurried him off, a prisoner, through a hall, the walls of which were adorned with a fresco, representing the armed satellites of the Papacy, on St. Bartholomew's Day, as bathing their swords in the blood of unoffending women and helpless children." Epochs of the Papacy, p. 449.

I visited the Sistine Chapel with its famous paintings where, in this "arena" of pictorial talent, the greatest masters of Italy competed for the palm of victory. I saw the famous ceiling painted by Michelangelo where he used scenes from the Old Testament and his still more famous west wall of the chapel on which he painted that world-renowned masterpiece with over three hundred figures-"The Last Judgment." I was over-awed in the presence of so much of the world's famous art, but I was still more over-awed a few minutes later as the guide took me over to the great thick wooden doors of the chapel, and there I stood at the place where history and prophecy met; there on the doors were the deep axe marks of Berthier's troops. How wonderfully accurate is Bible prophecy. Napoleon actually despatched Berthier to Italy in 1797, but he was held up by the snows of the Alps and it was not until the 10th February, 1798, that he arrived to proclaim the republic. Prophecy had said 1260 years, and 1260 years it was.

1260 Years of Papal Domination

Out in the hallway I saw the fresco the pope's eye must have lighted upon as he was led forth a prisoner. It depicted the massacre of the fifty thousand protestant Huguenots of France on St. Bartholomew's Day. Rome rejoiced at that day; medals were struck and church bells set ringing. In the Vatican Museum I saw some of the medals and here in this hallway was a commemorative painting. The Historian's History of the World, Vol. XL, p. 375, describes that fateful time so mixed with treachery and bloodshed when Admiral Coligny and so many other innocents perished at the hands of their fellow citizens in the dead of night. The ringing of church bells throughout Paris was the secret signal used for the massacre to begin.

"From the streets they proceeded to the houses; they broke open the doors and spared neither age, sex, nor condition. A white cross had been put in their hats to distinguish the Catholics, and some priests holding a crucifix in one hand and a sword in the other preceded the murderers and encouraged them, in God's name, to spare neither relatives nor friends. When daylight appeared Paris exhibited a most appalling spectacle of slaughter: the headless bodies were falling from the windows; the gateways were blocked up with dead and dying, and the streets were filled with carcasses which were drawn on the pavement to the river. . . . Most of them died without complaining or even speaking; others appealed to the public faith and the sacred promise of the king. 'Great God,' said they, 'be the defence of the oppressed.' The massacre lasted during the whole week."

A Persecuting Power

One of the characteristics of the "Little Horn" mentioned in Daniel 7 : 25 was that it would be a persecuting power, and so as I walked about Rome I was not really surprised to see in many places paintings and statues depicting scenes of persecution. In the Church of the Jesuits I saw a statuary group showing the Church trampling underfoot and persecuting those who disagree with her. In St. Peter's my guide showed me a huge statue of Luther, one of the leaders of the Reformation, with carved snakes all round his body and the Jesuit leader, Ignatius Loyola, treading on Luther's neck and pushing him into Hell. The prophecies all state that Rome in her 1260 years of dominance would persecute. Historians agree with that. Lecky says:

"That the Church of Rome has shed more innocent blood than any other institution that has ever existed among mankind, will be questioned by no Protestant who has a competent knowledge of history. "-History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe," Vol. II, p. 32.

John Lothrop Motley, speaking of papal persecution in the Netherlands, says:

"Upon February 16, 1568, a sentence of the Holy Office (the Inquisition) condemned all the inhabitants of the Netherlands to death as heretics. . . . The most concise death warrant that was ever framed. Three millions of people, men, women and children, were sentenced to the scaffold in three lines." "The Rise of the Dutch Republic," Vol. I, p. 626.

The Church of Rome admits that she has persecuted and makes it plain that she has not turned away from the idea even today. Notice what this Catholic writer says:

"The Church has persecuted. Only a tyro in church history will deny that. . . . Protestants were persecuted in France and Spain with the full approval of the Church authorities. We have always defended the persecution of the Huguenots, and the Spanish Inquisition. . . . When she thinks it good to use force she will use it. . . . But will the Catholic Church give bond that she will not persecute at all? Will she guarantee absolute freedom and equality of all churches and all faiths? The Catholic Church gives no bonds for her good behaviour."-The Western Watchman (R.C.), Dec. 24, 1908.

Professor Baudrillart, a Roman Catholic scholar in France, and who is now a cardinal, says:

"When confronted by heresy she does not content herself with persuasion; arguments of an intellectual and moral order appear to her insufficient, and she has recourse to force, to corporal punishment, to torture. She creates tribunals like those of the Inquisition, she calls the laws of the State to her aid, if necessary she encourages a crusade, or a religious war. Not content to reform morally, to preach by example, to convert people by eloquent and holy missionaries, she lit in Italy, in the Low Countries, and above all in Spain the funeral pyres the Inquisition ... . The Catholic Church, the Renaissance and Protestantism," p. 182.

I spent hours in the Vatican Library, where can be seen that famous Bible manuscript, Codex Vaticanus, and many other literary treasures of the world. Both here and at the Lateran Museum I saw edicts and bulls commanding persecution of "heretics." Incidentally, the New Catholic Dictionary published in New York in 1929 defines heresy:

"Heresy-deciding for oneself what one shall believe and practise."

The Edict of Pope Innocent III says:

"Ye give you a strict command that, by whatever means you can, you destroy all these heresies and expel from your diocese all who are polluted with them. . . . They must not appeal from your judgments and, if necessary, you may cause the princes and people to suppress them with the sword."

In the Bull "Ad extirpanda" (1252) Innocent IV says:

"When those adjudged guilty of heresy have been given up to the civil power by the bishop or his representative, or the Inquisition, the podesta or chief magistrate of the city shall take them at once, and shall, within five days ;at the most, execute the laws made against them."

Speak Great Words.

Dan. 7 :25 says of the Little Horn power, "He shall speak great words against the most High." Rev. 13 :5, 6, says: "And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies . . . and he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God to blaspheme his name."

The Papacy has done this as shown by its official pronouncements of the Pope's position. In the large work by Ferraris, called "Prompta Bibliotheca Canonica Juridica Moralis Theologica," printed at Rome and sanctioned by the Catholic Encyclopaedia (Vol. VI, p. 48), we find the following statements regarding the power of the pope.

"The Pope is of so great dignity and so exalted that he is not a mere man, but as it were God, and the vicar of God. . . .

"Hence the Pope is crowned with a triple crown, as king of heaven and of earth and of the lower regions. . . .

"So that if it were possible that the angels might err in the faith, or might think contrary to the faith, they could be judged and ex-communicated by the Pope. . . .

---The Pope is as it were God on earth, sole sovereign of the faithful of Christ, chief king of kings, having plenitude of power, to whom has been entrusted by the omnipotent God direction not only of the earthly but also of the heavenly realm.'

Pope Leo XIII in an encyclical letter June 20, 1894, said:

"We hold upon this earth the place of God Almighty."

Cardinal Bellarmine says:

"All names which in the Scriptures are applied to Christ by virtue of which it is established that He is over the church, all the same names are applied to the pope." - "On the Authority of Councils," Book 2, chapter 17

Dr Guistianni says:

"Go to Rome and you will read on the gate of the city, Paul III, high priest, the best, the greatest, and GOD ON EARTH."

"To make war with the pope is to make war against God, seeing the POPE IS GOD, AND GOD IS THE POPE."-Moreri's "History."

"The pope is all, in all, and above all, so that GOD HIMSELF AND THE POPE, the Vicar of God, ARE BUT ONE CONSISTORY."-Hostiensis Cap., etc.

During the sessions of the Vatican Council, on January 9, 1870, Mermeillod coadjutor of Geneva, in a sermon preached in the church of San Andrea delle Valle, described three incarnations of Christ-the first in Judea for the atonement, the next in the sacrifice of the eucharist, and now "the Saviour is once more on earth (he is in the Vatican in the person of an aged man)," and the promotion with which the preacher was rewarded showed that such adulation was duly appreciated.

According to Luke 5 :21 and John 10 :33, the Bible definition of blasphemy is a man claiming to be in the place of God and a man claiming to be able to forgive sin. We see both of these claims in the papal system.

Attempt to Change Law of God.

In Daniel's vision of Chapter 7 he was finally shown this power of the "Little Horn" would defiantly stretch out unholy hands against the 10 Commandments of God. "He shall think to change times and the :aw." Dan. 7:25, R.V. This she has done by removing from the 10 Commandments the second command, which forbids images, and dividing the tenth to make two commandments, thus making up the total number of 10. The accompanying illustration shows the Commandments as they appear in the Bible and a copy of the Commandments as they have been changed by Rome.

She further put her hand right into the heart of the Law of God and changed the fourth command (the only one that mentions time in the Law) and in place of the Sabbath of God she gave Sunday. She says it was done in order to gain more heathen for the Church, Sunday being their festival day of the Sun-god and thus the of the heathen could be accomplished easier by the Church keeping the heathen day. But who gave her the right to touch God's Sabbath that was given to the world as a great memorial of creation. She says:

"The Church took the pagan Sunday and made it the Christian Sunday. And thus the pagan Sunday, dedicated to Balder (Sun God) became the Christian Sunday, sacred to Jesus ... .. Catholic World."

The Ten Commandments as found in the Bible and in the Catholic Catechism. (Note that the Second Commandment has been omitted and the Tenth divided into two.)

Historian William. Frederick says:

"The gentiles were an idolatrous people who worshipped the Sun, and Sunday was their most sacred day. Now in order to reach the people in this new field it seems but natural, as well as necessary, to make Sunday the rest day of the church. The church could naturally reach them better by keeping their day."

Canon Cafferata, in "The Catechism Simply Explained," p. 89, says:

"The Sabbath was Saturday, not Sunday. The Church altered the observance of the Sabbath to the observance of Sunday. Protestants must be rather puzzled by the keeping of Sunday when God distinctly said, 'Keep holy the Sabbath Day.' The word Sunday does not come anywhere in the Bible, so, without knowing it, they are obeying the authority of the Catholic Church."

For further quotations see Appendix 1, "What the Churches Say About the Sabbath."

In conclusion, we would list for convenience some of the specifications of the "Little Horn" as mentioned by Daniel.

1. It Would Arise Out of the Fourth Beast-Pagan Rome.
2. It would Uproot Three Kingdoms in its Rise,
3. "Diverse" from the Others-Religious and Political.
4. Speak Great Things.
5. Blasphemies.
6. Persecuting Power.
7. Change God's Law and Sabbath.
8. World Power for 1260 Years.

4. The "Wonders" of Rome

I set out one day to see some of the "wonders" of Papal Rome. What bones and skulls and relics of all kinds are brought out. Who knows how many "genuine" nails from the Cross and how many pieces of its wood are proudly displayed by monks and priests in various churches. Rome has about 400 churches and each seems to vie with the other to show the most amazing relic and tell the "best" story.

On the north side of the Piazza Barberini, at the beginning of the Via Vittoria Veneto, is the Church of the Capuchin Fathers. The little booklet one buys at the church assures us that here in this underground church-cemetery we are about to see a "unique work of art that will invite to prayer and meditation." We see a long underground passage divided into six arched compartments and the whole place stacked with bones. On the ground are great heaps of skulls, while on the walls and ceilings, laid out in all kinds of artistic compartments and the whole place stacked with bones. etc. What a sight! Here and there skeletons have been wired together and clothed with a monkish habit. Some of these are standing in rows or reclining in niches. The guide book assures us that the bones of 4000 priests of the order who died between 1528 and 1870 are piled up here in heaps on the floor or arranged in the strange designs on the walls and ceiling.

The priest on duty in the church was selling little plaster replicas of a skull, so I bought one to use as a paper weight, and went on out into fresh air and sunshine, wondering how in the world this macabre spectacle could possibly fit into the scheme of Christian worship as revealed in the gospel of Jesus. One more glance at the guide book as I moved away, and I noticed that Pope Urban VIII had had the soil of this place specially brought over from Jerusalem and Pope Pius VI granted Plenary Indulgence to the faithful who visit it on the first Sunday of October. Alas! it was not October, but I need not have worried, for during my brief stay in Rome the visiting of different churches and the seeing of various relics accumulated for me indulgences for 1,150,000 years and 219 days.

Bones and Holiness

Bones seem to have quite a hallowing influence, according to the theology of Rome. The Pantheon, once a temple for sun-worship, with its great thirty-foot hole in the roof, through which the sun's rays shone during worship, was consecrated and became a Catholic Church simply by bringing twenty-eight cartloads of bones from the catacombs and burying them beneath the floor.

The Pantheon was dedicated in 27 BC. by Agrippa, friend of Augustus and victor over Antony and Cleopatra at Actium. The ancient "Mirabilia," after telling how Agrippa had a dream in which Cybele, the mother of the gods, appeared to him, says: "When he returned to Rome he built this temple and made it to be dedicated to the honour of Cybele, mother of the gods." In 608 A.D. Emperor Phocas and Pope Boniface IV converted it into a Christian church and dedicated it after the Virgin Mary and "All Saints." It still bears the name of Santa Maria Rotonda today. It was on the 1st November of that year that the bone removal campaign was carried out and November 1 is still celebrated as the feast of "All Saints."

In Rome one is greatly impressed by the continuation of, and the similarities with, pagan religions that are to be found in the name of Christianity. Cybele simply became the Virgin Mary. The old statue of Jupiter that once stood in the Pantheon and whose foot was kissed by the pagans in the years before Christianity was transferred to St. Peter's and called Peter, and the toe is still being kissed, but it had been kissed smooth before Peter was born. In the early days of Christianity, when all kinds of compromises were allowed, the pagans were encouraged to kiss "Jupiter's" toe, while so-called Christians were told to kiss it as "Peter's" toe. In similar manner, of course, relic worship, the rosary, holy water, worship on the Sun's day and many other pagan customs came in, so that many writers have declared that the papal system is really nothing more than "baptised paganism."

I walked across to the Church of St. Pietro in Vincoli (St. Peter in Chains), and here I saw the famous Moses, Michelangelo's masterpiece in sculpture. Truly it is an amazing piece of work. Originally it was meant to be one of a group of 42 statues in St. Peter's Cathedral to decorate the tomb of the pope who laid the foundation stone of that great Basilica. The statues of the group were to have represented Heaven and Earth; the former smiling as if glad to receive the soul of such a great pope, the latter sad at the loss of one so illustrious. The ambitious dream was never carried out and the pope who laid the foundation stone and who desired for himself the greatest monument in all the world is now lying under a simple slab in the great Basilica, while this famous statue graces the little church of St. Peter in Chains.

The "holy relics" of this church, of course, are the chains that are supposed to have once bound the apostle Peter in Jerusalem. The guide book states: -When the chains from Jerusalem were brought to Rome there was preserved here, as a holy relic, another piece of chain believed to be the one with which the Apostle had been bound in the Mammertine Prison in Rome; when the two chains were placed in contact they miraculously joined together."

Two Heads

Rome finds no difficulty at all in explaining almost any "miracle." A friend of mine who had already been Shown over St. Peter's Cathedral and assured by the priest that the body of Peter lay in the crypt, was visiting another church the same day. Here the monks displayed a skull for his inspection and told him he was looking at the head of the great St. Peter. My friend asked how that could be since he had already been assured that Peter lay in the great Basilica and how then could Peter have two heads. He was solemnly told that since this was just a small skull it was the head of Peter when he was just a boy. It is difficult for us in this enlightened land to understand how people will believe such ridiculous fables, but millions in Italy and Spain and other parts still do.

In the church of Ara Coeli is the famous Bambino, the miracle-working image of the infant Christ. This is entirely covered with beautiful gems and is taken to the death bed of the sick. Says the guide book: "If the Bambino changes colour the sick person will recover." The church of QuoVadis, on the Appian Way, boasts the naked footprint of Peter (some say of Christ) in solid marble. In Rome lots of footprints and head-prints seem to exist in solid stone and no one seems at all under any necessity to explain how soft, yielding flesh could leave marks four and five inches deep in hard stone. Yet in the Mammertine Prison the dungeon in which, we agree, Paul was most probably incarcerated they have managed to include

Peter in the scene as well. That apostle is said to have reclined against the rock wall of the prison and left his head-print for all posterity to see. The church has covered the four-inch deep head-print with a metal grille to protect it. The story also has it that on one occasion both Paul and Peter were chained to the one pillar in the prison and about that time they accomplished the conversion of their two gaolers. Not being in a position to baptise them by immersion, and longing for some water, a "miracle" occurred and where the apostle Peter's feet rested a spring of water gushed forth. However, this spring in the Mammertine happens to be mentioned by Roman historians three hundred years before this supposed "miracle" took place.

A church that houses the "very cradle" in which Christ was rocked as a babe must surely have a "good story" regarding its origin. The Basilica of Santa Maria Maggiore, to quote the official narrative:

"Was built in 352, by divine inspiration, by Pope Liberius who, one August night, had an apparition of the Madonna who ordered him to build a church where he would have found fresh fallen snow. On the following morning the spot where the church now stands was found covered by a miraculous fall of snow, on which Pope Liberius traced the new church; while a patrician John, who had the same apparition of the Virgin, supplied funds for its erection."

The church also boasts the body of Matthew and a number of other "saints," as well as the "miraculous image of the Madonna - painted by Luke (of the gospel of Luke) and carried in procession by Pope Gregory the Great to stay the plague of 590 A.D'. At various times the image is said to weep tears. Santa Maria Maggiore is one of the five Basilicas in Rome and the only Basilica in the world enjoying the privilege of possessing two papal altars.

Of course, weeping statues are not uncommon, and I was amazed as I saw the crowds in Turin round a glass case containing a Madonna that was said to weep. All were praying and some were deeply touched. It reminded me of Rome's famous chalice that was said to fill with the blood of Christ at certain times each year and the images of Christ on the cross that were supposed to gush forth blood. These latter were very popular until last century, when a workman repairing one of the churches discovered the image connected up by pipes to a spot where a rooster was slain or, on special days, a goat, and its blood forced through small tubes to the image.

Supposed Finding of The Cross

The Church of Santa Croce, in Gerusalemme, houses quite a collection of "wonders." It is claimed that Helena, the mother of Constantine, built the church in 320 AD. Later she was supposed to have gone to Jerusalem and there to have had a premonition to dig in a certain spot. She had workmen turn over the soil and discovered three crosses complete with nails and inscription. The inscription had become detached, so, in order to find which was the actual cross of Christ, the papal church claims that Macarius, bishop of Jerusalem, touched the three crosses on the head of a dying woman. "The Sessorian Relics of the Lord's Passion" which I bought in Rome and which bears the official "imprimatur" of the church, says on page 18:

But scarcely was she touched with the third cross than the sick person, as though given a shock from a galvanic battery, opened her eyes, jumped from the bed and commenced to walk about the house."

The exploits in Jerusalem failed to impress me, for I had only just come from the Holy Land and there witnessed Rome's nonsense with respect to relics and holy places. In Bethlehem the church marking the birthplace of Jesus also very *conveniently has, right in the same building, a star on the floor to mark the place where Adam was created. In the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Mt. Calvary (a little rock about 10 feet high) and the Tomb of Christ are just thirty feet apart. Close by is the pillar of flagellation to which Christ is supposed to have been tied while being flogged. This relic is in an iron cage, to protect it no doubt, while a long stick like a billiard cue reaches out from the column through the bars and the faithful actually queue up to kiss the cue. But the little ten-foot high Mt. Calvary is a real "wonder," for underneath the three silver-lined cross holes someone happily discovered, in a hole in the rock, the body of none but Adam himself - 4000 years of time and a world-changing Deluge notwithstanding. As it was explained to me by the priest, at the time of Christ's death the great earthquake is supposed to have rent the rock and three drops of His blood, dropping down through the fissure. It just happened to fall on the skull of Adam, and thus the salvation of man was assured or the original sin of Adam expiated; I wasn't able to get it clearly from him just which.

So you see I wasn't very impressed in St. Croce at Rome when they told me of how Helena had discovered the "true cross." The two nails of the cross they showed me and the thorns from the crown of thorns just added to my list of others I had seen. And the index finger of Thomas in its gold receptacle was just like many other fingers I had been shown.

One could write a whole book on the relics and miracles" of Rome, but perhaps there is space in this chapter to describe only one more sight-the Church of the Three Fountains, which supposedly marks the spot where Paul's execution took place. It derives its name from the story "that when the Apostle was beheaded, his head, on falling, made three distinct bounds and on each spot where the head fell a fountain sprang up miraculously." Rome has no difficulty with this story, despite the fact that the three springs are quite a good distance apart. Nearby is the Church of Scala Coeli, named "from a vision of St. Bernard in which he saw ascending to Heaven by a ladder some souls from Purgatory for whom he was praying," to quote again from the official book. How did all this idea of relics and "wonders" come into the church? We shall see . . .

5. An Amazing Revelation

We turn to the Book of Revelation and in chapter 6 and the dramatic story of the Four Horsemen in the prophecy of the Seven Seals. The Revelation was given to "reveal" to Christ's followers the great road-map of the ages. The Devil would whisper to men and women in these days, "Don't bother about the Book of Revelation-it is a sealed book and cannot be understood." But Jesus says, "I have sent Mine angel to testify unto you these things in the Churches"-Rev. 22:16. A "revelation" is something revealed. So anxious is our Lord to have us study it that He has placed His special blessing on those who read its pages. -Blessed is he that reads, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein : for the time is at hand"-Rev. 1 : 3.

We notice in the Revelation the oft repetition of the number "seven." There are Seven Churches, Seven Seals, Seven Trumpets, Seven Plagues, etc. Seven denotes perfection, or completeness-the Seven Seals, for instance, outlining for us the complete apostasy of the church. In this prophecy we are introduced to the Four Horsemen, bringing before us four different ages" in the experience of the Church.

White Horse-Time of the Apostles (AD 31- AD 100).

"And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals . . . And I saw, and behold a white horse : and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering, and to conquer" Revelation 6 :1, 2.

The "white horse" is an appropriate symbol of the early church, pure in faith and doctrine. The "bow" symbolized the Word of God (Habakkuk 3:9) as she rode forth in triumph over the pagan Roman world. The gospel message spread rapidly and the Bible was the basis of faith and belief as she went forth "conquering and to conquer."

Red Horse – Persecution and Apostasy (100 AD to 323 AD)

"And there went out another horse that was red, and power was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should kill one another; and there was given unto him a great sword -Verse 4. The colour has changed from white to red. This colour is familiar to students of the Bible, for there we read of "the great red dragon ... .. the scarlet woman," etc., and Isaiah wrote, "Though your sins be as scarlet . . . though they be red like crimson." Red is a picture of sin , and with the red horse we have the slipping away from the pure gospel of Christ, the beginnings of which were just becoming apparent in Apostle Paul's day. He wrote, "For I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own w~ shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them" -Acts 20:29,30. 'For the mystery of iniquity doth already work"2 Thessalonians 2 :7. History bears out the accuracy of Paul's prediction. Historian Dr William D. Killen, of the Presbyterian Church, writes:

"In the interval between the days of the apostles and the conversion of Constantine, the Christian commonwealth changed its aspect. The Bishop of Rome-a personage unknown to the writers of the New Testament-meanwhile rose into prominence, and at length took precedence of all other churchmen. Rites and ceremonies, of which neither Paul nor Peter ever heard, crept silently into use." "The Ancient Church," preface to orig. edition, p. 15.

This age of the church finished with the so-called conversion of Constantine to Christianity. The persecuted suddenly became popular. With the emperor professing to be a Christian it became the "right" thing for the court to do and soon thousands of others followed the example. But Christianity has never been able to stand popularity; Jesus made it plain that there always must be a demarcation between His followers and the world. And so the church "fell away."

Black Horse - Establishment of Papacy (323-538).

"And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third beast say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four beasts say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine-Rev. 6 :5, 6. The black horse is in striking contrast to the white of the first horse. During this period all kinds of superstitions and fables were introduced. The worship of saints, relics, images and the Virgin Mary were introduced, along with purgatory, penances, celibacy of the clergy, Sunday-keeping, etc. One writer has said:

"Constantine faced this situation: More than half the people worshipped on Sunday-pagans. The others observed the Sabbath-professed Christians. He conceived the idea of cementing the two factions. Though professing Christianity, he did not want to conflict with the prejudices of his pagan subjects." Edward Gibbon tells how, artfully balancing the two, he allayed the "fears of his subjects by publishing in the same year two, edicts, the first of which enjoined the solemn observance of Sunday and the second directed the regular consultation of the auspices" -a pagan practice-Edward Gibbon, "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," chapter 21.

This edict of Constantine's was the first law ever given for the purpose of making Sunday a day of sacred rest. The church followed the lead of Constantine and at the Council of Laodicea (364 A.D.) passed a law that Christians must not keep the Sabbath of God (Saturday), but should observe Sunday.

The reference to "balances," "measures" and money tells of the spirit of commercialism that entered the church. They swept up the dust of Jerusalem streets and brought it back to sell to the "faithful" at home. Everything had its price; even the good things of the gospel were sold-hence the mention of the "wheat" and "barley." A writer has said:

"When a baby was born the priest was paid to christen it. At his weekly confessional the priest was paid. At his marriage the priest was paid. At the birth of each child the priest was paid. At his death and funeral the priest was paid, and even after burial the priest was paid to get his soul out of purgatory. So, regardless of whether a man was alive or dead, the money flowed into the coffers of the apostate church."

Relics were "discovered" and sold. Many of these, "wonders" at Rome came into being during this age. When I visited St. Mark's Cathedral, Venice, I was taken into the treasury, where, amidst the gorgeous work of gold and jewels, I was shown a collection of more relics than perhaps I saw at any one place in Rome. I made a list of just a few of them-this church boasts 110 altogether. The official guide book I bought at the church lists most of them and comments on them. Many were arranged in circular gold receptacles, while dozens of others were lined up in bottles that reminded me of household preserving jars. Some of the ones I saw were:

1. A piece of the bloodstained vestment of Christ.
2. Two thorns from the crown of thorns.
3. A nail from the cross.
4. Pieces of the cross.
5. Some of the blood of Christ in a bottle.
(The guide book says, "Reliquary of the precious blood of Christ.")
6. Seven bones of Simon.
7. The arm bone of Philip.
8. Piece of the arm of St. Anne.
9. Arm of Matthew and portion of his skull.
10. A rib of Peter.
11. A bone of Paul's leg - and Philip's leg - and Timothy's leg.
12. Two of the stones thrown at Stephen.
13. Fingers and wrist of Bartholomew, Matthew and Simeon.
14. A finger of Lucy (?).
15. A lock of Mary's hair.
16. A bone of Basil's (?) leg.
17. The collar bone of Zecharias.
18. A tooth of St. Agnes (?).
19. Pieces of Daniel the Prophet and Lazarus.
20. Some milk of the Virgin Mary in a bottle.
(Guide books call "Reliquary of the milk of the Virgin.")
21. Skull of John the Baptist.
22. The arm of St. Pantaleone.
23. "Reliquary of the miraculous blood that gushed out of the Crucifix of Beyrouth."
24. The arm of St. George. And many, many others.

All of these relics I actually saw and listed on the spot. The guide book that I bought describing them I have good cause to value, for it cost me my evening meal. It happened this way. I was due to cross from Italy to Yugoslavia that night, and as the two countries were very heated about the Trieste question I knew that any Italian lire still in my possession, once over the border, would probably not be changed by Yugoslavia. So I planned to use the last few Italian lire I had on my evening meal and not cash a traveller's cheque until I left Italy. But then the priest showed me this book describing all the "wonders" of St. Mark's. I paid the 400 lire (5/-) and went hungry that night. I repeat that these are a few of the relics that I actually saw because all manner of relics have been listed as existing in Rome and other places in Italy. Some writers have described churches exhibiting:

1. Aaron's rod that budded
2. The head of St. Dennis that he carried some miles after it had been cut off.
3. Five legs (in different places) of the colt upon which Christ rode.
4. The tail of Balaam's ass.
5. The stones the devil tempted the Lord to turn into bread
6. The Virgin's Mary's green petticoat.
7. St. Edmond's toenail
8. The rope Judas used to hang himself.
9. A small roll of butter made from the Virgin Mary's milk.
10. A wing of the angel Gabriel (obtained by the prayers of Pope Gregory VII).
11. The beard of Noah.
12. One of the steps of Jacob's ladder.
13. And the stone the rooster stood on when he crowed at the denial of Christ.

I did not see any of these latter relics, and whether they exist I know not. But I do know that no "wonder" seems too bizarre to be believed by the many credulous people who visit Rome.

Pale Horse - Dark Ages (538 AD to Reformation of 16th Century).

"And when He had opened the fourth seal I heard the voice of the fourth beast say, Come and see. And I looked, and behold a pale horse : and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death and with the beasts of the earth."-Rev. 6:7,8. Death rides on the pale horse; this is the age of persecution, of which time it is claimed 100 million martyrs died for their faith. The Inquisition was set up, crusades were organised against innocent peoples - the Waldenses of the Alps and the inhabitants of the Netherlands. During this reign of apostasy and "Death" frenzied religious persecution was the order of the day.

5th Seal - Reformation Period (1517 AD - Middle 18th Century).

Just as the blood of righteous Abel was said to have cried to God from the ground, so under the 5th Seal the blood of the martyrs sends forth a pathetic appeal for deliverance. The dawn of the Protestant Reformation was the answer to that prayer. Freedom of worship came in many lands and persecutions largely came to an end. The millions of martyrs who had died as common criminals at the hands of Rome were now vindicated before the world and recognised as loyal heroes of the cross, "and white robes were given unto every one of them,"

6th Seal - Sign of Christ's Coming (From about (1755 – End of the World).

"And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casts her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind."-Rev. 6: 12, 13.

On November 1, 1755, occurred what has been called "the most notable earthquake in history," the Lisbon earthquake. Within six minutes 910,000 people perished. Sears' "Wonders of the World" says: "The great earthquake of November 1, 1755, extended over a tract of at least 1,000,000 square miles." On May 19, 1780, the sun became "black as sackcloth." This was the famous Dark Day that extended over large sections of the Northern Hemisphere. Webster's Dictionary tells how at mid-day "persons could not see to read common print in the open air for several hours together. Birds sang their evening songs, disappeared, and became silent; fowls went to roost; cattle sought the barnyard; and candles were lighted in the houses. . . . The true cause of this remarkable phenomenon is not known." Verse 13 met its fulfilment in the remarkable meteoric shower of November 13, 1833-the "Falling Stars." To-day we live between verses 13 and 14 and when it is the next great event to take place is the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ himself. All the prophecies of Scripture declare that it will come very, very soon.

"And the heaven departed as a scroll rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; And said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb : For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?-Rev. 6 :14-17.

7th Seal - "Silence in Heaven."

"And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour." Rev. 8:1.

This time of "silence in heaven" takes place at the coming of Christ. The angels all accompany Christ at His coming and for this short space of prophetic time (in actual time about seven days) the heavens are silent.

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory. " -Matthew 25:31.

God's faithful ones are gathered from all over the broad earth and with the resurrected dead who have loved the Lord (1 Thessalonians 4 :16, 17) are taken home to the glory land. What a thrilling thought that, one day soon, our eyes will behold the Coming of the King and if faithful we will be in the blessed Homeward-going throng.

6. Strange "Goings On"

Rome has a number of beautiful old arches, but the two very well-known ones, of course, are the Arco di Tito, or Arch of Titus, in the Forum, and Constantine's Arch, close by the Colosseum. I stood under the Arch of Titus looking down into the Roman Forum, which lies about sixty feet below the level of modern Rome. By the light of the late afternoon sun its ruined temples and columns were bathed in a rosy radiance reminiscent of the effulgence they once knew in Imperial days. But late that night, as I hurried past the darkened area, the moon shone on these ghosts of temples and decayed public buildings and they looked for all the world like the gleaming bones of some giant skeleton.

The ancient Via Sacra, or Sacred Way, ran right under the Arch of Titus and on down to the centre of The Forum. How many Triumphs had passed where I was standing I knew not; what multitudes of captives from far off lands had passed under this arch to grace a general's homecoming one week, to die as gladiators in the Colosseum the next.

Although this arch was built to commemorate Titus' capture of Jerusalem in AD. 70, the hero didn't live to see its erection, which didn't take place until about 82 A-D. The arch is very interesting to Bible students, for there, on the inner panel, is very clearly depicted the sacred objects that Titus took from the temple in Jerusalem. The seven-branched candlestick and the table of show bread can be easily recognised.

Close by the memorial to Titus is the great Basilica of Constantine, built over the spot where the portico of Nero's Golden House once stood. It was built by Constantine at the time he professed Christianity. East of the Arch of Titus is another reminder of Constantine's reign-the arch named after him. It was erected in 315 AD). In honour of his victory over Maxentius at the Milvian Bridge, near Rome, in 312 the victory which is supposed to have caused the emperor to espouse Christianity. The story says that just before the battle Constantine saw a vision of a cross in the sky with this inscription, "In this sign thou shalt conquer."

Constantine's Great Plan.

There are many reasons to doubt the genuineness of this conversion, as many historians have shown. While professing to be a Christian, he quite often would employ pagan soothsayers to report some augury to him. It has been said by many that the emperor really embarked on an ambitious political scheme to guarantee the success of his reign. Edwardson says:

"Constantine had been watching, he said, those Caesars who had persecuted the Christians, and found that they usually had a bad end, while his father, who was favourable toward them, had prospered. So, when he and Licinius met at Milan in 313 AD they jointly prepared an edict, usually called 'The Edict of Milano,' which gave equal liberty to Christians and pagans. Had Constantine stopped there he might have been honoured as the originator of religious liberty in the Roman Empire, but he had different aims in view. The Roman Empire had been ruled at times by two, four, or even six Caesars jointly, and in his ambition to become the sole Emperor, Constantine, as a shrewd statesman, soon saw that the Christian church had the vitality to become the strongest factor in the Empire. The other Caesars were persecuting the Christians. If he could win them without losing the good will of the pagans he would win the game. He therefore set himself to the task of blending the two religions into one."-"Facts of Faith," p. 109.

In 321 AD Constantine brought down his famous Sunday law, which reads as follows:

"On the venerable Day of the Sun let the magistrates and people residing in cities rest, and let all workshops be closed. In the country, however, persons engaged in agriculture may freely and lawfully continue their pursuits; because it often happens that another day is not so suitable for grain sowing or for vine-planting; lest by neglecting the proper moment for such operations the bounty of heaven should be lost. (Given the 7th day of March, Crispus and Constantine being consuls each of them for the second time.)."-"Codex Justinianus, lib. 3, tit. 12, 3."

The Lutheran writer G. Heggtveit has this to say:

Labored at this time untiringly to unite the worshippers of the old and the new faith in one religion. All his laws and contrivances are aimed at promoting this amalgamation of religions. . . . His injunction that the 'Day of the Sun' should be a general rest day was characteristic of his standpoint. Of all his blending and melting together of Christianity and heathenism none is more easy to see through than this making of his Sunday law. 'The Christians worshipped their Christ, the heathen their sun-god; according to the opinion of the Emperor, the objects for worship, in both religions were essentially the same.' "Kirke historie," pp. 233, 234.

Sun worship on the "Day of the Sun" had been carried on for thousands of years. In Babylon, the sun-god was called Bel, in Phoenicia and Palestine, Baal, and Sun-day was "the world solar holiday of all Pagan names." "North British Review," Vol. 18, p. 409.

Constantine, by his Sunday law, only intended to enforce the popular heathen festival. The very next day after his Sunday law, which was given March 7th, he issued an edict commanding purely heathen superstition:

August Emperor Constantine to Maximus:

Any part of the palace or other public works shall be struck by lightning, let the soothsayers, following old usages, inquire into the meaning of the portent, and let their written words, very carefully collected, be reported to our knowledge. "-A Critical History of Sunday Legislation," p. 19.

Mithra Cult

Roman Sun worship received an extra impetus when it came in contact with Mithraism, a Persian sun cult. Mithra was the favourite deity of the Roman emperors and the army and was known as Sol Invictus "The Invincible Sun." When Nero was initiated into the mysteries of Mithraism he erected the huge "Colossus Neronis," representing the Sun with the features of Nero and long rays about his head. Varius Avitus, emperor of Rome from 218-222, became a high priest of the Sun when only a youth and assumed the name Heliogababus, a Phoenician name (Elagabalus) of the Sun-god. The emperor built a temple to the sun on the Palatine hill where Augustus had erected one long before. "He wore his pontifical vest as high priest of the Sun, with a rich tiara on his head." "Harper's Dictionary of Classical Literature," p. 576.

The emperor Aurelian, 270-275, whose mother was a priestess of the Sun, was especially devoted to Sun worship. The Encyclopedia Britannica mentions that "the sanctification of Sunday and of the 25th of December" was a special feature of Mithraism, and says: "Each day of the week was marked by the adoration of a special planet, the Sun being the most sacred of all." Encyclopaedia Britannica, 14th ed., Vol. 15, p: 620, 621, article "Mithras."

In Chambers' Encyclopedia we find this interesting note: "Parallels to Christianity in Mithraic legend, in Mithraic ceremony, and in Mithraic belief will have been apparent, and other resemblances, as the sanctification of Sunday and of the 25th of December, the day of Mithra, might be cited." -Chambers' Encyclopedia, 1926 ed., Vol. 7, p. 241, article "Mithra."

Speaking of Constantine's ambitious plans to join together Christianity and Mithraism, Dean H. H.-Milman says: "The Jewish, the Samaritan, even the Christian, were to be fused and recast into one great system, of which the Sun was to be the central object of adoration." -"History of Christianity," p. 178. To the end of his life Constantine was still a faithful devotee of sun worship. Dr Lewis quotes from Dr Schaff:

"And down to the end of his life he retained the title and dignity of pontifex maximus, or high-priest of the heathen hierarchy. His coins bore on the one side the letters of the name of Christ, on the other the figure of the sun-god, and the inscription 'Sol Invictus.'" "History of Sunday Legislation," p. 10.

Half a century later the Christian emperor Gratian refused the Pagan vestments and the Pagan title - Pontifex Maximus." But the bishop of Rome in AD. 375. seeing an opportunity to exalt his dignity, became a candidate for the title and vestments of Pontifex Maximus. The "dragon power" of Pagan Rome was simply handing over its power, its capital city and its great authority to the Papacy as stated in Rev. 13. Eusebius in his "Life of Constantine" declares, "In order to render Christianity more attractive to the Gentiles the priests adopted the exterior vestments and ornaments used in the pagan cult."

Cardinal Newman says, "We are told in various ways by Eusebius that Constantine, in order to recommend the new religion to the heathen, transferred into it the outward ornaments to which they had been accustomed to their own. . . . Incense, lamps, and candles, holy water, holy days, turning to the east and images are all of pagan origin, and sanctified by their adoption into the Church. "-Development of Christian Doctrine," p- 371.

During one of my days in Rome I was taken by a priest down under the church of St. Clement and there I was shown an ancient Mithra temple. The altar was still standing and the remains of wild boars which were used in sacrifice could still be seen. This temple was discovered in 1915, and as I inspected it I could not help thinking of Pope Gregory's words to Augustine, "Destroy the idols, never the temples. Sprinkle them with holy water, place in them relics, and let the nations worship in the places they are accustomed to." Memorials of Mithra worship have been found in the very place where the Vatican now stands.

Church Adopts Pagan Sunday.

Pope Sylvester helped Constantine to bring paganism into the church (especially Sunday keeping). Eusebius, who was a bishop at the time of Constantine, speaking of Pope Sylvester, Constantine and himself, writes: "All things whatsoever that it was duty to do on the Sabbath, these we have transferred to the Lord's day (Sunday)."-"A Commentary on the Psalms." Here it is made plain that a human hand, not a divine, changed the Sabbath. Eusebius says, "We have transferred."

It was at the Council of Laodicea, 364 AD, 'that those observing the true Sabbath of God were anathematised. Canon X= begins: "Christians must not Judaize by resting on the Sabbath, but must work on that day rather honouring the Lord's Day; and, if they can, resting then as Christians. But if any shall be found to be Judaizers, let them be Anathema from Christ." "Index Canonum."

The Catholic World," in explaining Rome's part in Changing God's sacred day, says: "The Church took the pagan Sunday and made it the Christian Sunday. And thus the pagan Sunday, dedicated to Balder (Sun God) became the Christian Sunday, sacred to Jesus."

William Frederick writes: "The Gentiles were an idolatrous people who worshipped the sun, and Sunday was their most sacred day. Now, in order to reach the people in this new field, it seems but natural, as well as necessary, to make Sunday the rest day of the church. At this time it was necessary for the church to either adopt the Gentiles' day or else have the gentiles change their day. To change the Gentiles' day would have been an offence and stumbling block to them. The church could naturally reach them better by keeping their day. There was no need in causing an unnecessary offence by dishonouring their days."Quoted in "Facts of Faith," p. 100.

Neander, the celebrated church historian, makes it clear that Sunday was only a human ordinance and that it was introduced after the apostles died. "The festival of Sunday, like all other festivals, was always only a human ordinance, and it was far from the intention of the apostles to establish a divine command in this respect, far from them, and from the early apostolic church, to transfer the laws of the Sabbath to Sunday." (Rose's translation, page 186.) And the "Encyclopaedia Britannica," under article Sunday, makes this interesting observation: Constantine the Great made a law for the whole empire (AD 321) that Sunday would be kept as a day of rest."

Four steps stand out clearly in the matter of the substitution of the first day, Sunday, as a day of rest, in place of the seventh day, Saturday:

1. On March 7, AD 321, the first law setting apart Sunday as a day of rest, was made by the Emperor Constantine. This law ordered all the people in the towns and cities to rest on Sunday, but permitted the farmers to work on that day.
2. In AD 325 Sylvester, bishop of Rome, by his so called apostolic authority, changed the title of the first day of the week, calling it the Lord's day.
3. The Council of Laodicea, held about the year AD 364, decreed that Christians should not rest on Saturday, but should work on that day, and keep Sunday as a rest day.
4. In AD. 538, the Council of Orleans prohibited the country people, or farmers, from working on Sunday.

Rome today not only acknowledges that she tampered with God's Sabbath, but boasts of the fact, as these quotations show. Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 4, p. 153:

"The (Catholic) Church after changing the day of rest from the seventh day of the week to the first made the Third Commandment refer to Sunday as the day to be kept holy as the Lord's Day."

Convert's Catechism of Catholic Doctrine, page 50:

"Question -Why do we observe Sunday instead of Saturday?"

"Answer -Because the Catholic Church, in the Council of Laodicea, transferred the solemnity from Saturday to Sunday."

This catechism received the apostolic blessing of Pope Pius X.

1,000 Dollars Reward - Catholic writer

The Bible commands you to keep the Sabbath day. Sunday is not the Sabbath day; no man dare assert that it is; for the Bible says as plainly as words can make it that the seventh day is the Sabbath, i.e., Saturday; for we know Sunday to be the first day of the week. . . . I will give 1000 dollars to any man who will prove by the Bible alone that Sunday is the day we are bound to keep. . . . The observance of Sunday is solely a law of the Catholic Church. . . . The church changed the Sabbath to Sunday, and all the world bows down and worships upon that day, in silent obedience to the mandates of the Catholic Church. " - Father Enright, of the College of Redemptionist Fathers.

For further statements see Appendix 1, "What the Churches Say About the Sabbath."

7. I Asked the Priest Some Questions

I had always looked forward with keen anticipation to visiting the Basilica of St. John Lateran. So many famous historical events took place right here; in fact, this is the most important of all papal churches throughout the world transcending even St. Peter's.

Beside the church is the old Baptistry of Constantine, where Constantine is said to have received baptism at the hands of Pope Sylvester. The building is quite large and circular, with a diameter of about 60 feet, and the interior is fashioned somewhat like a Roman bath. The water would be about three to four feet deep when the font was filled. I already knew from my study of history and I had noticed references in the guide books to the fact that in the early days of the church of Rome, baptism had been practised as in Bible days that is, by complete immersion.

However, it didn't pay to say too much if one wanted to learn, so I simply asked the priest who was my guide why it was that the font was so deep. "Well," he replied, "in the early days the Church used to baptise converts by putting them right under the water." "Oh!" I said. "But not face and all surely." "Yes," answered the priest, "they baptised by total immersion as our Lord was baptised in Jordan." Well, I had witnessed many baptismal services and had conducted a good number myself, but as I said, it didn't pay to "know too much" or one wasn't told much in Rome. So I simply expressed my surprise and then asked why such baptisms were not conducted that way today by the Roman Church. The priest replied, "The method was never very convenient, so, long ago, our church changed it over to sprinkling."

And that's exactly the truth of the matter. Like any another practice, as we have shown already, Rome does not give a "Thus saith the Lord" for her tampering with God's command, but rather, "We found it more convenient." Notice these interesting quotations regarding the original meaning of baptism:

Dean Stanley:

---For the first thirteen centuries the almost universal practice of baptism was that of which we read in the New Testament, and which is the very meaning of the word 'baptize'-that those who were baptized were plunged, submerged, immersed into the water. That practice is still, as we have seen, continued in Eastern churches. In the Western church still lingers amongst Roman Catholics in the solitary instance of the Cathedral of Milan.... amongst Protestants, in the numerous sect of the Baptists. It lasted long into the Middle Ages. But since beginning of the seventeenth century the practice has become exceedingly rare. With the few exceptions just mentioned, the whole of the Western churches have now substituted for the ancient bath the ceremony of letting fall a few drops of water on the face." - "Christian Institutions," Dean of Westminster, p. 19.

Luther:

"Baptism is a Greek word; in Latin it can be translated immersion as when we plunge something into water that it may be completely covered with water." - "Works of Luther," p. 319, cited in Baptist Encyclopedia.

John Wesley:

"Buried with him," alluding to the ancient practice of baptizing by immersion.-" Explanatory Notes upon the New Testament," John Wesley.

Calvin:

"The very word 'baptize,' however, signifies to immerse; and it is certain that immersion was the practice of the ancient church ... .. Institutes of the Christian Religion," John Calvin, Vol. II, p. 434.

Cardinal Pullus (12th Century):

"Whilst the candidate for baptism in water is immersed, the death of Christ is suggested. Whilst immersed and covered with water, the burial of Christ is shown forth; whilst he is raised from the waters the resurrection of Christ is proclaimed." "Patrol Lat.," p. 315, cited in Baptist Encyclopaedia, article "Baptism."

Our English and Scotch readers will be very interested to know how "sprinkling" came into these two countries. We quote a very interesting section from the

Edinburgh Encyclopedia:

"In this country (Scotland), however, sprinkling was never practised in ordinary cases till after the Reformation . . . . During the persecution of Mary, many persons, most of whom were Scotsmen, fled from England to Geneva, and greedily imbibed the opinions of that Church. In 1556 a book was published at that place, containing "the form of prayers and administration of the sacraments approved by the famous and godly learned man, John Calvin, in which the administrator is enjoined to take water in his hand and lay it upon the child's forehead. These Scottish exiles, who had renounced the authority of the Pope, implicitly acknowledged the authority of Calvin, and, returning to their own country with Knox at their head in 1559, established sprinkling in Scotland. From Scotland this practice made its way into England in the reign of Elizabeth, but was not authorised by the Established Church. In the assembly of divines held at Westminster in 1643 it was keenly debated whether immersion or sprinkling should be adopted. Twenty-five voted for sprinkling and 24 for immersion; and even this small majority was obtained at the earnest request of Sir Lightfoot, who had acquired great influence in the assembly. Sprinkling is therefore the general practice in this country."-Vol. 3, article "Baptism."

It is really hard to believe that since 1643 millions of babies been sprinkled instead of baptised, all because of the vote of one man.

Bible Teaching Very Clear.

The Bible writings on the matter are very clear. We read of our Saviour's baptism in Matthew 3:13, 16,17.

"Then comes Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John to be baptized of him. And Jesus, when he was baptized, went straightway out of the water : and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him: And, lo, a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

After Jesus was immersed, the Scripture says, "he went up straightway out of the water." The Greek word "baptizo" - I baptize or I dip, always implied the complete immersion of the person or thing. I say "thing" because in ancient times the word "baptize" did not necessarily connote something holy as it does today. but was used as an ordinary household word. A Greek woman busy at her trade of dyeing cloth would say she "baptized" the cloth as she completely immersed it. Notice this interesting story of Philip and the treasurer from Ethiopia (Abyssinia) as recorded in the Bible.

"Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same Scripture, and preached unto him Jesus. And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch said, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptised? And Philip said, If you believe with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing. " - Acts 8:35-39.

Other texts make it so clear as to the Bible method of baptism. Paul in Romans 6 :3-6 tells us that it is in the likeness of a burial and that just as Jesus died, was buried and rose again, the believer dies to the old life of sin, is "buried" in the waters of baptism and then rises to a new life. Sprinkling in no way allows this symbol of a burial. The question is often asked, "Is Baptism essential for salvation?" The Word of God unequivocally answers "Yes."

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."-Mark 16:16.

"Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be "born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."-John 3 :5.

To be "born of water" is to be baptized; to be "born of the Spirit" refers to the gift of the Holy Spirit that is sent to every believer at Baptism. The Scripture says without these two you "cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

"Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Acts 2:38,39.

"And now why tarriest thou? Arise, and be baptized. and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord." - Acts 22:16.

And so I moved away out of the Baptistry of Constantine, interested in seeing here one of the evidences of the early forms of Christian practice before it was corrupted by the Papal system. Later, in Europe, I was to see many more ancient baptismal fonts and in London. In an Anglican church not fifty yards off the Strand, there is a perfectly preserved font and I have a picture of the vicar dipping a jug into it to carry water to the church to use for a "christening." Oh that men would only heed the teachings of the Bible and away with the traditions of man. (Matt. 15:3,6,9).

8. The "Mother" Church

After inspecting, with great interest, the Baptistery of the Church of St. John Lateran, I approached the church from the front, especially noting the two inscriptions at the door, stating that this church is the "Mother and head of all the churches in Rome and in the World." It reminded me a lot of this church power mentioned in the prophecies of Revelation 17 as being the "Mother". The last verse of the chapter identifies the church with the city of her power-the city that ruled over the kings of earth when John wrote the Book-none but Rome.

I passed in through the huge doors into the church itself. It is impossible to convey all that one experiences in those first few minutes. While the eye is trying to take in the glory of such costly treasures the mind is trying to grope its way back through the ages; Past the Fifth Lateran Council, that convened just before Luther's dramatic appearance, where the Hussites of Bohemia were practically disposed of for ever. Past the famous Third Council, perhaps back to the very beginnings of the famous old church.

One is greatly impressed by the great gold ceiling of the nave, a beautiful work of the 16th century by Michelangelo. The crossed keys and tiara of Pius IV are shown in the centre. Above the altar of the sacrament is supposed to be a piece of the wood from the table of the Last Supper in Jerusalem. Under the chancel arch is the papal altar, with gold work making it worth nearly one million pounds. The tomb of Innocent III, one of the popes remembered most in connection with the atrocities and persecutions of the Dark Ages, is in this church. I remembered one of his boastful utterances as I stood by his tomb at the right of the transept:

"Therefore by this present apostolical writing we give you a strict command that, by whatever means you can, you destroy all these heresies and expel from your diocese all who are polluted with them. You shall exercise the rigour of the ecclesiastical power against them and all those who have made themselves suspected by associating with them. They may not appeal from your judgments, and if necessary you may cause the princes and people to suppress them with the sword." "A Source Book for Medieval History," p. 210.

This was the man who set up the diabolical Inquisition where, in Spain alone, Llorente reckons as the sufferers 31,912 burnt alive and 291,450 so-called penitents forced into submission "by water, weights, fire, pulleys and screws and all the apparatus by which the body could be racked exquisitely without giving up the ghost." It was also Innocent III who introduced auricular confession.

The church of course claims its "wonders" along with all the others I had seen. Apparently Christ is supposed to have walked right out of the side of the wall at the time of its dedication by Constantine, but this remarkable "miracle" was not discovered until the 13th century, that fanciful period that was so great a manufacturer of legends. Its links with sun worship can still be seen in the church. In one of the main paintings a phoenix bird is shown seated on the Tree of Life in the heavenly Jerusalem. The phoenix featured a lot in early sun worship and is described as visiting the altar of the sun each year. Perhaps a very interesting statement by one of the "Catholic Fathers," Clement of Alexandria, could be used since some are always anxious to fly to the "Fathers" for their support of Sunday sacredness. These "Fathers" were tainted with sun worship and other pagan nonsense as this quotation will show:

A certain bird called phoenix; of this there is never but one at a time; and that lives 500 years. And when the time of its dissolution draws near that it must die, it makes itself a nest of frankincense, and myrrh, and other spices into which when its Vine is fulfilled, it enters and dies. But its flesh putrifying, breeds a certain worm, which being nourished with the juice of the dead bird, brings forth feathers; and when it is grown to a perfect state it takes up the nest in which the bones of its parent lie, and carries it from Arabia into Egypt. And flying in open day in the sight of all men, lays upon the altar of the sun, and so returns from whence it came."

Just imagine religious leaders to-day being obliged to quote from men like Clement of Alexandria in support of Sunday sacredness. And yet some do-for just a little while ago when I was having public lectures in a certain town, a Doctor of Divinity of the Presbyterian Church assured a public meeting at the church, "Of course we cannot find proof for Sunday in the Bible. But we can find it in the early 'Fathers'." And then he spent a good deal of time quoting from Clement of Alexandria (the writer of the phoenix fable above). These "Catholic Fathers" were steeped in sun worship and, of course, one will find Sunday keeping there. That is just where it did come from.

Lateran Councils

Here in this very famous church the great Lateran Councils took place-many of them directed against the people of God. It was at the third Lateran Council, in 1179 that the Papacy aroused itself collectively to extirpate heresy. The Fourth Council (1215) saw the introduction of auricular confession by Innocent III and the enacting of a canon for the total eradication of "heresy." In 1208 Innocent established the Inquisition and in 1204 De Montfort began the massacre of the Albigenses. Great crusades against the Waldenses were also organised at this time and "a plenary remission of all sins" promised to those who took part in the crusades. The Fifth Lateran Council (1512-1517) had twelve sessions. In the second session Cardinal Cajetan introduced the new thought that the Catholic Church was really the New Jerusalem, the Holy City of the Book of Revelation, and in the fourth session, presided over by Pope Julius II, the pope was acclaimed another God on earth. The well-known sentence comes down to us from this session, "For thou art our shepherd, thou art our physician, thou art our ruler, thou art our husbandman, thou, finally, another God on earth." Mansi, Vol. 32, Col. 761.

Waldenses.

The Waldensian people feature a lot in the Councils held here in the Lateran Church; it was here that papal bulls were hurled against them and crusades organised to "wipe them from the face of the earth." Later I was to visit the historic haunts of these faithful mountain folk. Sheltered away in the Alps of Italy, Switzerland and France, these people upheld the torch of Truth for centuries. Their emblem was, and still is today, a lighted candlestick with this motto, "Lux Lucet in Tenebris" (The light shines in darkness").

While Constantine purchased converts and the multitudes were satisfied to follow the popular church of the day into the pagan practices already described, the faithful of God were forced by persecution to withdraw themselves to these mountain retreats. Waldensian believers were dispersed right through Italy, France, Austria, Switzerland, Germany, Hungary, Poland and Bohemia, with constant contact with similar groups in England and Holland. Their principal centre was at Milan. Later, after persecution increased, the centre was in the Alpine valleys, for persecution did not reach its height until after the Reformation.

9. The Waldenses

I journeyed out some fifty kilometres from Turin to Torre Pellice, the centre of the Waldensian district. This away at the "top" of Italy, in the Alps of Piedmont where Spain, Italy and France join. After coming from the modern cities of the industrial north Italy it seemed like entering another world to come these villages of the valleys that have not changed in a thousand years. The houses are built of stone, even being roofed with flat stones from the hillsides. The chestnut harvest was in progress when I arrived, long slopes of hills covered with brown as the trees had dropped their nuts and villagers with large sacks picked them up for market.

The only person in Torre Pellice who could speak English was a school teacher from a little school still higher up in the Angrogna Valley and she gladly consented to guide me round the mountain fastnesses and right through into the innermost Angrogna valley. We visited the famous monument of Sibaud at Bobbio Pellice. This monument is a reminder of the oath of loyalty to God taken by the Waldenses upon their return to the valleys after the greatest of the persecutions, and the stones of the monument each contain the name of a city where the Waldensian faith was firmly established at that time. I noted with interest that the name of Rome was there too.

Some of the valleys-there are seven altogether run spokes from the hub of a wheel. Each valley has own secret entry and exit, its caves and mighty but they are so related that one opens into the other forming a network of fortresses. Experts have declared that the highest of engineering skill could scarcely have devised such impregnable fortresses. It is well to remember that the Vaudois were never conquered their valleys, but on each occasion of a terrible massacre they had fallen prey to some papal promise or peace terms which were never respected, for Rome openly claims that there is no need to keep promises to heretics.

My guide took me to the Pra del Tor, far up in the heart of the mountains, and showed me the early training colleges of the barbes, or pastors. From this place missionaries were sent all through darkened Europe. Copies of the Bible were laboriously written out by hand (on a great flat stone table top which I was later to see) and taken by men disguised as pedlars to the cities, where they were cautiously displayed to the interested. One who lived for a time, in more recent days- in these valleys has written:

"BY patient, untiring labour, sometimes in the deep, dark cavern of the earth, by the light of torches, the sacred Scriptures were written out, verse by verse, chapter by chapter. . . . Angels from heaven surrounded these faithful workers. . . . their garments were so prepared as to conceal their greatest treasure - the precious manuscripts of the Scriptures. These, the fruit of months and years of toil, they carried with them, and whenever they could do so without exciting suspicion, they cautiously placed some portion in the way of those whose hearts seemed open to receive the truth. . . . To have made known the object of their mission would have ensured its defeat; therefore they carefully concealed their real character. Every minister possessed a knowledge of some trade or profession, and the missionaries prosecuted their work under cover of a secular calling. Usually they chose that of a merchant or pedlar. . . . They carried silks, jewellery and other articles, at that time not easily purchasable save at distant marts; and they were welcomed as merchants where they would have been spurned as missionaries. . . . They secretly carried about with them copies of the Bible, in whole or in part; and whenever an opportunity presented they called the attention of their customers to these manuscripts. Often an interest to read God's word was thus awakened, and some portion was gladly left with those who desired to receive it." - "The Great Controversy, pages 69, 70, 71.

We visited the monument of Chanforan, erected in 1532. This solid shaft of flint taken from the mountains, and with an open Bible superimposed, was the Waldensian monument to the Reformation. Under a little was a natural chapel that could hold 300 people, and it was here that the people of this particular valley worshipped during the times of severest persecution. How different it was from the haughty Lateran Church that sent the persecutions to them. Here was no million pound altar of gold-only a rock ledge for the preacher to rest his Bible. There were no relic chapels and gilded ceiling-just the "rocks of God" that daily were their refuge. On two occasions the armies of Rome found the spot and in each case lit huge fires over the opening and suffocated all within. Altogether, in the persecutions, at least one million Waldenses are known to have died for their faith.

"In 1544 the treacherous and heartless Catholic leader, d'Oppede, caused the terrible butchery of thousands of Waldenses. At Cabrieres he wrote a note to the people, saying that if they would open the gates of their city he would do them no harm. They, in good faith, opened the gates and d'Oppede cried out: "Kill them all" Men, women and children were massacred or burned alive. In 1655 there was another massacre of Waldenses. After the Catholic leaders had made several vain attempts to break into the fastnesses of the mountains where the Waldenses lived, and were defeated, the Marquis of Pianesse wrote the various Waldensian towns to entertain certain regiments of soldiers to show their good faith. These Christian people, who always had such sacred regard for their own word, never seemed to learn that it is a fundamental Catholic doctrine that Catholics need not, and should not, keep faith with heretics when the interest of the church is at stake. After they had sheltered the soldiers, and fed them of their scanty store, a signal was given at 4 a.m., April 24, 1655, and the butchery began.

"Little children, Leger says, were torn from their mothers, dashed against the rocks, and cast carelessly away. The sick or the aged, both men and women, were either burned in their houses, or hacked in pieces; or mutilated, half murdered, and flayed alive, they were exposed in a dying state to the heat of the sun, or to flames, or to ferocious beasts." -Quoted in "Facts of Faith," p. 132.

England Intervenes

The massacre of 1655 aroused most of Europe in sympathy with the Waldenses; in fact, it was Cromwell. in England whose energetic action ended that persecution. In the dead of Alpine winter the massacre of "Bloody Easter" began. The Duke of Savoy on January 25, 1655, published an edict commanding all Waldenses to become Catholics. On April 17th 15,000 troops marched in and the atrocities began. This was the massacre that inspired England's great poet Milton to write "On the Late Massacher in Piemont," which has been described as one of the most powerful sonnets ever written.

"Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered Saints, whose bones
Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains cold,
Even them who kept thy truth so pure of old.
When all our Fathers worshiped Stocks and Stones.
Forget not : in thy book record their groans
Who were thy Sheep, and in their ancient Fold
,Slayn by the bloody Piemontese that rolled Mother with Infant down the Rocks.
The moans. The Vales redoubled to the Hills, and they
To Heaven. Their martyred blood and ashes so
O're all the, Italian fields where still doth sway
The triple tyrant: that from these may grow
A hundred fold, who having learned thy way,
Early may fly the Babylonian wo."

A wave of protest swept over Europe. Switzerland, Sweden, Germany, England and Holland sent offerings to help the survivors. The British Government sent Sir Samuel Morland to interpose. Morland addressed the Duke of Savoy in a powerful plea which included these words:

"The Angels are surprised with horror! men are amazed! Heaven itself seems to be astonished with the cries of dying men, and the very earth to blush, being discoloured with the gore - blood of so many innocent persons! Do not, O thou most high God, do not thou take that revenge which is due to so great wickedness and horrible villanies! Let thy blood, O Christ, wash away this blood!"

At Turin in June, and Geneva in July, Morland continued his appeals until the edict was withdrawn in August, 1655. In 1686 another terrible edict was issued against them from the Lateran Church in Rome. It was the same story of treachery. Gabriel of Savoy himself wrote them:

"Do not hesitate to lay down your arms; and be assured that if you cast yourselves upon the clemency of his royal highness, he will pardon you, and that neither your persons nor those of your wives or children shall be touched. "- "Israel of the Alps," p. 445.

The Waldenses accepted the official document in good faith and opened their fortifications. Priests and soldiers rushed in and butchered men, women and children in cold blood and left the towns of the valleys smouldering ruins. The historian Wylie says:

"The school of the prophets in the Pra del Tor is razed. No smoke is seen rising from cottage, and no psalm is heard ascending from dwelling or sanctuary, . . . and no troop of worshipers, obedient to the summons of the Sabbath bell, climbs the mountain paths . . . History of the Waldenses," p. 173.

Attitude Still the Same.

Is Rome repentant for all this? On the contrary, she still proudly cites it as evidence of her power. Notice these statements from the Catholic "Western Watchman":

"Our heroes are the Duke of Alva and Catherine de Medici. They knew the Huguenots, and they drove them off the continent. You cannot excite any pity in our souls by whining accounts of Catholic atrocities in the 17th century. We have never written a line in extenuation or palliation of the Inquisition. We never thought it needed a defence." - November 21, 1912.

"Protestantism-we would draw and quarter it. We would impale it and hang it up for the crows to eat. We would tear it with pincers, and fire it with hot irons. We would fill it with molten lead, and sink it in a hundred fathoms of hell fire."

"We have always defended the persecution of the Huguenots, and the Spanish Inquisition. . . . When she thinks it good to use physical force, she will use it. . . . But will the Catholic Church give bond that she will not persecute at all. Will she guarantee absolute freedom and equality of all churches and all faiths? The Catholic Church gives no bonds for her good behaviour." - December 24, 1908.

What a memorable few days I spent in these mountains. My guide showed me places in the valleys where the Waldenses on occasions were able to defend themselves. Often the mists would roll up the gorges, enabling them to escape. We stood at one place where my guide showed me how her forefathers had been trapped on a little hillside overlooking a deep ravine up which Rome's armies were marching. Suddenly heavy mists rolled up and soon the armies in the vale below were completely enshrouded. To add to their confusion the Waldenses on the heights above rolled great stones down upon them and the rout was complete. How real it all seemed to me, for even as the girl explained it to me the heavy fog swirled up the gorge and soon we could only see a few paces ahead of where we stood.

I was shown the Pellice River, which the present day inhabitants of the valleys still look upon with special respect. In times of melting snow this mountain torrent often would work in the favour of the persecuted, cutting off the pursuer. On one occasion the captain of the papal forces lined up all the villagers who were caught at Torre Pellice and at sword point they were made to watch the river and be ready to see their kinsmen's bodies from up in the mountains come floating down the river. Plans miscarried a little and the captain who gave the order was the only person to float down on that occasion. He slipped from a rock higher up and the mountain torrent brought his body down, the sight of which produced a great cheer from the watchers on the bridge.

I left Torre Pellice early one morning in the dark and walked to the little railway station. The rain was pouring down upon me and it was by the glare of the lightning that I found my way. The temperamental weather of the mountains that in the past had conspired to save lives was doing its best to give me pneumonia, and since I was more or less in trains for the next two days I had to just let my clothes and shoes dry on me.

10. St. Peter's and the Vatican

St. Peter's Cathedral completely dominates the Roman landscape. Its great dome, rising 448 feet, can be seen from most places in the city. The dome itself is a masterpiece of architecture and the most audacious building scheme that had ever been attempted. The diameter is 142 feet-the same as that of the Pantheon -and Michelangelo spent the last sixteen years of his life making it "the most glorious miracle of art and beauty in the world."

The church is the largest in the world; its vestibule alone is 468 feet long and 66 feet high; but the church proper just dwarfs the visitor completely. Some authorities claim that 80,000 persons can be accommodated here. This figure seems a little high to me, but in any case many thousands can stand in this great building. I say stand because in none of the churches of Rome did I see seats-there just aren't any. Everything inside is in proportion to the large dimensions of the building. The statuary is gigantic in size. What appear to be large paintings here and there turn out to be beautiful mosaic work as one draws nearer. There are no paintings here-all are beautiful mosaics.

Of course, the church has to have its relics and the most important ones here are "the spear with which Longinus pierced the Saviour's side," a portion of "the true Cross," a veil bearing the impression of Christ's face and the head of Andrew. The so-called tomb of Peter is here too, and the many faithful gather round it to pray and to rain down upon it their gifts of money-paper money was lying all round the crypt.

I saw the world's most beautiful sculpture, Michelangelo's "Pieta," showing the Saviour in His mother's arms after being taken down from the cross. Truly, it is a lovely thing. Just opposite is a huge work showing Ignatius Loyola, founder of the Jesuits, treading on the neck of Luther and the latter, twined about with snakes, is being pushed into Hell. I saw the sign of the peacock, an old heathen symbol that I had seen in Ceylon and Babylon and Pergamos, entered right here in the church. And, of course, the high altar faces the east. A little further along is the old statue of Peter (once Jupiter) with its well-worn toe.

Being one of the five Basilicas, the church has a "Holy Door" on which the pope knocks with a little gold hammer once every twenty-five years and the souls of all in purgatory escape to the realms of the blessed. I have often wondered, if he can bring them such release so easily, why not open the door a bit more often-say, every day.

Link With The Reformation

The present church was begun in 1506 and finished in 1626, and it is interesting to remember that in one way it was the building of this edifice, that actually sparked off the Protestant Reformation. It happened like this. Funds for St. Peter's were running short before the building was finished so the pope offered a plenary indulgence to all who contributed to the work. Boniface IX (1389-1404) had issued several papal bulls of plenary indulgences to aid in the building of the dome at the Milan cathedral and now the present pope had "Tax Lists" printed giving the price of indulgence for each particular sin, for each class of person, itemising "simony," "murder," "rape ... .. theft" and many others. In the British Museum are two volumes containing the pope's Penitential Taxes. They were taken from the archives of Rome at the death of Innocent XII. Tetzl was commissioned by the pope to journey through Europe selling indulgences and to proclaim that:

"The souls confined in purgatory, for whose redemption indulgences are purchased, as soon as the money tinkles in the chest, instantly escape from the place of torment and ascend into heaven. . . . For twelve pence you may redeem the soul of your father out of purgatory; and are you so ungrateful that you will not rescue your parent from torment?" -"History of Reign of Emperor Charles V," Vol., p. 460.

The "History of the House of Austria" has this to say:

"With a view to replenish the treasury of the church, Leo X had recourse to the sale of indulgences, an expedient which had been first invented by Urban II, and continued by his successors; Julius II had bestowed indulgences on all who contributed towards building the church of St. Peter, at Rome, and Leo founded his grant on the same pretence. But . . . this scandalous traffic had been warmly opposed in Germany. These indulgences were held forth as pardons for the most enormous crimes; they were publicly put up for sale, and even forced upon the people, and Tetzl and his coadjutors indulged themselves in drunkenness, and every other species of licentiousness, in which they squandered their share of the profits, and not infrequently produced indulgences as stakes at the gaming table."-Vol. 1, p. 384.

A gentleman of Saxony who had heard Tetzell at Leipsig inquired whether the indulgences also covered sins that a person might wish to commit in the future. On being assured that it did, he said, "I want to 'Lake some slight revenge on one of my enemies. I will give you ten crowns if you will give me a letter of indulgence that shall bear me harmless." The price was finally set at thirty crown. Shortly after, this gentleman, with his servants, laid wait for Tetzel in a wood near Jutterboch, gave him a beating and carried off the chest of indulgence money. When Tetzel brought action the gentleman showed the letter by Tetzel which exempted him beforehand from any responsibility. Duke George ordered the man to be acquitted.

Luther's Stand

The sale of indulgences was causing a schism through Europe and it was Tetzel's appearance at Wittenberg that brought things to a head. On 31st October, 1517, Dr Martin Luther, following the custom of the times with regard to important announcements, nailed his 95 theses against the sale of indulgences on the beautiful Castle Church at Wittenburg. In two weeks these propositions had circulated over all Germany; in a month over all Europe, and the Reformation was born.

Vatican Treasury and Library

From a door in St. Peter's I went into the Vatican Treasury and there, in a few moments, saw more wealth than one would see in a lifetime. There were great thrones made of gold and a profusion of crosses crusted with gems of all kinds. There was so much gold heaped up that the eye grew tired of it, although the pearls and jewels, by reason of their diversity of beauty, still attracted my gaze. I saw one of the pope's tiaras, its three tiers showing that he is "King of Heaven, king of earth and king of the lower regions (hell)." As I have often said, we dispute his claims to the first two, but are satisfied to allow the last, if he chooses to claim that way.

The Vatican contains 1100 rooms. I know it's an awful lot of rooms for a bachelor, but since they are heaped with rare treasures and art works, they really constitute a great museum. The Hall of Maps shows many of the early impressions of what the world looked like. These are ranged one after another along a great corridor. The Egyptian section would rival even the British Museum's collection from Egypt. The Vatican Library is too wonderful for words and simply brings tears to the eyes. Every inch of the walls and ceilings and pillars of this 1250 feet long room is covered with beautiful frescoes. The pictures on one side, incidentally, represent the different council the church has called to condemn heresy. The famous Codex Vaticanus can also be seen here.

I saw so many priceless treasures in the Vatican that, in my mind, each one seemed to tumble over the last and crowd the others out. But I did carry away a clear impression of something really exquisite. It was a tall polished shaft of what looked to me like Swedish black granite and on the top in pure gold was the Good Shepherd with crook, leading a flock of sheep. The workmanship was remarkable. A little card said it was a present from the Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria. Among the presents from rulers to, the various popes I saw so many from Spain that I could not but think that maybe to-day that impoverished country wouldn't mind a bit of reverse lend-lease.

11. A Monk's Eyes Are Opened

As I entered the Church of the Holy Stairs, just opposite St. John Lateran, it seemed as though time had gone back four hundred years and I stood there in the days when Luther climbed this famous stairway on his knees. The great events of those days came quickly to mind. By a decretal, an indulgence had been promised by the pope to all who would ascend "Pilate's Staircase" upon their knees. This is supposed to be the old staircase in Jerusalem on which the Saviour trod, and then some time, somehow, it just flew through the air and happened to land at Rome. Luther was about halfway up when a voice seemed to shout at him, "The just shall live by faith." He rose to his feet in shame and fled from the place. His eyes had been opened and from then on Luther saw more clearly the useless place of human work in the plan of salvation.

As I watched I saw about thirty or forty men and women kneeling on the stairs and gradually working their way upwards, praying certain prayers on each step. How I longed that they too might hear the Voice of God speak to them the words from Romans 1 : 17 that Luther heard. Near the top of the stairs was a step with a circle of crystal a few inches in diameter, and under this it is claimed some of the blood drops of Christ can be seen. It was being kissed frantically, and it has been for hundreds of years. As with the site of the queue waiting to kiss Peter's toe, so now my mind went wandering about the elementary laws of hygiene, etc., but the people still kept moving upwards the meanwhile.

Faux Pas.

Being anxious to see the relics at the top of the Holy Stairs and not wishing to climb up on my knees, I set out to walk up. Apparently this just isn't done, and I had only got about halfway up when men and women stood up where they were, gesticulating wildly, and barred my way. Priests came running from everywhere, so I walked back down and with a very serious expression said, "Wery sorry." They muttered something in the vicinity of "stupid Americano," and so New Zealand honour was spared at the expense of our Yankee friends. The priests then showed me another stairway up the side that would still let me get to the top.

At the top are the relics, and a list on the wall itemises them thus:

1. Fragment of the wood of the cross. Sandals of Christ.
2. Piece of the table of the last supper. A thorn from the crown of thorns.
3. Fragment of the column of Flagellation. Head of St. Prassede.
4. Fragment bones of the Holy Innocent.
5. Fragment bones of St. Lorengo and a coal and ashes and blood.
6. Tooth and girdle of John the Baptist. Hair of John the Evangelist.
7. Beard of St. Bartholomew.
8. Piece of the beard of Matthew.
9. Portion of the cross of Andrew.
10. Relics of St. Martiri, Mariano, Diodoro and companions.

Luther Shocked

Luther's visit to Rome was a tremendous shock to him. "Everywhere he looked upon scenes that filled him with astonishment and horror. He saw that iniquity existed among all classes of the clergy. He heard indecent jokes from prelates, and was filled with horror at their awful profanity, even during mass. As he mingled with the monks and citizens he met dissipation, debauchery. Turn where he would, in the place of sanctity he found profanation."-"The Great Controversy," p. 125.

"No one can imagine," he wrote, "what sins and infamous actions are committed in Rome; they must be seen and heard to be believed. Thus they are in the habit of saying, 'If there is a hell Rome is built over it: it is an abyss whence issues every kind of sin.' " - "D'Aubigne," History of Reformation, b. 2, chap. 6.

Of course, Luther at this time was a good son of the church. An ordained priest, he had been called from the cloister to a professorship in the University of Wittenberg. Even when he opposed Tetzel and the indulgence system some time later, it was still far from his mind to leave the church. He hoped to reform from the inside. Upon his return from Rome, Luther was granted the degree of Doctor of Divinity and he earnestly continued the study of the Bible that he had begun a little time before as the result of a chance finding of a small copy in the university library. In those days the Bible was not studied even by the clergy; in fact, they were discouraged from so doing. All kinds of writings of past popes and prelates, and, of course, the writings of the early "Fathers," were studied, but that was all. When Luther first found the Bible he didn't know what it was.

Church Admits It Needs Reform

No one will deny that the church needed reform badly. That Rome admits this will be seen from a few statements from "A Popular History of the Catholic Church" that I bought a few months ago from the Catholic stall at the Waikato Winter Show. These are not biased statements by some ex-priest, which I never feel are very fair after all, but rather are they statements taken from just one chapter of this book described thus by the Catholic Digest: "This is the best book we know for a brief history of the Church."

"This money was all of it badly needed. It was needed for the rival popes to fight each other once Christendom had reached that unhappy period, in which a pope at Rome and a pope at Avignon divided its allegiance. And, it must be stated, not a little of this money frequently found its way into the pockets of the popes' relations."

"If they were good popes and wise rulers the whole Church might profit, if they were foolish, or weak, or-as was next to be the case-bad and vicious, the papacy would suffer loss of prestige as never before."

"In August they announced that Urban was no pope. They had elected him simply to escape the death that otherwise awaited them. . . . All the cardinals-with one exception-recognised Clement as pope. What was Christendom to do? How was it to decide between the conflicting accounts of the rivals? And how was it to judge on which occasions this same body of cardinals had really, by its unanimous vote, elected a pope, in April (Urban) or in September (Clement)?"

"The miserable truth has to be faced that no pope, on either side, was at all worthy of his office. They were, all of them, little better than partisan leaders of rival factions and in the end the Church as a whole, tired of both, repudiated their authority, and, coming together in a self-styled General Council at Pisa (1409), elected a third pope of its own, Alexander V."

"Benedict was shifty and dishonest."

"John XXIII was a man so bad and so utterly unworthy

"Rome was the centre of all the new vices, and the popes were among their foremost practitioners."

"Sixtus IV is commonly held to bear a heavy part of the responsibility for the scandals of the next sixty weeks. . . . The worst of cardinals, once he was elected pope, developed a new loyalty to his office, a loyalty set grotesquely, it may be, in the disorder of his personal immorality."

"Cardinal Rodrigo Borgia was still as openly scandalous as when, a young cardinal of twenty-eight, Pius II had rebuked him for it. This is the man notorious as Alexander VI"

"In Julius 11 (1503-1513) the Holy See had what it had long needed-a pope who was a first-rate diplomatist, fierce, ruthless and inflexible."

"The successor of Pope Julius was the cardinal Giovanni de' Medice, Pope Leo X (1513-1521). The record of his career epitomises the time in all its tendencies. He had received the red hat from Pope Innocent VIII at the age of thirteen."

"Adrian VI set himself to the task and first began to demonetise the church, which Leo X had run like a bank. Ten thousand applications for favours, privileges, and appointments awaited the new pope." - Extracts taken from chap. VI. "A Popular History of the Catholic Church."

And then, after all that, they have the effrontery to head the next chapter, which deals with the Reformation, "The Protestant Revolt." Remember the above quotations are not taken from some Protestant writer, but from a Catholic historian who is described on the inside page of the cover as "universally regarded as the outstanding Catholic Church historian writing in English to-day."

Luther began preaching against the doctrine of indulgences, and it wasn't long before he was summoned to appear at Rome to answer the charge of heresy. His friends succeeded in having the place changed to Augsburg, but even before the hearing Luther had been branded a heretic without even the chance to be heard. At Augsburg, without trying to prove him in error, the cardinal simply called out continually, "Retract, retract."

With many enemies planning his death, Luther left Augsburg on horseback early one morning, and before the legate learned of the departure he was beyond the reach of his persecutors.

Where Many Stand To-day.

Luther still loved the church of Rome, but the hour of final separation was approaching. Satan tried to confuse him with the thought, "How is it that all of Christendom can be wrong and you be right?" or, as Luther says in his diary, it seemed as though Satan said, "Art thou alone wise? Can everyone else be mistaken?" It seems as though Satan still uses that argument a lot today, for I know that often when people decide to obey God and keep His Sabbath rather than Rome's Sunday, the devil seeks to discourage with those words.

Luther loved his church and, even with all the Bible evidence before him, still found it difficult to make the final break. He was sure by now that the "pope was Antichrist," but he still found it difficult to turn against the teaching of his early years. At last the Bible truth was too strong for him to delay any longer. Luther could see that it was really Christ he must worship and not a Church system, and Christ's truth contained in the Bible meant everything compared with the man made ideas of some church. Many people come to the parting of the ways and must make that same decision today. Luther says, 'I was so I fought with myself and with Satan, till Christ, by his own infallible word, fortified my heart against those doubts.'

Later, when Luther stood before the Diet (council) at Worms, he was able to make that memorable speech first in German and then in Latin. We quote the last portion:

"Unless therefore I am convinced by the testimony of Scripture or by the clearest reasoning, unless I am persuaded by means of the passages I have quoted, and unless they thus render my conscience bound by the word of God, I cannot and I will not retract. For it is unsafe for a Christian to speak against his conscience. Here I stand, I can do no other; may God help me. Amen".

What wonderful memories that visit to "Pilate's Staircase" brought back to me that day. O that God would give us more men and women of the stamina of Luther today.

12. The Jesuit Priest's Question

My Audience With the Pope

My one-time priest friend in Rome, with the help of several others, managed to arrange for me to have an audience with the pope. He was not in the Vatican, but spending a little time at his summer palace at the Castel Gandolfo. Pope Pius XII is certainly a remarkable man for his years. He has tremendous vitality and a very enjoyable sense of humour. He is a gifted man and speaks seven languages quite well, although his English is a little faltering. Pius is a skilful diplomat and for many years was Papal Nuncio to Germany. Before his election in 1939 he was Papal Secretary of State from 1930 onwards. It was quite an occasion for me to meet him and be able to observe this man at close range. It is considered by many that when Pius dies he is fairly certain to be created a saint very soon on account of his great veneration for Mary. It is said that no previous pope has done so much for the cause of Mariolatry. It was in 1950 that Pius discovered that Mary had been taken in bodily form to heaven so the Dogma of the Bodily Assumption of the Virgin Mary was pronounced.

Church of the Jesuits.

We have, in this brief sketch of Rome, touched on only one-hundredth part of the renowned spots that could be mentioned, but we must include just brief mention of one more. The Church of Gesu is the famous Jesuit church, and it is here that one finds the "preserved arm" of Francis Xavier that was recently flown to Japan for a public ceremony and, of course, the body of Ignatius Loyola, founder the Jesuit order. A sculpture group in the building shows the church holding a cross in her hand and treading underfoot Protestant "heretics."

The Jesuits, of course, are a militant order and have always been violently opposed to Protestantism. The oath that each member takes to wipe out Protestantism makes terrible reading indeed. Their political machinations have caused kings and rulers to expel them from different countries on many, many occasions.

Not long ago it was a Jesuit priest in this very church who asked a question that caused quite a sensation in Rome and greatly embarrassed the Protestants; in fact, it silenced the Protestant clergy completely. He was preaching on the authority of the Roman Church and simply asked why it was that Protestants who refuse to follow Rome all the way, nevertheless do follow in respect to honouring Rome's Sunday. He asked for anyone to show one text from the Bible that says Sunday is a holy day and went on to remind his hearers that it is solely a "holy" day of the Catholic Church. His question then was quite logical: why should Protestants accept this Catholic innovation and reject all others?

Cardinal Gibbons' Challenge

Of course, Catholic writers have been just as pointed from time to time. The renowned Cardinal Gibbons in the "Catholic Mirror" actually issued a challenge to Protestants that has caused many "re~dears" amongst ministers. To quote a portion of his challenge:

"The Protestants of the world, the Adventists excepted, with the same Bible as their cherished and infallible teacher, have rejected the day named for His worship by God, and assumed, in apparent contradiction of His command, a day for His worship never once referred to for that purpose in the pages of that Sacred Volume."

"Hence the conclusion is inevitable; viz., that of those who follow the Bible as their guide . . . Seventh-day Adventists have the exclusive weight of evidence on their side, whilst the Biblical Protestant has not a word in self-defence for his substitution of Sunday for Saturday."

"What Protestant can, after perusing these articles, with a clear conscience, continue to disobey the command of God, enjoining Saturday to be kept, which command his teacher, the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, records as the will of God?"

"The only recourse left the Protestants is either to retire from Catholic territory where they have been squatting for three centuries and half, and accepting their own teacher, the Bible, in good faith, commencing forthwith to keep the Saturday, the day enjoined by the Bible from Genesis to Revelation; or, abandoning the Bible as their sole teacher, cease to be squatters . . . and taking out letters of adoption as citizens of the kingdom of Christ on earth-His Church-be no longer victims of self-contradiction."

"Reason and common sense demand the acceptance of one or the other of these alternatives; either Protestantism and the keeping holy of Saturday or Catholicity and the keeping of Sunday. Compromise is impossible. "-Cardinal Gibbons in the "Catholic Mirror."

Surely it is time that we as Protestants did something for God in this matter. If we have "been squatting on Catholic territory"-and many have-shall we not resolve to come back to the Bible and honour the God of creation and the memorial day that he has given-the Sabbath? This is much more than a matter of which day a person keeps, but rather which Master a person serves-Jesus the Lord of the Sabbath or the pope who confesses to tampering with it and giving us Sunday. See Romans 6:16)

What Are You Going to Do?

God's Word assures us that, as we draw near the coming of Jesus, this matter of the true Sabbath will be made plain to everyone. It will constitute the great test that will show where our allegiance lies. It will divide the peoples of the world in two great camps before Christ comes. There will be no one "in the middle" at that day. Jesus said, "He that is not for me is against me."

Those who have died in past generations without the knowledge of the true Sabbath will not be judged guilty. If they have lived up to the light they had, and obeyed the Truth as best they knew it, the Bible assures us they have done all that is required. But when we do understand the truth of the matter and have heard what is right, then the Word of God assures us that it is sin if we turn our back on it.

"To him that knows to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." - James 4:17.

May God give us the grace to stand four square for His Truth as we learn it and one day be ready for Jesus when He comes.

Appendix I- Authoritative Quotations on Sabbath And Sunday

PREFACE

This little compilation has been compiled for the benefit of those who really desire to know what prominent churchmen, Catholic and Protestant, as well as secular writers, have said regarding immutability of the law of God and the attempted change of the seventh-day Sabbath of creation week. Testimony from the leading denominations is here compiled, along with evidence gathered from dependable secular sources. All unitedly testify that it was the church in apostasy that tampered with the holy law of an unchangeable God. Centuries before the Christian Era the prophet of the Lord had prophesied:

"He shall speak great words against the most High, . . . and think to change times and laws." Daniel 7: 25.

To the Christian church, God entrusted great authority, but neither man nor organisation of men has ever been given divine authority to, tamper with the ten foundation pillars of the government of God. And He Himself has made it plain that they are forever established by His everlasting covenant whereby He promises to write His laws in the minds and hearts of men. (Hebrews 8: 10)

"According to Catholic teaching, the only 'bondage' to which human minds are subject is the moral law which emanates from God Almighty Himself. The Church, as God's agent, may not tamper with that law." Sunday Visitor, July 13, 1947, page 129.

"Man is a creature. As a creature, he is subject to his Creator in all that he does. God's will has ... a bearing on everything that touches human rights and duties. No state, no group of educators, may reject a truth of the moral order to suit the claim of convenience of Roman Catholic bishops as reported in Time, Nov. 23, 1961, page 21.

But the so-called Christian world has tampered with God's law and rejected a truth of the ten great moral principles enunciated in the eternal law reiterated on Sinai by the voice of God and written by His finger.

Tor up to this day mankind has absolutely trifled with the original and most specific revelation of the holy God, the ten words written upon the tables of the law from Sinai." -- "Crown Theological Library, " page 178. (Lutheran).

The world unrest, the disregard for law and order, and the immorality of our day may be charged directly to the brazen attempts of the created to meddle with the government of the Creator. This is the testimony of Holy Scripture: "The earth also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof, because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore loath the curse devoured the earth." Isaiah 24:5, 6.

Friend, please read the testimony of the following pages with an open mind and in the light of God's Word: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isaiah 8:20.

Will you not read and re-read this booklet prayerfully? And as you do so, bare your own soul before God while you make your decision with the apostles of the early church to "obey God rather than men." Acts 5:29. May God lead you to loving obedience, your token of love and the outward sign of inward sanctification. Remember that Jesus declared: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil." Matthew 5:17.

His earthly mission was to save men from the transgression of the law, not to change it. Concerning Christ's first advent, the prophet had declared: "He will magnify the law, and make it honourable." Isaiah 42:21.

Will you not "walk even as He walked"? 1 John 2:6. Our Saviour said, I have kept My Father's commandments." John 15:10.

May God bless you as you consider this vital doctrine of the Bible.

BAPTIST

"There was and is a commandment to keep holy the Sabbath day, but that Sabbath day was not Sunday .... ! It will be said, however, and with some show of triumph, that the Sabbath was transferred from the seventh to the first day of the week.... Where can the record of such a transaction be found? Not in the New Testament, absolutely not. There is no Scriptural evidence of the change of the Sabbath institution from the seventh to the first day of the week.

"To me it seems unaccountable that Jesus, during three years' intercourse with His disciples, often conversing with them upon the Sabbath question ... never alluded to any transference of the day; also, that during forty days of His resurrection life, no such thing was intimated.

"Of course, I quite well know that Sunday did come into use in early Christian history as a religious day, as we learn from the Christian Fathers and other sources. But what a pity that it comes branded with the mark of paganism, and christened with the name of the sun god, when adopted and sanctioned by the papal apostasy, and bequeathed as a sacred legacy to Protestantism! " ---DR. EDWARD T. HISCOX, author of "The Baptist Manual, " in a paper read before a New York ministers conference held Nov. 13, 1893.

"We believe that the law of God is the eternal and unchangeable rule of His moral government." - "Baptist Church Manual," Art. 12.

"The first four commandments set forth man's obligations directly toward God.... But when we keep the first four commandments, we are likely to keep the other six.... The fourth commandment sets forth God's claim on man's time and thought.... The six days of labour and the rest on the Sabbath are to be maintained as a witness to God's toil and rest in the creation....No one of the ten words is of merely racial significance... The Sabbath was established originally (long before Moses) in no special connection with the Hebrews, but as an institution for all mankind, in commemoration of God's rest after the six days of creation. It was designed for all the descendants of Adam." Adult Quarterly, Southern Baptist Convention series, Aug. 15, 1937.

"There was never any formal or authoritative change from the Jewish seventh-day Sabbath to the Christian first-day observance." William Owen Carver, "The Lord's Day in Our Day " p 49.

It may be that Jesus gave them an explicit command so to do [to change the Sabbath from the seventh day to the first]; but of this we have no revelation." C.C.A. Wallace, " What Baptists Believe," p 167.

ROMAN CATHOLIC

"From this same Catholic Church you have accepted your Sunday, and that Sunday, as the Lord's day, she has handed down as a tradition; and the entire Protestant world has accepted it a tradition. For you have riot an iota of Scripture to establish it Therefore that which you have accepted as your rule of faith, is inadequate as it of course is, as well as your Sunday. You have accepted on the authority of the Roman Catholic Church." --D. B. RAY, "The Papal Controversy," 1892, page 179.

I have repeatedly offered $ 1,000 to anyone who can prove to me from the Bible alone that I am bound to keep Sunday holy. There is no such law in the Bible. It is a law of the holy Catholic Church alone. The Bible says, 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.' The Catholic Church says: 'No. By my divine power I abolish the Sabbath day and command you to keep holy the first day of the week.' And lo! The entire civilised world bows down in a reverent obedience to the command of the holy Catholic Church." --T. ENRIGHT, C.S.S.R., in a lecture at Hartford, Kansas, Feb. 18, 1884.

"The Catholic Church for over one thousand years before the existence of a Protestant, by virtue of her divine mission, changed the day from Saturday to Sunday." --The Catholic Mirror, Sept. 23, 1893.

"You may read the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, and you will not find a single line authorising the sanctification of Sunday. The Scriptures enforce the religious observance of Saturday, a day which we [Catholics] never sanctify."

JAMES CARDINAL GIBBONS, "The Faith of Our Fathers," page 111.

"There is but one church on the face of the earth which has the power, or claims power, to make laws binding on the conscience, binding before God, binding under penalty of hell-fire. For instance, the institution of Sunday. What right has any other church to keep this day? You answer by virtue of the third commandment [the Papacy changed the fourth commandment and called it the third], which says, 'Remember that thou keep holy the Sabbath day.' But Sunday is not the Sabbath. Any school-boy knows that Sunday is the first day of the week. I have repeatedly offered one thousand dollars to anyone who will prove by the Bible alone that Sunday is the day we are bound to keep, and no one has called for the money. It was the holy Catholic Church that changed the day of rest from Saturday, the seventh day, to Sunday, the first day of the week." --T. ENRIGHT, C. S. S. R., in a lecture delivered in 1893.

"Reason and sense demand the acceptance of one or the other of these alternatives: either Protestantism and the keeping holy of Saturday or Catholicity and the keeping holy of Sunday. Compromise is impossible." CARDINAL GIBBONS, Catholic Mirror, December 23, 1983.

"QUESTION: What Bible authority is there for changing the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week? Who gave the pope the authority to change a command of God?

"ANSWER: If the Bible is the only guide for the Christian, then the Seventh-day Adventist is right in observing the Saturday with the Jew. But Catholics learn what to believe and do from the divine, infallible authority established by Jesus Christ, the Catholic Church.... Is it not strange that those who make the Bible their only teacher should inconsistently follow in this matter the tradition of the Church?" --"Question Box " by CONWAY, 1903 Edition, pages 254,255.

"QUESTION: Which is the Sabbath day? "

"ANSWER: Saturday is the Sabbath day. "

"QUESTION: Why do we observe Sunday instead of Saturday?

"ANSWER: we observe Sunday instead of Saturday because the Catholic Church, in the Council of Laodicea (AD 336), transferred the solemnity from Saturday to Sunday." -- PETER GIERMANN, "The Convert's Catechism of Catholic Doctrine," Second Edition, 1910, page 50.

"It was the Catholic Church which, by the authority of Jesus Christ has transferred this rest to the Sunday in remembrance of the resurrection of our Lord. Thus the observance of Sunday by the Protestants is an homage they pay, in spite of themselves, to the authority of the [Catholic] church." -- MGR. SEGUR, Plain Talk About the Protestantism of Today," page 213.

'QUESTION: Have you any other way of proving that the Church has power to institute festivals of precept?

"ANSWER: Had she not such power, she could not have done that in which all modern religionists agree with her; she could not have substituted the observance of Sunday the first day of the week, for the observance of Saturday the seventh day, a change for which there is no Scriptural authority." KEENAN, "A Doctrinal Catechism," page 174.

"QUESTION: I-low prove you that the Church hath power to command feasts and holy days?

"ANSWER: By the very act of changing the Sabbath into Sunday, which Protestants allow of; and therefore they fondly contradict themselves, by keeping Sunday strictly, and breaking most other feasts commanded by the same Church.

"QUESTION: How prove you that?

"ANSWER: Because by keeping Sunday, they acknowledge the Church's power to ordain feasts, and to command them under sin and by not keeping the rest [of the feasts] by her commanded, they again deny, in fact, the same power." - HENRY TUBERVILLE, D. D. , "An Abridgment of the Christian Doctrine" (R. C.), page 58.

"Nowhere in the Bible do we find that Christ or the apostles ordered that the Sabbath be changed from Saturday to Sunday. We have the commandment of God given to Moses to keep holy the Sabbath day, that is the seventh day of the week, Saturday. Today most Christians keep Sunday because it has been revealed to us by the church [Roman] outside the Bible." Virginian, Oct. 3, 1947.

"Our Lord rose from the dead on the first day of the week," said Father Hourigan of the Jesuit Seminary. "That is why the Church changed the day of obligation from the seventh day to the first day of the week. The Anglican and other Protestant denominations retained that tradition when the Reformation came along." ---Toronto Daily Star, Oct. 26, 1949.

"Catholic: Is the Bible the rule or guide of Protestants for observing Sunday? "Protestant: No, I believe the Seventh-day Adventists are the only ones who know the Bible in the matter of Sabbath observance." -- "The Bible an authority Only in Catholic Hands," pages 25, 26.

"Practically everything that Protestants regard as essential or important they have received from the Catholic Church. They accepted Sunday rather than Saturday as the day for public worship after the Catholic Church made that change.

"But the Protestant mind does not seem to realise that in accepting the Bible, in observing the Sunday, in keeping Christmas and Easter, they are accepting the authority of the spokesman for the church, the pope." Sunday Visitor, Feb. 5, 1950.

"Only gradually did Christians begin to observe Sunday as a day of rest.... In the third century, as we learn from Tertullian, many Christians had begun to keep Sunday as a day of rest to some extent....

"The real need of Sunday as a day of rest as well as worship came much later, in the sixth century." -- "Yes, I Condemned the Catholic Church" (Supreme Council. Knights of Columbus), page 4.

"When St. Paul repudiated the works of the law, he was not thinking of the Ten Commandments, which are as unchangeable as God Himself is, which God could not change and still remain the infinitely holy God." Sunday Visitor, Oct. 7, 1951.

CHURCHES OF CHRIST (Also Disciples of Christ)

"There is no direct Scriptural authority for designating the first day the Lord's day." - DR. D.H. LUCAS, Christian Oracle, January 23, 1890.

"The first day of the week is commonly called the Sabbath. This is a mistake. The Sabbath of the Bible was the day just preceding the first day of the week. The first day of the week is never called the Sabbath anywhere in the entire Scriptures. It is also an error to talk about the change of the Sabbath. There never was any change of the Sabbath from Saturday to Sunday. There is not in any place in the Bible any intimation of such a change." --"First-Day Observance," pages 17, 19.

"It has reversed the fourth commandment by doing away with the Sabbath of God's Word, and instituting Sunday as a holiday." DR. N. SUMMERBELL, "History of the Christian Church," Third Edition, page 415.

"To command ... men ... to observe ... the Lord's day ... is contrary to the gospel." --"Memoirs of Alexander Campbell," Vol. 1, page 528.

"It is clearly proved that the pastors of the churches have struck out one of God's ten words, which, not only in the Old Testament, but in all revelation, are the most emphatically regarded as the synopsis of all religion and morality." CAMPBELL, "Debate With Purcell," page 214.

I do not believe that the Lord's day came in the room of the Jewish Sabbath, or that the Sabbath was changed from the seventh to the first day, for this plain reason, where there is no testimony, there can be no faith. Now there is no testimony in all the oracles of heaven that the Sabbath was changed, or that the Lord's day came in the room of it." - ALEXANDER CAMPBELL, Washington Reporter, Oct. 8, 1821.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND

"Not any ecclesiastical writer of the first three centuries attributed the origin of Sunday observance either to Christ or to His apostles."

WILLIAM DOMVILLE, Examination of the Six Texts," pages 6, 7. (Supplement).

"There is no word, no hint, in the New Testament about abstaining from work on Sunday. into the rest of Sunday no divine law enters... The observance of Ash Wednesday or Lent stands exactly on the same footing as the observance of Sunday." ---CANON EYTON, "The Ten Commandments," pages 52,63,65

Is there any command in the New Testament to change the day of weekly rest from Saturday to Sunday? None." --"Manual of Christian Doctrine," page 127.

"The Lord's day did not succeed in the place of the Sabbath ... The Lord's day was merely an ecclesiastical institution It was not introduced by virtue of the fourth commandment, because for almost three hundred years together they kept that day which was in that commandment.... The primitive Christians did all manner of works upon the Lord's day even in times of persecution when they are the strictest observers of all the divine commandments; but in this they knew there was none." BISHOP JEREMY TAYLOR, "Ductor Dubitantium," Part 1, Book 11, Chap. 2, Rule 6 Sec.51,59.

"Sunday being the day on which the Gentiles solemnly adore that planet and called it Sunday, partly from its influence on that day especially, and partly in respect to its divine body (as they conceived it), the Christians thought fit to keep the same day and the same name of it. that they might not appear causelessly peevish, and by that means hinder the conversion of the Gentiles, and bring a greater prejudice than might be otherwise taken against the gospel." --T. M. MORER, " Dialogues on the Lord's Day," pages 22,23.

"Where are we told in Scripture that we are to keep the first day at all? We are commanded to keep the seventh; but we are nowhere commanded to keep the first day.... The reason why we keep the first day of the week holy instead of the seventh is for the same reason that we observe many other things, not because the Bible, but because the church has enjoined it."

WILLIAMS, B.D., "Plain Sermons on the Catechism," Vol. 1, pages 334-336.

"Dear Madam: In reply to your letter of May 7th, I am asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury to say that from the first century onward the Christian church has observed the first day of the week as the weekly commemoration of the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ. Many of the early Christians ... deliberately substituted the first day of the week for the seventh on, the ground that it was on the first day that our Lord rose from the dead. [Italics ours.]

"Yours faithfully,

"ALAN C. DON."

"The Puritan idea was historically unhappy. It made Sunday into the Sabbath day. Even educated people call Sunday the Sabbath. Even clergymen do.

"But, unless my reckoning is all wrong, the Sabbath day lasts twenty-four hours from six o'clock on Friday evening. It gives over, therefore, before we come to Sunday. If you suggest to a Sabbatarian that he ought to observe the Sabbath on the proper day, you arouse no enthusiasm. He at once replies that the day, not the principle, has been changed. But changed by whom? There is no injunction in the whole of the New Testament to Christians to change the Sabbath into Sunday." --D. MORSE-BOYCOTT, Davy Herald, London, Feb. 26,1931.

"The Christian church made no formal, but a gradual and almost unconscious transference of the one day to the other." -- F. W. FARRAR, D.D., "The Voice From Sinai," page 167.

"Take which you will, either of the Fathers or the moderns, and we shall find no Lord's day instituted by any apostolic mandate; no Sabbath set on foot by them upon the first day of the week." - PETER HEYLYN, History of the Sabbath, page 410.

"Merely to denounce the tendency to secularise Sunday is as futile as it is easy. What we want is to find some principle, to which as Christians we can appeal, and on which we can base both our conduct and our advice. We turn to the New Testament, and we look in vain for any authoritative rule. There is no recorded word of Christ, there is no word of any of the apostles, which tells how we should keep Sunday, or indeed that we should keep it at all. It is disappointing, for it would make our task much easier if we could point to a definite rule, which left us no option but simple obedience or disobedience.... There is no rule for Sunday observance, either in Scripture or history." ---DR. STEPHEN, Bishop of Newcastle, N.S.W., in an address reported in the Newcastle Morning Herald, May 14, 1924.

CONGREGATIONALIST

"It must be confessed that there is no law in the New Testament concerning the first day."
Buck's Theological Dictionary, page 403.

"There is no command in the Bible requiring us to observe the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath." ---ORIN FOWLER, A. M.9 "Mode and Subjects of Baptism."

"The current notion that Christ and His apostles authoritatively substituted the first day for the seventh, is absolutely without any authority in the New Testament." --DR. LYMAN ABBOTT, Christian Union, Jan. 19, 1882.

It is quite clear that, however rigidly or devoutly we may spend Sunday, we are not keeping the Sabbath.... The Sabbath was founded on a specific, divine command. We can plead no such command for the observance of Sunday.... There is not a single sentence in the New Testament to suggest that we incur any penalty by violating the supposed sanctity of Sunday." Ten Commandments," R. W. Dale, D.D., pages 106, 107.

LUTHERAN

I wonder exceedingly how it came to be imputed to me that I should reject the law of Ten Commandments . . . . Whosoever abrogates the law must of necessity abrogate sin also." -MARTIN LUTHER, Spiritual Antichrist," pages 719 72.

"The observance of the Lord's day [Sunday] is founded not on any command of God, but on the authority of the church." -- Augsburg Confession of Faith, quoted in "Catholic Sabbath Manual," Part 2, Chap. 1, Sec.10.

"For up to this day mankind has absolutely trifled with the original and most special revelation of the Holy God, the ten words written upon the tables of the Law from Sinai" - "Crown Theological library," page 178.

"The Christians in the ancient church very soon distinguished the first day of the week, Sunday; however, not as a Sabbath, but as an assembly day of the church, to study the Word of God together. And, to celebrate the ordinances one with another: without a shadow of doubt, this took place as early as the first part of the second century." BISHOP GRIMELUND, history of the Sabbath," page 60.

"They [the Catholics] allege the Sabbath changed into Sunday, the Lord's day, contrary to the Decalogue, as it appears, neither is there any example more boasted of than the changing of the Sabbath day! Great, say they, is the power and authority of the church, since it dispensed with one of the Ten Commandments." - Augsburg Confession of Faith, Article 28, paragraph 9.

"The festival of Sunday, like all other festivals, was always only a human ordinance."
AUGUSTUS NEANDER, History of the Christian Religion and Church," Vol. 1, page 186.

METHODIST

"This 'handwriting of ordinances' our Lord did blot out, take away, and nail to His cross. (Colossians 2: 14) But the moral law contained in the Ten Commandments, and enforced by the prophets, He did not take away.... The moral law stands on an entirely different foundation from the ceremonial or ritual law. ... Every part of this law must remain in force upon all mankind and in all ages." - JOHN WESLEY, "Sermons on Several Occasions," 2-Vol Edition, Vol. 1, pages 221, 222.

"No Christian whatsoever is free from the obedience of the commandments which are called moral." Church Discipline," (1904), page 23.

"Take the matter of Sunday. There are indications in the New Testament as to how the church came to keep the first day of the week as its day of worship, but there is no passage telling Christians to keep that day, or to transfer the Jewish Sabbath to that day." FRANKLIN RALL, Christian Advocate, July 2, 1942.

"The Sabbath was made for MAN; not for the Hebrews, but for all men." E. O. HAVEN, "Pillars of Truth, page 88.

"The reason we observe the first day instead of the seventh based on no positive command. One will search the Scriptures in vain for authority for changing from the seventh day to the first. The early Christians began to worship on the first day of the week because Jesus rose from the dead on that day. By and by, this day of worship was made also a day of rest, a legal holiday. This took place in the year 321. Our Christian Sabbath, therefore, is not a matter of positive command. It is a gift of the church." - CLOVIS G. CHAPPELL, "Ten Rules For Living," page 61.

In the days of very long ago the people of the world began to give names to everything, and they turned the sounds of the lips into words, so that the lips could speak a thought. In those days the people worshipped the sun because many words were made to tell of many thoughts about many things. The people became Christians and were ruled by an emperor whose name was Constantine. This emperor made Sun-day the Christian Sabbath, because of the blessing of light and heat which came from the sun. So our Sunday is a sun-day, isn't it?" - Sunday School Advocates December 31, 1921.

"The moral law contained in the Ten Commandments, and enforced by the prophets, He [Christ] did not take away. It was not the design of His coming to revoke any part of this. This is a law which never can be broken.... Every part of this law must remain in force upon all mankind and in all ages; as not depending either on time or place, or any other circumstances liable to change but on the nature of God and the nature of man, and their unchangeable relation to each other." JOHN WESLEY, "Sermons on Several Occasions," Vol. 1, Sermon XXV.

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE

"The Sabbath was binding in Eden, and it has been in force ever since. This fourth commandment begins with the word 'remember,' showing that the Sabbath already existed when God wrote the law on the tables of stone at Sinai. How can men claim that this one commandment has been done away with when they will admit that the other nine are still binding?" --D. L. MOODY "Weighed and Wanting," page 47.

I honestly believe that this commandment [the fourth, or Sabbath commandment] is just as binding today as it ever was. I have talked with men who have said that it has been abrogated, but they have never been able to point to any place in the Bible where God repealed it. When Christ was on earth, He did nothing to set it aside; He freed it from the traces under which the scribes and Pharisees had put it, and gave it its true place. 'The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath.' It is just as practicable and as necessary for men today as it ever was—in fact, more than ever, because we live in such an intense age." - Id., page 46.

" 'Sabbath' means rest, and the meaning of the word gives a hint as to the true way to observe the day. God rested after creation, and ordained the Sabbath as a rest for man." - Id., pages 46, 47.

"Saturday is my day of rest because I generally preach on Sunday, and I look forward to it as a boy does to a holiday. God knows what we need." -- Id., page 48.

MORMON

(The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints)

In this, a new dispensation, and verily the fast dispensation of the fullness of times, the law of the Sabbath has been reaffirmed unto the church.... We believe that a weekly day of rest is no less truly a necessity for the physical well-being of man than for his spiritual growth; but primarily and essentially, we regard the Sabbath as divinely established, and its observance a commandment of Him who was and is and ever shall be, Lord of the Sabbath." ---JAMES E. TALMAGE, "Articles of Faith," 25th Edition, Art. 13, Chap. 24, pages 449, 451, 452,

"The Sabbath was to be a perpetual covenant between the Lord and the children of Israel. 'Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant' (verse 16). In verse 17 they are commanded to observe it as a sign that they, remember that the Lord made heaven and earth, and rested on the seventh day.

In these quotations from Exodus 31, and in the Decalogue the most positive and weighty reasons are given by the Lord to the fathers of the house of Israel, for keeping the Sabbath day. The obligation is evidently as binding upon the Latter-day Saints as it was upon their fathers, and they in like manner, will reap the reward of obedience."

FRANKLIN D. RICHARDS AND JAMES A. LITTLE, "A Compendium of the Doctrines of the Gospel," page 226.

PRESBYTERIAN

"The Sabbath is a part of the Decalogue---the Ten Commandments. This alone forever settles the question as to the perpetuity of the institution.... Until, therefore, it can be shown that the whole moral law has been repealed, the Sabbath will stand.... The teaching of Christ confirms the perpetuity of the Sabbath." -- T. C. BLAKE, D.D., "Theology Condensed," pages 414, 475.

"Ye must not imagine that the coming of Christ has freed us from the authority of the law; for it is the eternal rule of a devout and holy life, and must therefore be as unchangeable as the justice of God, which it embraced, is constant and uniform." ---JOHN CALVIN, "Commentary on a Harmony of the Gospels," Vol. 1, page 277

"The moral law doth for ever bind all, as well justified persons as others, to the obedience thereof, and that not only in regard to the matter contained in it, but also in respect of the authority of God the Creator who gave it. Neither doth Christ in the gospel in any way dissolve, but much strengthen this obligation." -- "Westminster Confession of Faith," Chap. 19, Art. 5.

God instituted the Sabbath at the creation of man, setting apart the seventh day for the purpose, and imposed its observance as a universal and perpetual moral obligation upon the race." -- American Presbyterian Board of Publication, Tract No. 175.

"The observance of the seventh-day Sabbath did not cease till it was abolished after the [Roman] empire became Christian." -- American Presbyterian Board of Publication, Tract No. 118.

DICTIONARIES

"As the Sabbath is of divine institution, so it is to be kept holy unto the Lord. Numerous have been the days appointed by men for religious services; but these are not binding because of human institution. Not so the Sabbath. Hence the fourth commandment is ushered in with a peculiar emphasis - Remember that thou keep holy the Sabbath day.' ... The abolition of it would be unreasonable." CHARLES BUCK, A Theological Dictionary," 1830 Edition, page 537.

"But although it [Sunday] was in the primitive times indifferently called the Lord's day, or Sunday, yet it was never denominated the Sabbath; a name constantly appropriate to Saturday, or the seventh day, both by sacred and ecclesiastical writers." -1d., page 572.

"The notion of a formal substitution by apostolic authority of the Lord's day [meaning Sunday] for the Jewish Sabbath [or the first for the seventh day]. ... and the transference to it, perhaps in a spiritualised form, of the sabbatical obligation established by the promulgation of the fourth commandment, has no basis whatever, either in Holy Scripture or in Christian antiquity."

WILLIAM SMITH AND SAMUEL CHEETHAM, A Dictionary of Christian Antiquities," Vol. 11, page 182, Article "Sabbath."

ENCYCLOPEDIAS

"Sunday was a name given by the heathens to the first day of the week, because it was the day on which they worshipped the sun, ... the seventh day was blessed and hallowed by God Himself, and ... He requires His creatures to keep it holy to Him. This commandment is of universal and perpetual obligation. ... The Creator blessed the seventh day' and declared it to be a day above all days. A day on which His favour should assuredly rest. . . . So long, then, as man exists, and the world around him endures, does the law of the early Sabbath remain. It cannot be set aside, so long as its foundations fast.... It is riot the Jewish Sabbath, properly so-called, which is ordained in the fourth commandment. In the whole of that injunction there is no Jewish element, any more than there is in the third commandment, or the sixth." -- Eadie's Biblical Cyclopedia, 1872 Edition, page 561.

"Thus we learn from Socrates (H.E., vi.c.8) that in his time public worship was held in the churches of Constantinople on both days. The view that the Christian's Lord's day or Sunday is but the Christian Sabbath deliberately transferred from the seventh to the first day of the week does not indeed find categorical expression till a much later period.... The earliest recognition of the observance of Sunday as a legal duty is a constitution of Constantine in A.D. 321, enacting that all courts of justice, inhabitants of towns, and workshops were to be at rest on Sunday (venerabili die Solis), with an exception in favour of those engaged in agricultural labour.... The Council of Laodicea (363) ... forbids Christians from Judaizing and resting on the Sabbath day, preferring the Lord's day, and so far as possible resting as Christians." Britannica, 1899 Edition, Vol. XXIII, page 654.

"Unquestionably the first law, either ecclesiastical or civil, by which the sabbatical observance of Sunday is known to have been ordained is the sabbatical edict of Constantine, A.D. 321. Chambers' Encyclopedia, Article "Sunday."

It must be confessed that there is no law in the New Testament concerning the first day."

M'CLINTOCK AND STRONG, Cyclopedia of Biblical, Theological, and Ecclesiastical literature, Vol. IX, page 196.

"Sunday (Dies Solis, of the Roman calendar, 'day of the sun,' because dedicated to the sun), the first day of the week, was adopted by the early Christians as a day of worship. The 'sun' of Latin adoration they interpreted as the 'Sun of Righteousness.' ... No regulations for its observance are laid down in the New Testament, nor, indeed, is its observance even enjoined." ---SCHAFF HERZOG, Encyclopedia of Religious Knowledge, 1891 Edition, Vol. IV, Art. "Sunday."

HISTORICAL

During this indefinite time a considerable amount of a sort of theokrasia seems to have gone on between the Christian cult and the almost equally popular and widely diffused Mithraic cult, and the cult of Serapis-Isis-Horus. From the former it would seem the Christians adopted Sunday as their chief day of worship in- stead of the Jewish Sabbath." --H. G. WELLS, "The Outline of History" (New and Revised), page 543.

"The first who ever used it [the Sabbath] to denote the Lord's day (the first that I have met with in all this search) is one Petrus Alfonsus. He lived about the time that Repurtus did (which was the beginning of the twelfth century) -who calls the Lord's day by the name of Christian Sabbath."

HEYLYN, "History of the Sabbath," Part 2, Chap. 2, Sec. 12.

"Bear in mind that the substitution [of the first for the seventh day] was not a coerced happening; it could not be a sudden, but only a very slow development, probably never anticipated, never even designed or put into shape by those chiefly interested, but creeping almost unconsciously into being." WILLIAM B. DANA, "A Day of Rest and Worship," page 174.

The first direct reference to Sunday as a day of rest from physical toil we find in Tertullian, in about A.D. 200 in his Liber de Oratione, chapter 23. 'Ye, however (just as we have received ), only on the day of the Lord's resurrection ought to guard not only against kneeling, but every posture and office of solicitude; deferring even our businesses lest we give any place to the devil.'---TERTULLIAN, "Ante-Nicene Fathers," Vol. III, page 689.

"The early Christians had at first adopted the Jewish seven day week with its numbered week days. By the close of the third century A.D. this began to give way to the planetary week. In the fourth and fifth centuries the pagan designations became generally accepted in the western half of Christendom. The use of the planetary names by Christians attests the growing influence of astrological speculations introduced by converts from paganism. ... During these same centuries the spread of Oriental solar worships, especially that of Mithra (Persian sun worship) in the Roman world, had already led to the substitution by pagans of dies Solis for dies Saturni, as the first day of the planetary week.... Thus gradually a pagan institution was ingrafted on Christianity." ---HUTTON WEBSTER, Ph.D., Rest Days, pages 220,221.

Eusebius, fourth-century bishop and friend of the wicked Emperor Constantine, whose Sunday law is the first on record, flatly says: "All things, whatsoever that it was duty to do on the Sabbath, these we have transferred to the Lord's day [as they had begun to call Sunday]." on the Psalms."

"Opposition to Judaism introduced the particular festival of Sunday very early, indeed, into the place of the Sabbath.... The festival of Sunday, like all other festivals, was always only a human ordinance, and it was far from the intentions of the apostles to establish a divine command in this respect, far from them, and from the early apostolic church, to transfer the laws of the Sabbath to Sunday. Perhaps, at the end of the second century a false application of this kind had begun to, take place; for men appear by that time to have considered labouring on Sunday as a sin."

AUGUSTUS NEANDER, "General history of the Christian Religion and Church" (Rose's translation), Vol. page 186.

INFIDEL

Probably very few Christians are aware of the fact that what they call the 'Christian Sabbath' (Sunday) is of pagan origin. 'The first observance of Sunday that history records is in the fourth century, when Constantine issued an edict (riot requiring its religious observance, but simply abstinence from work) reading 'let all the judges and people of the town rest and all the various trades be suspended on the venerable day of the sun.' At the time of the issue of this edict, Constantine was a sun-worshipper; therefore it could have had no relation whatever to Christianity." -- HENRY M. TABER, "Faith or Fact" (preface by Robert G. Ingersoll), page 112.

I challenge any priest or minister of the Christian religion to show me the slightest authority for the religious observance of Sunday. And, if such cannot be shown by them, why is it that they are constantly preaching about Sunday as a holy day? ... The claim that Sunday takes the place of Saturday, and that because the Jews were supposed to be commanded to keep the seventh day of the week holy, therefore the first day of the week should be so kept by Christians, is so utterly absurd as to be hardly worth considering.... That Paul habitually observed and preached on the seventh day of the week, is shown in Acts 18:4 'And he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath' (Saturday)." --Id., pages 114, 116.

MISCELLANEOUS

"You will tell me that Saturday was the Jewish Sabbath, but that the Christian Sabbath has been changed to Sunday. Changed! But by whom? Who has authority to change an express commandment of Almighty God? When God has spoken and said, 'Thou shalt keep holy the seventh day, who shall dare to say, Nay, thou mayest work and do all manner of business on the seventh day; but thou shalt keep holy the first day in its stead'? This is a most important question, which I know not how you can answer.

"You are a Protestant, and you profess to go by the Bible and the bible only; and yet in so important a matter as the observance of one day in seven as a holy day, you go against the plain letter of the Bible, and put another day in the place of that day which the Bible has commanded. The command to keep holy the seventh day is one of the Ten Commandments; you believe that the other nine are still binding; who gave you authority to tamper with the fourth? If you are consistent with your own principles, if you really follow the Bible and the Bible only, you ought to be able to produce some portion of the New Testament in which this fourth commandment is expressly altered." --"The Library of Christian Doctrine," pages 3, 4.

"The first precept in the Bible is that of sanctifying the seventh day: 'God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it.' Genesis 2:3 This precept was confirmed by God in the Ten Commandments: 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. ... The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God.' Exodus 20: 8, 10. On the other hand, Christ declares that He is not come to destroy the law, but to fulfil it. (Matthew 5: 17) He Himself observed the Sabbath: 'And, as His custom was, He went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day. Luke 4: 16. His disciples likewise observed it after His death: 'They ... rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment.' Luke 23:56. Yet with all this weight of Scripture authority for keeping the Sabbath or seventh day holy, Protestants of all denominations make this a profane day and transfer the obligation of it to the first day of the week, or the Sunday. Now what authority have they for doing this? None at all but the unwritten word, or tradition of the Catholic Church, which declares that the apostle made the change in honour of Christ's resurrection, and the descent of the Holy Ghost on that day of the week." JOHN MILNER, "The End of Religious Controversy," page 71.

"Sabbath means, of course, Saturday, the seventh day of the week, but the early Christians changed the observance to Sunday, to honour the day on which Christ arose from the dead. " ---FULTON OURSLER, Cosmopolitan, Sept. 1951, pages 34,35.

I do not pretend to be even an amateur scholar of the Scriptures. I read the Decalogue merely as an average man searching for guidance, and in the immortal 'Ten Words' I find a blueprint for the good life." --Id., page 33.

"Most certainly the Commandments are needed today, perhaps more than ever before. Their divine message confronts us with a profound moral challenge in an epidemic of evil; a unifying message acceptable alike to Jew, Moslem, and Christian. Who, reading the Ten in the light of history and of current events, can doubt their identity with the eternal law of nature?" - Id., page 124.

"The Sabbath is commanded to be kept on the seventh day. It could not be kept on any other day. To observe the first day of the week or the fourth is riot to observe the Sabbath.... It was the last day of the week, after six days of work that was to be kept holy. The observance of no other day would fulfil the law." --H. J. FLOWERS, B.A., B.D., "The Permanent Value of the Ten Commandments," page 131.

"The evaluation of Sunday, the traditionally accepted day of the resurrection of Christ, has varied greatly, throughout the centuries of the Christian Era. From time to time it has been confused with the seventh day of the week, the Sabbath. English speaking peoples have been the most consistent in perpetuating the erroneous assumption that the obligation of the fourth commandment has passed over to Sunday. In popular speech, Sunday is frequently, but erroneously, spoken of as the Sabbath." --F. M. SETZLER, Lead Curator, Department of Anthropology, Smithsonian Institute, from a letter dated Sept. 1, 1949.

He that observes the Sabbath aright holds the history of that which it celebrates to be authentic, and therefore believes in the creation of the first man. The creation of a fair abode for man in the space of six days. He believes in the primeval and absolute creation of the heavens and the earth, and, as a necessary antecedent to all this, in the Creator, who at the close of His latest creative effort, rested on the seventh day. The Sabbath thus becomes a sign by which the believers in a historical revelation are distinguished from those who have allowed these great facts to fade from their remembrance." - JAMES G. MICHY, "Commentary on the Book of Exodus," comments on Exodus 20: 8-11.

Appendix II – The Pagan Origin Of Sunday Observance

"On another occasion Aurelian is reported to have told his troops that god, not they, made emperors. When he returned victoriously to Rome in 274 AD, he introduced the cult of the unconquered sun, Sol Invictus, as a formal state worship for the empire. A new temple was built for Sol, and the god's birthday, December 25, became a national festival, while his day, Sunday, headed the week."

"The World Of Ancient Times", by Carl Roebuck, Charles Scribner & Sons, New York, 1966, Page 693.

"In March 321, he enacted that on 'the venerable day of the Sun.' "

"A second law enacted a few months later, confirms that 'the day celebrated by the veneration of the Sun' "

"Constantine does not call it the Lord's Day, but on the contrary emphasises its sacredness to the Sun."

"It would appear that Constantine imagined that Christian observance of the first day of the planetary week was a tribute to the Unconquered Sun."

"Constantine did not see any harm in consulting soothsayers."

"Constantine And The Conversion Of Europe", by A. H. M. Jones, Hodder & Stroughton Ltd., London 1948, Page 100,101.

"This law arranges for the keeping holy of Sunday. The Christian day of rest fell, of course, on the dies Solis, the day dedicated to the very popular Sun God. But there was nothing in Sol or any other pagan god to justify the Sunday rest, which is based on the authority of the Bible."

"Conversion Of Constantine", by Andrew Alföldi, Clarendon Press, Oxford, 1948, Page 48.

"But the realization of the fulfillment of the Sabbath in the Lord's Day does not find any expression in the N. T. This silence is especially marked in the epistle to the Hebrews. In that epistle the writer is addressing some who were in danger of relapsing into Judaism, who could scarcely bear to forego all the associations of the old religion, its antiquity, authority, splendor, variety."

"A Dictionary Of The Bible", by James Hastings, Charles Scribner & Sons, New York, 1906, Page 139.

"The record tells us very little about the manner in which Sunday was observed in the first three centuries."

"While the leaders of the Church gave no sanction to the idea that Sunday was the heir of the Sabbath, the idea was all the time gaining power among the mass of the Christian people in the west."

"It was not as the 'Lord's Day' but as 'the venerable day of the sun' that he describes the new public holiday."

"Encyclopedia Of Religion And Ethics", by James Hastings, Charles Scribner & Sons, New York, 1922, Volume 12, Page 104-110.

"The Reformers of the 16th century were in a difficult position, for, although they regarded both Genesis 2 and Exodus 20 as historical, they could not rest the institution of Sunday on either of the traditional grounds. They could not identify it with the Jewish Sabbath; nor could they admit that an ecclesiastical rule of observance, however venerable, was of unchanging validity. Yet both feeling and reason urged them to maintain its obligation."

"So long as the story of the creation in Genesis 1 and 2 and the account of the giving of the law on Mount Sinai were regarded as historical, the question had to be faced: How can a Divine command, directly given to men, be abrogated? The answer for us is plain: No such commands were ever given, and the stories which record them are legends. The Sabbath was made for man; and under the guidance of Providence, it was made by man. Sunday in its turn, was made by man and for man."

"Encyclopedia Of Religion And Ethics", by James Hastings, Charles Scribner & Sons, New York, 1922, Volume 12, Page 104-110.

"To understand the meaning and significance of Sunday as the first day of the week it is necessary to consider the five contributions which have been made to its place in the calendar and to its manner of observance :

- (1) The worship of the Sun among ancient peoples
- (2) The popularity of Mithraism among the Romans

- (3) The Roman observance of the day of the Sun
- (4) The early Christian dedication of the first day of the week as a memorial of the resurrection of Christ.
- (5) The Puritans of Massachusetts, with the resulting Sunday laws, usually known as Blue Laws."

"Mithras, identified with Sol Invictus, gave authority and victory to the throne."

"The earliest known Sunday law appeared in the edict of Constantine (AD 321)"

"This law probably bore no relation to Christianity; the emperor as Pontifex Maximus merely added the day of the Sun to the Roman calendar and thus gave imperial recognition of Sun worship which was already firmly established in Rome."

"As noted above, during this same period the spread of Oriental Solar religions had led in Rome to the designation of the day of the Sun as the first day of the week ."

"Colliers Encyclopedia", Volume 21, 1971, Page 632, 633

"The primitive church in Palestine was almost entirely Jewish and as such continued Sabbath observance; it was a social necessity."

"This made the church's most natural time for the Lord's Supper Saturday evening, i.e., the beginning of Sunday, as seems to be the case in Acts 20:7."

"1 Corinthians 16:2 does not refer to a church gathering. While 'the Lord's Day' (Rev. 1:10) is probably Sunday it is unprovable."

"No evidence for the equating of Sabbath and Sunday is found before the end of the third century, but by that time there was an increasing stress on the true, i.e., spiritual, observance of the Sabbath , and it was, at least in theory observed as a day of worship alongside Sunday."

"Dictionary Of The Christian Church", by J. D. Douglas, Paternoster Press, 1978, Page 939,940

"When the early church began Sunday worship is not known. Nor do the N.T. writers offer a rationale for the shift from Saturday's Sabbath observance to Sunday's meetings, but several factors may be suggested."

"No hint of cessation from work on Sundays is found until Tertullian (160 - 220 AD)."

"Evangelical Dictionary Of Theology", Bath Press, Avon, 1984, Page 649.

"SATURDAY : The Jewish 'Sabbath' and the day of the week on which Christ's body rested in the tomb." "Oxford Dictionary Of The Christian Church", Oxford Press, 1974, Page 1237.

"How, when, where, and under what stimulus the community of Jesus transferred there holy day from the Jewish Sabbath to Sunday - these questions are lost in obscurity. There is no evidence that the risen Lord gave directions for the observance of this day to the apostles."

"Encyclopedia Of Biblical Theology", Sheen And Ward Publishers, London, 1970, Volume 2, Page 513.

"The religious observance by Jews of the seventh day as the weekly day of rest was enjoined in the Ten Commandments."

"Thus after the death of Christ there was no formal abrogation of the Sabbath ; and the Jewish Christians continued to observe it, sometimes strictly as among the Ebionites."

"Chambers Encyclopedia", Volume 12, 1970, Page 123.

"Regular corporate worship on Sundays goes back to the apostolic age, but the New Testament writings do not explain how the practice began."

"Encyclopedia Britannica", Volume 11, 1985, Page 383.

Appendix III – The Seventh Day Through The Centuries

"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shaft thou labour, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: For in six days the LORD made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the LORD blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it!" Ex. 20: 8-11

1ST CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

INSTITUTION OF THE SABBATH

"Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended his work which he made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." Genesis 11-3

JESUS

"And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up to read." Luke 4:16

"And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life? And he said unto him, if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." Matthew 19:16,17

"But pray ye that your flight be not in winter, neither on the Sabbath day." Matthew 24, 20. Jesus asked his disciples to pray that in the flight from the doomed city of Jerusalem they would not have to flee on the Sabbath day. This flight took place in 70 A.D. (40 years after the Cross).

HIS FOLLOWERS

"And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment." Luke 23:56.

PAUL

"And Paul, as his manner was went in unto them, and three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures" Acts 17:2

PAUL AND GENTILES

"And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath. And the next Sabbath came almost the whole city together to hear the Word of God." Acts 13:42, 44. Here we find Gentiles in a Gentile city gathering on the Sabbath. It was not a synagogue meeting in verse 44, for it says almost the whole city came together. Verse 42 says they asked to bear the message the "next Sabbath."

And note this point: The Bible does not say it is the "old Jewish Sabbath that was passed away," but the Spirit of God, writing the Book of Acts some 30 years after the Crucifixion, calls it "the next Sabbath."

JOHN

I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Rev. 1: 10 (Mark 2:28, Isa.58:13, Ex.20: 10, Clearly show the Sabbath to be the Lords day).

JOSEPHUS

"There is not any city of the Grecians, nor any of the Barbarians, nor any nation whatsoever, whither our custom of resting on the seventh day hath not come!" M'Clatchie, "Notes and Queries on China and Japan" (edited by Denny), Vol 4, Nos 7, 8, P.100.

FIRST CENTURY CHRISTIANS

"Then the spiritual seed of Abraham fled to Pella, on the other side of Jordan, where they found a safe place of refuge, and could serve their Master and keep His Sabbath." Eusebius's "Ecclesiastical History," "b, 3, chap. 5

PHILO

Declares the seventh day to be a festival, not of this or of that city, but of the universe. M'Clatchie, "Notes and Queries," Vol. 4,99

2ND CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

EARLY CHRISTIANS

"The primitive Christians had a great veneration for the Sabbath, and spent the day in devotion and sermons. And it is not to be doubted but they derived this practice from the Apostles themselves, as appears by several Scriptures to this purpose." "Dialogues on the Lord's Day," p. 189. London: 1701, By Dr. T.H. Morer (A Church of England divine).

EARLY CHRISTIANS

"...The Sabbath was a strong tie which united them with the life of the whole people, and in keeping the Sabbath holy they followed not only the example but also the command of Jesus." "Geschichte des Sonntags," pp.13,14

2ND CENTURY CHRISTIANS

"The Gentile Christians observed also the Sabbath," Gieseler's "Church History," Vol. 1, ch. 2, par. 30,93.

EARLY CHRISTIANS

"The primitive Christians did keep the Sabbath of the Jews; ... therefore the Christians, for a long time together, did keep their conventions upon the Sabbath, in which some portions of the law were read: and this continued till the time of the Laodicean council." "The Whole Works" of Jeremy Taylor, Vol. IX,p. 416 (R. Heber's Edition, Vol XH, p. 416).

EARLY CHURCH

It is certain that tile ancient Sabbath did remain and was observed (together with the celebration of the Lord's day) by the Christians of the East Church, above three hundred years after our Saviour's death." "A Learned Treatise of the Sabbath," p. 77

Note: By the "Lord's day" here the writer means Sunday and not the true Sabbath," which the Bible says is the Sabbath. This quotation shows Sunday coming into use in the early centuries soon after the death of the Apostles. Paul the Apostle foretold a great 'Falling away" from the Truth that would take place soon after his death.

2ND, 3RD, 4TH CENTURIES

From the apostles' time until the council of Laodicea, which was about the year 364, the holy observance of tile Jews' Sabbath continued, as may be proved out of many authors: yea, notwithstanding the decree of the council against it." "Sunday a Sabbath." John Ley, p.163. London: 1640.

3RD CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

EGYPT (OXYIMYNCHUS PAPYRUS) (200-250 AD)

"Except ye make the sabbath a real sabbath (sabbatize the Sabbath," Greek), ye shall not see the Father." "The oxyrhynchus Papyri," pt, 1, p.3, Logion 2, verso 4-11 (London Offices of the Egypt Exploration Fund, 1898).

EARLY CHRISTIANS

"Thou shalt observe the Sabbath, oil account of Him who ceased from His work of creation, but ceased not from His work of providence: it is a rest for meditation of the law, not for idleness of the hands." "The Anti-Nicene Fathers," Vol 7,1). 413. From "Constitutions of the Holy Apostles," a document of the 3rd and 4th Centuries.

AFRICA - ALEXANDRIA - ORIGEN

"After the festival of the unceasing sacrifice (the crucifixion) is put the second festival of the Sabbath, and it is fitting for whoever is righteous among the saints to keep also the festival of the Sabbath. There remains therefore a sabbatismus, that is, a keeping of the Sabbath, to the people of God (Hebrews 4:9)." "Homily on Numbers 23," par.4, in Migne, "Patrologia Graeca," Vol. 12, cols. 749, 750.

PALESTINE TO INDIA (CHURCH OF THE EAST)

As early as A.D. 225 there existed large bishoprics or conferences of the Church of the East (Sabbath-keeping) stretching from Palestine to India. Mingana, "Early Spread of Christianity." Vol. 10, p. 460.1

INDIA (BUDDHIST CONTROVERSY), 220 AD

The Kushan Dynasty of North India called a famous council of Buddhist priests at Vaisalia to bring uniformity among the Buddhist monks on the observance of their weekly Sabbath. Some had been so impressed by the writings of the Old Testament that they had begun to keep holy the Sabbath. Lloyd, "The Creed of Half Japan," p.23.

EARLY CHRISTIANS

"The seventh-day Sabbath was ... solemnised by Christ, the Apostles, and primitive Christians, till the Laodicean Council did in manner quite abolish the observations of it." "Dissertation on the Lord's Day," pp. 33, 34

4TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

ITALY AND EAST-C 4th

It was the practice generally of the Eastern Churches; and some churches of the west ... For in the Church of Millaine (Milan); ... it seems the Saturday was held in a fair esteem... Not that the Eastern Churches, or ally of the rest which observed that day, were inclined to Judaisille (Judaism); but that they came together oil the Sabbath day, to worship Iesus (Jesus) Christ the Lord of (fie Sabbath." "History of the Sabbath' (original spelling retained), Part 2, par. 5, pp.73, 74. London: 1636. Dr. Heylyn.

ORIENT AND MOST OF WORLD

"The ancient Christians were very careful in the observance of Saturday, or the seventh day. It is plain that all the Oriental churches, and the greatest part of the world, observed the Sabbath as a festival ... Athanasius likewise tells us that they held religious assembles on the Sabbath, not because they were infected with Judaism, but to worship Jesus, the Lord of the Sabbath, Epiphanius says the same." "Antiquities of the Christian Church," Vol.11 Book XX, chap. 3, sec.], 66. 1137,1138.

ABYSSINIA

In the last half of that century St. Ambrose of Milan stated officially that the Abyssinian bishop, Museus, had 'travelled almost everywhere in the country of the Seres' (China). For more than seventeen centuries the Abyssinian Church continued to sanctify Saturday as the holy day of the fourth commandment." Ambrose, DeMoribus, Brichmanoriunt Opera Ominia, 1132, found in Migne, Patrologia Latima, Vol. 17, pp. 1131,1132.

ARABIA, PERSIA, INDIA, CHINA

"Mingana proves that in 370 A.D. Abyssinian Christianity (a Sabbath keeping church) was so popular that its famous director, Musacus, travelled extensively in the East promoting the church in Arabia, Persia, India and China." "Truth Triumphant," p. 308 (Footnote 27).

ITALY-MILAN

"Ambrose, the celebrated bishop of Milan, said that when he was in Milan he observed Saturday, but when in Rome observed Sunday. This gave rise to the proverb, 'When you are in Rome, do as Rome does.' Heylyn, "The History of the Sabbath" (1612)

SPAIN-COUNCIL ELVIRA (A.D.305)

Canon 26 of the Council of Eivira reveals that the Church of Spain at that time kept Saturday, the seventh day. "As to fasting every Sabbath: Resolved, that the error be corrected of fasting every Sabbath." This resolution of the council is in direct opposition to the policy the church at Rome had inaugurated, that of commanding Sabbath as a fast day in order to humiliate it and make it repugnant to the people.

SPAIN

It is a point of further interest to note that in north eastern Spain near the city of Barcelona is a city called Sabadell, in a district originally inhabited. By a people called both "Validenses" and Sabbatati."

PERSIA - AD 335-375 (40 YEARS PERSECUTION UNDER SHAPUR 11)

The popular complaint against the Christians-"They despise our sun god, they have divine services on Saturday, they desecrate the sacred the earth by burying their dead in it." Truth Triumphant," p.170.

PERSIA - AD 335-375

"They despise our sun-god. Did not Zoraster, the sainted founder of our divine beliefs, institute Sunday one thousand years ago in honour of the sun and supplant the Sabbath of the Old Testament. Yet these Christians have divine services on Saturday." O'Leary, "The Syriac Church and Fathers," pp. 83, 84.

COUNCIL LAODICEA - AD 365

"Canon 16-On Saturday tile Gospels and other portions of the Scripture shall be read aloud." "Canon 29-Christians shall not Judaize and be idle on Saturday, but shall work on that day; but the Lord's day they shall especially honour, and as being Christians, shall, if possible, do no work on that day." Hefele's "Councils," Vol. 2, b. 6.

5TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

THE WORLD

"For although almost all churches throughout the world celebrated the sacred mysteries (the Lord's Supper) on the Sabbath of every week, yet the Christians of Allexandria and at Rome, on account of some ancient tradition, refuse to do this." The footnote which accompanies the foregoing quotation explains the use of the word. It says: "That is, upon the Saturday. It should be observed, while Sunday is never called 'the Sabbath' by the ancient Fathers and historians." Socrates, "Ecclestical History," Book 5, chap. 22, p. 289.

CONSTANTINOPLE

"The people of Constantinople, and almost everywhere, assemble together on the Sabbath, as well as oil the first day of the week, which custom is never observed at Rome or at Alexandria." Socrates, Ecclesiastical History," Book 7, chap. 19.

THE WORLD - AUGUSTINE, BISHOP OF HIPPO (NORTH AFRICA)

Augustine shows here that the Sabbath was observed in his day "in the greater part of the Christian world," and his testimony in this respect is all the more valuable because he himself was an earnest and consistent Sunday-keeper. See 'Nicene and Post Nicene Fathers," 1st Series, Vol. 1, pp. 353, 354.

POPE INNOCENT (402 – 417 AD)

Pope Sylvester (314-335) was the first to order the churches to fast on Saturday, and Pope Innocent (402-417) made it a binding law in the churches that obeyed him, (in order to bring the Sabbath into disfavour.) "Innocentius did ordain the Saturday or Sabbath to be always fasted." Dr. Peter Heylyn, "History of the Sabbath, Part 2, p. 44.

5TH CENTURY CHRISTIANS

Down even to the fifth century the observance of the Jewish Sabbath was continued in the Christian church. "Ancient Christianity Exemplified," Lyman Coleman. ch. 26, sec. 2, p. 52 In Jerome's day (420 A.D.) the devoutest Christians did ordinary work on Sunday. "Treatise of the Sabbath Day," by Dr. White Lord Bishop of Ely, p. 219.

FRANCE

"Wherefore, except Vespers and Nocturns, there are no public services among them in the day except on Saturday (Sabbath) on Sunday." John Cassian, A French monk, "Institutes," Book 3 ch. 2.

AFRICA

"Augustine deplored the fact that in two neighbouring churches in Africa one observes the seventh day Sabbath, another fasted on it." Dr. Peter Heylyn, "The History of the Sabbath." p. 416.

SPAIN (400 AD)

"Ambrose sanctified the seventh day as the Sabbath (as he himself says). Ambrose had great influence in Spain, which was also observing the Saturday Sabbath." Truth Triumphant, p. 68

SIDONIUS (SPEAKING OF KING THEODORIC OF THE GOTHs, AD 454-526)

It is a fact that it was formerly the custom in the East to keep the Sabbath in the same manner as the Lord's day and to hold sacred assemblies: while on the other hand, the people of the West, contending for the Lord's day have neglected the celebration of the Sabbath." "Apolinarius Sidonli Epistolae," lib.1, 2; Migne 57.

CHURCH OF THE EAST

"Mingana proves that in 410 Isaac, supreme director of the Church of the East, held a world council stimulated, some think, by the trip of Musacis, attended by eastern delegates from forty grand metropolitan divisions. In 411 he appointed a metropolitan director for China. These churches were sanctifying the seventh day."

EGYPT

"There are several cities and villages in Egypt where, contrary to the usage established elsewhere, the people meet together on Sabbath evenings, and, although they have dined previously, partake of the mysteries." Sozomen. "Ecclesiastical History Book 7, ch. 119

6TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

SCOTTISH CHURCH

In this latter instance they seemed to have followed a custom of which we find traces in the early monastic church of Ireland by which they held Saturday to be the Sabbath on which they rested from all their labours." W.T. Skene, "Adamnan Life of St. Columba" 1874, p.96.

SCOTLAND, IRELAND

"We seem to see here an allusion to the custom, observed in the early monastic Church of Ireland, of keeping the day of rest on Saturday, or the Sabbath." History of the Catholic Church in Scotland," Vol.1, p. 86, by Catholic historian Bellesheim).

SCOTLAND-COLUMBA

"Having continued his labours in Scotland thirty-four years, he clearly and openly foretold his death, and on Saturday, the ninth of June, said to his disciple Dermot: "This day is called the Sabbath. That is the rest day, and such will it truly be to me; for it will put an end to my labours". Butler's Lives of The Saints," Vol.1, A.D. 597, art. "St. Columba" p. 762

COLUMBA (DR. BUTLER'S DESCRIPTION OF HIS DEATH)

The editor of the best biography of Columba says in a footnote:

"Our Saturday. The custom to call the Lord's day Sabbath did not commence until a thousand years later." Adamnan's "Life of Columba" (Dublin, 1857), p. 230.

7TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

SCOTLAND AND IRELAND

Professor James C. Moffatt, D.D., Professor of Church History at Princeton, says: It seems to have been customary in the Celtic churches of early times, in Ireland as well as Scotland, to keep Saturday, the Jewish Sabbath, as a day of rest from labour. They obeyed the fourth commandment literally upon the seventh day of week." "The Church in Scotland," p.140.

SCOTLAND AND IRELAND

The Celts used a Latin Bible unlike the Vulgate (R.C.) and kept Saturday as a day of rest, with special religious services on Sunday." Flick, "The Rise of Medieval Church," p. 237

ROME

Gregory 1 (A.D. 590-640) wrote against "Roman citizens (who) forbid any work being done on the Sabbath day." "Nicene and Post- Nicene Fathers," Second Series, Vol, XIII, p. 13, epistle 1

ROME (POPE GREGORY I, AD .590 TO 604)

"Gregory, bishop by the grace of God to his well-beloved sons, the Roman citizens. It has come to me that certain men of perverse spirit have disseminated among you things depraved and opposed to the holy faith, so that they forbid anything to be done on the day of the Sabbath. What shall I call them except preachers of anti-Christ?" Epistles, b. 13:1

ROME - POPE GREGORY 1

Declared that when anti-Christ should come he would keep Saturday as the Sabbath. "Epistles of Gregory 1, "b 13, epistle I. found in "Nicene and Post-Nicene Fathers."

'Moreover, this same Pope Gregory had issued an official pronouncement against a section of the city of Rome itself because the Christian believers there rested and worshipped on the Sabbath." Same reference.

8TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

COUNCIL OF FRIAUL, ITALY-A.D. 791 (CANON 13)

"We command all Christians to observe the Lord's day to be held not in honour of the past Sabbath, but on account of that holy night of the first of the week called the Lord's day. When speaking of that Sabbath which the Jews observe, the last day of the week, and which also our peasants observe." Mansi, 13, 851

PERSIA AND MESOPOTAMIA

"The hills of Persia and the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates re-echoed their songs of praise. They reaped their harvests and paid their tithes. They repaired to their churches on the Sabbath day for the worship of God." "Realencyclopaedic fur Protestatische and Kirche," art. "Nestorianer"; also Yule, "The Book of ser Marco Polo," Vol.2, p.409.

INDIA, CHINA, PERSIA, ETC

"Widespread and enduring was the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath among the believers of the Church of the East and the St. Thomas Christians of India, who never were connected with Rome. It also was maintained among those bodies which broke off from Rome after the Council of Chalcedon namely, the Abyssinians, the Jacobites, the Maronites, and the Armenians," Schaff-Herzog, The New Enclopadia of Religious Knowledge," art. "Nestorians"; also Realencyclopaedie fur Protestantische Theologie und Kirche," art. "Nestorianv-.r."

COUNCIL OF LIFTINAE, BELGIUM-AD 745 (ATTENDED BY BONIFACE)

"The third allocution of this council warns against the observance of the Sabbath, referring to the decree of the council of Laodicea." Dr. Hefeic, Counciliengfesch, 3, 512, see. 362

CHINA-A.D.781

In A.D. 781 the famous China Monument was inscribed in marble to tell of the growth of Christianity in China at that time. The inscription, consisting of 763 words, was unearthed in 1625 near the city of Changan and now stands in tile "Forest of Tablets," Changan. The following extract from the stone shows that tile Sabbath was observed: "On the seventh day we offer sacrifices, after having purified our hearts, and received absolution for our sins. This religion, so perfect and so excellent, is difficult to name, but it enlightens darkness by its brilliant precepts." Christianity in China, M. l'Abbe Hue, Vol. 1, ch.2, pp. 48, 49

9TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

BULGARIA

"Bulgaria in the early season of its evangelization had been taught that no work should be performed on the Sabbath." Responsa Nicolai Papae 1 and Con-Consulta Builillarorum, Responsum 10, found in Mansi, Sacrorum Conciliorum Nova et Aniplissima Colectio, Vol.15; p. 406; also Hefele, Conciliengeschichte, VolA, see. 478

BULGARIA

(Pope Nicholas 1, in answer to letter from Bogaris, ruling prince of Bulgaria.)

"Ques. 6-Bathing is allowed on Sunday.

Ques. 10 One is to cease from work on Sunday, but not also on the Sabbath." Hefele, 4,346- 352, see. 478

The Bulgarians had been accustomed to rest on the Sabbath. Pope Nicholas writes against this practice.

CONSTANTINOPLE

(Photius, Patriarch of Constantinople (in counter- synod that deposed Nicolas, thus accused Papacy). Against the canons, they induced the Bulgarians to fast on the Sabbath." Photius, vonKard, Hergenrother, 1, 643 Note: The Papacy had always tried to bring the seventh-day Sabbath into disrepute by insisting that all should fast on that day. In this manner (she sought to turn people towards Sunday, the first day, the day that Rome had adopted.

ATHINGIANS

Cardinal Hergenrother says that they stood in intimate relation with Emperor Michael 11 (821-829) and testifies that they observed the Sabbath. Kirchengeschichte, 1, 527

INDIA, ABYSSINIA

"Widespread and enduring was the observance of the seventh day Sabbath among the believers of the Church of the East and the St. Thomas Christians of India. It was also maintained by the Abyssinians.

BULGARIA

"Pope Nicholas 1, in the ninth century, sent the ruling prince of Bulgaria a long document saying in it that one is to cease from work on Sunday, but not on the Sabbath. The head of the Greek Church, offended at the interference of the Papacy, declared the Pope ex-communicated." Truth Triumphant, p. 232

10TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

SCOTLAND

"They worked on Sunday, but kept Saturday in a Sabbatical manner." A History of Scotland from the Roman Occupation, Vol. 1, p.96. Andrew Lang.

CHURCH OF THE EAST-Kurdistan

"The Nestorians eat no pork and keep the Sabbath. They believe in neither auricular confession nor purgatory." Schaff-Herzog, "The New Encyclopaedia of Religious Knowledge," art. "Nestorians."

WALDENSES

"And because they observed no other day of rest but the Sabbath days, they called them Insabathas, as much as to say, as they observed no Sabbath." Luther's "Fore-Runners" (original spelling), PP. 7, 8

WALDENSES

Roman Catholic writers try to evade the apostolic origin of the Waldenses, so as to make it appear that the Roman is the only apostolic church, and that all others are later novelties. And for this reason they try to make out that the Waldenses originated with Peter Waldo of the twelfth century. Dr. Peter Allix says:

"Some Protestants, on this occasion, have fallen into the snare that was set for them ... It is absolutely false, that these churches were never found by Peter Waldo ... it is a pure forgery." Ancient Church of Piedmont, pp. 192, Oxford: 1821

WALDENSES

It is not true, that Waldo gave this name to the inhabitants of the valleys: they were called Waldenses, or Vaudes, before his time, from the valleys in which they dwelt." Id., p. 182

WALDENSES

Oil the other hand, he "was called Valdus, or Waldo, because he received his religions notions from the inhabitants of the valleys." History of the Christian Church, William Jones, Vol 11, p.2

11TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

SCOTLAND

They field that Saturday was properly the Sabbath on which they abstained from work. "Celtic Scotland," Vol. 2, p. 350

SCOTLAND

"They worked on Sunday, but kept Saturday in a sabbatical manner ... These things Margaret abolished." A History of Scotland from the Roman Occupation," Vol.1, p. 96.

SCOTLAND

It was another custom of theirs to neglect the reverence due to the Lord's day, by devoting themselves to every kind of worldly business upon it, just as they did upon other days. That this was contrary to the law, she (Queen Margaret) proved to them as well by reason as by authority. 'Let us venerate the Lord's day.' said she, 'because of the resurrection of our Lord, which happened upon that day, and let us no longer do servile works upon it; bearing in mind that upon this day we were redeemed from the slavery of the devil. The blessed Pope Gregory affirms the same.'" Life of Saint Margaret, Turgot, p. 49 (British Museum Library)

SCOTLAND

(Historian Skene commenting upon the work of Queen Margaret) 'Her next point was that they did not duly reverence the Lord's day, but in this latter instance they seemed to have followed a custom of which we find traces in the early Church of Ireland, by which they field Saturday to be the Sabbath on which they rested from all their labours." Skene, "Celtic Scotland," Vol.2, p. 349

SCOTLAND AND IRELAND

"T. Ratcliffe Barnett, in his book on the fervent Catholic queen of Scotland who in 1060 was first to attempt the ruin of Columba's brethren, writes: 'In this matter the Scots had perhaps kept up the traditional usage of the ancient Irish Church which observed. Saturday instead of Sunday as the day of rest.'" Barnett, "Margaret of Scotland: Queen and Saint," p.97

COUNCIL OF CLERMONT

During the first crusade, Pope Urban 11 decreed at the council of Clermont (A.D. 1095) that the Sabbath be set aside in honour of the Virgin Mary." History of the Sabbath, p.672

CONSTANTINOPLE

"Because you observe the Sabbath with the Jews and the Lord's Day with us, you seem to imitate with such observance the sect of Nazarenes." Migne, "Patrologia Latina," Vol. 145, p.506; also Hergenroether, "Photius," Vol. 3, p.746. (The Nazarenes were a Christian denomination.)

GREEK CHURCH

"The observance of Saturday is, as everyone knows, the subject of a bitter dispute between tile Greeks and the Latins." Neale, "A History of the Holy Eastern ' Church," Vol 1, p. 731. (Referring to the separation of the Greek Church from the Latin in 1054)

12TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

LOMBARDY

Traces of Sabbath-keepers are found in the times of Gregory I, Gregory VII, and in the twelfth century in Lombardy." Strong's Cyclopaedia, 1, 660

WALDENSES

"Robinson gives an account of some of the Waldenses of the Alps, who were called Sabbati, Sabbatati, Insabbatati, but more frequently Inzabbalati. "One says they were so named from the Hebrew word Sabbath, because they kept the Saturday for the Lord's day.---General History of the Baptist Denomination, Vol.11, P. 413

SPAIN (Alphonse of Aragon)

"Alphonse, king of Aragon, etc., to all archbishops, bishops and to all others...'We command you that heretics, to wit, Waidenses and Insabbathi, should be expelled away from the face of God and from all Catholics and ordered to depart from our kingdom.'" Marianse, Praefatio in Lucam Tudensem, found in "Macima Gibliotheca Veterum Patrum," Vol.25, p.190

HUNGARY FRANCE, ENGLAND, ITALY, GERMANY.

(Referring to the Sabbath- keeping Pasagini) "The spread of heresy at this time is almost incredible. From Gulgaria to the Ebro, from northern France to the Tiber, everywhere we meet them. Whole countries are infested, like Hungary and southern France; they abound in many other countries, in Germany, in Italy, in the Netherlands and even in England they put forth their efforts." Dr. Hahn, "Gesch. der Ketz." 1, 13, 14

WALDENSES

"Among the documents we have by the same peoples, an explanation of the Ten Commandments dated by Boyer 1120. Observance of the Sabbath by ceasing from worldly labours, is enjoined." Blair, History of the Waldenses, Volume 1, p. 220

WALES

"There is much evidence that the Sabbath prevailed in Wales until AD 1115, when the first Roman bishop was seated at St. David's. The old Welsh Sabbath-keeping churches did not even then altogether bow the knee to Rome, but fled to their hiding places." Lewis, "Seventh Day Baptists in Europe and America," Volume 1, p.29

FRANCE

"For twenty years Peter de Bruys stirred southern France. He especially emphasised a day of worship that was recognised at that time among the Celtic churches of the British Isles, among the Paulicians, and in the great Church of the East namely, the seventh day of the fourth commandment."

PASAGINI

The papal author, Bonacursus, wrote the following against the Pasagini": "Not a few, but many know what are the errors of those who are called Pasaagini ... First, they teach that we should obey the Sabbath. Furthermore, to increase their error, they condemn and reject all the church Fathers, and the whole Roman Church." D'Achery, Spicilegium 1J.211-214; Muratory, Antiq. nted. aevi.5, f.152, Halin, 3, 209

13TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

WALDENSES

"They say that the blessed Pope Sylvester was the Antichrist of whom mention is made in the Epistles of St. Paul as having been the son of perdition. They also say that the keeping of the Sabbath ought to take place." Ecclesiastical History of the Ancient Churches of Piedmont," p. 169 (by prominent Roman Catholic author writing about Waldenses)

FRANCE (Waldenses)

To destroy completely these heretics Pope Innocent III sent Dominican inquisitors into France, and also crusaders, promising "a plenary remission of all sins, to those who took on them the crusade ... against the Albigenses." Catholic Encyclopaedia, Vol.XII, article "Raymond VI," p. 670

WALDENSES OF FRANCE

"The inquisitors ... [declare] that the sign of a Vaudois, deemed worthy of death, was that he followed Christ and sought to obey the commandments of God." History of the Inquisition of the Middle Ages," H.C.Les, vol. 1

FRANCE

Thousands of God's people were tortured to death by the Inquisition, buried alive, burned to death, or hacked to pieces by the crusaders. While devastating the city of Biterre the soldiers asked the Catholic leaders how they should know who were heretics; "Slay them all, for the Lord knows who is His." History of the Inquisition, pp.96

FRANCE-KING LOUIS IX, 1229

Published the statute "Cupientes" in which he charges himself to clear southern France from heretics as the Sabbath-keepers were called.

WALDENSES OF FRANCE

"The heresy of the Vaudois, or poor people of Lyons, is of great antiquity, for some say that it has been continued down even since the time of Pope Sylvester; and others, ever since that of the apostles." The Roman Inquisitor, Reincrus Sacho, writing about 1230.

FRANCE-Council Toulouse, 1229

Canons against Sabbath-keepers: "Canon 1-The lords of the different districts shall have the villas, houses and woods diligently searched, and the hiding-places of the heretics destroyed.
"Canon 14 - Lay members are not allowed to possess the books of either the Old or the New Testaments." Hefele, 5, 931, 962

EUROPE

"File Paulicians, Petrobusinas, Passaginians, Waldenses, Insabbatati were great Sabbath-keeping bodies of Europe down to 1250 A.D."

PASAGINIANS

Dr. Halin says that if the Pasaginians referred to the 4th Commandment to support the Sabbath, the Roman priests answered, "the Sabbath symbolised the eternal rest of the saints."

MONGOLIA

"The Mongolian conquest did not injure the Church of the East. (Sabbath-keeping.) On the contrary, a number of the Mongolian princes and a larger number of Mongolian queens were members of this church."

14TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

WALDENSES

"That we are to worship one only God, who is able to help us, and not the Saints departed; that we ought to keep holy the Sabbath day." Luther's Fore-runners," p. 38

INSABBATI

For centuries evangelical bodies, especially the Waldenses, were called Insabbati because of Sabbath-keeping." Gui, Manueld' Inquisiteur

BOHEMIA, 1310 (Modern Czechoslovakia)

In 1310, two hundred years before Luther's theses, the Bohemian brethren constituted one fourth of the population of Bohemia, and that they were in touch with the Waldenses who abounded in Austria, Lombardy, Bohemia, north Germany, Thuringia, Brandenburg, and Moravia. Erasmus pointed out how strictly Bohemian Waldenses kept the seventh day Sabbath." Armitage, "A History of The Baptists," p.313; Cox, "The Literature of the Sabbath Question," vol. 2, pp. 201-202

NORWAY

Then, too, in the "Catechism" that was used during the fourteenth century, the Sabbath commandment read thus; "Thou shalt not forget to keep the seventh day." This is quoted from "Documents and Studies Concerning the History of the Lutheran Catechism in the Nordish Churches," p.89. Christiania 1893

NORWAY

"Also the priests have caused the people to keep Saturdays as Sundays." Theological Periodicals for the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Norway, Vol. 1, page 184 Oslo.

ENGLAND, HOLLAND, BOHEMIA

"Ye wrote of the Sabbatarians in Bohemia, Transylvania, England and Holland between 1250 and 1600 AD" Truth Triumphant, Wilkinson, p.309

15TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

BOHEMIA

Erasmus testifies that even as late as about 1500 these Bohemians not only kept the seventh day scrupulously, but also were called Sabbatarians." Cox, "The Literature of the Sabbath Question," Vol.2, pp.201, 202 "Truth Triumphant," p.264

NORWAY

(Church Council held at Bergen, August 22,1435) "The first matter concerned a keeping holy of Saturday. It had come to the ears of the archbishop that people in different places of the kingdom had ventured the keeping holy of Saturday. It is strictly forbidden-it is stated-in the Church Law, for any one to keep or to adopt holy-days, outside of those which the pope, archbishop, or bishops appoint." The History of the Norwegian Church under Catholicism, R. Keyser, Vol.11, p. 488.Oslo: 1858

NORWAY 1435

(Catholic Provincial Council at Bergen) "We are informed that some people in different districts of the kingdom, have adopted and observed Saturday-keeping. It is severely forbidden-in holy church canon - one and all to observe days excepting those which the holy Pope archbishop, or the bishops command. Saturday-keeping must under no circumstances be permitted hereafter further than the church canon commands. Therefore, we council all the friends of God throughout all Norway who want to be obedient towards the. holy church to let this evil of Saturday- keeping alone; and the rest we forbid under penalty of sever church punishment to keep Saturday holy." Dip. Norveg., 7, 397

NORWAY, 1436

(Church Conference at Oslo) It is forbidden under the same penalty to keep Saturday holy by refraining from labour." History of the Norwegian Church, p.401

FRANCE - Waldenses

Louis XII, King of France (1498-1515), being informed by the enemies of the Waldenses inhabiting a part of the province of Provence. That several licentious crimes were laid to their account, sent the Master of Requests, and a certain doctor of the Sorbonne, to make inquiry into this matter. On their return they reported that they had visited all the parishes, but could not discover any traces of those crimes with which they were charged. On the contrary, they kept the Sabbath day, observed the ordinance of baptism, according to the primitive church, instructed their children in the articles of the Christian faith, and the commandments of God. The King having heard the report of his commissioners, said with an oath that they were better men than himself or his people." History of the Christian Church, Vol.11, pp. 71, 72, third edition. London: 1818

INDIA

"Separated from the Western world for a thousand years, they were naturally ignorant of many novelties introduced by the councils and decrees of the Lateran. 'We are Christians and not idolaters,' was their expressive reply when required to do homage to the image of the Virgin Mary."

16TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

ENGLAND

In the reign of Elizabeth, it occurred to many conscientious and independent thinkers (as it previously had done to some Protestants in Bohemia) that the fourth commandment required of them the observance, not of the first, but of the specified 'seventh day of the week.' Chambers' Cyclopaedia, article "Sabbath," Vol. 8, p. 462, 1537

RUSSIA (Council, Moscow, 1593)

"The accused [Sabbath-keepers] were summoned; they openly acknowledged the new faith, and defended the same. The most eminent of them, the secretary, of state, Kuritzyn, Ivan Maximow, Kassian, archimandrite of the Holy Monastery of Novgorod, were condemned to death, and burned publicly in cages, at Moscow; December 17, 1503." H. Sternberg, "Geschichte der Juden" (Leipzig, 1873), pp.117-1122

SWEDEN

"This zeal for Saturday-keeping continued for a long time: even little things which might strengthen the practice of keeping Saturday were punished." Bishop Anjou, "Svenska Kirkans Historia after Motethiers, Upsala

LICHENSTEIN FAMILY

Estates in Austria, Bohemia, Moravia, Hungary. Lichenstein in the Rhine Valley wasn't their country until the end of the 7th century. "The Sabbatarians teach that the outward Sabbath, i.e. Saturday, still must be observed, They say that Sunday is the Pope's invention." Refutation of Sabbath, by Wolfgang Capito, published 1599

BOHEMIA

(The Bohemian Brethren). Dr. R. Cox says: I find from a passage in Erasmus that at the early period of the Reformation when he wrote, there were Sabbatarians in Bohemia, who not only kept the seventh day, but were said to be ... scrupulous in resting on it." Literature of the Sabbath Question, Cox, Vol. 11, pp. 201, 202

HISTORIAN'S LIST OF CHURCHES (16th Century)

"Sabbatarians, so called because they reject the observance of the Lord's day as not commanded in Scripture, they consider the Sabbath alone to be holy, as God rested on that day and commanded to keep it holy and to rest on it." A. Ross

GERMANY

Dr. Esk (while refuting the Reformers) 'However, the church has transferred the observance from Saturday to Sunday by virtue of her own power, without Scripture.' Dr. Esk's "Enchiridion," 1533, page 78, 79.

PRINCES OF LICHTENSTISIN (Europe)

About the year 1520 many of these Sabbath -keepers found shelter on the estate of Lord Leonhardt of Lichtenstein held to the observance of the true Sabbath." J. N. Andrews, History of the Sabbath, p. 649, ed.

INDIA

"The famous Jesuit, Francis Xavier, called for the Inquisition, which was set up in Goa, India, in 1560, to check the 'Jewish wickedness' (Sabbath-keeping).," Adeney, "The Greek and Eastern Churches," p.527, 528

NORWAY-1544

"Some of you, contrary to the warning, keep Saturday. You ought to be severely punished. Whoever shall be found keeping Saturday, must pay a fine of ten marks." History of King Christian the Third," Niels Krag and S. Stephanus

AUSTRIA

"Sabatarians now exist in Austria." Luther, "Lectures on Genesis," A.D. 1523-27

ABYSSINIA - AD 1534

(Abyssinian legate at court of Lisbon) It is not therefore, in imitation of the Jews, but in obedience to Christ and His holy apostles, that we observe the day." Gedde's "Church History of Ethiopia," pp. 87,8

DR. MARTIN LUTHER

"God blessed the Sabbath and sanctified it to Himself, God willed that this command concerning the Sabbath should remain. He willed that on the seventh day the word should be preached." Commentary on Genesis, Vol.1, pp.138-140

BAPTISTS

"Some have suffered torture because they would not rest when others kept Sunday, for they declared it to be the holiday and law of Antichrist." Sebastian Frank (A.D. 1536)

FINLAND - December 6, 1554

(King Gustavus Vasa 1 of Sweden's letter to the people of Finland) "Some time ago we heard that some people in Finland had fallen into a great error and observed the seventh day, called Saturday." State Library at Helsingfors, Reichs register, Vom 1, 1554, Teil B. B. leaf 1120, pp. 175-180a

SWITZERLAND

"The observance of the Sabbath is a part of the moral law. It has been kept holy since the beginning of the world." Ref. Noted Swiss writer, R Hospinian, 1592

HOLLAND AND GERMANY

Barbara of Thiers, who was executed in 1529, declared: "God has commanded us to rest on the seventh day." Another martyr, Christina Tolingerin, is mentioned thus: "Concerning holy days and Sundays, she said: 'In six days the Lord made the world, on the seventh day he rested. The other holy days have been instituted by popes, cardinals, and archbishops.'" Martyrology of the Churches of Christ, commonly called Baptists, during the era of the Reformation, from the Dutch of TA. Van Bright, London, 1850,1, pp. 113-4.

17TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

ENGLAND-1618

"At last for teaching only five days in the week, and resting upon Saturday she was carried to the new prison in Maiden Lane, a place then appointed for the restraint of several other persons of different opinions from the Church of England. Mrs. Traske lay fifteen or sixteen years a prisoner for her opinion about the Saturday Sabbath." Pagitt's "Heresiography." p.196

ENGLAND - 1668

"Here in England are about nine or ten churches that keep the Sabbath, besides many scattered disciples, who have eminently preserved." Stennet's letters, 1668 and 1670. Cox, Sab.,1, 268

HUNGARY, RUMANIA

"But as they rejected Sunday and rested on the Sabbath, Prince Sigmond Bathory ordered their persecution. Pechi advanced to position of chancellor of state and next in line to throne of Transylvania. He studied his Bible, and composed a number of hymns, mostly in honour of the Sabbath. Pechi was arrested and died in 1640.

SWEDEN AND FINLAND

"Ye can trace these opinions over almost the whole extent of Sweden of that day-from Finland and northern Sweden. "in the district of Upsala the farmers kept Saturday in place of Sunday. "About the year 1625 this religious tendency became so pronounced in these countries that not only large numbers of the common people began to keep Saturday as the rest day, but even many priests did the same." History of the Swedish Church, Vol.1, p.256

MUSCOVITE RUSSIAN CHURCH

"They solemnize Saturday (the old Sabbath). Samuel Purchase - "His Pilgrims." Vol. 1, p. 350

INDIA (Jacobites)- 1625

"They kept Saturday holy. They have solemn service on Saturdays." Pilgrims, Part 2,1).1269.

AMERICA - 1664

"Stephen Mumford, the first Sabbath-keeper in America come from London in 1664." History of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference by Jasper Bailey, pp. 237, 238

AMERICA - 1671 (Seventh-day Baptists)

"Broke front Baptist Church ill order to keep Sabbath." See Bailey's History, pp. 9,10

ENGLAND

Charles 1, 1647 (when querying the Parliament Commissioners) For it will not be found in Scripture where Saturday is no longer to be kept, or turned into the Sunday wherefore it must be the Church's authority that changed the one and instituted the other." Cox, "Sabbath Laws," p. 333.

ENGLAND-John Milton

It will surely be far safer to observe the seventh day, according to express commandment of God, than on the authority of mere human conjecture to adopt the first." Sab. Lit. 2, 46-54

ENGLAND

"Upon the publication of the 'Book of Sports' in 1618 a violent controversy arose among English divines on two point. - First, whether the Sabbath of the fourth commandment was in force; and, secondly, on what ground the First day of the week was entitled to be observed as the Sabbath." Haydn's Dictionary of Dates, art. "Sabbatarians." p.602

ETHIOPIA - 1604

Jesuits tried to induce the Abyssinian church to accept Roman Catholicism. They influenced King Zadenghel to propose to submit to the Papacy (AD 1604). "Prohibiting all his subjects, upon severe penalties, to observe Saturday any longer." Gedde's "Church History of Ethiopia." p.31 1, also Gibbon's "Decline and Fall," ch. 47

BOHEMIA, MORAVIA, SWITZERLAND, GERMANY

One of the counsellors and lords of the court was John Gerendi, head of the Sabbatarians, a people who did not keep Sunday, but Saturday." Lanly, "The History of Socinianism." p. 60

TELEGRAPH PRINT, NAPIER

The inscription on the monument over the grave of Dr. Peter Chamberlain, physician to King James and Queen Anne, King Charles 1 and Queen Katherine says that Dr. Chamberlain was "a Christian keeping the commandment of God and the faith of Jesus. Being baptised about the year 1648, and keeping the seventh day for the Sabbath above thirty-two years."

18TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

ABYSSINIA

"The Jacobites assembled on the Sabbath day, before the Domical day, in the temple, and kept that day, as do also the Abyssinians as we have seen from the confession of their faith by the Ethiopian king Clauditis." Abundaenus, "Historia Jacobatarum," p.1 18-9 (18th Century)

RUMANIA, 1760

"Joseph II' s edict of tolerance did not apply to the Sabbatarians, some of whom again lost all of their possessions." Jahrgang 2, 254

"Catholic priests aided by soldiers forcing them to accept Romanism nominally, and compelling the remainder to labour oil the Sabbath and to attend church on Sunday, these were the methods employed for two hundred fifty years to turn the Sabbatarians.

GERMANY-Tennhardt of Nuerenber

"He holds strictly to the doctrine of the Sabbath, because it is one of the ten commandments." Bengel's Meban und Wirken." Burk, p.579

He himself says: It cannot be shown that Sunday has taken the place of the Sabbath (P.366). the Lord God has sanctified the last day of the week. Antichrist, on the other hand, has appointed the first day of the week." Ki Auszug aus Tennhardt's "Schriften," P.49 (printed 1712)

BOHEMIA AND MORAVIA (Today Czechoslovakia).

Their history from 1635 to 1867 is thus described by Adolf Dux: - The condition of the Sabbatarians was dreadful. Their books and writings had to be delivered to the Karisburg Consistory to become the spoils of flames." Aus Ungarn, pp. 289-291. Leipzig, 1850

HOLLAND AND GERMANY

"Dr. Cornelius stated of East Friesland, that when Baptists were numerous, "Sunday and holidays were not observed," (they were Sabbath- keepers). Der Anteil Ostfrieslands and Ref. Muenster," 1852, pp 129,34

MORAVIA

Count Zinzendorf. In 1738 Zinzendorf wrote of h is keeping the Sabbath thus:---I have employed the Sabbath for rest many years already, and our Sunday for the proclamation of the gospel." Budingsche Sammiung, See. 8, p. 224. Leipzig, 1742

AMERICA, 1741

-Moravian Brethren (after Zinzendorf arrived from Europe). "As a special instance it deserves to be noticed that he is resolved with the church at Bethlehem to observe the seventh day as rest day. Id., pp. 5, 1421, 1422

AMERICA

But before Zinzendorf and the Moravians at Bethlehem thus began the observance of the Sabbath and prospered, there was a small body of German Sabbath keepers in Pennsylvania. See Rupp's "History of Religious Denominations in the United States," pp. 109 - 123

19TH CENTURY SABBATH OBSERVANCE

RUSSIA

"But the majority moved to the Crimea and the Caucasus, where they remain true to their doctrine in spite of persecution until this present time. The people call their Subotniki, or Sabbatharians," Sternberg, "Geschichte der Juden in Polen," p.124

CHINA

"At this time flung prohibited the use of opium, and even tobacco, and all intoxicating drinks, and the Sabbath was religiously observed." The Ti-Ping Revolution," by Lin-Le, and officer among them, Vol. 1, pp.36-48, 84

"The seventh day is most religiously and strictly observed. The Taiping Sabbath is kept upon our Saturday." P. 3 19

CHINA

"The Taipings when asked why they observed the seventh day Sabbath, replied that it was, first, because the Bible taught it, and, second, because their ancestors observed it as a day of worship." A Critical History of the Sabbath and the Sunday.

INDIA AND PERSIA

"Besides, they maintain the solemn observance of Christian worship throughout our Empire, on the seventh day." Christian Researches in Asia," p.143

DENMARK

"This agitation was not without its effect. Pastor M.A. Sornmer began observing the seventh day, and wrote in his church paper "Indovet Kristendom" No.5,187 an impressive article about the true Sabbath. In a letter to Elder John G. Matteson, he says: "Among the Baptists here in Denmark there is a great agitation regarding the Sabbath commandment. However, I am probably the only preacher in Denmark who stands so near to the Adventists and who for many years has proclaimed Christ's second coming." Advent Tidende," May, 1875

SWEDEN (Baptists)

"Ye will now endeavour to show that the sanctification of the Sabbath has its foundation and its origin in a law which God at creation itself established for the whole world, and as a consequence thereof is binding on all men in all ages." Evangelisten (The Evangelist). Stockholm, May 30 to August 15, 1863 (organ of the Swedish Baptist Church)

AMERICA, 1845

"Thus we see Dan. 7, 25, fulfilled, the little horn changing times and laws. 'Therefore it appears to me that all who keep the first Sunday for the Sabbath are Pope's Sunday-keepers and God's Sabbath-breakers.' Elder T.M. Preble, Feb.13, 1845

AMERICA

(Seventh-day Adventists) In 1844 Seventh-day Adventists arose and had spread to nearly all the world by the close of the 19th Century. Their name is derived from their teaching of the seventh day Sabbath and the Advent of Jesus. In 1874 their work was established in Europe, 1885 Australasia, 1887- South Africa, 1888 - Asia, 1888 - South America. Seventh - day Adventists uphold the same Sabbath that Jesus and His followers kept. The sacred Torch of Truth was not extinguished through the long centuries. Adventists are working today in nearly 1000 languages of earth and have over 27,000 churches. Over ten million members around the globe welcome the sacred Sabbath hours.

20TH CENTURY

BAPTIST: SUNDAY SABBATH NOT IN THE SCRIPTURES

"There was and is a commandment to keep holy the Sabbath day, but that Sabbath day was not on Sunday ... It will be said, however, and with some show of triumph, that the Sabbath was transferred from (the seventh to the first day of the week .... where can the record of such a transaction be found?

Not in the New Testament. Of course, I quite well know that Sunday did come into use in early Christian history as a religious day, as we learn from the Christian Fathers and other sources. But what a pity that it comes branded with the mark of paganism, and christened with the name of a sun god, when adopted and sanctioned by the papal apostasy, and bequeathed as a sacred legacy to protestantism!" Dr. Edward T. Hiscox, author of The Baptist Manual

"There was never any formal or authoritative change from the Jewish seventh day Sabbath to the Christian first day observance" William Owen Carver, The Lord's Day in One Day p.49

ROMAN CATHOLIC: NO SUCH LAW IN THE BIBLE

"Nowhere in the Bible do we find that Jesus or the apostles ordered that the Sabbath be changed from Saturday to Sunday. We have the commandment of God given to Moses to keep holy the Sabbath day, that is, the seventh day of the week, Saturday. Today, most Christians keep Sunday because it has been revealed to us by the [Roman] church outside the Bible." Catholic Virginian, Oct. 3, 1947

Question: "Have you not any other way of proving that the Church has power to institute festivals of precept?" -

Answer: Had she not such power, she could not have done that in which all modern religionists agree with her - she could not have substituted the observance of Sunday, the first day of the week, for the observance of Saturday, the seventh day, a change for which there is no Scriptural authority" Stephen Keenan, A Doctrinal Catechism 3rd ed. p. 174

Some theologians have held that God likewise directly determined the Sunday as the day of worship in the NEW LAW, that He Himself has explicitly substituted Sunday for the Sabbath. But this theory is entirely abandoned. It is now commonly held that God simply gave His church the power to set aside whatever day or days she would deem suitable as holy days. The church chose Sunday, the first day of the week, and in the course of time added other days as holy days." John Laux A Course in Religion for Catholic High Schools and Academics 1936, vol. 1 p. 51

ANGLICAN / EPISCOPAL

"We have made the change from the seventh day to the first day, from Saturday to Sunday, on the authority of the one holy Catholic Church" Bishop Seymour, Why We Keep Sunday.

LUTHERAN: THEY ERR IN TEACHING SUNDAY SABBATH

But they err in teaching that Sunday has taken the place of the Old Testament Sabbath and therefore must be kept as the seventh day had to be kept by the children of Israel. These churches err in their teaching for Scripture has in no way ordained the first day of the week in place of the Sabbath. There is simply no law in the New Testament to that effect" John Theodore Mueller, Sabbath or Sunday, pp. 15, 16

"We have seen how gradually the impression of the Jewish Sabbath faded from the mind of the Christian church, and how completely the newer thought underlying the observance of the first day took possession of the church. We have seen that the Christian of the first three centuries never confused one with the other, but for a time celebrated both." The Sunday Problem, a study book by the Lutheran Church (1923) p.36

"They [Roman Catholics] refer to the Sabbath Day, as having been changed into the Lord's Day, contrary to the Decalogue, as it seems. Neither is there any example whereof they make more than concerning the changing of the Sabbath Day. Great, say they, is the power of the Church, since it has dispensed with one of the Ten commandments!" Augsburg Confession of Faith, art. 28; written by Melancthon and approved by Martin Luther, 1530; as published in The Book of Concord of the Evangelical Lutheran Church Henry Jacobs, editor (1911), p.63

PRESBYTERIAN: SUNDAY KEPT THE GENTILES HAPPY

"Sunday being the first day of which the Gentiles solemnly adored that planet avid called it Sunday. Partly from its influence on that day especially, and partly in respect to its divine body (as they conceived it). The Christians thought fit to keep the same day and the same name of it, that they in might not appear carelessly peevish, and by that means hinder the conversion of the Gentiles, and bring a greater prejudice that might be otherwise taken against the gospel" T.M. Morer, Dialogues on the Lord's Day

MOODY BIBLE INSTITUTE: "SABBATH WAS BEFORE SINAI"

"The Sabbath was binding in Eden, and it has been in force ever since. This Fourth Commandment begins with the word 'remember,' showing that the Sabbath had already existed when God wrote the law on the tables of stone at Sinai. How can men claim that this one commandment has been done away with when they admit that the other nine are still binding? D.L. Moody, Weighed and Wanted, p.47

METHODIST: JESUS DID NOT ABOLISH THE MORAL LAW

The moral law contained in the Ten Commandments, and enforced by the prophets. He Jesus did not take away. It was not the design of His coming to revoke any part of this. This is a law which can never be broken ... Every part of this law must remain in force upon all mankind and in all ages. Not depending either on time or place, or any other circumstances liable to change, but on the nature of man, and their unchangeable relation to each other." John Wesley, Sermons on Several Occasions, Volume 1, No. 25

Appendix IV – Rome Speaks About Sunday Sacredness

"He shall intend to changes times and the law. " Daniel 7J.25

The Roman Catholic Church---its leaders, its priests, its scholars. its writers and its teachers-here unite to tell us the truth about the Bible Sabbath (the seventh day of the week) and the Sunday (the first day of the week).

"Sunday is a Catholic institution, and its claims to observance can be defended only on Catholic principles. From beginning to end of Scripture there is not a single passage that warrants the transfer of weekly public worship from the last day of the week to the first." -- Catholic Press Sydney, Australia, August 1900.

Is there no express commandment for the observance of the first day of the week as a Sabbath, instead of the seventh day? "None whatever. Neither Christ nor His apostles nor the first Christians celebrated [observed] the first day of the week, instead of 'the seventh as the Sabbath.'" -New York Weekly Tribune [Roman Catholic], May 24, 1900.

'Some non-Catholics object to Purgatory because there is no specific mention of it in Scripture. There is no specific mention of the word Sunday in Scripture [either]. The Sabbath is mentioned, but Sabbath means a keeping of Saturday. Yet the Christians of almost all denominations worship on Sunday not on Saturday. The Jews observe Saturday. Nowhere in the Bible is it stated that worship should be changed from Saturday to Sunday.

Martin A Scott, Things Catholics are Asked About, 1927, p. 236 1Scoff (1865-1954) was a Jesuit theologian and one of the foremost Catholic defenders of his time].

"Protestantism, in discarding the authority of the church has no good reasons for its Sunday theory, and ought logically to keep Saturday as the Sabbath." ---John Gilmary Shea, "The Observance of Sunday and Civil Laws for its Enforcement, in The American Catholic Quarterly Review, Jan. 1883, p. 152. Shea (1824-1892), a Catholic priest, wrote an important history of American Catholicism].

"Ques.---Have you any other way of proving that the church has power to institute festivals of precept [command holidays]? "Ans.---Had she not such power, she could not have done that in which all modern religionists agree with her.--She could not have substituted the observance of Sunday, the first day of the week, for the observance of Saturday, the seventh day, a change for which there is no Scriptural authority." -Stephen Keenan, A Doctrinal Catechism 1846 edition., p. 176 [Keenan was a Scottish priest, whose catechism has been widely used in Roman Catholic schools and academies].

"Ques.---Which is the Sabbath day?

"Ans.---Saturday is the Sabbath day.

"Ques.---Why do we observe Sunday instead of Saturday?

"Ans.---We observe Sunday instead of Saturday because the Catholic Church transferred the solemnity from Saturday to Sunday."

Geiermann, The Convert's Catechism of Catholic Doctrine, 195 7 edition, p. 50 1Geiermann (18 70-1929) received the "apostolic blessing " of pope Pius X on this book, January 26, 19101.

Is not every Christian obliged to sanctify Sunday and to abstain on that day from unnecessary servile work? Is not the observance of this law among the most prominent of our sacred duties? But you may search the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, and you will not find a single line authorising the sanctification of Sunday. The Scriptures enforce the religious observance of Saturday, a day which we never sanctify." -James Cardinal Gibbons, The Faith of Our Fathers, 92nd edition, rev., p. 89 [Cardinal Gibbons (1834 - 1921) was archbishop of Baltimore. This book was the most famous Catholic book in America a hundred years ago].

It is well to remind the Presbyterians, Baptists, Methodists, and all other Christians, that the Bible does not support them anywhere in their observance of Sunday. Sunday is an institution of the Roman Catholic Church and those who observe the day observe a commandment of the Catholic Church." - Priest Brady, in an address at Elizabeth, N.J. on March 17, 1903, reported its the Elizabeth, N.J.

News of March 18, 1903.

"Reason and common sense demand the acceptance of one or the other of these alternatives: either Protestantism and the keeping holy of Saturday, or Catholicity and the keeping holy of Sunday. Compromise is impossible." ---The Catholic Mirror, December 23, 1893 1The Mirror is a Baltimore Roman Catholic weekly newspaper.

"For ages all Christian nations looked to the Catholic Church, and, as we have seen, the various states enforced by law her ordinances as to worship and cessation of labour on Sunday. Protestantism, in discarding the authority of the Church, has no good reason for its Sunday theory, and ought logically, to keep Saturday as the Sabbath. The State in passing laws for the due Sanctification of Sunday, is unwittingly acknowledging the authority of the Catholic Church, and carrying out more or less faithfully its prescription. The Sunday as a day of the week set apart for the obligatory public worship of Almighty God is purely a creation of the Catholic Church." ---John Gilmary Shea, in The American Catholic Quarterly Review, January 1883, p. 139 1Shea (1824-1892) was an important Catholic historian, of his time].

"Ques.--- How prove you that the Church hath power to command feasts and holy days? "Ans.---By the very act of changing the Sabbath into Sunday, which Protestants allow of [by observing it]; and therefore they fondly contradict themselves, by keeping Sunday strictly, and breaking most other feasts commanded by the same church." ---Priest Henry Tuberville, An Abridgment of the Christian Doctrine, p. 58 [In 1833, Tuberville received a papal approbation- a special Vatican approval on this book.

1. Is Saturday the seventh day according to the Bible and the Ten Commandments? " I answer yes.
2. "2. Is Sunday the first day of the week and did the Church change the seventh day--Saturday Sunday, the first day? I answer yes.
3. "3. Did Christ change the day? I answer no! No!

"Faithfully yours, [Cardinal Gibbons" letter photostat. Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore was the leading advocate of Catholicism in America at the end of the last century].

'Some theologians have held that God [in the Bible] likewise directly determined the Sunday as the day of worship in the New Law, that He Himself has explicitly substituted the Sunday for the Sabbath. But this theory is now entirely abandoned. It is now commonly held that God simply gave His [Catholic] Church the power to set aside whatever day or days, she would deem suitable as Holy Days. The Church chose Sunday, the first day of the week, and in the course of time added other days, as holy days." -- Vincent J. Kelly, Forbidden Sunday and Feast Day Occupations, 1943, p. 2. Kelly, a Catholic priest, prepared this at Catholic University of America.

"The pope has authority and has often exercised it, to dispense with the commands of Christ ... The pope's will stands for reason. He can dispense above the law, and of wrong make right, by correcting and changing laws." ---from Pope Nicholas ' time.

"Protestants ... accept Sunday rather than Saturday as the day for public worship after the Catholic Church made the change ... But the Protestant mind does not seem to realise that in accepting the Bible, in observing the Sunday, they are accepting the authority of the spokesman for the church, the Pope." - Our Sunday Visitor, Feb. 5, 1950 1One of the largest US. Roman Catholic magazines].

"Ques.---What Bible authority is there for changing the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week? Who gave the Pope the authority to change a command of God? "Ans.---It was the Catholic Church which, by the authority of Jesus Christ, has transferred this rest [from the Bible Sabbath] to the Sunday. Thus the observance of Sunday by the Protestants is an homage they pay, in spite of themselves, to the authority of the [Catholic] Church." --Monsignor Louis Segur, Plain Talk About the Protestantism of Today, 1868, p. 213. L. G. Segur (1820-1881) was a French Catholic prelate and apologist, and later a diplomatic and judicial official at Rome.

"The Pope is not only the representative of Jesus Christ, but he is Jesus Christ Himself, hidden under veil of flesh." Catholic National, July, 1895.

[When the pope is crowned, he is reminded that he is] "the father of princes, and kings, and the Supreme Judge of the Universe", and on earth the Vicar of Jesus Christ our Saviour, and the Governor of the world."

Ferraris, Ecclesiastical Dictionary, art. "Pope" [Lucius Ferraris (d. before 1763) was an Italian Catholic canonist of the Franciscan order and consultor of the Holy Office in Rome].

"Ques.---By what authority did the Church substitute Sunday for Saturday? "Ans.---The Church substituted Sunday for Saturday by the plenitude of that divine power which Jesus Christ bestowed upon her." ---Peter F. Geiermann, Tire Convert's Catechism of Catholic Doctrine, 1923 edition, p. 59 [Priest Geiermann (1870-1929) was a well-known Catholic writer].

"The judicial authority will even include the power to forgive sins."
--The Catholic Encyclopedia, vol. 12, p. 265, art. "Pope."

"Thou art the shepherd, thou art the physician, thou art the director, thou art the husbandman, finally thou art another god on earth."

Marcellus, in the fourth session of The Fifth Lateran Council, 1512, an address to the pope. Labbe and Cossart, History of the Councils, vol 24, col 109 [Marcellus (d. 1527) was a Catholic priest and archbishop of Coreyra. In appreciation of his many kindnesses, he was declared to be "noble lord of Venice".

"The Catholic Church ... by virtue of her divine mission, changed the day from Saturday to Sunday."

The Catholic Mirror, September 23, 1893. The Mirror, a Baltimore based Catholic weekly, was the official organ for Cardinal Gibbons.

"Ques.---When Protestants do profane work [regular employment] upon Saturday, or the seventh day of the week, do they follow the Scripture as their only rule of faith-do they find this permission clearly laid down in the Sacred Volume?

"Ans.---On the contrary, they have only the authority of [Catholic] tradition for this practice. In profaning Saturday, they violate one of God's commandments, which He has never abrogated,--Remember thou keep holy the Sabbath day.'

"Ques.---Is the observance of Sunday, as the day of rest, a matter clearly laid down in Scripture?

"Ans. - It certainly is not; and yet all Protestants consider the observance of this particular day as essentially necessary to salvation. To say, we observe the Sunday, because Christ rose from the dead on that day is to say we act without warrant of Scripture; and we might as well [incorrectly] say, that we should rest on Thursday because Christ ascended to heaven on that day." ---Priest Steven Keenan, A Doctrinal Catechism, pp. 252, 254 [The catechism of this Scottish priest is widely used in Catholic schools to instruct children into their beliefs].

"Scripture and Tradition are called the remote rule of faith, because the Catholic does not base his faith directly on these sources. The proximate rule of faith is for him the One, Holy, Catholic, and Apostolic Church, which alone has received from God the authority to interpret infallibly the doctrines He has revealed, whether these he contained in Scripture or in Tradition ... If we consulted the Bible only, we should still have to keep holy the Sabbath Day, that is, Saturday." ---John Laux, A Course in Religion for Catholic High Schools and Academies, 1936 edition, vol. 1, p. 51 [John Laux (1878-1939) was a Catholic priest, teacher, and author of many Catholic histories as well as biographies of their saints.

"Like two sacred rivers flowing from Paradise, the Bible and divine Tradition contain the Word of God, the precious gems of revealed truths. "Though these two divine streams are in themselves, on account of their divine origin, of equal sacredness, and are both full of revealed truths, still, of the two, TRADITION is to us more clear and safe. "[full caps, theirs] --Joseph E. Di Bruno, Catholic Belief, 1884 ed., p. 45 [Di Bruno was an Italian Catholic cleric].

"Some of the truths that have been handed down to us by tradition and are not recorded in the Sacred Scriptures. are the following: That there are just seven sacraments; that there is a purgatory; that, in the new law, Sunday should be kept holy instead of the Sabbath; that infants should be baptized, and that there are precisely seventy-two books in the Bible [66 that are inspired, plus 6 apocryphal] ---Francis J. Butler, Holy Family Catechism, No. 3, p. 63. Butler (1859 - ?) was a Catholic priest of Boston and an author of a series of catechisms].

It is worthwhile to remember that this observance of Sunday-in which after all, the only Protestant worship consists not only has no foundation in the Bible, but it is in flagrant contradiction with its letter, which commands rest on the Sabbath, which is Saturday. It was the Catholic Church which, by the authority of Jesus Christ, has transferred this rest to the Sunday in remembrance of the resurrection of our Lord. Thus the observance of Sunday by the Protestants is an homage they pay, in spite of themselves, to the authority of the [Catholic] Church."

Louis Segur, Plain Talk About The Protestantism of Today, p. 213 IL. G. Segur (1820-1881), a French prelate, later was appointed as a diplomatic and judicial official in Rome.

"All the names which in the Scriptures are applied to Christ, by virtue of which it is established that He is over the church, all the same names are applied to the pope." ---Robert Cardinal Bellarmine, De Concilio Auctoritate - On the Authority of the Councils, Bk. 2, chap. 17. Bellarmine (1542-1621), a professor and rector at the Gregorian University in Rome, is generally considered to have been one of the outstanding Jesuit instructors in the history of this organisation].

On April 30, 1922, in the Vatican throne room, a throng of cardinals, bishops, priests, nuns, boys, and girls, who had all fallen on their knees in reverence of the one before them, were addressed from the throne by Pope Pius XI, who said: "You know that I am the Holy Father, the representative of God on the earth, the Vicar of Christ, which means I am God on the earth." Pope Pius XI, quoted in Tire Bulwark, October, 1922, p. 104. Pius XI (1857-1939) was pope from 1922-1939, and was the one who signed the Treaty of the Lateran with Mussolini in 1929, whereby Vatican City was established. He consistently backed Mussolini's policies and government until he met with military reverses...

"The Pope can modify [change] the Divine Law."

Lucius Ferraris, Ecclesiastical Dictionary [Ferraris (d. before 1763) was an Italian Catholic official of the Franciscan order, highly placed in the Church].

"We define that the Holy Apostolic See and the Roman Pontiff holds the primacy over the whole world."

Philippe Labbe and Gabriel Cossart, The Most Holy Councils, vol. 13, col. 1167, on "The Council at Trent."

"The Pope is of so great dignity and so exalted that he is not a mere man, but as it were God, and the vicar of God. He is the divine monarch and supreme emperor, and king of kings. Hence the Pope is crowned with a triple crown, asking of heaven and of earth and of the lower regions."

Lucius Ferraris, Prompta Bibliotheca, vol. 6, art. "Papa IF". Ferraris (d. prior to 1763) was an Italian Catholic canonist and consultor to the Holy Office in Rome].

"We hold upon this earth the place of God Almighty."

Pope Leo XIII, in an encyclical letter dated June 20, 1894, The Great Encyclical Letters of Leo XIII, p. 304. Leo XIII (1810-1903) was pope from 1878 until his death. He was one of the most forceful popes of the nineteenth century]

Not the Creator of the universe, in Genesis 2:1-3,--but the Catholic Church "can claim the honour of having granted man a pause to his work every seven days [!]" --S. C. Mosser, Storia della Domenica, page 366-367. This is a recent work of the twentieth century (1969), prepared by the author under the direction of the leading Jesuit university in the world--the Gregorian, in Rome].

If Protestants would follow the Bible, they should worship God on the Sabbath Day. In keeping the Sunday they are following a law of the Catholic Church." ---Albert Smith, Chancellor of the Archdiocese of Baltimore, replying for the Cardinal in a letter dated February 10, 1920.

The following Catholic tract was originally published in The Catholic Mirror (file magazine of Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore), on September 2, 1893. In it, a contrast is made between the Biblical faith and practice of the Hebrews, the Seventh-day Adventists, and the other Protestant churches, in order to ridicule the usual Protestant position in regard to Sunday:

"The Israelite respects the authority of the Old Testament only, but the Adventist who is a Christian, accepts the New Testament on the same ground as the Old, viz.: an inspired record also. He finds that the Bible, his teacher is consistent in both parts; that the Redeemer, during His mortal life, never kept any other day than Saturday. The Gospels plainly evince to him this fact; while in the pages of the Acts of the Apostles, the Epistles and the Apocalypse [Revelation], not the vestige of an act cancelling the Saturday arrangement [seventh day Sabbath keeping] can be found.

"The Protestant world at its birth [as he thinks, at the time of the Sixteenth Century Reformation] found the Christian Sabbath too strongly entrenched to run counter to its existence [to oppose Sunday keeping]. It [Protestantism] was therefore planted under the necessity of acquiescing in the arrangement, thus implying the Church's right to change the day . . . The Christian Sabbath [Sunday] is therefore to this day the acknowledged offspring of the Catholic Church. As Spouse of the Holy Ghost, without a word of remonstrance from the Protestant world."

Christian Sabbath, 2nd ed, The Catholic Mirror, 1893, p. 31.

"All of us believe many things in regard to religion that we do not find in the Bible. For example, nowhere in the Bible do we find that Christ or the apostles changed [the day] from Saturday to Sunday. We have the commandment of God given to Moses to keep holy the Sabbath Day, that is the 7th day of the week, Saturday. Today most Christians keep Sunday because it has been revealed to us by the Church outside the Bible." -- "To Tell You the Truth, " The Catholic Virginian, 22, October 3, 1947, p. 9.

"Protestants often deride the authority of Church tradition, and claim to be directed by the Bible only; yet they, too, have been guided by customs of the ancient Church, which find no warrant in the Bible, but rest on Church tradition only! A striking instance of this is the following:--The first positive command in the Decalogue is to 'Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy,' . . . But the Sabbath Day, the observance of which God commanded, was our Saturday. Yet who among either Catholics or Protestants, except a sect or two, ever keep that commandment now? None. Why is this? The Bible, which Protestants claim to obey exclusively, gives no authorisation for the substitution of the first day of the week for the seventh. On what authority, therefore, have they done so? Plainly on the authority of that very Catholic Church which they abandoned, and whose traditions they condemn." ---John L. Stoddard, Rebuilding a Lost Faith, p. 80. Stoddard (1850-1931) was an agnostic writer most of his life, who later was converted to Catholicism.

"A. We observe Sunday instead of Saturday because the Catholic Church transferred the solemnity from Saturday to Sunday." ---Peter Geiermann, CSSR, A Doctrinal Catechism, 1957 edition, p. 50. Geiermann (1870-1929) received a papal approbation from the Vatican on his book on January 25, 1910.

"Q. What is the Third Commandment? The fourth in Protestant Bibles, because the Catholic Church took out the Second Commandment-Exodus 20:4-6. "A. The Third Commandment is: Remember that thou keep holy the Sabbath day. "Q. Which is the Sabbath day? "A. Saturday is the Sabbath day. "Q. Why do we observe; Sunday instead of Saturday? "A. The Catholic Church, after changing the day of rest from Saturday, the seventh day of the week, to Sunday, the first day, made the third commandment refer to Sunday as the day to be kept as the Lord's Day. Catholic Encyclopedia, vol. 4, p. 153.

"Ques.---What do we conclude from all this? "Ans.---That Protestants have no Scripture for the measure of their day of rest,--that they abolish the observance of Saturday without warrant of Scripture,--that they substitute Sunday in its place without Scriptural authority,--consequently, that for all this, they have only traditional authority. Yet Protestants would look upon a man who would . . . keep the Saturday and profane the first day, as a victim of perdition. Hence we must conclude from the Protestant belief of our teachings], that the Scripture, which does not teach these things clearly, does not contain all necessary truths, and, consequently, cannot be the only rule of faith." ---Stephan Keenan, A Doctrinal Catechism, pp. 334-335. Keenan was a Scottish Catholic priest, whose catechism is much used in Roman Catholic schools to instruct children and youth.

'We Catholics, then, have precisely the same authority for keeping Sunday holy instead of Saturday as we have for every other article of our creed; namely, the authority of 'the church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth' (1 Timothy 3:15). Whereas you who are Protestants have really no authority for it whatever; for there is no authority for it in the Bible, and you will not allow that there can be authority for it anywhere else. Both you and we do, in fact, follow tradition in this matter; but we follow it, believing it to be a part of God's word, and the [Catholic] Church to be its divinely appointed guardian and interpreter; you follow it [the Catholic Church], denouncing it all the time as a fallible and treacherous guide, which often 'makes the commandments of God of none effect'. [quoting Matt. 15:61." ---The Brotherhood at St. Paul, The Clifton Tracts, Vol. 4, tract 4, p. 15. Roman Catholic.

"The Church changed the observance of the Sabbath to Sunday by right of the divine, infallible authority given to her by her founder, Jesus Christ. The Protestant claiming the Bible to be the only guide of faith, has no warrant for observing Sunday. In this matter the Seventh-day Adventist is the only consistent Protestant. " -- Tit e Cath ofic Un iverse B ullefin, August 14, 1942, p. 4 1Th is is tit e political weekly n e wspaper at tit e Cleveland Catholic Diocesal.

"By what authority did the [Catholic] Church change the observance of the Sabbath from Saturday to Sunday?

"The Protestant world has been, from its infancy in the sixteenth century, in thorough accord with the Catholic Church, in keeping 'holy' not Saturday, but Sunday ... If however, on the other hand, the latter [the Catholics] furnish arguments, incontrovertible by the great mass of Protestants, . . . [they] appealing to their common teacher, the Bible, the great body of Protestants, so far from clamouring, as they do with vigorous pertinacity for the strict keeping of Sunday, have no other resource left than the admission that they have been teaching and practicing what is Scripturally false. For over three centuries, by adopting the teaching and practice of what they have always pretended to believe an apostate church, contrary to every warrant and teaching of 'Sacred Scripture. To add to the intensity of this Scriptural and unpardonable blunder, it involves one of the most positive and emphatic commands of God to His servant, man: 'Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy.' "

Christian Sabbath a tract for Protestants], 2nd ed., The Catholic Mirror, 1893, pp. 6- 7.

"Now the [Catholic] Church ... instituted, by God's authority, Sunday as the day of worship. This same Church, by the same divine authority, taught the doctrine of Purgatory ... We have, therefore, the same authority for Purgatory as we have for Sunday." --Martin J. Scott, Things Catholics Are Asked About, 1927, p.236 [Jesuit theologian and writer].

"Ques. -(a) The Bible says, 'The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord,' and we read in your literature that it is the only Bible, Sabbath there is. Will you please explain how the Sunday observance originated? (b) Do you think the Seventh-day Adventists keep the right day? Ans. --- If you follow the Bible alone there can be no question that you are obliged to keep Saturday holy, since that is the day especially prescribed by Almighty God to be kept holy to the Lord. In keeping Sunday, non-Catholics are simply following the practise of the Catholic Church for 1800 years, a tradition, and not a Bible ordinance. What we would like to know is since they deny the authority of the Church, on what grounds can they base their faith of keeping Sunday? Those who keep Saturday, like the Seventh-day Adventists, unquestionably have them by the hip in this practise. And they cannot give them any sufficient answer which would satisfy an unprejudiced mind. With the Catholics there is no difficulty about the matter. For, 'since we deny that the Bible is the sole rule of faith, we can fall back upon the constant practise and tradition of the Church.' Francis George Lentz, The Question Box. 1900, p. 98-99 /Lentz, who died in 1917, was an Illinois Catholic priest].

"The [Catholic] Church, by the power our Lord gave her, changed the observance of Saturday to Sunday."-The Catholic Canon, H. Cafferata, The Catechism Simply Explained, 1932 edition, p. 80.

"The Catholic Church: has decreed for many centuries that Christians observe this day of rest on Sunday."

Pope John XXIII, Mater et Magistra (Mother and Teacher), section 251, dated May 15,1961 [John XXIII was pope from 1958 to 1963.

"The Church.... after changing the day of rest from Sabbath, or the seventh day of the week, to the first, made the Third Commandment refer to Sunday as the day to be kept holy as the Lord's Day." ---The Catholic Encyclopedia, vol. 4, p. 153 1The Sabbath commandment is the fourth commandment (Exodus 20:8-11), but is reckoned as the third by Roman Catholics, because they dropped the second (that forbade image worship), and then split the tenth into two to make up the full number].

"The Catholic Church for over one thousand years before the existence of a Protestant, by virtue of her Divine mission, changed the day from Saturday to Sunday ... But the Protestant says: 'How can I receive the teachings of an apostate Church? How, we ask, have you managed to receive her teaching all your life, in direct opposition to your recognised teacher, the Bible, on the Sabbath question?' --- The Christian Sabbath, 2nd ed., published by the Catholic Mirror of Baltimore, 1893, pp. 29-31. [The journal of James Cardinal Gibbons.

If you follow the Bible alone there can be no question that you are obliged to keep Saturday holy, since that is the day especially prescribed by Almighty God to be kept holy to the Lord." ---Priest F. G. Lentz, The Question Box, 1900, p. 98. Lentz (d. 1917) was a Catholic priest and writer, based in the Illinois area.

The following statement comes from a tract written to the Protestants of England, by John Milner (1752-1826), the English Vicar Apostolic of the Roman Catholic Church. The entire tract is an appeal for Protestants to return fully to the Church of Rome:

"The first precept in the Bible, is that of sanctifying the seventh day: 'God blessed the SEVENTH DAY, and sanctified it. Gen.' 2:1 This precept was confirmed by God, in the Ten Commandments: 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep, it holy'. 'The SEVENTH DAY is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God.' [Ex. 20:8-11]. On the other hand, Christ declares that he is 'not come to destroy the law, but to fulfil it.' Matt. 5:17. He himself observed the [Seventh-day] Sabbath: 'And as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day.' Luke 4:16 11 His disciples likewise observed it, after His death: 'They rested on the Sabbath day according to the commandment.' Lk. 23:56.

"Yet, with all this weight of Scripture authority for keeping the Sabbath, or seventh day holy, Protestants, of all denominations, make this a profane day and transfer the obligation of it to the first day of the week, or the Sunday. Now what authority have they for doing this? None at all, but the unwritten Word, of The Church of the Catholic church, which declares that the apostles made the change in honour of Christ's resurrection, and the descent of the Holy Ghost, on that day of the week." John Milner, The End of Religious Controversy, in a Friendly Correspondence Between a Religious Society of Protestants, and a Roman Catholic Divine, "Letter 11, To James Brown, Esq, " 1897, p. 89.

"Ques.---What Bible authority is there for changing the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week? Who gave the Pope the authority to change a command of God? "Ans.---If the Bible is the only guide for the Christian, then the Seventh-day Adventist is right, in observing the Saturday with the Jew ... Is it not strange that those who make the Bible their only teacher, should inconsistently follow in this matter the tradition of the Catholic Church?". Bertrand Conway, The Question Box, 1903 ed, pp. 254-255; 1915 ed, p. 179. Conway (1872-1959) was a Paulist father in the Catholic Church].

"The Adventists are the only body of Christians with the Bible as their teacher, who can find no warrant in its pages for the change of day from the seventh to the first ... Reason and common sense demand the acceptance of one or the other of these alternatives: either Protestantism and the keeping holy of Saturday, or Catholicity and the keeping holy of Sunday. Compromise is impossible." -- Catholic Mirror, September 2 and December 23, 1893 1The Catholic Mirror, a Baltimore Journal was at this time the official organ of Cardinal Gibbons].

"Prove to me from the Bible alone that I am bound to keep Sunday holy. There is no such law in the Bible. It is a law of the holy Catholic Church alone. The Bible says 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.' The Catholic Church says, No. By my divine power I abolish the Sabbath day and command you to keep holy the first day of the week. And ho! The entire civilised world bows down in reverent obedience to the command of the Holy Catholic Church."

Thomas Enright, CSSR, President of Redemptorist College, Kansas City, Mo., in a lecture at Hary'ord, Kansas, February 18, 1884, and printed in the Hartford Kansas Weekly Call, February 22, 1884, and the American an Sentinel, a New York Roman Catholic journal in June 1893, page 173.

"Of course the Catholic Church claims that the change was her act ... AND THE ACT IS A MARK of her ecclesiastical power." the office of Cardinal Gibbons, through Chancellor H.F. Thomas, November 11, 1895.

Appendix V –How Sunday Sacredness Came Into the Church

BY GRADUAL STEPS

Archdeacon Farrar of the Church of England wrote: The Christian church made no formal, but a gradual and almost unconscious transference of the one day to the other. (The Voice From Sinai, Archdeacon F W Farrar, London, Isbister & Co., 1892, page 167)

INFLUENCE OF SUN WORSHIP

Originally Sunday was the festal day of Roman sun worship. It was observed as "the Venerable Day of the Sun" in honour of the sun god Mithra. The religion of Mithra itself originated in Persia and Babylon many centuries before Christ. Franz Cumont, an outstanding authority on ancient religion says of Roman Mithraism:

The worshippers of Mithra held Sunday sacred, and celebrated the birth of the sun on the 25th December.

(Franz Cumont, The Mysteries of Mithra, Dover Publications, New York, 1956, page 191)

ADOPTED INTO THE CHURCH

The first 'clear reference to Sunday observance within the Christian church comes from Rome about AD155-160. Justin Martyr, a church leader and philosopher stated:

Sunday is the day on which we hold our common assembly, because it is the first day on which God, having wrought a change in the darkness of matter, made the world, and Jesus Christ our Saviour on the same day rose from the dead.

(Justin Martyr, First Apology Chapter 67, Tr The Ante Nicene Fathers, Vol. 1, page 186)

Notice his reasons - the first day of creation and Christ's resurrection. But he offers no scriptural authorisation for either. There is none! Aside from his two reasons, the statement does reveal that Sunday was being observed in Rome and vicinity as the day for common assembly in the second century AD. This was about one hundred years after the cross.

The practice of Sunday assembly in Rome at that time, however, does not indicate that a universal change from the seventh to the first day had taken place at that time. As we shall see, the Bible Sabbath continued to be kept for many centuries throughout the Christian world, with Sunday observance gradually spreading and growing in importance as it was promoted and enforced by Rome.

ROME'S INITIATIVE

While no evidence can be found to support the view that Christian Sunday keeping originated with Christ and His apostles, there is clear evidence that the practice did begin in the Roman church and grew as the Roman church gained power.

The Roman congregation was composed of Jews and Gentiles. This is reflected in Paul's epistle to the Romans (see Romans 1: 13; 11: 13). Friction in the church between Jew and, Gentile necessitated the writing of this epistle (see Romans 3,4,5; 2:17,25-27; 14: 1, etc.). Evidently the problems were never wholly corrected, for history shows that the Roman church eventually reacted against whatever was considered to be Jewish, particularly the Sabbath.

This situation was further complicated because the Roman civil authorities regarded Christianity as a Jewish sect, and as part of the general Jewish community who were in constant revolt against Rome. The church took its share of punishment for the misdemeanors of Jews. In AD49 the Emperor Claudius expelled all Jews, from Rome. Among them were Christians (see Acts 18:2).

One of the measures taken by Roman Gentile Christians to disassociate themselves from Jews in the eyes of the public was to use the traditional pagan Sunday as a day of assembly. This brought them closer to their pagan neighbours and-made it easier for those accustomed to Sunday in their old religion to adopt Christianity. Thus a trend set in toward Sunday observance and away from the Sabbath. Many other pagan practices came into the church for that same reason.

As Rome became stronger, she grew more and more confident in adopting pagan customs, as Cardinal Newman truthfully stated:

Confiding then in the power of Christianity to resist the infection of evil, and to transmute (change) the very instruments and appendages of demon worship to an evangelical use ... the rulers of the church from early times were prepared... to adopt, or imitate, or sanction the existing rites and customs of the populace as well as the philosophy of the educated class.

1. For in-depth study of the Jew-Gentile problems in Rome see Samuele Bacchiocchi, From Sabbath to Sunday. The Pontifical Gregorian University Press, Rome. 1977, pages 166-198, from which many of the above particulars were gathered.

'Constantine, in order to recommend the new religion to the heathen, transferred into it the outward ornaments to which they had been accustomed in their own.'

"(These) are all of pagan origin, and sanctified by their adoption into the church."

(Cardinal John Henry Newman, An Essay on the Development of Christian Doctrine, Passim, pages 371, 372)

In this way, the popularity of customs and traditions of paganism and the unpopularity of things considered Jewish, led to the establishment of Sunday in place of the Sabbath. Augustus Neander (1798-1850), leading German authority in church history, stated:

Opposition to Judaism introduced the particular festival of Sunday very early, indeed, into the place of the Sabbath. The festival of Sunday, like all other festivals, was always only a human ordinance and it was far from the intentions of the apostles to establish a divine command in this respect. Far from them, and from the early apostolic church to transfer the laws of the Sabbath to Sunday. Perhaps at the end of the second century a false application of this kind had begun to take place.

(Augustus Neander, The History of the Christian Religion and Church, First Ed., translated by Henry John Rose, B.D., Philadelphia: James M Campbell & Co., 1843, page 186)

Over the next couple of centuries the movement toward Sunday keeping and away from the Sabbath was urged on by church authorities. The Sabbath was proclaimed a day of fasting and sadness while Sunday was made a day of rejoicing and feasting.

Sunday was presented as the day on which the creation should be commemorated, because it: was on the first day that God created light. It was also the day of Christ's resurrection, and therefore should be honoured. The Sabbath, it was claimed, was imposed upon the Jews as punishment for their stubbornness. All this was totally unbiblical of course, but it had its effect.

THE FIRST SUNDAY LAW

By the onset of the fourth century the ground had been well prepared for the first Sunday law, in history. It was issued by the Emperor Constantine in AD321.

On the venerable day of the sun let the magistrates and people residing in the cities rest, and let all workshops be closed. In the country, however, persons engaged in agriculture may freely and lawfully continue their pursuits; because it often happens that another day is not so suitable for grain sowing or vine planting; lest by neglecting the proper moment for such operations, the bounty of heaven should be lost. (Codex Justinianus, Lib. S. tit. 12, S; translated in History of the Christian Church Philip Schaff, D.D., 7 Vol. ed., Vol. III, New York. Charles Scribner's Sons, 1893, page 380)

It is important to note that this was a stale law, not an ecclesiastical (church) law. But it marked the beginning of many hundreds of religious and political decrees to support and enforce Sunday observance.

AFTER CONSTANTINE'S EDICT

The first ecclesiastical law for Sunday keeping was enacted 300 years after Christ by the Council of Laodicea (AD364). After stating that "on Saturday the gospels and other portions of the Scripture shall be read aloud" (Canon 16), the act went on to legislate against seventh-day Sabbath rest, as follows:

Christians shall not Judaize and be idle on Saturday (Sabbath in the original), but shall work on that day: but the Lord's day (meaning Sunday) they shall especially honour, and as being Christians, shall, if possible, do no work on that day. If, however, they are found Judaizing (doing as Jews do) they shall be shut out from Christ. (Charles Joseph Hefele, D.D. (R.C.), A History of the Church Councils, Vol. 11, Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1896, Page 316)

The two laws together, the pro-Sunday state law of Constantine and the pro-Sunday law of the church, effectively transferred Sabbath keeping to Sunday. Constantine said "Rest on Sunday". The church also said "West on Sunday", but the church went further and said, in effect, "You must not rest on the Sabbath". If you rest on the Sabbath you will be shut out from Christ. A short time afterward, Bishop Eusebius, historian and leading figure at the Council of Laodicea, stated:

All things whatsoever it was duty to do on the Sabbath, these we have transferred to the Lord's Day as being more appropriate. (Eusebius, Commentary on the Psalms, cited in a commentary on the Apocalypse, Moses Stewart, Vol. II, Andover Alien. Morrill, and Wardell, 1845, page 40)

SABBATH AND SUNDAY TOGETHER

However, despite all measures aimed at eliminating the observance of the seventh day as the Sabbath, it continued throughout the centuries. It was observed as a companion to Sunday. Athanasius, a Greek church leader (died AD 373) wrote:

On the Sabbath day we gathered together, not being infected with Judaism, for we do not lay hold of false sabbaths, but we come on the Sabbath to worship Jesus, the Lord of the Sabbath. (Athanasius, Homilia de Semente, Sec. 1 in Migne ed. Patrologia Gracca, Vol. 28, Col. 144 [Greek])

Gregory, Bishop of Nyssa (AD331-396), also Greek, wrote similarly:

With what kind of eyes do you see the Lord's Day (Sunday), you who dishonour the Sabbath? Do you not know that these days are sisters? (Gregory of Nyssa, De Castigotione, "On Reproof" in Migne Patrologia Gracca, Vol. 46, Col. 309)

Other statements from the fourth and fifth centuries say much the same:

Let the slaves work five days; but opt the Sabbath Day and the Lord's Day, let them have leisure to go to church for instruction and piety. (Constitutions of the Holy Apostles. BK. 8, Sec. 4, Ch. 33. trans. in Ante Nicene Fathers, Vol. 7, page 495, [AD 375])

Keep the Sabbath, and the Lord's Day festival; because the former is the memorial of creation, and the latter of the resurrection. (Constitutions of the Holy Apostles, BK. 7, Sec. 2, Ch. 23, trans. in Ante Nicene Fathers, Vol. 7. page 469)

In some places no day is omitted, on which the Communion is riot offered; in some (it is offered) only on the Sabbath and the Lord's Day (Sunday), and in some only on the Lord's day. (Augustine, AD430, Letter -54 to Januarius--- Chapter 2, in Migne Patrologia Latina, Vol. 33. Col. 200)

There are no public services among them in the day except on Saturday and Sunday, when they meet together at the third hour for the purpose of holy communion.

(John Cassian, AD440. Institutes Ill., Book 3, Ch. 2, trans. in Nicene and Post Nicele Fathers, 2nd series. Vol. II, page 213)

Despite efforts on the part of Rome to destroy the Sabbath it continued to be kept for many centuries after Christ in the eastern churches, in far away Persia, Armenia, Ethiopia, Britain, and other places. But in the Roman church, the western arm of Christianity, it seems that the Sabbath was discarded altogether some time in the fourth century. Note how the Greek historians Socrates and Sozomen observed this situation as follows:

Although almost all churches throughout the world celebrate the sacred mysteries on the Sabbath (ie. Saturday) of every week, yet the Christians of Alexandria and Rome, on account of some ancient tradition, have ceased to do this.

(Socrates Scholasticus, Ecclesiastical History BL 5, Ch. 22, trans. in Nicene and Post Nicene Fathers, 2nd series, Vol. 2, page 132)

The people of Constantinople, and almost everywhere, assemble together on the Sabbath, as well as on the first day of the week, which is never observed at Rome, or at Alexandria.

(Sozomen, Ecclesiastical History VII, and Ch. 19, AD 440)

Thus it was that Rome had, by gradual steps, replaced God's appointed Sabbath with Sunday, a day which God had never blessed. Most Christian churches have eventually followed Rome in continuing with the Sunday, and in dismissing God's Sabbath as merely "the Sabbath of the Jews".

Catholic writers have often pointed an accusing finger at Protestants for their inconsistencies in following Rome regarding Sunday while professing to obey the Bible. The following statement from Cardinal Gibbons is one of many along these lines. He says:

The Catholic Church for over one thousand years before the existence of a Protestant, by virtue of her divine mission, changed the day from Saturday to Sunday ... The Protestant world at its birth found the Christian Sabbath (meaning Sunday) too strongly entrenched to run counter to its existence; it was therefore placed under the necessity of acquiescing in the arrangement, thus implying the Church's right to change the day, for over three hundred years. The Christian Sabbath is therefore to this day., the acknowledged offspring of the Catholic Church as spouse of the Holy Ghost, without a word of remonstrance from the Protestant world.

(The Catholic Mirror. 23 September 1893, from the last of a weekly series of four editorials entitled: "The Christian Sabbath". The Catholic Mirror was the official organ of Cardinal Gibbons, Baltimore, Maryland, USA.)

Newcomers to the Pacific islands are intrigued by huge rainforest trees. At first they were not trees at all, but innocent-looking little vines which lodged in the branches of genuine trees. As these vines grew, by feeding from the sap of the host trees, they eventually sent their roots into the earth and strangled their hosts, taking their places completely.

In a similar way Sunday attached itself to the Sabbath, grafting itself onto the true, eventually doing away with it in the minds of the majority. However, throughout the world, thousands are now returning to the true Sabbath daily.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History |
Sabbath Resources | Home

Current Category - Books

Does God's Grace Blot Out The Law? (LS03)

By Joe Crews.

Shows that God's law and His grace do not work in competition with each other, but in perfect cooperation.

BK-DGGB $0.95

Guide's Greatest Sabbath Stories

Here is a collection of amazing but true stories about God's faithfulness to those who honor His holy day. Helen Lee Robinson.

BK-GGSS $10.99

Hidden Eyes And Closed Ears (LS04)

Joe Crews. Avoid the spiritual delusions that will cause so many religious people to be lost. An important book for every Christian in the end-time.

BK-HECE $0.95

How Evolution Flunked Science Test (LS05)

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

Product Categories:

- > Bible Studies
- > Books
- > Creation / Evolution
- > General
- > History
- > Prophecy

> Your Satisfaction is 100% Guaranteed!

If for any reason you are not completely satisfied with your purchase, simply return it for a full refund, no questions asked!

by Joe Crews.

Puts the stale traditions of evolution on the defensive by exposing loopholes in the evolutionary theory.

BK-EFS $0.95

---

Is Sunday Really Sacred? (LS23)

by Joe Crews.

Examines every Bible text which refers to Sunday.

BK-ISRS $0.95

---

Law And The Sabbath, The

Allen Walker. Don't miss out on owning and sharing this classic masterpiece about God's day of rest. If Christians are under grace and not the law, is the Sabbath still relevant today? Is it legalism to esteem one day above any other? Do the Ten Commandments really have a place in the new covenant experience? Get solid, scriptural answers about this sacred truth swirling under fierce controversy in today's church. Foreword by Joe Crews, founder of Amazing Facts.

BK-LAS $10.95

---

Noah Webster's Dictionary 1828

Noah Webster considered "education useless without the Bible." It is not surprising then that his 1828 American Dictionary, the first of its kind, contains the greatest number of biblical definitions in any reference volume. His stunning achievement is captured in this unique, 2,000-page facsimile resource. Also documents the biblical educations of those who formed the Republic. One Christian scholar has called it "the greatest reprint of the twentieth century." A fantastic addition to your stud ...

BK-NWD $64.95

---

Trials and Triumphs

by Crystal Earnhardt. Each week Norman, a commercial fisherman, drifts at sea for 24 hours and catches a triple amount of fish the next day. Teri lost her job and nearly every earthly possession, then wound up in court fighting for justice. What do they have in common? A desire to obey God's fourth commandment, regardless of the cost.

BK-ETT $4.95

---

Truth About The Sabbath, The

by Jim Pinkoski.
An illustrated study of the seventh-day Sabbath, from Creation to today.

BK-TAS $3.95

---

Why God Said Remember (LS12)

Joe Crews. A classic and inspiring look at the Sabbath - God's loving but urgent attempt to keep the truth of His Creation before a world in need.

BK-GSR $0.95

---

Why The Old Covenant Failed (LS13)

by Joe Crews.
A powerful argument to support Sabbath observance by New Testament Christians.

BK-OCF $0.95

1 - 11 of 11 found.

Select how many records to display

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History |
Sabbath Resources | Home

Current Category - General

Final Events Bible Prophecy DVD/Book Set

The Final Events of Bible Prophecy is a gripping 43-minute documentary on last-day events.

Hosted by author and evangelist Pastor Doug Batchelor, this amazing DVD leads you step by step through seven end-time "events," including signs of the end, Christ's return, the millennium, and more.

Featuring stunning special effects and a rich music soundtrack, this one-of-a-kind presentation is packed with Bible references that give you a clear and straightforward look at what the Bible r ...

DV-FES $10.99

Hidden Truth Magazine, The

Affordable sharing magazine includes variety of topics!

This affordable and attractive full color magazine presents seven of the most misunderstood biblical subjects in a direct and captivating way. It's so packed with attention-grabbing, colorful graphics, intriguing trivia, and fascinating Bible facts, those you share it with won't be able to put it down! After going through the study, interested seekers are invited to enroll for FREE Bible studies.

This brand-new sharing magazine ...

BK-HT $1.99

Lord's Day DVD, The

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

Product Categories:

- Bible Studies
- Books
- Creation / Evolution
- General
- History
- Prophecy

➤ Your Satisfaction is
100% Guaranteed!

If for any reason you are not completely satisfied with your purchase, simply return it for a full refund, no questions asked!

Everything you wanted to know about the Lord's Day
What is the Sabbath? It's an important question that needs a Bible answer. So whether you've never heard of the Sabbath, are new to Sabbath-keeping, or have been keeping the Sabbath all your life, this series is tailor made for anyone seeking God's will over human tradition. Pastor Doug Batchelor makes the Sabbath come alive with breathtaking detail and thorough biblical support. Candid and straightforward, it's everything you wanted to know ...

DV-LDAY $24.95

---

Mary Magdalene, The Truth About

Using Scripture, Pastor Doug weaves a biblical account that traces the salvation experience from sorrow to joy, by using the experience of Mary Magdalene.

Watch crucial video message from Pastor Doug

BK-TAM $4.98

---

Prophecy Code CD Audio Set

With natural disasters, crime, and economic instability increasing around the world, everyone is searching for answers about the future. But who or what can you trust when there are so many different opinions about Bible prophecy and earth's final events? Get an all-new, Bible-based perspective about Revelation, the rapture, and much more with The Prophecy Code...Bible Secrets Unlocked, hosted by world-renowned speaker Pastor Doug Batchelor, recorded live in Washington, D.C. You will get the key ...

CD-PCS $69.95

---

Prophecy Code DVD Set

Don't miss this incredible life-changing 20-part Bible seminar!
With natural disasters, crime, and economic instability increasing around the world, everyone is searching for answers about the future. But who or what can you trust when there are so many different opinions about Bible prophecy and earth's final events? Get an all-new, Bible-based perspective about Revelation, the rapture, and much more with The Prophecy Code ... Bible Secrets Unlocked, hosted by Pastor Doug Batchelor. You'll g ...

DV-PCS $89.95

---

Prophecy Code Video Set

With natural disasters, crime, and economic instability increasing around the world, everyone is searching for answers about the future. But who or what can you trust when there are so many different opinions about Bible prophecy and earth's final events? Get an all-new, Bible-based perspective about Revelation, the rapture, and much more with The Prophecy Code...Bible Secrets Unlocked, hosted by world-renowned speaker Pastor Doug Batchelor, recorded live in Washington, D.C. You will get the key ...

VS-PCS $79.95

---

Seventh Day Part 1, The

From Creation through Old Testament times - 52 min. Hosted by veteran actor Hal Holbrook, part one of this five-part documentary series considers various views of human origins from ancient myths to Darwinism, and finds the most satisfactory answers in the book of Genesis. It recounts the loyalty and courage of people who saw the seventh-day Sabbath as a special sign between them and their Creator. Packed with special effects, brilliant graphics, and historical documentation. On DVD.

DV-SD1 $19.95

---

Seventh Day Part 2, The

DVD. From the time of Jesus till the 4th Century - 47 min. Part II of the Seventh Day, exposes the political and religious intrigue behind the Saturday - Sunday controversy in the early Christian Church. Hal Holbrook, in his intimate and captivating style weaves little known historical data and expert testimony into a tapestry of compelling truth.

DV-SD2 $19.95

---

Seventh Day Part 3, The

From the time of St. Patrick to the 11th Century - 48 min. In Part III of the Seventh Day, Hal Holbrook tells of the battle over the seventh day Sabbath in medieval times. It's a story riddled with fakes and forgeries, warped by legend and propaganda, and steeped in the schemes of patriarchs, popes and kings. With the testimony of experts from England, Scotland and the United States, Part III of this 5-part documentary series presents new Revelations from the Lost Pages of History. (DVD)

DV-SD3 $19.95

---

Seventh Day Part 4, The

Part four in the riveting Sabbath Day documentary series spotlights the resurgence of Sabbath observance in an era of religious upheaval--from the spiritual revolution in late 15th-century Russia, the religious rebellion of the Protestants, and a radical Sabbath revival in England. Learn even more amazing history and facts about the special gift God gave to humanity! Hosted by Hal Holbrook.

DV-SD4 $19.95

---

Seventh Day Part 5, The

In this final episode, Hal Holbrook shares today's view of God's holy day and projects the gift of Sabbath rest into the eternal future. Blending history and current events, this epic story travels around the world, from the Taiping revolutionaries in China to the millions of Indigenous Sabbatarians of Africa and the remote village of Paruima in South America. It also spans the centuries from Roger Williams' heroic stand for religious liberty in 17th-century America to the crisis of conscience f ...

DV-SD5 $19.95

---

Study Mark--Sabbath (25 Pack)

Want a great, easy, and quick way to share Bible truth about the Sabbath? Then try out these beautiful Bible bookmarks! Chock full of Scripture verses, from the Old and New testaments, these eye-catching glimpses of truth will peek the interest of any honest truth-seeker. Each comes with short commentary, making them a great resource that will help remind you of convincing Scripture when you are sharing the Bible truth with friends and family!

BK-SMSAB $3.95

---

Ten Commandment Study Mark (100 Pack)

100 book marks! Share these Ten Commandment books marks with your friends. Book marks are card stock and laminated so they'll last for many years to come.

BK-SMTC $11.95

1 - 14 of 14 found.

Select how many records to display

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

“Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath.”

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History |
Sabbath Resources | Home

Current Category - History

Conscientious Objector, The (DVD)

A True Story of An American Soldier, documentary film.

Infantrymen who once ridiculed and scoffed at Desmond's simple faith and refusal to carry a weapon-now owed their lives to him. Director Terry Benedict tells Desmond's incredible story through the eyes of the men who witnessed this humble man's heroic acts. Winning the respect of his fellow soldiers, they recommended him for the highest honor America can bestow on one of her sons-The Medal of Honor.

DV-CO $19.99

From Sabbath to Sunday

A brief but comprehensive history of the Sabbath, this book tells of its transfer from the seventh day of the week to Sunday. By Carlyle B. Haynes.

BK-FSS $7.99

History of Protestantism, The(4 Vol set)

The History of Protestantism by J.A. Wylie pulls back the divine curtain and reveals God's hand in the affairs of His church during the Protestant Reformation. As God's church faces the last days, this compelling book has unique appeal and relevance to all who love the truth. 4 volume set.

BK-HOP $99.95

History of the Sabbath

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

Product Categories:

- Bible Studies
- Books
- Creation / Evolution
- General
- History
- Prophecy

➤ Your Satisfaction is
100% Guaranteed!

If for any reason you are not completely satisfied with your purchase, simply return it for a full refund, no questions asked!

J.N. Andrews. Finally, one of the most comprehensive, detailed analyses of the Sabbath-Sunday controversy returns to print! Understand in amazing detail the 6,000-year story of the Sabbath, from its foundation at creation to its final return to prominence in the last-days, and understand step-by-step how forces have tried to use Sunday to usurp the place of God's eternal day. A must-have classic for your study library!

BK-HOS $22.95

---

History of the Waldenses

J.A. Wylie. An extraordinary look at a persecuted Christian people given the guardianship of God's Word in the Dark Ages. Even before the Reformation, these godly witnesses maintained the ancient faith and declared the Bible as the only source of truth—even at the peril of their lives. A profound, thrilling portrayal of sacrifice and courage that will change your life.

BK-HOW $9.95

---

Israel of The Alps, The (DVD)

A three part documentary tracing the almost forgotten history of the Waldenses, who for over a thousand years, and intense sufferings, clung to the word of God. See how they lived, how they trained their children, how they shared their faith. Scattered over many lands, they planted the seeds of the Reformation that began in the time of Wycliffe, grew broad and deep in the days of Luther, and is to be carried forward to the close of time by those who also are willing to suffer all things for the ...

DV-IOTA $20.00

---

John Wicliffe-The Morning Star of The

This biography is a reproduction of a book which has been out of print for many years. His faithfulness to the Word of God and his courage in opposing the ecclesiastical powers of thirteenth century England has such an effect on those who followed, that he is often referred to as the Morning Star of the Reformation.

BK-JWMS $5.95

---

Keepers of the Flame Set Video

This eight episode video series documents the development of the church since its earliest days in the Reformation. Filmed on location, it provides a vivid way to learn about or to teach church history. Hosted by Dr. Allan Lindsay.

VT-KOF $79.95

---

Romanism and the Reformation

H. Grattan Guinness. This generation is dangerously close to falling prey to the horrors of the church's darkest age. A loud cry for a return to Scriptures rooted in the lesson of the Reformation.

BK-RATR $12.95

---

Seventh Day Part 1, The

From Creation through Old Testament times - 52 min. Hosted by veteran actor Hal Holbrook, part one of this five-part documentary series considers various views of human origins from ancient myths to Darwinism, and finds the most satisfactory answers in the book of Genesis. It recounts the loyalty and courage of people who saw the seventh-day Sabbath as a special sign between them and their Creator. Packed with special effects, brilliant graphics, and historical documentation. On DVD.

DV-SD1 $19.95

---

Seventh Day Part 2, The

From the time of Jesus till the 4th Century - 47 min. Part II of the Seventh Day, exposes the political and religious intrigue behind the Saturday - Sunday controversy in the early Christian Church. Hal Holbrook, in his intimate and captivating style weaves little known historical data and expert testimony into a tapestry of compelling truth.

VT-SD2 $20.00

---

Seventh Day Part 2, The

DVD. From the time of Jesus till the 4th Century - 47 min. Part II of the Seventh Day, exposes the political and religious intrigue behind the Saturday - Sunday controversy in the early Christian Church. Hal Holbrook, in his intimate and captivating style weaves little known historical data and expert testimony into a tapestry of compelling truth.

DV-SD2 $19.95

---

Seventh Day Part 3, The

From the time of St. Patrick to the 11th Century - 48 min. In Part III of the Seventh Day, Hal Holbrook tells of the battle over the seventh day Sabbath in medieval times. It's a story riddled with fakes and forgeries, warped by legend and propaganda, and steeped in the schemes of patriarchs, popes and kings. With the testimony of experts from England, Scotland and the United States, Part III of this 5-part documentary series presents new Revelations from the Lost Pages of History. (DVD)

DV-SD3 $19.95

---

Seventh Day Part 4, The

Part four in the riveting Sabbath Day documentary series spotlights the resurgence of Sabbath observance in an era of religious upheaval--from the spiritual revolution in late 15th-century Russia, the religious rebellion of the Protestants, and a radical Sabbath revival in England. Learn even more amazing history and facts about the special gift God gave to humanity! Hosted by Hal Holbrook.

DV-SD4 $19.95

---

Seventh Day Part 5, The

In this final episode, Hal Holbrook shares today's view of God's holy day and projects the gift of Sabbath rest into the eternal future. Blending history and current events, this epic story travels around the world, from the Taiping revolutionaries in China to the millions of Indigenous Sabbatarians of Africa and the remote village of Paruima in South America. It also spans the centuries from Roger Williams' heroic stand for religious liberty in 17th-century America to the crisis of conscience f ...

DV-SD5 $19.95

---

Trials and Triumphs

by Crystal Earnhardt. Each week Norman, a commercial fisherman, drifts at sea for 24 hours and catches a triple amount of fish the next day. Teri lost her job and nearly every earthly possession, then wound up in court fighting for justice. What do they have in common? A desire to obey God's fourth commandment, regardless of the cost.

BK-ETT $4.95

---

Truth About The Sabbath, The

by Jim Pinkoski.
An illustrated study of the seventh-day Sabbath, from Creation to today.

BK-TAS $3.95

---

Truth Triumphant

B.G. Wilkinson. God has preserved His Word in miraculous ways throughout the centuries, using His faithful workers to spread the gospel even in the most dangerous times. An amazing narrative that will increase your faith for the coming time of trouble.

BK-TTRI $14.95

---

Waldenses: The Church in the Wilderness,

Eulend Borton. Now your children can understand the amazing true story of the faithful witness of the Waldenses in a format appropriate for them. They'll be amazed at God's great faithfulness even in the darkest of times.

BK-WTCI $8.95

1 - 19 of 19 found.

Select how many records to display

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

“Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath.”

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Current Category - Prophecy

Beast Dragon And The Woman, The

Struggle between truth and error

A daring, yet concise overview of the Bible's most compelling and perplexing end-time players and the struggle between truth and error as seen in Bible prophecy. Find out the part America plays in this exciting last-day saga. (Also available on audiotape!) Joe Crews.

BK-BDW $1.95

Exploding The Israel Deception

Steve Wohlberg. The Christian world is deeply confused about the Israel and its role in Bible prophecy. Help your friends see the truth in the light of God's Word. You'll get rock-solid Bible proof that the book of Revelation centers around spiritual Israel and not a physical nation or bloodline. By unmasking the popular errors now leading millions astray, you will be better prepared for the real battle of Armageddon.

BK-EID $5.95

Hidden Eyes And Closed Ears (LS04)

Joe Crews. Avoid the spiritual delusions that will cause so many religious people to be lost. An important book for every Christian in the end-time.

BK-HECE $0.95

Panorama of Prophecy CD

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

Product Categories:

- > Bible Studies
- > Books
- > Creation / Evolution
- > General
- > History
- > Prophecy

> Your Satisfaction is 100% Guaranteed!

If for any reason you are not completely satisfied with your purchase, simply return it for a full refund, no questions asked!

The Ultimate Bible Study Resource. Using the revolutionary new Storacles of Prophecy lessons, this exciting study will help you clearly understand the primary prophecies in the books of Daniel and Revelation. This CD contains free Bible software, resource library, and prophecy course. Minimum requirements: PC with Pentium 1 and Windows 95. For 10 or more just $1.00 each.

CD-POP $1.99

1 - 4 of 4 found.

Select how many records to display

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

The Truth About the Sabbath

Once a week most Christians go to church. Some go to the early services, and others sleep in and like to catch the 11 a.m. service. And the chances are, if you're like most Christians, you go to church on Sundays, the day referred to as "the first day of the week" in the Bible.

In this book we shall explain exactly how and why this has become the commonplace practice among the Christian world. When asked, most Christians are not aware of the exact history of the development of Sunday worship - some even think the Bible commands it - but the truth of the origin of Sunday worship goes far beyond this, and it is time for all Christians to be aware of it!

The Lord wants us to seek His truth. At times we will hear things we like; at other times we may encounter material that challenges us; but the Lord expects us to read, study, and learn from the Holy Word, and to accept the light of His truth as it illuminates our minds!

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> More Free Books!

> More Radio Messages!

1. Introduction
2. The Origin Of The Sabbath
3. Absolute Proof From The Bible That Saturday Is The Sabbath Day
4. The 1700 Sabbaths
5. Is Saturday Still Saturday?
6. 40 Bible Facts Concerning "Sunday"
7. The "Culprit"
8. Constantine's Sunday Blue Law
9. What The Catholics Say About The Sabbath
10. The Big Change!
11. The Council Of Trent
12. "Tradition"
13. Rome's Challenge!
14. The Repairer Of The Breach
15. What was "Nailed To The Cross"?
16. Final Proof That The Sabbath Was Not "Nailed To The Cross"
17. God's Test Of Loyalty
18. Why So Many Denominations?
19. The Council Of Laodicea
20. The Lord's Day
21. The 48 Steps Down
22. The "Other" Reason For Changing The Sabbath
23. Apostate Protestantism
24. The Ultimate Sabbath Rest!
25. Satan's Attack Upon God's Law
26. The Remnant
27. Conclusion

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

The Forgotten Commandment

by Danny Shelton

The purpose of this book is to find out from the Scriptures, "Is there a forgotten commandment?" If there is, then these questions need to be asked, "Which one is it?" and "Should those of us who claim to be Christians be keeping this commandment?"

God gave Moses the Ten Commandments, yet most Christians today obey just nine. Why? Let's first read the Ten Commandments from the King James Version of the Bible:

I am the Lord thy God, which have brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods before me.

Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth. Thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me; and showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments.

Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it.

Honour thy father and thy mother: that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

Thou shalt not kill.

Thou shalt not commit adultery.

Thou shalt not steal.

Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.

Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbour's (Exodus 20: 3-17).

In examining these texts, we find that according to the fourth commandment, God set aside, or made holy, the seventh day of the week—the day we call Saturday. In fact, Genesis 2:2 says that at creation God "rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made." Now, from everything I've ever learned about God or even heard about Him, nothing even remotely suggests that He gets tired! He must have rested for a reason, as an example to us. We find right in the middle of the fourth commandment, God's instruction to us to keep holy the seventh day of the week—to worship Him on that day and to rest from our regular work. The fourth commandment leaves no question about it—we are to obey Him in this matter just as much as we are to obey Him in the other nine commandments.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

Who is the Creator?

Learn about our Creator.

Can we be sure which day of the week is the seventh day?

The big question we might have after reading the fourth commandment is: "Which day of the week is the seventh day?" Is Saturday really the seventh day of the week? How do we know? Maybe our calendars are all wrong. Maybe time has been lost or gained. I've heard that many calendars in Europe today say that Monday is the first day of the week, making Sunday the seventh day. Let's examine these questions. First of all, let's see what the United States Naval Observatory in Washington, D.C. has to say about this matter of time being lost or gained. In a letter dated March 12, 1932, the director, James Robertson, stated:

. . . We have had occasion to investigate the results of the works of specialists in chronology and we have never found one of them that has ever had the slightest doubt about the continuity of the weekly cycle since long before the Christian era. . . . There has been no change in our calendar in past centuries that has affected in any way the cycle of the week. . . .

As you can see, according to this source, the weekly cycle is still the same as it was 2,000 years ago when Christ walked the earth. Also, from Scripture we can see that Jesus had no trouble knowing which day of the week was the seventh day—the day for weekly worship. Luke 4:16 says, "As his custom was, he [Jesus] went into the synagogue on the sabbath day." The whole Jewish world in Jesus' day kept holy God's seventh-day Sabbath. In fact, the Jews have continuously kept the seventh-day Sabbath.

If we question whether Saturday is really the seventh day of the week, the Sabbath, we have to stretch our imaginations to decide that all the Jewish people around the world could have somehow gotten the days mixed up in the weekly cycle since Jesus was on earth. And if this were so, then Jews in different places around the world would probably be keeping any number of different days. Instead, we see them unified all over the earth on the matter of which day of the week is the seventh day Sabbath.

We have Bible evidence, too, that Saturday is the seventh day of the week, God's holy Sabbath. Luke 23:54 says that the day Jesus died "was the preparation, and the sabbath drew on." Then Luke 24:1 says that the day Jesus rose from the grave was "the first day of the week." So from the Bible we have this three-day sequence: the day before the Sabbath (the day Jesus died), the Sabbath, and the first day of the week (the day Jesus rose from the dead). All the world recognizes Good Friday as the day Jesus died. All the world recognizes Easter Sunday as the day He rose to life. And the day between Friday and Sunday is—which day? Saturday. And the New Testament calls this day "the sabbath" (Luke 23:54). I believe we have enough information available to us to know without a doubt that the Saturday of today is the same day that the Bible calls the seventh day of the week—God's holy Sabbath.

It is also interesting to note that the cycles of time marked on earth are determined by astronomy. A day is measured by how long it takes the earth to rotate, a month is determined by the cycle of the moon, and a year is measured by how long the earth takes to revolve around the sun. Only the weekly cycle has no anchor in astronomical time. That traditional measurement of time can only be traced back to God's creation when the seventh day was set aside as the Sabbath.

Is the Sabbath still part of God's will for Christians?

Now I think it would be timely here to look at why God commanded His children to keep holy the seventh day of the week. Why did God place such a seemingly unimportant matter right in the heart of the Ten Commandments? And further, why is the fourth commandment the only one of the ten to begin with the word, "Remember"? If God were going to change or do away with the fourth commandment at a later date—as many Christians believe He did—would it make sense for Him to begin the fourth commandment by saying, "Remember"? In fact, it would seem that the other nine commandments should have started with the word "Remember" even more so than the fourth—since most Christians agree that these nine are still binding today and will be binding throughout all eternity, while they feel that the fourth commandment was done away with. The word "Remember" tells us that God knew people were going to have trouble with that commandment—that they would be tempted to forget it.

God says that the Sabbath is a "perpetual covenant" and that it is "a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever" (Exodus 31:16, 17). How, then, can some Christians today say that the Ten Commandments were part of the old covenant and no longer valid for God's people?

It reminds me of the time when my family and I sang one Sunday morning at a big, popular, Sunday-keeping church in Tennessee. After the service, the pastor came to me and said, "Someone just told me that you're a Seventh-day Adventist. Is that true?" "Yes," I replied.

"The pastor continued, "Do you mean to tell me that you live under that old covenant? I'm glad to say that I'm not under that old law any more; I'm under grace!"

I remember looking at him and saying, "OK, that sounds good to me. You've convinced me." Then I picked up the Sunday offering plates that were close by and began to leave.

"Oh, excuse me, Brother Shelton," the pastor said, "but that's not your offering! That's the church's offering. We'll send you a check for your part."

"No," I replied. "I'll just take all of it."

As I started out to my van, the pastor quickly followed to let me know again that this was his church's offering—not mine.

"I understand," I assured him. "But if the Ten Commandments were done away with at the Cross, then I'm not really stealing your money because there isn't anything now that tells me it's wrong to take something that doesn't belong to me!"

As I handed back the offering plates, the pastor understood my point and had to reconsider his idea of not being "under the old law." Let's look now at the Bible definition of sin. "Sin is the transgression of the law" (1 John 3:4). This is one of the easiest texts to understand in the whole Bible. If there were no law, there could not be any sin.

Did Jesus' death on Calvary nail the Ten Commandments to the cross? Again, let's see what the Bible has to say on this subject. Jesus said, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil" (Matthew 5:17). It's amazing that so many people, including many Bible scholars, try to make this verse say something that it just doesn't say! You cannot make this scripture say that Jesus' death on the cross did away with the Ten Commandment law. No. Jesus says, "I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil [or make complete]."

Now Jesus did do away with the ceremonial laws when He died. Paul says that Jesus was "blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross" (Colossians 2:14). How beautiful to know that the death of Jesus means we no longer have to look at the blood of lambs, the table of stone, or try to be perfect by our own works! Now that Jesus has taken our sins on Himself at the cross of Calvary, His righteousness atones for our sins if we simply confess that we are sinners and ask for His forgiveness. The Bible says that "all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God" (Romans 3:23). It also says that "if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John 1:9).

Now let's see what actually is going on when a pastor makes an altar call. What is his intention? Whether he is a Baptist, Presbyterian, Pentecostal, Methodist, or whatever, his intention is to get one to confess his sins to God and then ask Jesus into his heart so that he might be "saved." Are you starting to get the point? If God's law was nailed to the cross, then there really is no need to encourage someone to ask for forgiveness because there is no longer any sin to be forgiven.

Why? Remember the Bible definition of sin is "transgression of the law" (1 John 4:3). Follow this line of thinking now. If there is no more law, then there is no more sin. And if there is no more sin, then there is no reason to repent of our sins. If there is no reason to repent of our sins, then there is no need for a Savior. And if there is no need for a Savior, then there is no need for pastors. And if there is no need for pastors, then there is no need for churches—and so on and so on. Now that's deep! Think about it for a moment, and go back and re-read that paragraph and let it soak in for a bit.

By now, you are probably beginning to ask, "Since the Bible is so clear that the Ten Commandments are still valid today, then why do so many churches try to explain them away?"

Again, the answer is very simple. If we acknowledge that the Ten Commandment law of God, the Decalogue, is still valid today, then we have to accept and keep the fourth commandment, recognizing that Saturday, the seventh day of the week, is the Sabbath that God, the Creator of the universe, blessed, set apart, sanctified, and made holy as His day of worship.

Who dares separate what God has joined together? (see Matthew 19:6). Whether it be marriage (which is what Matthew 19:6 is talking about) or the only thing God ever wrote with His own finger in stone—His Ten Commandments—we are warned not to try to separate what God has joined together. Yet Christians everywhere would have us believe that only nine commandments are valid today. They believe it is wrong to kill, commit adultery, lie, steal, but insist that the fourth commandment, containing the seventh-day Sabbath, has been separated from the other nine and nailed to Jesus' cross.

Actually, there are some interesting comparisons between marriage and the Sabbath. Both were instituted by God in Eden during Creation week. God sanctified both marriage and His holy Sabbath day. And just as no one can separate a husband and wife united in holy matrimony, neither can one separate God's fourth commandment from the rest. Both marriage and the Sabbath are founded on the same principle—the blessing and authority of the Creator who gave both institutions to humanity.

I have found that no matter what subject I'm dealing with in life, I always make the best decisions when I base them on principle. What do I mean by "principle"? Operating on the basis of principle means not getting caught up in feelings, sensations, emotions, wants, or desires. It means basing my life on what is right and what is wrong according to God's Word.

Let me give you an example. Many Christians say that God is not particular about which day a person keeps as the Sabbath—even though God has specifically designated the seventh day of the week as the day of worship. Let's compare that same principle to the idea of marriage and see how it turns out. Suppose you have gone to prayer meeting one evening, and after the service is over, you look for your spouse. He or she happens to be standing next to six friends. You say, "Honey, it's time to go home, but tonight I think I'll take one of your six friends home with me to spend the night with me in our bed. I know we're married and that our marriage has been sanctified by God, but since you are there with six of your friends, I don't think it really matters to you which of them I sleep with, just as long as it's one of them!"

I think you get the point. If you want to stay married, I wouldn't encourage you to try something this foolish! In the first place, you wouldn't even want to do this because you love your spouse. Secondly, you know, according to God's Word, that sleeping with someone other than your spouse is sin. You would be breaking the seventh commandment, the one that says, "Thou shalt not commit adultery" (Exodus 20:14).

In the same sense, we are committing spiritual adultery by willfully breaking God's fourth commandment and keeping another day that has not been instituted or sanctified or made holy by God. God says, "I the Lord thy God am a jealous God" (Exodus 20:5).

A look at some puzzling texts

Although there are no texts in the Bible showing that God changed the Sabbath day, there are a few texts we want to look at that on the surface may seem confusing. We know that the Bible was written under the inspiration of God and never contradicts itself— "All scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Timothy 3:16). But some texts have confused some sincere Christians as they studied this matter of the Sabbath.

For example, in Colossians 2:13, 14 the apostle Paul says of Jesus:

And you, being dead in your sins. . . hath he [Jesus] quickened [made alive] together with him, having forgiven you all your trespasses; blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross.

Many Christians point to this text as evidence that God's Ten Commandment law was nailed to Jesus' cross and came to an end at that time. But we have already seen that God's Ten Commandment law will last for eternity. So what law is Paul talking about? What law was nailed to Jesus' cross?

The next few verses help us to answer that question:

Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days: which are a shadow of things to come, but the body is of Christ (verses 16, 17).

So the laws, or ordinances, that Paul says were nailed to Jesus' cross were those that foreshadowed the work that Jesus would do when He came to live on earth—His sacrifice as the Lamb of God. These, Paul goes on to say, are the ceremonial laws God gave His people in the Old Testament dealing with meat and drink offerings, new moon festivals, and ceremonial "sabbath days" such as the Day of Atonement, Pentecost, Feast of Tabernacles. (see Leviticus 23:4-38). In fact, Leviticus 23:39, specifically shows that these ceremonial "sabbaths" (which could fall on any day of the week in different years) are distinct from the weekly seventh-day Sabbath of the fourth commandment.

Another text that has puzzled some Christians is 1 Corinthians 16:1, 2. Paul wrote to the Christians at Corinth:

Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches in Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come.

Some have thought Paul was talking about taking up offerings in church on the first day of the week and that this text, then, showed that Christians in Paul's day were worshiping on Sunday, the first day of the week. But if you read the text carefully, it becomes clear that Paul was telling the believers at Corinth to figure up at home on Sunday what they can give to the collection he is gathering for the believers in Jerusalem. They were to "lay by. . . in store" this offering so that it would be ready for Paul to pick up when he comes through Corinth on his way to Jerusalem. There is no hint here that God has changed the day of worship to Sunday.

Acts 20:7 is another text some people use to try to prove that the early Christian church worshiped on Sunday:

Upon the first day of the week, when the disciples were come together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow.

Again, if you read the entire passage, you discover that this was a special meeting that had been called because Paul was passing through the area and wanted to see the believers he had brought to Jesus on his earlier missionary journeys. Some have said that they were holding a Communion service because it said they "were come together to break bread." Most likely it was a common meal, and at any rate, Acts 2:46 says that the early Christian believers broke bread together "daily." Once more, we find no hint of Sunday sacredness in the early Christian church.

Why do most Christians today ignore the seventh-day Sabbath?

Now that we have shown from the Bible that God's Ten Commandment law, including the fourth commandment, is still valid today, you may rightfully be wondering, "Why don't most Christians—Protestant and Catholic—keep God's holy seventh-day Sabbath?"

Before examining this question, I want to make it clear that I believe God has sincere followers in every church. We are not saved by the denominational name over the door of our church building. I believe God judges each believer's heart individually. I love people of all faiths—or even no faith. Jesus says, "Love one another, as I have loved you" (John 15:12). So when we are talking about God's Sabbath, we have to deal with church doctrines and creeds and systems—in both Protestant and Catholic churches—but we are not judging individual hearts.

When we look at the fact that most Christian churches are not keeping God's seventh-day Sabbath, the big question is: Why? This seems to be the only commandment of the ten that is under attack by Christian church organizations. There must be a reason. There must be something about the fourth commandment that Satan really hates. What is it? Let's read the fourth commandment once again:

Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it.

Notice that there is something very important contained in the fourth commandment that is not found in the other nine. The fourth commandment identifies who is the author of all ten of the commandments—the Lord who "made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is." Now we know who it is who wrote the Ten Commandments. It is the Creator God, the God of the universe, the great I AM! Now follow closely with me for a minute.

If we examine the Ten Commandments, we will find that they are divided into two parts. By obeying the first four commandments we show our love to God. When we obey the last six, we show our love for our fellow man. For example, we show our loyalty to God by not having any other gods before Him, by not bowing down to any other gods, and by not taking His name in vain. And when we keep the fourth commandment—the Sabbath commandment—we show our loyalty to the one and only Creator God.

The fourth commandment is the only one that tells us which God we serve—the God who "made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is" (Exodus 20:11). If we try to do away with the fourth commandment, we don't even know what God we're loyal to. I was in India some time ago and found out that there are millions of gods worshiped in that country. The God we serve created us; He's our Creator. That fact—more than any other—distinguishes Him from all those man-made gods.

The last six of the Ten Commandments show our love for others. For example, if we don't steal from our neighbor, if we don't commit adultery with his wife, if we don't lie about him, etc. we are demonstrating our love for our neighbor.

The fourth commandment, you see, contains the seal of God. Without the fourth commandment, we wouldn't know who had written the other nine. Imagine for a moment that you read in the newspaper that the United States has just declared war on another country! The first question that would probably come to your mind would be, "Says who?" After all, there are nearly 300,000,000 Americans. Any one of them could have declared war on another country, but that means nothing unless someone with the authority to do so actually declares war. The president of the United States is the only one who has the authority to sign a declaration of war after Congress has taken that step. His seal consists of several parts: (1) his name—George W. Bush; (2) his title—President; (3) his territory or domain—the United States of America. Be assured that if George W. Bush, president of the United States of America, signs a declaration of war, then America is indeed engaged in war!

Our Creator God has His seal contained in the fourth commandment: (1) His name—"the Lord thy God"; (2) His title—Creator; (3) His territory or domain—"heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is."

Remember, the Bible says that war broke out in heaven. "And there was war in heaven: Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not" (Revelation 12:7, 8). Why did war break out in heaven? Because Satan was jealous of God. He said, "I will be like the most high" (Isaiah 14:14). He was able to convince one-third of the angels to follow him (see Revelation 12:4).

The great controversy between Christ and Satan continues today—except that now Satan is working to get human beings to give their allegiance to him instead of God. Satan knows that he and his unholy angels are lost, but he wants to make a mockery of God before the whole universe by destroying us, God's creation (see John 10:10). He still wants to be like the most high God. So he is stealing the allegiance of the human race by having his human agents change God's Ten Commandments and thereby deceive the nations to follow him instead of the Creator God of the universe.

Brothers and sisters, the issue is not only about a day; it's about allegiance. The question is: Whom are we going to serve? Do we love God enough to serve Him and keep His commandments fully—including the fourth? Or are we going to serve Satan and worship on his counterfeit day as instituted by man? Is this possible? Let's see what the Bible has to say. "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men" (Mark 7:7). In fact, if you read this verse closely, you'll see that Jesus is predicting this will happen. Again, it's not just about a day; it's about allegiance.

Notice, too, James 2:10. "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." What law is James talking about? The Ten Commandment law that God wrote on tablets of stone with His own finger; notice the next verse: "For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law" (James 2:11). Think about this. I think we can all agree that Jesus is the "cornerstone." All creation hinges on the cornerstone. The stone that God wrote His law on represents Jesus Himself—the Cornerstone. The Ten Commandment law is nothing more than a transcript of Jesus' character. The Ten Commandment law is God's own Word. John says, "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us" (John 1:14). Imagine this!

Jesus, the Cornerstone, gave to Moses the Ten Commandments on tablets of stone representing Himself. The Bible records that Moses became angry when he saw the wickedness of the people, and he threw down the tablets of stone and broke them (see Exodus 32:19). But did that do away with the law of God? No. The Bible records that God gave him another set of stone tablets containing the Ten Commandments. These were placed in the ark of the covenant in the sanctuary and eventually were hidden when Israel went into exile. There are some indications that these tablets of stone with the law written on them by God Himself will be revealed to the world at God's appointed time. In the same way, Jesus' body was broken for us when He died on the cross (see 1 Corinthians 11:24). Like the broken tablets of stone, Jesus' broken body didn't destroy the law of God, but fulfilled it (see Matthew 5:17). Then, after His death, Jesus ascended to heaven to intercede on our behalf until the appointed time when He will return and all the earth will see Him and know that He is King of kings, and Lord of lords. Praise God! Isn't it wonderful that God loved us enough that He would set aside a twenty-four-hour day every week that we can spend with Him? It's a weekly reminder that He loves us and hasn't forgotten us. A friend of mine refers to the Ten Commandments as the "Ten Promises." What a wonderful way to describe them! The Bible says that we should put on the whole armor of God (Ephesians 6:11). When we put on—or wear—the character of God, His Ten Commandments, He promises us victory over the devil. We won't lose control and kill someone, for example. We won't fall into stealing or committing adultery. He promises us victory over lying or coveting. What love! An old hymn says, "A wonderful Savior is Jesus my Lord, a wonderful Savior to me." Truer words were never spoken.

What the Sabbath means to me personally

We've seen something of what the Bible says about God's seventh-day Sabbath and its importance. Now, before we go on to look at other aspects of this subject and their significance for the times in which we are living, I would like to explain briefly what the Sabbath means to me from a personal standpoint.

For me, the seventh-day Sabbath of the Lord is the highlight of every week. It's my escape from all my everyday problems in this life. During the Sabbath, I seem to be lifted up into heavenly places in close communion with God. Every seven days the Sabbath reminds me that Jesus loves me and that He hasn't forgotten me. It reminds me that Jesus is coming back to this earth very soon to redeem me from this sin-sick world. The seventh-day Sabbath is God's covenant—or agreement—with me that I am His and He is mine through all eternity. Notice what God said back in the days of Israel: "Verily my sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you" (Exodus 31:13). Verse 17 says that the Sabbath is a sign between God and His people "for ever."

On the Sabbath I can leave my daily cares behind. All my business affairs—who I owe money to, whom owes money to me, how much is (or isn't) in my bank account, all these things can just go away for twenty-four hours. I don't have to worry about them or deal with them. Let me tell you, it's wonderful to be able to get away from all the business of buying and selling. The Lord knows we can't concentrate on our relationship with Him if we're concerned with carrying on the usual daily transactions of life. That's why He tells us to avoid working on the Sabbath, or buying and selling things.

Thus said the Lord unto me; Go and stand in the gate of the children of the people, whereby the kings of Judah come in, and by the which they go out, and in all the gates of Jerusalem;

And say unto them, Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye kings of Judah, and all Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, that enter in by these gates: Thus saith the Lord; Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden on the sabbath day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem;

Neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on the sabbath day, neither do ye any work, but hallow ye the sabbath day, as I commanded your fathers. But they obeyed not, neither inclined their ear, but made their neck stiff, that they might not hear, nor receive instruction. And it shall come to pass, if ye diligently hearken unto me, saith the Lord, to bring in no burden through the gates of this city on the sabbath day, but hallow the sabbath day, to do no work therein;

Then shall there enter into the gates of this city kings and princes sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, they, and their princes, the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem: and this city shall remain for ever (Jeremiah 17:19-25).

The Lord knows, too, that we need physical rest as well as mental rest on the Sabbath. I'm thankful that He tells us in the fourth commandment to stop all our usual labor and work for the twenty-four hours of the Sabbath. Medical science will confirm that anyone who works seven days a week will burn out much faster than someone who works six days as God has commanded—and rests on the Sabbath.

Sometimes people get hung up on what is, or is not, work on the Sabbath. In my opinion, these kinds of discussions end up splitting legalistic hairs. It's very easy to sort out, as far as I can see. God set the example for us.

Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made (Genesis 2:1-3).

What work is it that God rested from? The work of creating the world, of course. But let me ask you another question: Does God quit working in our behalf on the Sabbath? Does Jesus quit interceding for us during the Sabbath hours? Of course not! The Bible tells us that "the sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath" (Mark 2:27). Did God rest on that first Sabbath at the end of Creation week because He was tired? No. He rested to set an example for us to follow. In the same way, on the Sabbath we are to abstain from our daily work in the sense of doing the job that we do the other six days of the week. But we should never let the Sabbath stop us from doing God's will during its hours. We shouldn't be like some who are so afraid they won't keep the Sabbath correctly that they won't drive a car, walk a mile, or help a neighbor in need on the Sabbath. I've found great peace of mind in keeping the Sabbath when I concentrate on my relationship with God. Learn about the 3ABN story.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Amazing Wonders of Creation

In spite of being marred by transgression, nature still bears an eloquent testimony to the love and power of a Divine Creator. After resting under the heavy curses of sin for almost 6,000 years, the incredible beauty of God's handiwork continues to amaze and enthrall. When we thank God for our blessings, we should never forget to mention these incomparable natural wonders which add so much meaning to every moment of our lives.

What would this planet be like without its restful carpet of living green grass and foliage? God did not have to clothe the ugly bare soil with such a covering. Functionally, there needed to be no bright colors. Human beings could have survived on a bleak planet of gray ground and colorless plants. But they could not have survived as happily. The Creator Himself was not only a lover of beauty; He loved His creatures so much that He wanted them to be happy, too. That's why He draped the earth with a half-million varieties of contrasting blossoms and leaves. And hidden inside each tiny bud, God placed secrets that would challenge the genius of Earth's greatest scientists.

How strange it is that so many of those who wrestle with those mysteries do not recognize the Creative Power which produced them. Even though many naturalists stand in awe of the creature, few seem to recognize and honor the Creator. Breathing the marvelous blend of nitrogen and oxygen which makes it possible for them to live, evolutionists refuse to acknowledge that the precise 79 percent to 21 percent mixture of gases was provided by something other than blind chance. Looking through eyes so delicately arranged that no combination of scientific genius can even understand, much less duplicate, their operation, unbelievers deny the miracle which makes it possible for them to see. Through ears, which connect to a brain more complex than the largest computer on earth, doubters listen to lectures on humanism and evolution.

Who are these people who scorn the record of God's creative power? They are only a tiny fragment of finite humanity, whose very existence, breath by breath, depends upon the operation of laws over which they have no control. Rejecting the divine origin of that for which they find no empirical evidence, many scientists ascribe miraculous qualities to matter itself. They build up theoretical creeds in which they place absolute faith, even to the point of believing that blind, unintelligent "nature" created life out of non-life.

Is Chance Precise and Predictable?

What kind of faith is required to believe that all the orderly processes of nature were produced by chance? Almost every plant and animal exhibits amazing adaptations which can be described as "miraculous." If these highly complex functions had no intelligent Creator or Designer, then our reasoning powers are staggered by the millions of "coincidences" which operate with infinite precision to produce perfect beauty, function, and reproduction on the earth.

Could they indeed be the products of accident or chance? Every law of science on the subject decrees that undirected, random nature tends towards deterioration rather than order. Surely

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

Who is the Creator?

Learn about our Creator.

the most persuasive evidence in favor of creationism is that of nature itself. The Bible suggests that the animals and earth should be asked about their own origin. In Job 12: 7-9, we read: "But ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee; and the fowls of the air, and they shall tell thee: and the fishes of the sea shall declare unto thee. Who knoweth not in all these that the hand of the Lord hath wrought this?" Job says if you want to know how God operated in the work of creation, ask these various forms of life, ask the earth, and the earth will explain how mightily God has wrought in these things.

So that's exactly what we're going to do right now. What does the earth have to say to us concerning the great power of God? Did you know there are miracles in every square inch of this earth? From the towering mountains to the vast restless ocean and throughout the limitless universe of God, there is the throb and hum of life. From the microscopic to the immense, we can discover the fingerprints of the mighty Creator who brought all things into existence.

When I look at the universe and see the amazing fact that it is in perfect balance, that life in this world has been perfectly adapted to the conditions we find here, I know that some great intelligent power is behind it, making it operate in such an accurate manner. The Genesis account of the Bible has been completely vindicated by all the findings of true science. The writings of Moses have been found to be scientifically as well as historically accurate. In this booklet, we're going to look at the water and land in particular. By studying the mysteries of land and sea, we will see how wonderfully they support the biblical story of creation.

How Did Moses Know?

Let's go back to Genesis and take a look at the story as God gave it to Moses. Genesis 1: 6 says, "And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters. And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which are under the firmament from the waters, which were above the firmament; and it was so. And God called the firmament Heaven. And the evening and the morning were the second day." Long, long ago the waters that were over the earth were actually right down here upon the surface. We know that there is a vast ocean in space, suspended in the atmosphere. We'll find out just what purpose it serves in a moment, but at one time that water was resting right here upon the earth. God divided it and lifted a part of it up into the heavens while part of it remained here.

Now look at verses 9 and 10. "And God said, Let the water under the heaven be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear: and it was so. And God called the dry land Earth; and the gathering together of the waters called He Seas: and God saw that it was good." How did Moses know there would be several oceans or seas? He had absolutely no human way of knowing there could be more than one body of water in all the world. He never went around to see how many oceans were in the world, but God inspired this truth in Moses' mind. He said there were seas or oceans.

Here's another good question to ask. How did Moses know that all these various bodies of water would be connected and would rest in only one bed? Now, isn't that what he said? "Let all the waters be gathered into one place and let the dry land appear."

In the next verse, he says there were seas or oceans. It is a scientific, geographical fact that all the oceans of the world are joined together, and they do all rest in a common bed. Moses could not have known that of himself. He didn't say this of dry land. No, it was divided up into continents. Part of it would be over here and another big discrete mass of it would be in another location. But concerning the waters, he said it would all be in one place, and yet it would be divided into oceans. I think it's tremendous that the Bible is so scientifically accurate as to reveal these things.

Watering the Earth? God's Miracle

Now let's see how intelligence and design came into the ratio of land and water. One-quarter of the earth's surface is dry land, and three-quarters is covered with water. In the United States alone we have three and three quarter million square miles of dry land, and all of it has to be watered and cared for. In fact, if it weren't watered, there would be no vegetation and no growing grass or trees.

Just imagine for a moment that the ratio of land and water was changed from what it is at present. The rainfall on the earth is determined by the proportion of water and land. Suppose the ocean was only half its present size. That would mean our rainfall would only be one-quarter of what we now receive. What would that mean for the three and three quarter million square miles of land we have in these United States? All of it would be turned into a vast, dry desert! But on the other hand, if half the present land were added to the ocean, there would be four times as much rainfall as there is now, and the entire United States would be turned into a vast marshland where human life would be almost impossible. Now suppose that mankind had to water all this three and three quarter million square miles of land. How could we ever spread out that water and irrigate the land effectively? What a tremendous task that would be! "There's plenty of water in the ocean," someone might observe, "we could simply use it to water the dry land." Although it may sound reasonable, there are three problems connected with it. First, transportation. We'd have to get the water out of the ocean and spread it evenly over the land. The second problem is the salt it contains which would kill all the green plants. The third problem is weight. Water is 800 times the weight of the atmosphere, presenting the challenge of how to transport and disperse it.

God Solves the Weight Problem

How has God solved the weight problem? First, He uses heat. We know heat expands things and cold contracts them, and that water is the material most subject to expansion. In fact, when turned into steam, it becomes 1,600 to 1,700 times its original volume. Remember, though, this water is 800 times heavier than the atmosphere. But God simply sends down the warming rays of the sun, turning the water into a vapor which is 900 times lighter than water. Now it is one-eighth times lighter than the atmosphere. So this vapor is easily lifted up out of the ocean, carried into the sky?perhaps miles into the air?and formed into great cloud masses.

The second problem is deadly salt, but God simply evaporates the water and leaves all the mineral deposits and impurities behind. Taken up into the clouds, the water is sweet and soft, perfectly adapted to irrigate the earth.

No Sprinkler System Like This

What about the third problem?transportation? The water that is lifted up is still hanging over the ocean, which doesn't need any more water. God sends along winds to blow the clouds and spread them out over the dry land area where it is needed. But how to get all the water down out of the clouds? Here is another wonderful miracle. Cold will contract, of course, so when the clouds pass over the mountain peaks, the cold air reaches up and begins to cool those clouds, turning the vapor into a condensation of moisture.

Now consider what would happen if the clouds gave up all the water they contain at one time? it would flood the entire surface of the earth with three feet of water! Therefore, the cooling process must be gradual. For example, if the temperature of the cloud is lowered by nine degrees, it will drop half its water! So God arranges for a gradual cooling process to let the rain come down in gentle-to-vigorous showers to provide the amounts needed to revive the earth. What an incredible process! Of course, some of it rains back into the ocean, but it is needed there to provide the necessary amount of oxygen for fish living in salty ocean beds.

Did you know that these great facts of nature were all known and understood long before the scientists and naturalists discovered them? Ecclesiastes 1:7 is a most interesting verse. "All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full." Why not? The text continues to give the answer. "Unto the place from whence the river comes, thither they return again."

The Bible says the reason the seas do not overflow is that the water is taken up again and returned to where the rivers come from. And so there is a constant movement of water going up from the ocean in vapor form, carried as clouds over the land, and brought down again as rain which forms rivulets that find their way back to the sea. Even though the great naturalists felt they had made a new discovery when they found out about the cycles of clouds, they could have known it all by reading the Scriptures.

Why Clouds Don't Break

Another text with scientific information is Job 26:8. "He bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds; and the cloud is not rent under them." This is a beautiful text, explaining that the clouds don't break and spill all their water at once, even though millions of tons of water are drawn up from the oceans into the clouds. And, of course, Job was correct. We've just found that God has a process of gradual cooling which releases the water little by little as it is needed to irrigate the surface of the earth. God revealed it to Job long before mankind figured it out.

I'm sure all of us know that water has weight, and that its pressure increases dramatically as the depth increases. Certain fish that exist in the very bottom of the ocean are especially engineered by God to withstand this tremendous pressure. If brought quickly up to the surface, they practically explode. The pressure that God put into their muscular structure is still there on the inside when they are brought up where the pressure is not exerted from the outside.

This is a wonderful fact, but do you realize that we, too, live in the bottom of an atmospheric sea, which also has tremendous weight? At sea level we are living down at the bottom of a very heavy, dense covering. As the ocean is to the fish, so the atmosphere is to us. Every moment we live, a pressure of 14 pounds per square inch is exerted upon our body structure, and that's pretty heavy. We think a man is strong if he can carry 200 pounds on his back. In fact, the strongest man that ever lived put only 415 pounds over his head. Yet, every single form of life in this world, whether it's a 90-pound woman or a burly man, has a constant pressure of over 15 tons at sea level pushing and pressing upon them from every direction. That's 30,000 pounds!

Even the filmy, gauzy insects have been designed by God to withstand their proportion of this pressure. That little gnat, so light and frail that it seems anything could crush it, is built by God to withstand the weight of the atmosphere. Can you think this happened by mere chance? Consider Job 28:25. "To make the weight for the winds; and he weigheth the waters by measure." The Bible says the wind has weight.

The air, in other words, is heavy. The atmosphere has weight. If you climb a mountain, the higher you climb, the thinner the atmosphere becomes, and you feel distressed and uncomfortable. Why? Because the pressure is not as great. You see, God has built in a certain amount of pressure that balances that on the outside at sea level. If you went high enough, you would be just as stressed as the fish brought up from the ocean depths. How wonderful that God has designed all living creatures to be perfectly comfortable in its own environment.

Lucky Accident or Design?

Now consider another, even greater, miracle. The atmosphere around us is made up of two main ingredients?nitrogen and oxygen?whose mixture is always the same, whether at the highest mountaintops or in the deepest caves. The perfect balance is 79 percent nitrogen and 21 percent oxygen. You might ask, "Why is it this way?" Is there some particular reason for it? Is it important that we have this exact mixture of nitrogen and oxygen?" Yes, I can assure you it is most important. If the nitrogen were increased, our life processes would slow down and we would die. If the oxygen were measurably increased, our life processes would be rapidly increased. Our pulse rate would just run away and soon we would wear out and die. But God made it just right.

Suppose, for example, it was two-thirds nitrogen and one-third oxygen. If that proportion prevailed, and an electrical reaction caused the elements to combine, do you realize that the whole world would be turned into laughing maniacs? Everybody would be laughing because that would produce the laughing gas, N<sub>2</sub>O, the same kind dentists sometimes use when extracting teeth. Or, suppose it was divided half and half. That would produce nitric oxide, which is quickly fatal to all forms of life.

Was it just a lucky accident that it came out like this? Did some blind happenstance of nature produce this exact mixture that is necessary for life support? Or, was there an intelligent design? This world would become chaotic if this atmospheric mixture slipped out of control for just a single instant. We would see one of the most tremendous of all explosions, because nitrogen is the basic component of gunpowder; and oxygen, of course, makes for rapid combustion. It would be "Goodbye, world!"

And yet some day, apparently, there is going to an explosion like this. Some day the elements are going to melt with fervent heat, the Bible says. Peter tells us in 2 Peter 3:10 that "the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." I don't know how God will arrange that, but I do know that some great fire one of these days is going to burn, and the earth will be purified by this strange fire of God. And the elements will be involved in it because the elements are going to melt. Maybe God is going to change just very, very slightly the present proportion of nitrogen and oxygen, causing this great conflagration to take place. I do know this?we must be ready for that day when it comes. The Bible indicates it is near at hand.

Another of the mysteries of nature was described in the Bible long before it was investigated by science. We read about it in Job 38:8-11. "Or who shut up the sea with doors, when it brake forth, as if it had issued out of the womb? When I made the cloud the garment thereof, and thick darkness a swaddling band for it, And brake up for it my decreed place, and set bars and doors, And said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no further: and here shall thy proud waves be stayed?"

What beautiful, poetic language we find here to describe the creation of the ocean. It speaks of it as being born and coming forth from the womb. God says that the cloud was the garment of it and a thick darkness was a swaddling band placed around the ocean at its birth. But then God added, "Here ye may come but no further; here shall thy proud waves be stayed."

The scientists of this world have been amazed in learning the secrets of the tidal actions. They still don't understand all the deep underwater cataclysmic actions that affect the tides and wave patterns. No naturalist on the face of the earth has figured out all the secrets of these swift tidal waves as they move to and fro in their own mysterious ways.

God's Heating System? The Gulf Stream

By the way, these tides and movements of water have been in perfect balance to contribute to mankind's comfort. I think of the mighty Gulf Stream, for instance. We don't know everything about it, but we do know life in the United States would be almost impossible were it not for the fantastic influence of this great stream. It comes out of the Gulf of Mexico, goes along the eastern seaboard, and up into the northern sections of the world. It is like a river, flowing through the midst of the sea and can be seen distinctly from high above because of its different color.

In fact, this river is about 70 miles wide and nearly 3,000 feet deep. When it leaves the Gulf of Mexico, the water temperature is 84 degrees, and off the coast of the Carolinas it is still a warm 80 degrees. This warming influence actually makes the northern coastal regions of America and Europe inhabitable; otherwise, they would be frozen wastelands.

Now notice what happens as this warm river reaches the entrance of the Arctic region at Baffin Bay, where it meets a frigid polar stream that is rushing southward. As a result of the titanic collision of these two giants, the polar stream is forced to dive down thousands of feet where it continues its southward course, coming up finally in the West Indies during their hottest season, thus cooling down the terrible tropical heat. The Gulf Stream gets deflected eastward, going up along the British Isles making these habitable.

It was in God's plan for this to happen. I don't believe for a moment that all this happened by chance or accident. Without that deflection of the Gulf Stream, some of those northern lands would be locked in eternal winter. Surely God was behind the entire plan.

Goggles and Bifocals

Let's hurry along now and take a quick look at the creatures of nature and see how intelligence and design came into the picture. Think for a moment of the fish that inhabit the oceans. They are constantly subject to attack from their enemies from above?like the gulls that swoop down to make their meals off marine life. Do you know that fish have specially constructed eyeballs enabling them to look almost instantly in any and all directions? They see behind, below, above and on the sides; furthermore, their eyes are designed to take into account the refraction of light.

Yes, fish can see 30 percent farther than other visual instruments because God designed the eyeball of the fish to take into consideration the refraction of light. We tend to think it's a wonderful accomplishment when the oculist manufactures special goggles for divers that compensate for refraction in the water, yet God did it for fish long before. Goggles could never have come into existence by chance, yet evolutionists contend that a fish's specialized eyeballs just happened.

In the waters of Malaya lives a fish with bifocal lenses built right in its eyes. This little sardine-sized fish is prized for food by the seagulls especially. They are constantly swooping down to gobble up this little fish if they can. So the little fish has to watch carefully for this approaching danger. It must have good far-vision, but since it feeds on the microscopic larvae that abounds in the water, it must have very good near-vision as well. And do you know the Creator provided a little membrane that comes halfway up on its eyes, giving it bifocal vision? That little fish can look up and see the gulls coming or look down and see those nearby bits of life that it can feed on!

We think it wonderful that the skilled optometrist and oculist can perfect glasses permitting us to see near and far away, yet here is a fish that has been around for thousands of years? and God made it that way from the beginning. It did not just develop blindly; it had to be created. Intelligent design was behind it.

Birds and Bees

Now let's examine two Pacific coast water birds. I can find no stronger evidence of design in nature than with the Ousel, a very friendly little bird that lives near mountain streams. It can usually be found where the water is swift flowing and splashy. This buoyant bird will be floating along, apparently weightless, then suddenly sink to the bottom like a piece of lead. There he walks around picking up bits of food on the streambed. After taking his fill, he goes over to the bank, shakes himself, and mysteriously sets himself afloat again like a wisp of smoke.

It has been discovered that this strange bird has some special equipment? a muscular apparatus which can instantly exhaust every bit of air from its body, letting it sink down; then when it walks out, it can take in air again and float off once more. Now, that's special creation, isn't it? The evolutionists would say, "Well, it needed to have this bit of apparatus, so nature provided it." Of course, they don't say what nature is, but maintain that it just grew by some accidental development. The truth is that God provided it. He made this particular bird as He did because He saw that it needed this for survival.

Another kind of bird found on the Pacific coast lives on a diet of large worms which live in holes in the sand. Because this worm is down at the very bottom of its hole, the bird must go down to get the worm out. It so happens that, although its beak is exactly the right length to reach into the hole, the narrow hole keeps the beak squeezed shut. What a predicament? to be able to see and reach a luscious worm but not be able to open his beak to pick it up! Do you know what God arranged for this particular bird? He created a tiny flap much like a surgeon's forceps at the bottom of the beak. With this special organ the bird can pick up the worm, back out of the hole, and gobble it down!

Isn't it wonderful that God thought of a little bird and made something special so it could get its food conveniently? If He so loves the little birds and provides the things to make their existence comfortable, don't you think He's willing to provide everything that we might need? He loves us even more. Remember, He knows when the sparrows fall.

Some years ago, a scientific magazine published an article by a clever biologist who did not believe in evolution. In Evolution Goes to Pieces on a Bee's Knee, the author first reviewed the evolutionist's teaching that when the need for a certain organ develops in any creature, the organ is produced in response to that need. Nature itself or some blind chance supposedly comes along and produces the necessary organ to fit the creature for survival. Then he cited the example of the bees. When bees crawl into pollen-filled blossoms, their breathing apparatus gets all stopped up with pollen. In fact, they can't even breathe while they are inside gathering their pollen.

Now it so happens that every bee has a special brush located on its knees? a stiff brush? that it uses to clean out its breathing apparatus when it comes out of the flower so it doesn't suffocate. This biologist noted that if it were true that these insects develop special equipment in response to a need, the very first bee to exist did not have those brushes on its knees. When it went into the flower, it would have suffocated; consequently, the whole bee family would have become extinct right then and there. No, rather than these brushes developing slowly through the ages in response to a need, they were provided by God to meet the need and save the very first bee that was made.

The conclusion is that God anticipated the needs of His creatures and made them with every necessary apparatus. How thankful we ought to be that God can supply all our needs in advance. The Bible says the fool hath said in his heart, "There is no God." Only a God of love and power could have made the marvels we see about us. And if He cares for the tiny animal world, He cares for us, too. He loves us even more than He loves that little bird out on the West Coast, and He wants to save us. He wants to take us at last to a place where nature will be in perfect balance again and where all of the curse of sin will be forever removed.

And He Loves Me

Can we doubt the love of God who makes such infinite provision for everything He created? Nothing has been left alone to suffer extinction or deprivation. Only man's bungling interference with the delicate balance of nature has brought sorrow and tragedy. If God cares for the needs of the tiniest cell of the smallest plant or animal, don't you think He loves us enough to care for us?

One of the most thrilling facts I learned about the miracles of nature concerned the lowly cocklebur. Surely it is one of the most despised of all plants due to its clinging, pricking nature. Yet consider the marvel of its reproduction. Every pod of the cocklebur has two seeds inside to guarantee its survival. But during the first year only one of the seeds will begin to grow. The other seed waits till the second year to start growing in order to perpetuate two seasons of growth. But if something happens to the first seed so that it does not grow and produce, the second seed begins to grow immediately instead of waiting for the next year. What built-in wisdom of God communicates to that waiting seed that it should begin to grow when the first seed is destroyed? No evolutionist has been able to harmonize miracles like this with their theories of naturalism and chance.

Surely we can see that God's care extends to the meanest and lowest order of growing things. Are we not more precious to Him than the cockleburs? If He works miracles to safeguard a clinging, contrary cocklebur, will He not guide the ways of those for whom He gave His life? May God open our eyes to the wonder and wisdom of His great work of creation. Tonight when you kneel to pray, remember to thank God for the landscape of beauty which always lies beyond the man-made mess of human obstruction.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Creation Questions

Audio - Questions and Answers

Creation / Evolution

Note: To save, 'Right click' on the word Download(if available) and choose "Save Target As".

Are dinosaurs Satan's animals? Listen / Download

Did God create the entire solar system when He created the earth? Listen / Download

Did the Bible stories really happen? -Part 1 Listen / Download

Did the Bible stories really happen? -Part 2 Listen / Download

Was the world created in 6 literal days? Listen / Download

What was the light God made at the start creation? Listen / Download

Where in the Bible are dinosaurs mentioned? Listen / Download

Will this planet be the new earth after the second coming of Jesus? Listen / Download

Note: You will need RealAudio to listen to these audio programs. (There is a Free version on their website but it does take effort to find it.)

Written - Questions and Answers

Have any scientists believed in the Biblical account of creation?

Yes, many of the world's leading scientists have been amazed by their discoveries. Even non-Christian scientists have been left awestruck as they continue to learn that even the most simple things in our world are vastly complex. Albert Einstein once said:

"The scientist is possessed by the sense of universal causation... His religious feeling takes the form of rapturous amazement at the harmony of natural law, which reveals the intelligence of such superiority that, compared with it, systematic thinking and acting of human beings is an utterly insignificant reflection."

View a list of scientists who believed in the Biblical account of creation.

More - Coming Soon!

^ Top

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> Have any scientists believed in the Biblical account of creation?

> Creation / Evolution

> Amazing Wonders of Creation

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

How Evolution Flunked the Science Test

Contents

- Spontaneous Generation
- Chance Life - A Ridiculous Improbability
- Mutations - How Big the Changes?
- Fossils Support Creationism
- The Mystery of the Empty Strata
- Uniformity or the Flood?
- Survival of the Fittest

Recently I talked to a man with a fantastic amount of faith. Not one shade of doubt crept into his animated description of man's origin and destiny. He was an evolutionist I met on an airplane. With incredible confidence he bridged the eons of prehistoric time to explain the existence of modern plant and animal life. His detailed description of human ascent from a tiny, one-celled monad was so vivid and convincing that one could almost believe he had seen the microscopic amoeba turn into a man.

What is this evolution doctrine which inspires so much faith in its disciples? How has it turned great scientists into dogmatic opponents of any other viewpoint? Many evolutionary scientists have united their professional influence to forbid any classroom instruction contrary to their own views. Does the theory of evolution merit this kind of fanatical support, which would silence all opposing ideas? When religious people take such a position, they are called bigots, but scientists seem to escape that charge. In February of 1977, nearly 200 members of the nation's academic community sent letters to school boards across the United States, urging that no alternate ideas on origins be permitted in classrooms.

This indicates that the evolutionists are feeling the threat of a rising revolt against the stereotyped, contradictory versions of their theory. Many students are looking for honest answers to their questions about the origin and purpose of life. For the first time, the stale traditions of evolution are having to go on the defensive. But let's take a look at what they have to defend. Then you will understand why these evolutionary scientists are people of such extraordinary faith, and why they are so fearful of facing competition at the school level.

Spontaneous Generation

How does the evolutionist explain the existence of that first one-celled animal from which all life forms supposedly evolved? For many years the medieval idea of spontaneous generation was the accepted explanation. According to Webster, spontaneous generation is "the generation of living from nonliving matter ... [it is taken] from the belief, now abandoned, that organisms found in putrid organic matter arose spontaneously from it."

Simply stated, this means that under the proper conditions of temperature, time, place, etc., decaying matter simply turns into organic life. This simplistic idea dominated scientific thinking until 1846, when Louis Pasteur completely shattered the theory by his experiments.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> What is the Purpose of the Sabbath?

He exposed the whole concept as utter foolishness. Under controlled laboratory conditions, in a semi-vacuum, no organic life ever emerged from decaying, nonliving matter. Reluctantly it was abandoned as a valid scientific issue. Today no reputable scientist tries to defend it on a demonstrable basis. That is why Webster says it is "now abandoned." It never has been and never can be demonstrated in the test tube. No present process is observed that could support the idea of spontaneous generation. Obviously, if spontaneous generation actually did take place in the distant past to produce the first spark of life, it must be assumed that the laws which govern life had to be completely different from what they are now. But wait a minute! This won't work either, because the whole evolutionary theory rests upon the assumption that conditions on the earth have remained uniform throughout the ages.

Do you begin to see the dilemma of the evolutionists in explaining that first amoeba, or monad, or whatever formed the first cell of life? If it sprang up spontaneously from no previous life, it contradicts a basic law of nature which forms the foundation of the entire theory. Yet, without believing in spontaneous generation, the evolutionist would have to acknowledge something other than natural forces at work - in other words, God. How do they get around this dilemma?

Dr. George Wald, Nobel Prize winner of Harvard University, states it as cryptically and honestly as an evolutionist can: "One has only to contemplate the magnitude of this task to concede that the spontaneous generation of a living organism is impossible. Yet here we are - as a result, I believe, of spontaneous generation." Scientific American, August, 1954.

That statement by Dr. Wald demonstrates a much greater faith than a religious creationist can muster. Notice that the great evolutionary scientist says it could not have happened. It was impossible. Yet he believes it did happen. What can we say to that kind of faith? At least the creationist believes that God was able to speak life into existence. His is not a blind faith in something that he concedes to be impossible.

So here we are, face to face with the first contradiction of evolution with a basic law of science. In order to sustain his humanistic explanation of the origin of life, he must accept the exploded, unscientific theory of spontaneous generation. And the big question is this: Why is he so violently opposed to the spontaneous generation spoken of in the Bible? A miracle of creation is required in either case. Either God did it by divine fiat, or blind, unintelligent nature produced Wald's impossible act. Let any reasonable mind contemplate the alternatives for a moment. Doesn't it take more faith to believe that chance could produce life than it does to believe infinite intelligence could produce it?

Why did Dr. Wald say that it was impossible for life to result from spontaneous generation? That was not an easy concession for a confirmed evolutionist to make. His exhaustive search for a scientific explanation ended in failure, as it has for all other evolutionary scientists, and he had the courage to admit it. But he also had an incredible faith to believe in it even though it was a scientific impossibility. A Christian who confessed to such a faith would be labeled as naive and gullible. What a difference the cloak of higher education makes upon our easily impressed minds! How much simpler and sweeter the faith which accepts the inspired account: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Genesis 1:1.

Chance Life - A Ridiculous Improbability

What would be involved in the accidental development of a single living cell? The fact is that the most elementary form of life is more complicated than any manmade thing on earth. The entire complex of New York City is less complicated than the makeup of the simplest microscopic cell. It is more than ridiculous to talk about its chance production. Scientists themselves assure us that the structure of a single cell is unbelievably intricate. The chance for a proper combination of molecules into amino acids, and then into proteins with the properties of life is entirely unrealistic. American Scientist magazine made this admission in January of 1955:

"From the probability standpoint, the ordering of the present environment into a single amino acid molecule would be utterly improbable in all the time and space available for the origin of terrestrial life."

A Swiss mathematician, Charles Eugene Guye, actually computes the odds against such an occurrence at only one chance in  $10^{160}$ . That means 10 multiplied by itself 160 times, a number too large even to articulate. Another scientist expressed it this way:

"The amount of matter to be shaken together to produce a single molecule of protein would be millions of times greater than that in the whole universe. For it to occur on earth alone would require many, almost endless, billions of years." The Evidence of God in an Expanding Universe, p. 23.

How can we explain the naive insistence of evolutionists to believe something so extremely out of character for their scientific background? And how can we harmonize the normally broad-minded tolerance of the educated, with the narrow bigotry exhibited by many evolutionary scientists in trying to suppress opposing points of view? The obvious explanation would seem to be rooted in the desperation of such evolutionists to retain their reputation as the sole dispensers of dogmatic truth. To acknowledge a superior wisdom has been too long cultivated by the evolutionist community. They have repeated their assumptions for so long in support of their theories that they have started accepting them as facts. No one objects to their assuming whatever they want to assume, but to assume happenings that go contrary to all scientific evidence and still call it science is being dishonest.

Mutations - How Big the Changes?

Now let's look at a second basic evolutionary teaching which is contrary to scientific law. One of the most necessary parts of evolution, which is supposed to provide the power for changing the amoeba into a man, is mutation. This refers to abnormal changes in the organism which are assumed to be caused by chemical changes in the genes themselves. The genes are the hereditary factors within the chromosomes of each species. Every species has its own particular number of chromosomes which contain the genes. Within every human being are 46 chromosomes containing an estimated 100,000 genes, each one of which is able to affect in some way the size, color, texture, or quality of the individual. The assumption is that these genes, which provide the inherited characteristics we get from our ancestors, occasionally become affected by unusual pairing, chemical damage, or other influences, causing them to produce an unusual change in one of the offspring. This is referred to as a mutation. Through gradual changes wrought in the various species through mutation, it is assumed by the evolutionists that the amoeba turned into an invertebrate, which became an amphibian, then a reptile, a quadruped, an ape form, and finally a man. In other words, the species are not fixed in the eyes of the evolutionists. Families are forever drifting over into another higher form as time progresses. This means that all the fossil records of animal history should reveal an utter absence of precise family boundaries. Everything should be in the process of changing into something else - with literally hundreds of millions of half-developed fish trying to become amphibious, and reptiles halfway transformed into birds, and mammals looking like half-apes or half-men.

Now everybody knows that instead of finding those billions of confused family fossils, the scientists have found exactly the opposite. Not one single drifting, changing life form has been studied. Everything stays within the well-defined limits of its own basic kind and absolutely refuses to cooperate with the demands of modern evolutionists. Most people would give up and change their theory when faced with such a crushing, deflating blow, but not the evolutionist! He still searches for that illusive missing link which could at least prove that he hasn't been 100 percent wrong.

But let's look at the vehicle which the evolutionists have depended upon to provide the possibility of the drastic changes required by their theory. Sir Julian Huxley, a principal spokesman for evolution, said this:

"Mutation provides the raw material of evolution." Again he said, "Mutation is the ultimate sources of all...heritable variation." Evolution in Action, p. 38.

Professor Ernst Mayr, another leader of the evolutionists, made this statement:

"Yet it must not be forgotten that mutation is the ultimate source of all genetic variation found in natural populations and the only raw material available for natural selection to work on." Animal Species and Evolution, p. 170.

Please keep this clearly in mind: Evolutionists say that mutation is absolutely essential to provide the inexorable upgrading of species which changed the simpler forms into more complex forms. BUT - the scientific fact is that mutation could NEVER accomplish what evolution demands of it, for several reasons. As all scientists agree, mutations are very rare. Huxley guesses that only about one in a hundred thousand, is a mutant. Secondly, when they do occur, they are almost certain to be harmful or deadly to the organism. In other words, the vast majority of such mutations lead toward extinction instead of evolution; they make the organism worse instead of better. Huxley admits: "The great majority of mutant genes are harmful in their effect on the organism." Ibid. p. 39.

Other scientists, including Darwin himself, conceded that most mutants are recessive and degenerative; therefore, they would actually be eliminated by natural selection rather than effect any significant improvement in the organism. Professor G. G. Simpson, one of the elite spokesmen for evolution, writes about multiple, simultaneous mutations and reports that the mathematical likelihood of getting good evolutionary results would occur only once in 274 billion years! And that would be assuming 100 million individuals reproducing a new generation every day! He concludes by saying:

"Obviously...such a process has played no part whatever in evolution." The Major Features of Evolution, p. 96.

Does this sound sort of confusing to you! They say mutation is necessary to make the changes required by their theory, yet they have to confess that it is scientifically impossible for multiple mutations to make the changes. This is too typical of the puzzling twists and turns made by our evolutionist friends in their efforts to uphold an exploded theory. So the second point of contradiction with true science has been established.

Mutations, of course, do effect minor changes within the basic kinds, but those changes are limited, never producing a new family. They can explain many of the varieties of both plant and animals but can never explain the creation of basic kinds as required by evolution.

Fossils Support Creationism

Since we have discovered that the fossil record gives no support to the idea of species gradually changing into other species, let us see if fossil evidence is in harmony with the Bible. Ten times in the book of Genesis we read God's decree concerning the reproduction of His creatures - "after its kind." The word "kind" refers to species, or families. Each created family was to produce only its own kind. This forever precludes the drifting, changing process required by organic evolution where one species turns into another.

Take note that God did not say there could be no changes within the family. He did not create all the varieties of dogs, cats, horses, etc. in the very beginning. There was only a male and female of each species, and many changes have since occurred to produce a wide assortment of varieties within the family. But please keep it straight in your mind that cats have always remained cats, dogs are still dogs, and men are still men. Mutation has only been responsible for producing a new variety of the same species, but never originating another new kind. Selective breeding has also brought tremendous improvements such as hornless cattle, white turkeys, and seedless oranges, but all the organisms continue to reproduce exactly as God decreed at Creation - after its kind.

The "common ancestor" that evolution demands has never existed. There is not a "missing link." Man and monkeys are supposed to stem from the same animal ancestry! Even chimpanzees and many monkey groups vary tremendously. Some are smart, others dumb. Some have short tails and some long. Some have no tails at all. Their teeth vary in number. A few have thumbs and others do not. Their genes are different. Their blood is different. Their chromosomes don't jibe. Interestingly enough, apes only breed with apes, chimpanzees with chimpanzees, and monkeys with monkeys.

But when we start comparing humans with monkeys, we get even more impossible differences than those among the simian types. In fact, these differences constitute another unanswerable support for the Bible rule of "after its kind." The fact that some monkeys can be trained to smoke a pipe, ride a scooter, or even hoist a test tube in a laboratory does not prove that scientists are evolved animals, or that monkeys are retarded, developing humans.

It has already been stated that evolutionists expected the fossil record to support their theory of species changes. Their doctrine demanded vast numbers of scaly reptiles transforming their scales into feathers and their front feet into wings. Other reptiles supposedly should be changing into fur-bearing quadrupeds. Did they find those thousands of multi-changing creatures? Not one! No matter what particular strata they sifted through, all the fossils were easily recognized and classified within their own families, just as God decreed. If the evolutionary doctrine were true, the strata would be teeming with hundreds of millions of transition forms with combination features of two or more species. Not only so, but there would have to be millions upon millions of observable living links right now in the process of turning into a higher form. Darwin confessed:

"There are two or three million species on earth. A sufficient field one might think for observation; but it must be said today that in spite of all the evidence of trained observers, not one change of the species to another is on record." Life and Letters, Vol. 3, p. 25.

How interesting! Then why insist that it had to be that way? This is one of the marvels of those who cling to a traditional theory.

Even the most ancient fossil forms in the lowest fossil beds have stubbornly retained the same features of their modern counterparts, and it is amusing to listen to the exclamations of surprise by the evolutionists. The creationist is not surprised at all. His Bible told him it would be that way, and he hasn't been forced to puzzle over contradictory evidence.

The Mystery of the Empty Strata

Another frustration for the poor evolutionist is the strange case of the empty strata. As one digs deep into the earth, one layer or stratum after another is revealed. Often we can see these layers clearly exposed in the side of a mountain or roadbed cut. Geologists have given names to the succession of strata which pile one on top of another. Descending into Grand Canyon for example, one moves downward past the Mississippi, Devonian, Cambrian, etc., as they have been tagged by the scientists.

Now here is the perplexity for the evolutionists: The Cambrian is the last stratum of the descending levels that has any fossils in it. All the lower strata below the Cambrian have absolutely no fossil record of life other than some single-celled types such as bacteria and algae. Why not? The Cambrian layer is full of all the major kinds of animals found today except the vertebrates. In other words, there is nothing primitive about the structure of these most ancient fossils known to man. Essentially, they compare with the complexity of current living creatures. But the big question is: Where are their ancestors? Where are all the evolving creatures that should have led up to these highly developed fossils? According to the theory of evolution, the Precambrian strata should be filled with more primitive forms of these Cambrian fossils in the process of evolving upward.

Darwin confessed in his book, Origin of the Species:

"To the question why we do not find rich fossiliferous deposits belonging to these assumed earliest periods prior to the Cambrian system I can give no satisfactory answer...the case at present must remain inexplicable; and may be truly urged as a valid argument against the views here entertained." p. 309.

How amazing! Darwin admitted having no way to defend his theory, but he still would not adjust his theory to meet the unanswerable arguments against it.

Many other evolutionary scientists have expressed similar disappointment and frustration. Dr. Daniel Axelrod of the University of California calls it:

"One of the major unsolved problems of geology and evolution." Science, July 4, 1958.

Dr. Austin Clark of the U.S. National Museum wrote concerning the Cambrian fossils:

"Strange as it may seem ... mollusks were mollusks just as unmistakably as they are now." The New Evolution: Zoogenesis, p. 101.

Drs. Marshall Kay and Edwin Colbert of Columbia University marveled over the problem in these words:

"Why should such complex organic forms be in rocks about 600 million years old and be absent or unrecognized in the records of the preceding two billion years?...If there has been evolution of life, the absence of the requisite fossils in the rocks older than Cambrian is puzzling." Stratigraphy and Life History, p. 102.

George Gaylord Simpson, the "Crown Prince of Evolution", summarized it:

"The sudden appearance of life is not only the most puzzling feature of the whole fossil record but also its greatest apparent inadequacy." The Evolution of Life, p. 144.

In the face of these forced admissions of failure to find supporting scientific evidence, how can these men of science continue to press so dogmatically for their shaky views? No wonder they fight to keep students from hearing the opposing arguments. Their positions would crumble under the impartial investigation of honest research.

The absence of Precambrian fossils points to one great fact, unacceptable to the evolutionists - a sudden creative act of God which brought all the major creatures into existence at the same time. Their claims that creationism is unscientific are made only to camouflage their own lack of true evidence. The preponderance of physical scientific data is on the side of creation, not evolution.

Uniformity or the Flood?

The subject of strata beds leads into the interesting question of how these layers were formed, and why the evolutionists have guesstimated their age in the billions of years. The dating of those layers has been done on the basis of the theory of uniformity. This theory assumes that all the natural processes at work in the past have operated exactly as they do today. In other words, the creation of those strata can only be explained on the basis of what we see happening in the world now. Scientists must calculate how long it takes for sedimentation to build a foot-deep stratum. Then that age is assigned to any 12-inch layer, no matter how deeply located within the earth.

Is that a valid assumption to make? Have all the natural forces of the past been just what we can demonstrate and understand today? How naive and conceited to compel ages past to conform to our limited observation and experience! We can assume what we please, but it proves absolutely nothing except our own gullibility. The Bible explains very graphically about a Flood which ravaged the face of this earth, covering the highest mountains and completely destroying all plant and animal life outside the ark. The destructive action of the Deluge is expressed by these words in the Bible:

"The same day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened. And the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights." Genesis 7:11, 12.

The existence of those strata can be scientifically accounted for in perfect harmony with the Bible record. The universal Flood of Genesis provides a much more reasonable explanation of the strata than evolution's speculations. As the waters receded from the earth, powerful tides and currents carved out the great canyons in a short time. Layers of debris, according to the specific weight, were laid down, compressing plant and animal life into a compact seam or stratum. Only thus can we explain the vast oil reserves and coal beds around the world. These are the result of vegetation and animal bodies being buried under extreme heat and pressure. No such process of fossilization is taking place today. No oil or coal is forming by present natural forces at work. Uniformity fails here.

The fact is, there had to be a gigantic cataclysmic overturn of nature, killing and burying millions of tons of plant and animal life. The position of some fossils standing upright through one or more strata indicates that the process was not slow or age long. The material had to be deposited quickly around the body of the animal, or it could not have remained in its erect position. Millions of fish were buried by the flood, many of them contorted as though suddenly overtaken by a phenomenal force. Marine fossils have been recovered from the highest mountain ranges, and a check list on other scientific evidences points to a universal deluge over the entire planet.

Survival of the Fittest

"Natural selection" is a coined phrase of the evolutionist to describe the survival of the fittest. Simply stated, it is the natural process which enables the strongest of each generation to survive and the weaker, more poorly adjusted ones, to die out. The assumption of evolution is that since only the strongest survive to father the next generation, the species will gradually improve, even advancing into other more highly developed states on the evolutionary scale.

Darwin believed that natural selection was the most important factor in the development of his theory. Many of the top teachers of evolution today are hopelessly at odds on the question of how vital it is. Sir Julian Huxley believes in it, as this statement indicates: "So far as we know...natural selection...is the only effective agency of evolution." Evolution in Action, p. 36.

He is disputed on this by another one of the heavyweights in the field, Dr. Ernst Mayr: "Natural selection is no longer regarded as an all-or-none process but rather as a purely statistical concept." Animal Species, p. 7.

These opposite views are rejected by G. G. Simpson, who is regarded as the leading interpreter of the theory today. He said, "Search for the cause of evolution has been abandoned. It is now clear that evolution has no single cause." The Geography of Evolution, p. 17.

By the way, when you read about the great unity and agreement which exists among the scientists regarding evolution, don't believe a word of it. Each one is busily experimenting with new speculative possibilities as to how the changes took place and then abandoning them as they appear more and more ridiculous. The one basic tenet they do agree on is that there was no divine fiat creation as described in the Bible.

But come back a moment to the matter of natural selection. What is the evidence that it can actually reproduce all the changes involved in the transition from amoeba to man? Is there scientific proof that it can even make one small change? When it comes right down to answering those questions, the spokesmen for evolution do some of the fanciest footwork in semantics you ever saw and make some of the most amazing admissions. Even though Simpson supports natural selection as a factor, he recognizes the scarcity of evidence in these words:

"It might be argued that the theory is quite unsubstantiated and has status only as a speculation." Major Features, pp. 118, 119.

But listen to Huxley's circular reasoning on it. He says:

"On the basis of our present knowledge natural selection is bound to produce genetic adaptations: and genetic adaptations are thus presumptive evidence for the efficiency of natural selection." Evolution in Action, p. 48.

Did you follow that gem of logic? His proof for natural selection is adaptation or change in the organism, but the change is produced by natural selection! In other words: A=B; therefore B=A. His "proof" proves nothing. Were the changes produced by natural selection, or did he invent natural selection to explain the changes? It is just as likely that the changes produced the natural selection theory. The ludicrous thing is that even the changes from species to species have never been verified. As we have shown already, there is not one shred of fossil evidence or living evidence that any species has changed into another. So Huxley's proof for natural selection are changes which never happened, and the changes which never happened are offered as proof for natural selection. Surely this is the most vacuous logic to be found in a science textbook.

But let us continue with Sir Julian's explanation about the reliability of this natural selection process:

"To sum up, natural selection converts randomness into direction and blind chance into apparent purpose. It operates with the aid of time to produce improvements in the machinery of living, and in the process generates results of a more than astronomical improbability which could have been achieved in no other way." Evolution in Action, pp. 54, 55.

Don't miss the force of that last sentence. The evolutionary changes wrought by natural selection are "astronomically improbable," but because our friend Huxley sees no other way for it to be done, he believes in the astronomically improbable. Poor man! He is wrong when he said the complex order of life today could have been achieved in no other way. God created the wonders of cell and gene and all the millions of processes which leave the Nobel Prize winners baffled.

But since Sir Julian doesn't believe in a divine creation, he has to invent a miracle-working process to explain the existence of these complex creatures - who obviously got here somehow. To illustrate the omnipotence of his "natural selection" god, Huxley computed the odds against such a process. The computations were done on the likelihood of every favorable evolutionary factor being able to produce a horse. Now keep in mind that this is all a chance development through the operation of nature, time, mutation, and natural selection. In his book Evolution in Action, Huxley gave the odds this way:

"The figure 1 with three million naughts after it: and that would take three large volumes of about 500 pages each, just to print!...No one would bet on anything so improbable happening: and yet it has happened." p. 46.

We commented before about the faith of evolutionists to believe in the impossible. Since this figure of compound probability is effectively zero, how can a scientific mind, in the absence of any demonstrable evidence, be so dogmatic in defending his theory? Why did Huxley employ a mathematical formula to illustrate the impossibility of his theory working? Perhaps he used the figures to accent his personal testimony. Just as born-again Christians seek occasions to bear their personal testimony of faith in Christ, Huxley demolishes the scientific possibilities of his theory in order to magnify the personal faith aspect of his personal testimony for the god evolution.

Marshall and Sandra Hall in their book The Truth - God or Evolution? share their reaction to Huxley's absurd faith in the chance production of a horse. It will provide a fitting climax of proof that evolution indeed flunked the science test.

"And, let us remind you who find such odds ridiculous (even if you are reassured by Mr. Huxley), that this figure was calculated for the evolution of a horse! How many more volumes of zeros would be required by Mr. Huxley to produce a human being? And then you would have just one horse and one human being and, unless the mathematician wishes to add in the probability for the evolution of all the plants and animals that are necessary to support a horse and a man, you would have a sterile world where neither could have survived any stage of its supposed evolution! What have we now - the figure 1 followed by a thousand volumes of zeros? Then add another thousand and volumes for the improbability of the earth having all the necessary properties for life built into it. And add another thousand volumes for the improbability of the sun, and the moon, and the stars. Add other thousands for the evolution of all the thoughts that man can have, all the objective and subjective reality that ebbs and flows in us like part of the pulsebeat of an inscrutable cosmos!

"Add them all in and you long ago stopped talking about rational thought, much less scientific evidence. Yet, Simpson, Huxley, Dobzhansky, Mayr, and dozens of others continue to tell us that is the way it had to be! They have retreated from all the points which ever lent any semblance of credibility to the evolutionary theory. Now they busy themselves with esoteric mathematical formulations based on population genetics, random drift, isolation, and other ploys which have a probability of accounting for life on earth of minus zero! They clutter our libraries, and press on the minds of people everywhere an animated waxen image of a theory that has been dead for over a decade.

"Evolution has no claim whatsoever to being a science.

"It is time all this nonsense ceased. It is time to bury the corpse. It is time to shift the books to the humor-ous fiction section of the libraries." pp. 39, 40.

These examples of evolutionary folly are only the tip of an iceberg, but they reassure us that we have no cause to be embarrassed for our creationist faith. Millions of Christians have been intimidated by the high-sounding technical language of educated evolutionists, many of whom are vitriolic in their attacks on special creation. What we do need is more information on exposing the loopholes in the evolutionary theory; its base is so riddled with unscientific inconsistencies, often concealed under the gobbledygook of scientific jargon.

To follow our ancestry back through the sons of Adam, "who was the son of God," is so much more satisfying than to search through dismal swamps for bleeping monad forebears. The human race has dropped, even in our lifetime, several degrees deeper into moral perversion and violent disorder. Humanists cite our animal ancestry as an excuse for much of this bizarre behavior. Why blame people for action dictated by their bestial genes and chromosomes? This rationalization, like a temporary insanity plea, provides license for further irresponsible conduct. The true cause for evil and the true remedy for it is found only in the Word of God. Sin has defaced the image of God in man, and only a personal encounter with the perfect Saviour will bring a reversal of the problem of evil.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

Creation Scientists and their Scientific Disciplines

Here is a partial list of well known scientists who believed in the biblical creation account.

Scientist	Discovery/Contribution
Lord William Kelvin	Absolute Temperature Scale, Thermodynamics, Transatlantic Cable
Joseph Lister	Antiseptic Surgery
Louis Pasteur	Bacteriology, Biogenesis Law, Pasteurization, Vaccination & Immunization
Blaise Pascal	Barometer
Charles Babbage	Calculating Machine, Computer Science
Sir Issac Newton	Calculus, Dynamics, Law of Gravity, Reflecting Telescope
Johannes Kepler	Celestial Mechanics, Physical Astronomy
Robert Boyle	Chemistry, Gas Dynamics
Sir James Simpson	Chloroform, Gynecology
Carolus Linnaeus	Classification System, Systematic Biology
Lord John Rayleigh	Dimensional Analysis
Sir William Herschel	Double Stars, Galactic Astronomy
Michael Faraday	Electric Generator, Electro-Magnetics
Joseph Henry	Electric Motor, Galvanometer
Sir John A. Fleming	Electronics
Jean Henri Fabre	Entomology of Living Insects
Sir George Stokes	Fluid Mechanics
Gregor Mendel	Genetics
Louis Agassiz	Glacial Geology
Leonardo da Vinci	Hydraulics
Sir William Ramsay	Inert Gases
Bernhard Riemann	Non-Euclidean Geometry
Matthew Maury	Oceanography
Sir David Brewster	Optical Mineralogy
John Woodward	Paleontology
Rudolf Virchow	Pathology
James Joule	Reversible Thermodynamics
Lord Francis Bacon	Scientific Method
James C. Maxwell	Statistical Thermodynamics

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> Significant statements by some of the 20th Century's most famous non Christian scientists.

"The Young Age of the Earth," the best video on this subject, contains the latest undisputed evidence that the earth is actually quite young. This presentation includes a thorough investigation into recent scientific findings as well as numerous quotations from the worlds leading scientific journals.

More Information

Nicolaus Steno	Stratigraphy
Samuel F. B. Morse	Telegraph
Sir Humphry Davy	Thermokinetics
Georges Cuvier	Vertebrate Paleontology

*Source "The Collapse of Evolution", by Scott M. Huse.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Significant statements by some of the 20th Century's most famous non Christian scientists

Regarding the complex and seemingly impossible equilibrium of nuclear reactions taking place in red giants, one of the 20th Centuries most recognized astrophysicists, Fred Hoyle, stated:

"A commonsense interpretation of the facts suggests that a super intellect has monkeyed with physics, as well as chemistry and biology, and that there are no blind forces worth speaking about in nature. The numbers one calculates from the facts seem to me so overwhelming as to put this conclusion almost beyond question."

Although Fred Hoyle was an atheist, he said that some things he had studied could not have possibly happened by chance.

On this same topic astrophysicist George Greenstein wrote:

"There are three quite separate structures in this story-helium, beryllium, and carbon-and two quite separate resonances. It is hard to see why these nuclei should work together so smoothly...Other nuclear reactions do not proceed by such a remarkable chain of lucky breaks...It is like discovering deep and complex resonances between a car, a bicycle, and a truck. Why should such disparate structures mesh together so perfectly? Upon this our existence, and that of every life form in the universe, depends." The Symbiotic Universe, p. 43-44

"By the word of the LORD were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth." "Thou openest thine hand, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing." Psalm 33:6, 145:16

"As we survey all the evidence, the thought insistently arises that some supernatural agency - or, rather, Agency - must be involved. Is it possible that suddenly, without intending to, we have stumbled upon scientific proof of the existence of a Supreme Being? Was it God who stepped in and so providentially crafted the cosmos for our benefit?" -George Greenstein

"The scientist is possessed by the sense of universal causation...His religious feeling takes the form of rapturous amazement at the harmony of natural law, which reveals the intelligence of such superiority that, compared with it, systematic thinking and acting of human beings is an utterly insignificant reflection. - Albert Einstein (theoretical physicist)

"The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handywork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard." Psalm 19:1-3

"The laws of science, as we know them at the present, contain many fundamental numbers, like the size of the electron charge of the electron and the ratio of the masses of the proton to the electron... The remarkable fact is that the values of these numbers seem to have been very finely adjusted to make possible the development for life." - Stephen Hawking

"He telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by their names." Psalm 147:4

"The more I examine the universe and the details of its architecture, the more evidence I find that the universe in some sense must have known we were coming." - Freeman Dyson (physicist)

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

"For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse:"

Romans 1:20

"The Seventh Day" Revelations from the Lost Pages of History

Preview Part #1 (Our origin and more.)

*Free Real Audio Required

"The Milky Way & Beyond" This Video, by the Moody Bible Institute, presents the stunning artistry and precision of the Master Creator.

More Information

"The exquisite order displayed by our scientific understanding of the physical world calls for the divine." - Vera Kistiakowsky (physicist)

"For the scientist who has lived his dream by faith in the power of reason, the story ends like a bad dream. He has scaled the mountains of ignorance; he is about to conquer the highest peak; as he pulls himself over the final rock, he is greeted by a band of theologians who have been sitting there for centuries." - Robert Jastrow (astronomer and physicist)

"I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts." - Psalm 119:100

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

15 Minute Radio Messages

Classic Accident or Dilemma?

Sermons

Do you know how this world, the sun, moon and stars, and the entire universe came into existence? Astronomers tell us that there are 200 billion stars or suns in the galaxy, the Milky Way, and that t...

Classic Astronomy & The Bible

Sermons

Today I would like for us to turn our attention to the mighty miracle of the universe as revealed in the heavens above us. So often we plod our way over the earth, hardly lifting our...

Classic Beyond the Light Years

Sermons

At present the farthest man has been able to vault himself into space is the moon, a very short distance indeed compared to the vast expanse of the cosmos. Sensitive instruments that have been convey...

Classic Confessions of Evolution

Sermons

Every thinking person today must confess that there are tremendous mysteries about man and nature which baffle the keenest intellects. After all, who can answer these profound questions from the stan...

Classic Design in Nature

Sermons

As skepticism increases in the religious world, more and more demand is being made for proof concerning the existence of God. Once upon a time that question was never raised, but even theologians are...

Classic Evolution - Part 1

Sermons

I believe most of us know that Protestantism is not making the progress it did in earlier days. There has been a strange lessening of enthusiasm for Reformation principles. Issues which were once so...

Classic Evolution - Part 2

Sermons

In our last broadcast we introduced the subject of evolution. We are going to continue that strange subject, I say "strange" because it has been accorded a status of scientific fact when actually...

Classic Evolution - Part 3

Sermons

We have been talking for the last two days about evolution. And friends, how strange it is that the creationist and evolutionist, looking at the same facts, come up with such violently contrary concl...

Classic Evolution - Part 4

Sermons

One of the greatest forces working against true religion today, is the growing strength of humanism. In simple language, this is the doctrine which seeks to explain everything on the basis of natural...

Classic Evolution & Nature - Part 1

Sermons

Today I'd like to deal with the theme of evolution and the Bible. You know, friends, tremendous issues revolve around this matter of creation versus evolution. In fact, not only our faith in God...

Classic Evolution & Nature - Part 2

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ Creation / Evolution

➤ Grace

➤ Law Of God

➤ Salvation

➤ Sabbath

➤ Joe Crews, founder of Amazing Facts, was a humble servant of Jesus Christ, who was often called "the Paul Harvey of Christian broadcasting". For nearly 30 years Joe's voice was heard over the airwaves and now you can hear some of these powerful messages again here.

Sermons

One of the ridiculous claims of evolutionistic scientists revolves around the operation of blind chance. According to their claims, all plant and animal life in this world developed entirely apart fr...

Classic Evolution & Nature - Part 3

Sermons

We continue today our fascinating study about the intelligent design of created things which proves the existence of a divine Creator. One of the mysteries of nature was described in the Bible long b...

Classic Evolution & the Body - Part 1

Sermons

Today we want to look at one of the most fascinating evidences of creation as opposed to evolution. In no other area is so much heated conviction and dogmatism revealed. Now the reason for this is b...

Classic God of Creation

Sermons

The science of astronomy has produced some of the most incredible information about the heavenly bodies in space. By means of powerful new telescopes the edge of infinity is being pushed farther and ...

Classic God's Answer - Part 1

Sermons

Several years ago the dreadful crime of Charles Witman shook the world. His brutal murder of 16 people shocked the sensibilities of upright citizens. Perhaps one of the most amazing things about the...

Classic God's Answer - Part 2

Sermons

In our last broadcast, we introduced the subject of evolution, and we promised to tell you today God's answer to evolution, to give the most authoritative explanation yet of evolution. We found yes...

Classic God's Two Books

Sermons

It has been stated that "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing." This is particularly true in the field of science, as Sir Francis Bacon, one of the founders of natural science, expressed it: •.

Classic How Evolution Flunked Science - Part 1

Sermons

Recently I talked to a man with a fantastic amount of faith. Not one shade of doubt crept into his animated description of man's origin and destiny. He was an evolutionist I met on an airplane. W...

Classic How Evolution Flunked Science - Part 2

Sermons

Professor G. G. Simpson, one of the elite spokesmen for evolution, writes about multiple, simultaneous mutations and reports that the mathematical likelihood of getting good evolutionary results would...

Classic Living Fossils

Sermons

We are astounded today by the tremendous state of ferment and change in which our world is now involved. Even religious faith has been shaken about and altered by the upheaval in current ideas. What...

Classic Missing Links

Sermons

One of the greatest tragedies of modern civilization is that man has turned his back on the only Book in the world that tells us where we came from, why we are here and where we are going. In its pla...

Classic Proof of God

Sermons

In several recent talks on modern skepticism, we have been trying to show evidence from many angles that God is just exactly what the Bible claims Him to be. Not one word of Scripture has ever been b...

Classic Questions and Answers - Part 4

Sermons

For several days now we have been answering the Bible questions which our listeners have been sending in, and even though we deal with a variety of subjects, these broadcasts are proving to be very in...

Classic Questions and Answers - Part 7

Sermons

Sermons

We continue our series on questions and answers today on the Amazing Facts' broadcast. Our listeners have been writing in a great deal during this past month and asking some very interesting questi...

Classic Race to the Stars

Sermons

Astronomy has actually demonstrated that there are millions of other worlds. There is no guesswork about it. On Mount Wilson there is a hundred-inch telescope. With this hundred-inch telescope, ast...

Classic Seduction of the Innocent

Sermons

Some of the startling announcements of the great achievements of man in our twentieth century have conditioned the American public to believe almost anything it sees in print. Wild theories and spec...

Classic Star Fields and Space

Sermons

Talk about atomic power and fantastic force, friends, nothing equals the blazing furnace of the sun which soars above us every day. It is impossible to comprehend the vastness of this power plant whi...

Classic Temple of God

Sermons

Dr. David Grant, the noted anatomist, was dissecting the human body as he lectured his class of embryo doctors. Pausing in the midst of his dissertation, he said, "Gentlemen, here in this human ...

Classic The Challenge of Evolution

Sermons

Back on November 24, 1859, 1,250 copies of Charles Darwin's book THE ORIGIN OF SPECIES were released to the public. They were all sold on the day of issue! Gradually, the influence of this work gr...

Classic Three Worlds

Sermons

You know, friends, it is not too hard to become a little callous these days as you keep abreast of world news through Press, Radio and TV. We constantly hear of brutal, barbarous crime, both at home ...

Classic Wonders of the Sky

Sermons

Our subject for today is the study of the wonders of God's created universe. We think of the words of the psalmist: "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, whi...

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

William M. Jones, D.D.

Jones, William M. On the death of Rev. William H. Black in 1872, Elder Jones, his son-in-law, became pastor of Mill Yard Church, and ably served the church in this capacity until his death in 1895, February 22nd. He was born at Fort Ann, Washington Co., N. Y., May 2, 1818. His father, Nathan Jones, was a member of the Baptist Church, and on the last Sunday of January, 1836, William was baptized in the Chenango River. In March, 1838, he preached his first sermon from Matt. 25: 31, 32. In October, 1838, he entered Madison University, Hamilton, N. Y., and on January 12, 184, he was licensed to preach.

He began ministerial work at Mill Creek, Huntington Co., Penn., in June. January 5, 1841, he was ordained at the Mill Creek Baptist Church. In May, 1844, he was appointed, with Elder Bingham, as a missionary to Burmah, but was sent to the island of Hayti in the West Indies, for which he embarked at Boston, January 10, 1845. December 2, 1845, he preached his first sermon in French, from the text, 1 John 1:7.

Dr. William Meade Jones

His first knowledge of the Sabbath came from the fact that an uncle, Joel Jones, then living in Canada, was keeping "Saturday for Sunday." After this the Sabbath was several times brought to his attention, but his doubts were allayed by a Baptist brother who said that "Saturday was the Jewish Sabbath, but Sunday is the Christian Sabbath," and several others of the most plausible statements on the wrong side of the Sabbath question. While attending a missionary meeting in Sansom Street Baptist Church, Philadelphia, in November, 1843, he found some tracts lying on the seats, three of which he picked up and found to be, "The Sabbath Vindicator," "An address to the Baptists by the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference," and "The True Sabbath Embraced and Observed." He was dismayed as he read these, and said to himself: - "Are these things so? If so, then I am involved in the transgression of God's law, and am a Sabbath-breaker." His wife said: - "I think we have no more Scripture for Sunday-keeping than my father has for infant sprinkling." Thus the subject was dropped for awhile.

In 1847 he visited his uncle, Joel Jones, at Clarence, N. Y., and wrote in his diary :-
"Saturday, August 21st. This day is kept by my uncle as the Sabbath of the Lord God. Am I wrong in keeping the first day, or not? Is it not a serious question? . . . I preached for the Seventh-day Baptist Church, and was particularly impressed when the whole congregation sang with much fervor Stennett's hymn :-

"Another six days' work is done, Another Sabbath is begun," etc., etc. Two months after this he called on Rev. Eli S. Bailey in Brookfield, N.Y., on a Sabbath evening; and of this visit he writes :- "I inquired for a book on Seventh-day Baptist doctrine and history - one containing a summary of arguments. The Doctor replied, 'Yes, sir, we have a book on these subjects - a very good book we think it is; indeed we know of no better one, and if you haven't one, I shall take great pleasure in presenting you with a copy. It is the Bible, sir.' " This recalled to Mr. Jones the oft repeated Baptist aphorism: - "The Bible is the only rule of faith and practice."

Finally he settled the question, and began keeping the Bible Sabbath on the first Sabbath in

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> The Truth about the Sabbath

The History of the origin of Sunday Worship. View it.

July, 1848. This resulted in his recall as a Baptist missionary to the Island of Hayti, from which he sailed August 17, 1850. He was welcomed in New York by Seventh-day Baptist friends, and in the following November he became pastor of the Church at Shiloh, N.J.

March 11, 1854, in company with Mr. and Mrs. Charles Saunders, he and his wife sailed for the Holy Land, whither the Church had sent them to found a mission at the ancient Joppa. Here he studied Arabic, Hebrew, Latin, Greek, German and Italian; and was able in March, 1855, to use Arabic in public worship to some extent. His first public service conducted wholly in Arabic was on March, 13, 1858. In January, 1859, he conducted part of a service in German.

Being recalled from this mission, he left Jerusalem December 23, 1860, passed through Paris and arrived in London February 22, 1861, where he first met the Rev. William Henry Black, F. S. A., pastor of the Mill Yard Seventh-day Baptist Church. May 6th he arrived in New York, and in October became pastor of the Walworth (Wis.) Seventh-day Baptist Church. In 1863 he became pastor of the Church at Scott, N.Y., and in August, 1868, he removed to Rosenhayn, near Vineland, N. J. He and his family were the first settlers here, built the first house, and cleared a small plot of ground.

On the death of Rev. W.H. Black, April 12, 1872, he was called as pastor of the Mill Yard Church. Reaching London, September 14, 1872, he found only three members belonging to the Church; but during his pastorate twenty-six others were added to the number. He at once began to print and distribute tracts; and issued the first number of the "Sabbath Memorial" in January, 1875. This quarterly he published for fourteen years, and made it a faithful and strong advocate of Sabbath observance.

One of the most unique and important of his many Sabbath publications is his "Chart of the Week" in 160 languages; this he issued in 1887. By this he showed that in over one hundred languages the seventh-day or Saturday was referred to as the Sabbath. Of this Chart, the Christian Leader said, "It is a marvelous production of patient as well as erudite toil, giving a bird's eye view of the language history of the seven days' week from the remotest antiquity to the present time.

In 1882, Sir Walter Besant, in his famous novel, "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," describes Mill Yard Chapel, and refers to Mr. Jones under the title of the Rev. Percival Hermitage. Mr. Besant says :- "As for the position taken by these people, it is perfectly logical, and in fact, impregnable. There is no answer to it."

In June, 1886, Alfred University conferred upon Mr. Jones the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. He was Professor of Arabic and Hebrew at the City of London College, Moorfields, for several years, and was a member of many societies - Seamen's Christian Friend Society, London Board of Baptist Ministers, Northwest London Fraternal, Board of the General Baptist Assembly, Society of Biblical Archeology, The Oriental Congress, The Southern Provincial Assembly of Free Churches, etc., etc.

He spent much time in studying the Scriptures in the original languages ; and his advice to students for the ministry was always to learn Hebrew first and then Greek, holding that the New Testament Scriptures should be studied through Hebrew spectacles.

His funeral services were conducted on February 26, by Rev. G. J. Hill of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, at Abney Park Cemetery. Mr. Hill said, among other things, "I never knew a more consistent follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. I never heard a single word fall from his lips which I might wish had not been uttered, never an uncharitable or unkind word in reference to any one absent, nor the manifestation of any but a Christlike spirit to those who were present."

Reprinted from "Seventh Day Baptists in Europe and America" Vol 1, pp 80-83, published by the American Sabbath Tract Society, 1910.

Back to the 19th Century of The Sabbath in History

^ Top

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

A Nation

"I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things." Daniel 7:8, 20

The Bible interprets its own symbols so that we need not speculate at all.

"And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings." Daniel 7:24

Kings and kingdoms are used synonymously in the Bible, where you have a kingdom you also have a king. The following two verses make this principle even more clear:

"These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth." Daniel 7:17

"Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth..." Daniel 7:23

Does the Vatican fit this point?

Yes, the Vatican has a full civil government with a flag, a police force, courts and postage stamps. It issues currency and passports, and has a large and active diplomatic corps with ambassadors called nuncios. See any Encyclopedia for more information.

Back to the other Bible Points

^ Top

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> The Reformers Reveal the Beast.

John Wyclif was one of many who knew that the Roman Catholic church is symbolized by the little horn.

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

A LITTLE NATION

"I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things." Daniel 7:8

Does the Vatican fit this point?

Yes, Vatican City - 0.2 square miles, is the world's smallest nation, the Vatican has a population of 770. The country which surrounds St. Peter's Basilica is the spiritual center for the world's Roman Catholics (over 1 billion strong). Also known as the Holy See, it is surrounded by Rome, Italy. See About.com for more information.

Back to the other Bible Points

^ Top

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

What is the Purpose of the Sabbath?

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

A LITTLE NATION IN WESTERN EUROPE

"I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things. Daniel 7:8

To understand that "among them", the other 10 horns, means among the former divisions of the Roman Empire we need to study Daniel chapter 7 in greater detail.

As the chapter begins, Daniel sees four beasts coming up out of the sea. In prophecy, what does a beast represent? What does the sea represent?

"The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon the earth." Daniel 7:23. "The waters ... are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." Revelation 17:15.

Answer: Beasts represent kingdoms or nations. Water represents multitudes of people or large populations.

The four beasts of Daniel 7 represent the four world kingdoms (verses 17, 18). Babylon, the first kingdom (Daniel 2:38, 39), is represented as a lion in Daniel 7:4. (See also Jeremiah 4:7; 50:17, 43, 44 for Babylon pictured as a lion elsewhere.) What do the "eagle's wings" mean? What do the "four winds" of verse 2 represent?

In Prophecy, God uses beasts to symbolize nations.

"The Lord shall bring a nation against thee ... as swift as the eagle flieth." Deuteronomy 28:49. "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, ... a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth. And the slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth." Jeremiah 25:32, 33.

Answer: The wings of eagles represent speed. (See also Jeremiah 4:13; Habakkuk 1:6-9.) Winds represent strife, commotion, and destruction. (See also Revelation 7:1-3.)

The lion beast of Daniel 7 represents the empire of Babylon.

What kingdom does the bear represent (Daniel 7:5)? What do the three ribs in its mouth symbolize?

The bear with three ribs in its mouth symbolizes Medo-Persia.

Read Daniel 8. Notice that the beasts in chapter 8 parallel those in chapter 7. Daniel 8:20 specifically names Medo-Persia as the kingdom that precedes the rough goat, or Greece, of verse 21. It is the second world kingdom--the same power as the bear of Daniel 7. The empire was made up of two groups of people. The Medes came up first (represented in Daniel 7:5 by the bear coming up on one side), but the Persians eventually became stronger (represented in Daniel 8:3 by the ram's second horn which grew "higher," or taller). The three ribs represent the three principal powers conquered by Medo-Persia: Lydia, Babylon, and Egypt.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> What is the Purpose of the Sabbath?

Greece, the third kingdom (Daniel 8:21), is represented by a leopard with four wings and four heads (Daniel 7:6). What do the heads represent? What do the four wings represent?

The four heads represent the four kingdoms into which the empire of Alexander the Great was divided when he died. The four generals who headed these areas were: Cassander, Lysimachus, Ptolemy, and Seleucus. The four wings (instead of two like the lion) represent super-speed, which was true of Alexander's conquests (Jeremiah 4:11-13).

The leopard beast of Daniel 7 represents the world kingdom of Greece.

The world empire of Rome is symbolized by the monster beast of Daniel chapter 7.

The Roman empire, the fourth world kingdom, is represented by a horrible monster with iron teeth and 10 horns (Daniel 7:7). What do the horns represent?

Answer: The 10 horns represent the 10 kings or kingdoms into which pagan Rome was eventually split (Daniel 7:24). (These 10 kingdoms are the same as the 10 toes of the image described in Daniel 2:41-44.) Roving barbarian tribes swept in upon the Roman empire and carved out land niches for their people. Seven of those 10 tribes developed into the countries of modern Western Europe, while three were uprooted and destroyed.

Visigoths--Spain
Anglo-Saxons--England
Franks--France
Alemani--Germany
Burgundians--Switzerland
Lombards--Italy
Suevi--Portugal
Heruli--Rooted up
Ostrogoths--Rooted up
Vandals--Rooted up

"I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things. Daniel 7:8

In conclusion, does the Vatican fit this point too?

Yes, Vatican City - the world's smallest nation, and spiritual center for the Roman Catholic church is surrounded by Rome, Italy which is among the 10 former divisions of the Roman Empire. See www.About.com for more information or to www.InfoPlease.com for a map.

Don't forget--all these identification points come directly from the Bible. They are not some human opinion or speculation. Historians could tell you quickly what power is being described. These points can fit only one power--the papacy. But in order to be certain, let us continue to carefully examine all the points, one by one. There must be no room left for doubt.

Back to the other Bible Points

^ Top

“Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath.”

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

A NATION THAT ARISES AFTER THE DIVISION OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE

"And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them ; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings." Daniel 7:24

Does the Papacy fit this point too?

Yes, according to historians, the Roman empire was divided up by barbarian tribes by the year 476 A.D.

"Though new states emerged to take the place of Rome in western Europe almost as soon as the West Roman Empire finally collapsed in 476... Europe remained politically fragile." John B. Teeple Timelines of World History, p. 111, Dorling Kindersley Publishing, New York, New York, 2002

The Papacy came into power in 538 A.D, a few years after an official decree by Emperor Justinian in 533 A.D., the delay was due to the resistance and occupation of Rome by the Ostrogoths.

For more information on this subject look up the Justinian Code and also the war against the Ostrogoths by Belisarius in older history books and encyclopedias.

"Vigilius... ascended the papal chair (538 AD) under the military protection of Belisarius." History of the Christian Church, vol. 3, p. 327

See also The Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire by Edward Gibbon or any older encyclopedia for more information.

Back to the other Bible Points

^ Top

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

What is the Purpose of the Sabbath?

IT DESTROYS THREE NATIONS AS IT COMES INTO POWER

"I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things. Daniel 7:8, 20, 24

Does the Papacy fit this point too?

Yes, The emperors of Western Europe were largely Catholic and supported the papacy in its growth and authority. Three Arian kingdoms, however, did not support the papacy--the Vandals, Heruli, and Ostrogoths. So the Catholic emperors decided they must be subdued or destroyed. Here is how Dr. Mervyn Maxwell, a theologian and historian, described the results in volume 1, page 129, of his book God Cares: "The Catholic emperor Zeno (474-491) arranged a treaty with the Ostrogoths in 487 which resulted in the eradication of the kingdom of the Arian Heruls in 493. And the Catholic emperor Justinian (527-565) exterminated the Arian Vandals in 534 and significantly broke the power of the Arian Ostrogoths in 538. Thus were Daniel's three horns' the Heruls, the Vandals, and the Ostrogoths--'plucked up by the roots.'

The divisions of the empire were as follows:

- Alamanni became the Germans
- Anglo Saxons became the English
- Bergundians became the Swiss
- Franks became the French
- Lombards became the Italians
- Suevi became the Portuguese
- Visigoths became the Spanish
- Heruli - Now Extinct
- Vandals - Now Extinct
- Ostrogoths - Now Extinct

See The Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire by James Cardinal Gibbons or any older encyclopedia for more information.

Back to the other Bible Points

^ Top

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> What is the Purpose of the Sabbath?

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

IT IS DIFFERENT FROM THE OTHER NATIONS

"And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them ; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings." Daniel 7:24,8

Does the Papacy fit this point too?

Yes, the papacy clearly fits this description also. It is both a religious power and a political power whereas the other 10 kingdoms were only secular in nature. Here is a link to the Vatican website: <http://www.vatican.va> Please note the ".va" in the URL, the ".va" is the country code.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

Back to the other Bible Points

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

HAS A MAN AT THE HEAD AND BLASPHEMES GOD

"I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things. Daniel 7:8, 20

The leader and spokesman for the Roman Catholic church is called the "Pope". The governing body of the church is called the "Holy See."

Blasphemy has two definitions in Scripture:

1. Claiming to forgive sins (Luke 5:21).
2. Claiming to be God (John 10:33).

Let's first look at the evidence for it claiming to forgive sins: "Does the Priest truly forgive the sins, or does he only declare that they are remitted? The Priest does really and truly forgive the sins in virtue of the power given to him by Christ." 1 The papacy further undermines Jesus by setting up a system of confession to an earthly priest, thus bypassing Jesus, our High Priest (Hebrews 3:1; 8:1, 2) and only Mediator (1 Timothy 2:5).

Next consider the evidence for it claiming to be God: "We [the popes] hold upon this earth the place of God Almighty." 2 Here is another: "The pope is not only the representative of Jesus Christ, but he is Jesus Christ, Himself, hidden under the veil of flesh." 3

It's obvious this point, likewise, fits the papacy.

- 1 Joseph Deharbe, S.J., A Complete Catechism of the Catholic Religion (New York: Schwartz, Kirwin & Fauss, 1924), p. 279.
- 2 Pope Leo XIII, Encyclical Letter "The Reunion of Christendom" (dated June 20, 1894) trans. in the Great Encyclical Letters of Pope Leo XIII (New York: Benziger, 1903), p. 304.
- 3 Catholic National, July 1895.

^ Top

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ Philipp Melanchthon
(1497-1560, Associate of Martin Luther)

"Since it is certain that the pontiffs and the monks have forbidden marriage, it is most manifest, and true without any doubt, that the Roman Pontiff, with his whole order and kingdom, is very Antichrist. Likewise in 2 Thess. II, Paul clearly says that the man of sin will rule in the church exalting himself above the worship of God, etc."

Translated from Melanchthon, Disputationes, No. 56, "De Matrimonio", in Opera (Corpus Reformatorum), vol. 12 col. 535

For more quotes see:
Reformers Reveal the Beast

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

PERSECUTES GOD'S FOLLOWERS

"I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them;" Daniel 7:21, 25

That the church did persecute is a well-known fact. The papacy clearly admits doing so. Upon searching the historical record you will find many references to "Judiazers." In most cases, these references were to Christians who kept the Seventh Day Sabbath of the Bible.

Much supportive evidence of the persecution exists. Even conservative historians claim that the Roman Catholic Church probably destroyed at least 50 million people over matters of religious conviction. We will quote here from several sources:

"That the Church of Rome has shed more innocent blood than any other institution that has ever existed among mankind, will be questioned by no Protestant who has a competent knowledge of history. W. E. H. Lecky, History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe, Volume 2, p. 40.

"From the birth of popery to the present time, it is estimated by careful and credible historians, that more than fifty millions of the human family, have been slaughtered for the crime of heresy by popish persecutors..." John Dowling, The History of Romanism, pp. 541-542

In The History of the Inquisition of Spain, D. Ivan Antonio Llorente provides these figures from the Spanish Inquisition alone:

31,912 persons were condemned and perished in the flames.
241,450 persons were condemned to severe penalties.

For information on the inquisition visit the Museo de Inquisicion in Lima Peru.

Back to the other Bible Points

^ Top

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> John Wesley (1703-1791 founder of the Methodist Church)

"He is in an emphatical sense, the Man of Sin, as he increases all manner of sin above measure. And he is, too, properly styled the Son of Perdition, as he has caused the death of numberless multitudes, both of his opposers and followers... He it is...that exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped... claiming the highest power, and highest honor... claiming the prerogatives which belong to God alone." Albert Close, Antichrist and His Ten Kingdoms, London: Thynne and Co., 1917, p. 110.

For more quotes see:
Reformers Reveal the Beast

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

POWER OVER THE SAINTS FOR 1260 YEARS

"And he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time." Daniel 7:25

Several things need clarification in connection with this point:

1. A time is a year, times is two years, and the dividing of time is a half-year. The Amplified Bible translates it: "Three and one-half years." <sup>1</sup>
2. This same time period is mentioned seven times (Daniel 7:25; 12:7; Revelation 11:2, 3; 12:6, 14; 13:5) in the books of Daniel and Revelation: three times as a time, times, and half a time; twice as 42 months; and twice as 1,260 days. Based on the 30-day calendar used by the Jews, these time periods are all the same amount of time: 3 1/2 years = 42 months = 1,260 days.
3. One prophetic day equals one literal year (See Ezekiel 4:6; Numbers 14:34).
4. Thus, the little horn was to have power over the saints for 1,260 prophetic days or 1,260 literal years.
5. The rule of the papacy began in A.D. 538, when the last of the three opposing Arian kingdoms was uprooted. Its rule continued until 1798 when Napoleon's general, Berthier, took the pope captive with hopes of destroying both Pope Pius VI and the political, secular power of the papacy. This period of time is an exact fulfillment of the 1,260-year prophecy. The blow was a deadly wound for the papacy, but that wound began to heal and continues healing today. It is plain to see that this point, likewise, fits the papacy.

Side Note: This period of time is referred to by historians as the "Dark Ages". It was a time when Christ's faithful followers were persecuted, the reading of the scriptures, "a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path. Psalm 119:105" was banned, and the beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church were forced upon the people by the strong arm of Civil Governments. The medieval game of chess was developed during this time period with the powerful bishop pieces located to the right and the left of the King and the Queen, subtly reminding us of the power the church wielded.

<sup>1</sup> The Amplified Bible, Zondervan Publishing House, Grand Rapids, Michigan 1962.

Back to the other Bible Points

^ Top

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> What is the Purpose of the Sabbath?

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

IT WOULD THINK TO CHANGE GOD'S LAW

"And he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times and the dividing of time. " Daniel 7:25

But what about changing the "laws"? The Amplified Bible translates "laws" as "the law." The reference is to changing God's law. Of course, no one can really change it, but has the papacy attempted to do so? The answer is "yes."

In its catechisms, the papacy has omitted the second commandment against veneration of images and has shortened the fourth commandment from 94 words to eight and divided the tenth commandment into two commandments. (Check this for yourself. Compare the Ten Commandments in any Catholic catechism with God's list of the commandments in Exodus 20:3-17.) There is no doubt that the little horn power of Daniel chapter 7 is the papacy. No other organization could possibly fit these points. Here are few statements from prominent Catholic leaders.

"The Pope is of so great authority and power that he can modify, explain, or interpret even divine law". The pope can modify divine law, since his power is not of man, but of God, and he acts a vicegerent of God upon earth" Lucius Ferraris, Prompta Bibliotheca, art. Papa, II, Vol. VI, p. 29.

"The Sabbath was Saturday, not Sunday. The Church altered the observance of the Sabbath to the observance of Sunday. Protestants must be rather puzzled by the keeping of Sunday when God distinctly said, 'Keep holy the Sabbath Day.' The word Sunday does not come anywhere in the Bible, so, without knowing it they are obeying the authority of the Catholic Church." Canon Cafferata, The Catechism Explained, p. 89.

The plan of the Roman Catholic Church is to get all the world to uphold and enforce its laws.

View more quotes on this subject.

Back to the other Bible Points

^ Top

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> The Roman Catholic Church says:

"...pastoral intuition suggested to the Church the christianization of the notion of Sunday as "the day of the sun" John Paul II, 1998

In other words, John Paul II is saying that the leaders of the church are responsible for the change to Sunday.

View a more comprehensive list of quotes.

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Controversial Catechism

"...nothing but Catholic Tradition for keeping the Sunday holy"

Q. Must not a sensible Protestant doubt seriously, when he finds that even the Bible is not followed as a rule by his co-religionists?

A. Surely, when he sees them baptize infants, abrogate the Jewish Sabbath, and observe Sunday for which [pg. 7] there is no Scriptural authority; when he finds them neglect to wash one another's feet, which is expressly commanded, and eat blood and things strangled, which are expressly prohibited in Scripture. He must doubt, if he think at all. ...

Q. Should not the Protestant doubt when he finds that he himself holds tradition as a guide?

A. Yes, if he would but reflect that he has nothing but Catholic Tradition for keeping the Sunday holy; ...

Controversial Catechism by Stephen Keenan, New Edition, revised by Rev. George Cormack, published in London by Burns & Oates, Limited - New York, Cincinnati, Chicago: Benzinger Brothers, 1896, pages 6, 7.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

The Truth about the Sabbath

The History of the origin of Sunday Worship. View it.

6

CONTROVERSIAL CATECHISM

Church all truth FOR EVER. (Math. xvi., xxviii.; John xiv.) Nay, He adds, that He died to make her a glorious Church without spot or wrinkle, holy and without blemish; and His Apostle calls her the pillar and ground of truth. (Eph. v.; 1 Tim. iii.)

Q. Does He say anything else which proves such an assertion to be an imposture?

A. He prays that all who should believe in His name may be one, as He and the Father are one—a prayer which could not have been heard, if His Church had fallen into error. (John xvii. 21.)

Q. Have you any other reason to induce an honest man to doubt of the reformed religions?

A. Yes; to prevent men from being tossed about by every wind of doctrine, and to perfect the elect, Christ appointed, not the Bible, as reformers do, but apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and doctors. (Eph. iv. 11.)

Q. Were there no abuses in the Church before the Reformation?

A. Yes; and in every age there were wise and foolish virgins, wheat and cockle blended together. Those abuses were the work of individual Catholics; the faith and moral teaching of the Church were always the same as they are at present.

Q. Have not Protestants reason to doubt of their faith, when they consider the men who founded Protestantism?

A. Yes, and strong reason. These were men of the most licentious character; and surely God would never choose such immoral persons to reform a Church established by His divine Son.

Q. When Protestants consider their rule of faith in its result, have they not reason to tremble?

A. Yes; for by making every man a judge of the Bible, they have filled the world with jarring and contradictory sects, each making war on all the rest; instead of the one united family for which Christ prayed, the one fold and one Shepherd, the most Babylonish disunion, as to folds and shepherds, pervades the entire Protestant world.

Q. Must not a sensible Protestant doubt seriously, when he finds that even the Bible is not followed as a rule by his co-religionists?

A. Surely, when he sees them baptize infants, abrogate the Jewish Sabbath, and observe Sunday for which there is no Scriptural authority; when he finds them neglect to wash one another's feet, which is expressly commanded, and eat blood and things strangled, which are expressly prohibited in Scripture. He must doubt, if he think at all.

REASONS FOR EXAMINING CATHOLIC RELIGION 7

Q. Do not the perpetual changes of Protestantism give ground for doubt?

A. Certainly; since a changing religion, which assumes a new face both as to faith and morals in every age and every country, cannot be the religion of Christ, which is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever, and the same everywhere.

Q. Should not a wise man doubt of the first principle of Protestantism, when he reads the words of St. Peter—2 Peter i. 20; iii. 16?

A. He must not only doubt, but be certain, that the principle of private interpretation is erroneous, since that Apostle says that no prophecy is of private interpretation, and that many things in the Scripture are hard to be understood, which the unlearned and unstable wrest to their own destruction.

Q. Should not a Protestant doubt when he finds that he himself holds tradition as a guide?

A. Yes, if he would but reflect that he has nothing but Catholic tradition for keeping the Sunday holy; and that, amongst many other things, it is by Catholic tradition only he knows the Bible to be the Word of God.

Q. Is not the Church of Christ one fold?

A. Yes; yet not two Protestant sects are exactly the same; nay, you will hardly find two Protestants who have the same faith on every point.

Q. Is not the Church of Christ holy, "without spot or wrinkle"?

A. Yes; and whether we consider Protestantism in its founders or in its doctrines, it is not holy. Its founders, as we shall shortly see, were immoral men; and it held, and now holds, most immoral doctrines; for example, the doctrine of predestination, from which it follows that God is the author of sin, that man must sin.

Q. Is not the Church of Christ Catholic, or universal?

A. Certainly; for Christ told His Apostles to teach all nations, to teach all truth, and that He would be with them all days; yet, the Protestant Church has not

Keenan's Catechism - 1896

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

The Catholic Universe Bulletin, August 14, 1942, p. 4.

"The [Roman Catholic] Church changed the observance of the Sabbath to Sunday by right of the divine, infallible authority given to her by her founder, Jesus Christ. The Protestant claiming the Bible to be the only guide of faith, has no warrant for observing Sunday. In this matter the Seventh-day Adventist is the only consistent Protestant."

THE QUESTION BOX

Derivation of the Name 'Jesus'

"Had the name 'Jesus' been borne by anyone prior to the birth of Our Redeemer and was the Holy Name bestowed immediately upon birth or at Christ's baptism? At what age was Christ baptized?"

The name Jesus is the Latin form of a Greek word that was derived from the Hebrew name Jehoshua (Joshua), Aramaic Yeshu, and means "Jahweh is salvation." It was given to Our Lord by the direction of God Himself (Luke 1:31; Matt. 1:21). The name was imposed on Christ at the time of His circumcision which was the custom of the Jews. That was eight days after His birth. Our Lord was baptized when He was about 30. He received no name then as this was the baptism of penance administered by St. John. It was not the Sacrament of Baptism of the New Law. The name was borne by the son of Sirach who was the author of Ecclesiasticus, a book of the Old Testament. The name is now given in baptism in Spanish countries.

Why is a halo put on the head of a statue of a Saint, and what is its symbolic meaning?

The halo, or circle, which is supposed to represent a ring of light, is symbolic of the light of grace bestowed by God. It may be regarded in art as the development of the aureole, the nimbus and the gloria.

The aureole is a cloud or glow of light in oval form surrounding the whole figure. The nimbus is a cloud or glow of light around the head. The gloria is light emanating from the body.

The halo or nimbus around the head of Christ is symbolic of His divinity.

The pagans used such devices before the Christian Era to signify power and majesty or prominence. Even in the Christian Era, the symbols were used for famous personages, but Pope Urban III (1183-1184) forbade the use of the nimbus for persons who are not at least beatified.

May every priest say two Masses on Sundays?

No; a priest may not say two Masses on Sundays unless he has permission to do so. That permission is granted by the Bishop of the diocese in instances where there are not enough priests to satisfy the needs of a community.

Permission to say two Masses is not granted as a personal privilege to the priest, but to allow the faithful to fulfill their obligation of attending Mass.

What are the essential features in the life and work of the Trappists?

The Trappists have for their official title the "Order of Reformed Cistercians of the Strict Observance." They follow the reforms of Abbot de Rance of La Trappe in 1790 A. D. observing perpetual silence, though living a common life. The divine office, reading and study, manual labor of an agricultural nature, and complete abstinence from flesh meat form the distinctive features of their life.

Will you please tell me the patron saint for the boys in the service?

St. George is usually referred to as the patron saint of soldiers. Soldiers in this sense probably is taken to mean all men in the armed forces.

If one is interrupted during prayer would this be a sin?

If you be interrupted by another it is no sin, nor would it be a sin for you to interrupt your own prayers for any sufficient reason. The prayers which you have said before the interruption will have their own value and if it be some particular devotion all that is necessary is that you continue from that part where you left off at the interruption.

By what authority did the Church change the observance of the Sabbath from Saturday to Sunday?

The Church changed the observance of the Sabbath to Sunday by right of the divine, infallible authority given to her by her Founder, Jesus Christ. The Protestant, claiming the Bible to be the only guide of faith, has no warrant for observing Sunday. In this matter the Seventh Day Adventist is the only consistent Protestant. Sunday as the day of rest to honor our Lord's Resurrection dates to Apostolic times and was so established, among other reasons, to mark off the Jew from the Christian. St. Justin the Martyr, speaks of it in his Apologies.

the joke could be turned against him he was ever the first to burst into laughter.

The king and the men of his court chose sides for a sham battle in which one party defended a fortress and another tried to capture it. The battle began with snowballs, apples and other such harmless oddments. The king himself was a fury in the attack and the battle was no longer a sham. One young defender of the fortress, seeing that the king was going to win, lost his head and seized a log. Down upon the king's head the wood was crashed and Francis was all but done to death. For days he lay unconscious, then slowly he began to recover.

For two months the king lay abed while everyone wondered what would be done to the over-enthusiastic young courtier who had downed the king. There was talk of punishment; Francis, however, would have none of it. For once in his somewhat shallow life he had a good moment and said: "I MUST TAKE WHAT COMES. IF I WANT TO PLAY THE FOOL!"

day by right of the divine, infallible authority given to her by her Founder, Jesus Christ. The Protestant, claiming the Bible to be the only guide of faith, has no warrant for observing Sunday. In this matter the Seventh Day Adventist is the only consistent Protestant. Sunday as the day of rest to honor our Lord's Resurrection dates to Apostolic times and was so established, among other reasons, to mark off the Jew from the Christian. St. Justin the Martyr, speaks of it in his Apologies.

Catholic Universe Bulletin (Cleveland) - Aug 14, 1942

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

The Catholic Virginian, "To Tell You The Truth," Vol. 22, No. 49 (Oct. 3, 1947).

"All of us believe many things in regard to religion that we do not find in the Bible. For example, nowhere in the Bible do we find that Christ or the Apostles ordered that the Sabbath be changed from Saturday to Sunday. We have the commandment of God given to Moses to keep holy the Sabbath Day, that is the 7th day of the week, Saturday. Today most Christians keep Sunday because it has been revealed to us by the Church outside the Bible."

The Catholic Virginian

Vol. XXII, No. 49

Official Publication of the Richmond Diocese

Friday, October 3, 1947

Entered as 2d class mail matter at Richmond, Va., Postoffice under act of March 3, 1879; accepted for mailing at Washington, D. C.

Price 5 Cents
$2.50 a Year

To Tell You The Truth

Does the Bible contain everything that we must believe in order to be saved?

A. No, the Bible does not contain everything that we must believe in order to be saved. The Catholic Church teaches that Christ revealed many things to be believed and only part of these are written down in the Bible, the rest of them the Apostles passed on to the Christians by word of mouth and were not written down sometimes for several centuries in the various writings of the Fathers of the early Church. The Catholic Church teaches that everything that is in the Bible is the Word of God and therefore must be believed, but the Bible does not contain everything that God revealed to man.

B. We know that this is true even from the Bible itself. The very last verse of St. John's Gospel which very probably was the last Book of the Bible to be written, this last verse is as follows: "There are however many other things that Jesus did, but if every one of these should be written, not even the world itself, I think, could hold the books that would have to be written. John 21:25. Here we have it in plain words that there are many other things

C. It is just common sense to know that the Bible does not contain everything that Jesus said and commanded His Apostles and believers to believe. The Gospels and Epistles record only a small portion of what Jesus said. When we study the purpose for which each of the books of the New Testament were written we see that none of them had any intention of giving all the things that must be believed. St. Luke tells us that he is just going to give us some of the things that Jesus did and said. The Gospels were written merely as a supplement to the preaching by word of mouth of the Apostles. The Apostles after converting a city had to go on to other cities and so they would write down a few things for the Christians in order to help them remember all the things that the Apostles had taught them. We see the same purpose in the writing of the Epistles. St. Paul had no intention of giving a complete summary even of all that must be believed. He would write an Epistle in answer to some particular need of some particular community of Christians usually to settle some dispute that had arisen in St. Paul's absence and St. Paul would write a letter. So we have the two Epistles to the Thessalonians because of a dispute among the Christians there over the Second Coming of Christ.

D. Therefore the Bible is a text book used by the Church in teaching religion to her children. The Church as teacher follows the Textbook of the Bible but often adds other things that she had directly learned from Christ and the Apostles when they were still upon earth.

E. All of us believe many things in regard to religion that we do not find in the Bible. For example, nowhere in the Bible do we find that Christ or the Apostles ordered that the Sabbath be changed from Saturday to Sunday. We have the commandment of God given to Moses to keep holy the Sabbath Day, that is the 7th day of the week, Saturday. Today most Christians keep Sunday because it has been revealed to us by the Church outside the Bible.

that Jesus did and said that are not in this book nor are they in the whole Bible for the whole world, St. John says, could not

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

The Faith of Our Fathers

"... you may read the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, and you will not find a single line authorizing the sanctification of Sunday. The Scriptures enforce the religious observance of Saturday, a day which we never sanctify."

Source: The Faith of Our Fathers, by James Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop of Baltimore, 88th edition, page 89. Originally published in 1876, republished and Copyright 1980 by TAN Books and Publishers, Inc., pages 72-73.

THE CHURCH AND THE BIBLE 89

should satisfy you when it is a question of steering your course to eternity. On this vital point there should be no conflict of opinion among those that guide you. There should be no conjecture. But there must be always someone at the helm whose voice gives assurance amid the fiercest storms that all is well.

Third—A rule of faith, or a competent guide to heaven, must be able to instruct in all the truths necessary for salvation. Now the Scriptures alone do not contain all the truths which a Christian is bound to believe, nor do they explicitly enjoin all the duties which he is obliged to practice. Not to mention other examples, is not every Christian obliged to sanctify Sunday and to abstain on that day from unnecessary servile work? Is not the observance of this law among the most prominent of our sacred duties? But you may read the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, and you will not find a single line authorizing the sanctification of Sunday. The Scriptures enforce the religious observance of Saturday, a day which we never sanctify.

The Catholic Church correctly teaches that our Lord and His Apostles inculcated certain important duties of religion which are not recorded by the inspired writers.<sup>1</sup> For instance, most Christians pray to the Holy Ghost, a practice which is nowhere found in the Bible.

We must, therefore, conclude that the Scriptures alone cannot be a sufficient guide and rule of faith because they cannot, at any time, be within the reach of every inquirer; because they are not of themselves clear and intelligible even in matters of the highest importance, and because <sup>1</sup> See John xxi. 26; II. Thess. ii. 14.

Faith Of Our Fathers - Cardinal Gibbons

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> The Truth about the Sabbath

The History of the origin of Sunday Worship. View it.

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

The Catholic Record.

"Christianus mihi nomen est Catholicus vero Cognomen."—(Christian is my Name, but Catholic my Surname)—St. Paelan, 4th Century

VOLUME XLV.

LONDON, CANADA, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1923

2342

Catholic Record, September 1, 1923.

"Now in the matter of Sabbath observance the Protestant rule of Faith is utterly unable to explain the substitution of the Christian Sunday for the Jewish Saturday. It has been changed. The Bible still teaches that the Sabbath or Saturday should be kept holy. There is no authority in the New Testament for the substitution of Sunday for Saturday. Surely it is an important matter. It stands there in the Bible as one of the Ten Commandments of God. There is no authority in the Bible for abrogating this Commandment, or for transferring its observance to another day of the week... The Church is above the Bible, and this transference of Sabbath observance is proof of that fact. Deny the authority of the Church and you have no adequate or reasonable explanation or justification for the substitution of Sunday for Saturday in the Third - Protestant Fourth - Commandment of God. As the Rev. Mr. Smith rightly points out: "The Jewish Sabbath is not Sunday, the Lord's Day. Christians are all wrong in speaking of the Sabbath as Sunday." The Christians who so speak are "Bible Christians," those who make the Bible the sole rule of Faith; and the Bible is silent on Sunday observance, it speaks only of Sabbath observance." Catholic Record, September 1, 1923.

case or are invested in first mortgage securities.

M. F. FALLON,
Bishop of London.

"SABBATH OBSERVANCE"

A short time ago this staid city of London experienced a tempest in a teapot over Sabbath observance. It was proposed to allow the children to use the municipal swimming pool during the sweltering weather we were then having. Immediately there was a ministerial chorus of protest. One reverend Boanerges valiantly declared that they would not rest until they had routed "the hosts of hell." Presumably he saw in apocalyptic vision the infernal armies lined up behind His Worship the Mayor and others in their impious assault on the sanctity of "the Sabbath."

Imagine the consternation in the ministerial association and the jubilation amongst the hosts of hell when they read in the London Free Press of this dastardly flank attack tion, the Unwritten Word, which Catholics accept as of equal authority with the Written Word, the Bible. The Divine authority given by Christ to the Church to teach in His name, to bind and to loose, Protestants deny. For them—and it is their boast—the Bible and the Bible alone has Divine authority.

Now in the matter of Sabbath Observance the Protestant rule of Faith is utterly unable to explain the substitution of the Christian Sunday for the Jewish Saturday. It has been changed. The Bible still teaches that the Sabbath or Saturday should be kept holy. There is no authority in the New Testament for the substitution of Sunday for Saturday. Surely it is an important matter. It stands there in the Bible as one of the Ten Commandments of God. There is no authority in the Bible for abrogating this Commandment, or for transferring its observance to another day of the week.

For Catholics there is not the slightest difficulty. "All power is Press of this dastardly flank attack on their citadel of sabbatarianism:

"That Sabbath observance in the strict sense of the law of Israel, whether on the traditional or any seventh day, is no concern of the Christian, was the assertion of Rev. J. Marion Smith, of Emmanuel Baptist Church, Toronto, in his evening sermon yesterday at the Talbot Street Baptist Church."

And this under a two-column heading: "Sabbath Observance Not Any Part of Man's Duty as a Christian!" True, Mr. Smith was speaking to the "interrogative subject," "Can a Saved Man Be Lost?" That is quite a big subject in itself; but we shall take first his pronouncement on the Sabbath, which evidently struck the reporter and the city editor as the more sensational if not the more important part of the sermon. The report of the Free

For Catholics there is no slightest difficulty. "All power is given Me in heaven and on earth; as the Father sent Me so I also send you," said our Divine Lord in giving His tremendous commission to His Apostles. "He that heareth you heareth Me." We have in the authoritative voice of the Church the voice of Christ Himself. The Church is above the Bible; and this transference of Sabbath observance from Saturday to Sunday is proof positive of that fact. Deny the authority of the Church and you have no adequate or reasonable explanation or justification for the substitution of Sunday for Saturday in the Third—Protestant Fourth—Commandment of God. As the Rev. Mr. Smith rightly points out: "The Jewish Sabbath is not Sunday, the Lord's Day. Christians are all wrong in speaking of the Sabbath as Sunday." The Christians who so

Catholic Record - Sept 1st, 1923

Here is the entire article:

A short time ago this staid city of London experienced a tempest in a teapot over Sabbath observance. It was proposed to allow the children to use the municipal swimming pool during the sweltering weather we were then having. Immediately there was a ministerial chorus of protest. One reverend Boanerges valiantly declared that they would not rest until they had routed "the hosts of hell." Presumably he saw in apocalyptic vision the infernal armies lined up behind His Worship the Mayor and others in their impious assault on the sanctity of "the Sabbath."

Imagine the consternation in the ministerial association and the jubilation amongst the hosts of hell when they read in the London Free Press of this dastardly flank attack on their citadel of sabbatarianism: "That Sabbath observance in the strict sense of the law of Israel, whether on the traditional or any seventh day, is no concern of the Christian, was the assertion of Rev. J. Marion Smith, of Emmanuel Baptist Church, Toronto, in his evening sermon yesterday at the Talbot Street Baptist Church."

And this under a two-column heading: "Sabbath Observance Not Any Part of Man's Duty as a Christian!" True, Mr. Smith was speaking to the "interrogative subject," "Can a Saved Man Be Lost?" That is quite a big subject in itself; but we shall take first his pronouncement on the Sabbath, which evidently struck the reporter and the city editor as the more sensational if not the more important part of the sermon. The report of the Free Press continues: "Quoting St. Paul, he declares that making any point of the old Mosaic law a test of righteousness is to accept the full burden of the rules, rituals and customs enjoined by Moses.

" 'In Toronto, for instance', he said, 'there are many who make a great point of Sabbath observance. I do not consider it any part of my duty as a Christian to observe the Sabbath. When Christ came the old law was fulfilled and done away with. Christ was the only being, as a human, who could and did observe the whole law. Of course, as a Christian I observe certain rules of conduct and habit. But that is the matter of personal purity.' "

It will be noted that the last paragraph purports to quote the very words of the preacher.

To the Toronto Star the Rev. Mr. Smith gave an explanatory interview which, though it may tend to allay Sabbatarian indignation, does not claim that he was misreported; indeed he further emphasizes the fact that the Jewish Sabbath and Christian Sunday are quite distinct and separate institutions.

We quote from The Star: "The Jewish Sabbath is not Sunday, the Lord's Day. Christians are all wrong in speaking of the Sabbath as Sunday," said Mr. Smith. "The Sabbath is not binding upon a Christian as a means of justification from sin," he went on. "The keeping of Sunday, the Lord's day, is quite a different matter, and springs not from any obligation to the Jewish Law, but is the ready response from the heart of the Christian who observes Sunday as a day set aside for worship and rest. This observance is one of the highest privileges of mankind, and it is only reasonable that one-seventh of a man's time should be devoted to special worship and spiritual refreshment."

And further to mollify the critics he added in conclusion: "One of the greatest blessings of Canada had been due to the strict observance of the Lord's Day. To throw Sunday wide open would be to paralyze much good that is now accomplished and to throw unlimited temptation before the young life of our boys and girls."

The ministers of London who criticize Mr. Smith's sermon left the real crux of the question untouched. And that is not surprising, for on Protestant principles there is no possible explanation of the substitution of the Christian Sunday for the Jewish Sabbath; for this plain abrogation of the express commandment of God as recorded in the Bible.

Protestants reject Divine Tradition, the Unwritten Word, which Catholics accept as of equal authority with the Written Word, the Bible. The Divine authority given by Christ to the Church to teach in His name, to bind and loose, Protestants deny. For them - and it is their boast - the Bible and the Bible alone has Divine authority.

Now in the matter of Sabbath observance the Protestant rule of Faith is utterly unable to explain the substitution of the Christian Sunday for the Jewish Saturday. It has been changed. The Bible still teaches that the Sabbath or Saturday should be kept holy. There is no authority in the New Testament for the substitution of Sunday for Saturday. Surely it is an important matter. It stands there in the Bible as one of the Ten Commandments of God. There is no authority in the Bible for abrogating this Commandment, or for transferring its observance to another day of the week.

For Catholics it is not the slightest difficulty. "All power is given Me in heaven and on earth; as the Father sent Me so I also send you," said our Divine Lord in giving His tremendous commission to His Apostles. "He that heareth you heareth Me." We have in the authoritative voice of the Church the voice of Christ Himself. The Church is above the Bible; and this transference of Sabbath observance from Saturday to Sunday is proof positive of that fact. Deny the authority of the Church and you have no adequate or reasonable explanation or justification for the substitution of Sunday for Saturday in the Third - Protestant Fourth - Commandment of God. As the Rev. Mr. Smith rightly points out: "The Jewish Sabbath is not Sunday, the Lord's Day. Christians are all wrong in speaking of the Sabbath as Sunday." The Christians who so speak are "Bible Christians," those who make the Bible the sole rule of Faith; and the Bible is silent on Sunday observance, it speaks only of Sabbath observance. The Lord's Day - Dies Dominica - is the term used always in the Missal and the Breviary. It occurs in the Bible once (Apoc. 1.10;) in Acts xx. 7 and 1 Cor. xvi., 2 there is a reference to "the first day of the week;" but in none of these is there the remotest intimation that henceforth the first day is to take the place of the seventh. That is the crux of the whole question, what authority does the Bible give for the change? And that difficulty Mr. Smith and his critics, though pious and effusive and vaguely eloquent about many things, have each and all sedulously evaded.

It affects very materially and very intimately the question of the proper observance of the Lord's Day.

In the first centuries the obligation of rest from work remained somewhat indefinite. The Council of Laodicea, held at the end of the fourth century, was content to prescribe that on the Lord's Day the faithful were to abstain from work as far as possible. At the beginning of the sixth century St. Cesarius and others showed an inclination - very familiar to us - to apply the law of the Jewish Sabbath to the Christian Sunday. But the Council of Orleans in 538 reprobated this tendency as Jewish and non-Christian.

Thus by the same Divine authority, in virtue of which she did away with the Jewish Sabbath and substituted therefor the Christian Sunday, the Catholic Church legislated as to how the Lord's Day should be observed. Due to the exaggerated importance given the Bible after the Reformation and to the influence of Puritanism, the Lord's Day in England and still more in Scotland began to take on all the rigorism of the Jewish Sabbath. That heritage, though somewhat softened, we still have with us. A game of ball where participants and spectators enjoy health-giving rest and recreation in the open air is "desecration of the Sabbath." The swimming pool controversy is another good example.

We would not be misunderstood. With much of the activity of the Sabbatarians we are in sympathy. Their insistence on a day of rest being given all workers is admirable. But their muddle-headed confusion of the Lord's Day with the Jewish Sabbath - against which the Rev. Mr. Smith so vigorously protests - finds no sympathy amongst the Catholics who receive the Lord's Day itself as well as its mode of observance from the Church and not from the Bible.

It might serve a good purpose if the Sabbatarians would meditate on Mark ii, 23-28.

"And it came to pass again, as the Lord walked through the cornfields on the sabbath, that his disciples began to go forward and pluck the ears of corn. And the Pharisees said to Him: Behold why do they on the sabbath-day that which is not lawful?"

"And He said to them: Have you never read what David did, when he had need, and was hungry himself and they that were with them? How he went into the house of God under Abiathar the high-priest and did eat the loaves of proposition which was not lawful to eat but for the priests, and gave to them who were with him?"

"And He said unto them: The sabbath was made for man, not man for the sabbath."

That is the great principle that is forgotten under the damnosa hereditas of Puritanical sabbatarianism.

Our Divine Lord observed the Sabbath; but by word and deed he set Himself against the absurd rigorism that made man the slave of the day.

The train of thought and discussion set in motion by the Rev. Mr. Smith if followed up to its logical conclusion should serve a very good and very practical purpose.

-----

The above article was published in the Saturday, September 1st, 1923 edition of The Catholic Record of London, Ontario, Canada, Volume XLV, #2342 and appeared on page 4. As the author of the article was not indicated, it is assumed to have been written by one of the editors. A facsimile of that portion of the article. The following information appeared on the same page as the article:

THE CATHOLIC RECORD

Publisher & Proprietor, Thomas Coffey, LL. D.

Editors - Rev. James T. Foley, D. D. and Thomas Coffey, LL. D.

Associate Editor - H. F. Mackintosh.

Manager - Robert M. Burns.

The Catholic Record has been approved and recommended by Archbishops Falconio and Sbarette, late Apostolic Delegates to Canada, the Archbishops of Toronto, Kingston, Ottawa, and St. Boniface, the Bishops of London, Hamilton, Peterborough and Odensburg, N. Y., and the clergy throughout the Dominion.

-----
Anyone wishing to obtain a photocopy of the original newspaper article from microfilm archives can inquire online at the London Ontario Canada Public Library, or call them on the phone at 519-661-4600.

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

The Faith of Millions, by Rev. John A. O'Brien

"But since Saturday, not Sunday, is specified in the Bible, isn't it curious that non-Catholics who profess to take their religion directly from the Bible and not the Church, observe Sunday instead of Saturday? Yes, of course, it is inconsistent; but this change was made about fifteen centuries before Protestantism was born, and by that time the custom was universally observed. They have continued the custom, even though it rests upon the authority of the Catholic Church and not upon an explicit text in the Bible. That observance remains as a reminder of the Mother Church from which the non-Catholic sects broke away - like a boy running away from home but still carrying in his pocket a picture of his mother or a lock of her hair." Faith of Millions, pp. 400 and 401, by the Reverend John A. O'Brien, PH.D., Copyright 1938, published by Our Sunday Visitor, Huntington Indiana

^ Top

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> The Truth about the Sabbath

The History of the origin of Sunday Worship. View it.

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

"The holy day, the Sabbath, was changed from Saturday to Sunday"

Sentinel, Pastor's Page, May 21 1995

Perhaps the boldest thing, the most revolutionary change the Church ever did, happened in the first century. The holy day, the Sabbath, was changed from Saturday to Sunday. "The Day of the Lord" (dies Dominica) was chosen, not from any directions noted in the Scriptures, but from the Church's sense of its own power. The day of resurrection, the day of Pentecost, fifty days later, came on the first day of the week. So this would be the new Sabbath. People who think that the Scriptures should be the sole authority, should logically become 7th Day Adventists, and keep Saturday holy.

Sentinel, Pastor's Page (Fr. Leo Broderick), Saint Catherine Catholic Church, Algonac, Michigan, May 21, 1995.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> The Truth about the Sabbath

The History of the origin of Sunday Worship. View it.

Sentinel

Saint Catherine Catholic Church

1106 St. Clair Blvd • ALGONAC, MICHIGAN 48001 • (810) 794-3301

Volume 50

May 21, 1995

Number 22

Pastor's Page

Our Lord really simplified things when He said that the new law consisted in only two parts: love God and love neighbor. In the Hebrew Scriptures there were hundreds of laws that governed things in minutest detail. And the early Christians, most of whom were Jewish, had to really struggle with change. Some thought that many of the old laws should be carried over into the new Testament.

And, when we come to apply the Lord's commandments to concrete situations, we have to specify about particulars. So, the very early Church, without a long tradition, decreed that nobody should be overburdened, but idolatry, that is, taking part in pagan sacrifices, and sins against chastity are clearly against loving God and neighbor.

The Church has always had a strong sense of its own authority. "Whatever you bind on earth is bound in heaven", Jesus said.

Perhaps the boldest thing, the most revolutionary change the Church ever did, happened in the first century. The holy day, the Sabbath, was changed from Saturday to Sunday. "The Day of the Lord" (dies Dominica) was chosen, not from any directions noted in the Scriptures, but from the Church's sense of its own power. The day of resurrection, the day of Pentecost, fifty days later, came on the first day of the week. So this would be the new Sabbath. People who think that the Scriptures should be the sole authority should logically become 7th Day Adventists, and keep Saturday holy.

With a long long period of practice and reflection, Church law developed and changed with changing circumstances. It takes a fair amount of wisdom and study to know in detail the various Church laws. The latest revision of our Catholic Church law took place about 15 years ago, some time after the Vatican Council.

The law of Christ is always primary; we must love God and neighbor. Particular laws are made, not to be overly burdensome, but to apply, in particular circumstances, how the law of Christ is carried out in practice.

Some people think there should be no law, no government. They are anarchists, and of course they make themselves into their own law. We witness such people bombing innocents, shooting randomly in neighborhoods, destroying property, making up convenient (for themselves) rules about life, liberty, chastity, killing the unborn, free speech. "My yoke is easy, my burden is light" said the Lord

CSA

If you have not yet responded to the C.S.A. drive, you will be receiving information in the mail. Please place your contribution in the basket, bring to the rectory or you may mail it to the rectory.

Ascension Thursday

May 25, 1995

Masses: 9:15 a.m. & 7:00 p.m.

Festival Meeting

There will be a festival meeting of all chairpersons and all interested parishioners, Tuesday, May 23 in the meeting room in Church. All are welcome to attend. New ideas are always appreciated.

ing property, making up convenient (for themselves) rules about life, liberty, chastity, killing the unborn, free speech.

"My yoke is easy, my burden is light" said the Lord. It takes strong faith to be able to see that in all circumstances.

Here's how to love God next Thursday: Come to Mass and participate.

meeting room in Church. All are welcome to attend. New ideas are always appreciated.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History |
Sabbath Resources | Home

Crossing the Threshold of Hope

"The leader of the Catholic church is defined by the faith as the Vicar of Jesus Christ (and is accepted as such by believers). The Pope is considered the man on earth who "takes the place" of the Second Person of the omnipotent God of the Trinity."
John Paul II, Crossing the Threshold of Hope, p. 3, 1994

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Dictionary of Christian Antiquities, 1880

"substitution... no basis whatever, either in Holy Scripture or in Christian antiquity."

"The notion of a formal substitution by apostolic authority of the Lord's day [meaning Sunday] for the Jewish Sabbath [or the first for the seventh day]... and the transference to it, perhaps in a spiritualized form, of the sabbatical obligation established by the promulgation of the fourth commandment, has no basis whatever, either in Holy Scripture or in Christian antiquity." - SIR WILLIAM SMITH AND SAMUEL CHEETHAM, "A Dictionary of Christian Antiquities," Vol. 11, page 182, Article "Sabbath."

"This long series of temporal enactments (in considering which we have, for the sake of exhibiting them as a whole, anticipated chronological order) must have told very powerfully upon the conception of the Lord's day in the church itself, not only tending to formalize its celebration, but to invest it in great degree with the character of a sabbath. Still, however, there was no connexion of its observance with the obligation of the fourth commandment, and therefore no application to it either of the laws of the Jewish sabbath, or of our Lord's teaching on the subject, as modifying and spiritualizing these laws." - Id., page 1047

LORD'S DAY

ἐρεῖται μοι δοκεῖν τῶν ἐν ταύταις τῷ κοινῷ Σωτῆρι περὶ αὐτῶν ἀναγνωστέων. This passage extends the statement to the civil population, and adds the celebration of the Friday to that of the Sunday. It is true that these edicts of Constantine are not found in the codes, and that Eusebius is anxious to make the most of the Christianity of the subject of his panegyric. But it is incredible that he should have been either misinformed or insincere in the main substance of his statements; and it would have been quite accordant with Constantine's temporising policy to issue such commands, as special edicts, not to be enrolled among formal laws. However this may be, under Constantine's successors there were reiterated enactments in this direction, free from the ambiguity of the original law.

Thus we have two laws prohibiting exaction of debt on that day, one under Valentinian and Valens (A.D. 368), protecting Christians against being forced into litigation on that day, the "dies solis, qui dudum faustus habetur" (Cod. Theod. VIII. tit. viii. 1); the other under Gratian, Valentinian, and Theodosius (A.D. 386), extending this immunity to all, calling the day plainly the "dies solis quem Dominicum ritē dixere majores," and branding any infringer of the law as "non modo notabilis, verum etiam sacrilegus" (Cod. Theod. VIII. tit. viii. 2). The progress marked by the contrast of these two laws is significant. The former, recognising the Christians as a sect, is exactly of the same nature as a law of Honorius and Theodosius in 409, protecting the Jews from being forced to work or litigation on the sabbath or other of their sacred days (Cod. Theod. II. tit. viii. 3). The latter accepts Christianity as the religion of the empire, and enforces on all by law the sacredness of its chief festival.

Again, the celebration of the day was gradually separated by law from all heathen and even secular associations. In 389, under Theodosius, the "solis dies" and the "Sancti Paschae dies" (the weeks before and after Easter) are included with the harvest and vintage seasons, the Kalends of January, and the days of the foundation of Rome and Constantinople, as forensic holidays (Cod. Theod. II. tit. viii. 2). In 386 it was ordered that no one should present to the people any spectacle on the "dies solis," "ne divinum venerationem confectā solemnitate confundat" (Cod. Theod. XV. tit. v. 2). In 425, under Theodosius the younger, we find a law enacting an entire abstinence from all amusements of the theatre or the circus, on the "Dies Dominicus," Christmas day, Epiphany, Easter, and the Pentecost, in order that the whole minds of Christians may be devoted to worship of God. It denounces any infringement of the law by "the infatuated impiety of the Jews or the stolid error and madness of heathenism," and orders the celebration even of the emperor's birthday to be set aside for the sake of the Christian holy day (Cod. Theod. XV. tit. v. 5). The same law is reiterated in even stronger terms under Leo and Anthemius (A.D. 469), in reference to the Lord's day, which is to be kept absolutely sacred, not only from business, but also from "obscene pleasures" of the theatre, the circus, and the amphitheatre (Cod. Just. lib. III. tit. xii. 11). Nor should we pass over a remarkable law of Honorius and Theodosius (A.D.

LORD'S DAY

1047

409), which expressly orders that on the Lord's day the judges shall have prisoners brought before them, to inquire whether they have been treated humanely, to see that food is given to the destitute, and that the prisoners be allowed, under guard, to go to the bath. The bishops were to put the judges in mind of this duty (Cod. Just. i. tit. iv. 9). It may be noted that at a later period (A.D. 529) under Justinian, the bishops were ordered to visit the prisoners on Wednesdays or Fridays (the Lord's day being probably thought to be too much occupied), to inquire into the cases of the prisoners, and to see whether any neglect of duty on the part of the magistrates had taken place (Cod. Just. tit. iv. 22). But the fifth council of Orleans, twenty years later (A.D. 549), orders the archdeacon or provost (praepositus ecclesiae) to make the visitation on the Lord's day itself, with a view to the relief of necessitous prisoners (see Labbe, Councils, vol. ix. p. 134). It should be observed that these laws recognise the positive duty of works of charity on the Lord's day, precisely as He Himself had recognised it on the sabbath.

This long series of temporal enactments (in considering which we have, for the sake of exhibiting them as a whole, anticipated chronological order) must have told very powerfully upon the conception of the Lord's day in the church itself, not only tending to formalize its celebration, but to invest it in great degree with the character of a sabbath. Still, however, there was no connexion of its observance with the obligation of the fourth commandment, and therefore no application to it either of the laws of the Jewish sabbath, or of our Lord's teaching on the subject, as modifying and spiritualizing these laws.

But when the legal enforcement of rest on the Lord's day was once established, the next step would not unnaturally follow. In fact, the conception of it, as formally sanctioned by a divine law, would recommend itself to different schools of thought. It would be a refuge to any who scrupled to accept in respect of Christian festivals the authority of a merely temporal power, not yet absolutely identified with Christianity. It would appear to earnest-minded men as a short and ready way of maintaining a high spirituality of tone, in the face of the conventional and insincere observance to which the imperial interference would probably give rise. It would afford to the courtly satellites of the emperor an opportunity of flattering his desire of being "a bishop as to things and men without," by representing him as being the restorer of a half-forgotten divine law. From various causes it would make its way; and, if once admitted, its simplicity and cogency would help it to supersede other pleas for the sacredness of the day.

(IV.) This effect is not at first visible in the great leaders of ecclesiastical opinion and faith. In them we find the same general line of thought which has already been described. It will be sufficient to quote a few leading examples from the East and West. St. Athanasius delights to trace signs of honour done prophetically to the Lord's day, the resurrection day of the Lord (ἀναστρέφοντες ἡμέραν), as in the title of the sixth Psalm, "Upon the eighth" (which, however,

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

Embedded Secure Document

The file <http://www.sabbathtruth.com/Resources/Download/PBLib/BK-GSR.pdf> is a secure document that has been embedded in this document. Double click the pushpin to view.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Big Lie Listen to the audio version Now!

One of the most amazing stories to emerge from the lavish Federal hand-out programs involved a Chicago street gang and the First Presbyterian church. According to testimony received by a Senate subcommittee in Washington, D.C. over $600,000 promised by the Office of Economic Opportunity was used to finance the criminal activities of the Blackstone Rangers who used the church as a hang-out and arms storage center. Out of all the conflicting confusion of charges and counter charges, one fact seemed to stand unchallenged: The pastor believed that the gang was justified in participating in civil disobedience because of the attitude of the police toward them.

Strange as it seems, we have actually come to a day when religious leaders and institutions are openly condoning disobedience to the basic laws of our government. And friends, don't think for a moment that they always stop at disobedience to man's laws. The whole philosophy is permeated with a permissiveness which also looks lightly upon transgression of God's law as well.

People are confused today. People often come and say: "I don't understand. As a child I was taught to memorize the ten commandments, I received a Bible bookmark or a gold star on a chart or something, because I memorized the ten commandments. Then when later in life I realized I wasn't keeping all those commandments—when I was old enough to know that there was one commandment that said, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy"—I went to the minister and asked, "Why is it we don't keep this commandment?" Then I was told, "The commandments were done away with. They were nailed to the cross. We're not under the law, we're under grace. So go ahead and disobey God's commandments, that will be alright." So many say: "I just don't understand it. Why was I taught to memorize them if they're done away?" This is a very good question.

A similar confusion comes as we hear popular preachers everywhere preaching against sin. Those preachers quote the ten commandments as an evidence. They preach against adultery and quote the seventh commandment: "thou shalt not commit adultery." That's alright. They preach against idol worship and quote the second commandment: "Thou shalt not make ... graven image, Thou shalt not bow down ... ." That's perfectly alright. If you want to preach against swearing, quote the third commandment. That too, is very fine. It is perfectly alright in preaching against sin to quote the commandments as evidence that it is wrong; but, as soon as you mention the commandment that the popular churches quite universally disobey, then you hear a strange cry: "I'm not under the law, I'm under grace. I can disobey God's commandments."

It is a strange and crooked way of reasoning, isn't it? Yet it's a very popular kind of thinking in the religious world today! It is perfectly alright to preach against swearing and adultery, stealing, murder, and quote the ten commandments. But, if we preach about keeping God's Sabbath day, which is, also, one of the ten commandments, then suddenly, the ten commandments are nailed to the cross or done away, we're not under the law, we're under grace!

But when you begin to analyze this devious doctrine, it appears rather foolish. If we are at liberty to disobey the Sabbath command by saying, "The law was nailed to the cross, done away," or by saying, "I'm not under the law but under grace," then this reasoning applies to all ten commandments, not just one of the ten. But not very many people think it is just right to throw out all ten of the commandments. Some will say: "most of those commandments are repeated in the New Testament." It's true that many of them are—the Sabbath is repeated in the New testament very clearly for example, but there are some that are not repeated there. For God never intended that the law be repeated in the New Testament. It wasn't necessary. It was given in the Old Testament. The New Testament takes for granted that we are to keep them. The apostles all quoted from the commandments profusely. It is clear that they were still considered to be God's law and

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

an expression of His will. Obedience to them was expected, as we will see in our study today.

The Bible is very clear that God's law is always to stand. I think of statements like the one Jesus made in Matthew 5:17, where He said, "Think not that I'm come to destroy the law ... I am not come to destroy ... for until heaven and earth pass, not one jot or one tittle (not the crossing of a t or the dotting of an i) shall pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Heaven and earth are still very much with us. Jesus said as long as they last, the law remains. And Jesus said not any of it was to be changed. He went on to say that anyone who breaks one of the least commandments and teaches others to do so, shall be called least by the kingdom of God. And those who teach men to keep them will be called great by the kingdom of God.

O, I hear some people quote that text in a strange way. They say Christ told us He came not to destroy the law and the prophets, but to fulfill—and they say "to fulfill" means to bring an end", "to do away with". If this interpretation is true, notice how absurd it makes the statement of Jesus, to quote it with the meaning, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law and the prophets, I am not come to destroy the law and the prophets, I am not come to destroy but to do away with." I wouldn't try to put such impossible contradiction into the mouth of Jesus! In Matthew 3:15 Jesus to John the Baptist said that they must fulfill all righteousness. I wonder if we are to think that they brought an end to, or did away with all righteousness! To fulfill righteousness means to live out that righteousness. Not to do away with it. Jesus came to live out the righteousness of God's law, not to bring an end to it.

Then I think of what Jesus said in Matthew 15:3-9. He said we should not follow traditions of men which are in contradiction to the law of God. This makes us transgress the law. He said, "But in vain they worship me teaching for doctrine the commandments of men." He added, "You make the commandments of God of none effect by your tradition." So Jesus taught us that we should not disregard His commandments. When the rich young ruler came to Christ and said, "What good thing must I do to enter into life?" What was Jesus' answer? "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." (Not that by keeping the commandments he could earn salvation, but as far as following the will of God was concerned, in the commandments the will of God is revealed.)

God expects His followers to keep the commandments. In James 2:10-12 we see the duty of complete obedience: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. For he that said, do not commit adultery, said also, do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law. So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty." Notice that the Bible calls the ten commandments the 'law of liberty.'

You know, there are some people who take some of Paul's statements and read them in such a way as to make it sound like Paul is doing away with the commandments and abrogating the law of God. Then they infer that we may ignore one or more of the ten commandments. But we must notice that when Paul reached his conclusion at the end of the chapter, Paul says, "Do we then make void the law of God through faith, God forbid, yea, we establish the law."

We may not be clever enough to follow all of Paul's reasonings, it is difficult in some places. Even Peter, as we have read, said Paul wrote some things that were hard to understand. So, I may not be able to follow all Paul's reasoning about the law, but there's one thing I'm very sure of, and that is this: That if I come to the very opposite conclusion that Paul comes to, something is wrong with the way I reason, don't you think so! I have not followed his thinking correctly. When Paul is all through with his difficult reasoning, he comes to the conclusion that the law is established, and not done away. If I follow Paul's reasoning and come to the conclusion that the law is done away, and that I can disobey it, I have failed somehow to follow Paul's good intentions, haven't I! We certainly can read Paul's plain conclusion that the law was to be upheld.

But you ask, "What are some of the answers to these seeming contradictions?" First of all in Ephesians 2 we read about "commandments and ordinances" which were separating a wall between Jews and Gentiles. Such as the ordinance of circumcision. There were some commandments that have to do with ordinances, with ceremony. Colossians 2 tells us about ordinances or decrees which were a shadow of things to come, a symbol of Christ. There were commandments that had to do with types and shadows of Jesus. Those things that illustrated His atonement, the ordinances of the old Jewish system. There were commandments that told them to bring a lamb and shed it's blood and sprinkle it on the altar. There were commandments that had to do with the priests in the sanctuary of Old Testament times. All these ordinances of the Old Testament were given to God's people until Christ should come. He was the reality to which the type pointed. When Christ died on Calvary's cross as the true sacrifice, all the symbol sacrifices of lambs and etc. came to their end. They had met the object to which they pointed. No longer were these commandments that surrounded the ordinances to be followed. So, the Apostle tells us that the commandments contained in ordinances, the bloody sacrifices came to an end when Jesus died on Calvary's cross.

There were also some special feast days, and days of solemn celebration connected with the services and ceremonies of the old sanctuary which were shadows of Christ and done away. Because they were commanded to rest on these special days—the days were also called Sabbaths. (The word Sabbath means rest). You remember the mention of these days in the Bible: The Passover, Pentecost, the Day of Atonement, the Feast of Tabernacles, etc. These days were shadows of Jesus. For instance, Jesus is the true atonement, so when His atonement was made on Calvary, it was no longer necessary to keep the old day of atonement. Jesus is the true Passover Lamb. So after His sacrifice, the old Passover services came to an end. You see, these days, which were ceremonial Sabbaths were nailed to the cross and came to an end. This is what Paul meant in Colossians 2 when he talked about the Sabbaths that were a shadow of things to come. These ceremonial Sabbaths came once a year like our Thanksgiving or Fourth of July. But the weekly Seventh-day Sabbath was not a shadow of Jesus, and as we learned, it stands always. The Passover Sabbath, our Fourth of July, celebrated their deliverance from Egyptian bondage, it was their independence day. It also showed forth the fact that it was through Jesus, as the blood on the door post, that they were delivered from the destroying angel, as well as from their masters. So, Jesus is our true passover. His blood covers our sin and we will not be destroyed in the punishment of the wicked. We are set free in Him from the enslavement of Satan.

But what about the Seventh-day Sabbath? Is it to be classed with these temporary ceremonial Sabbaths? Of course not. It was never a type or a shadow of Jesus. It was not part of the commandments contained in the ordinances. Rather, the seventh-day Sabbath was given by God in the ten commandments, written on tables of stone in the moral law that was to stand forever—the law which Jesus said will stand as long as heaven and earth shall last. So there's a very definite difference between the ten commandments which are moral commandments and the commandments contained in ordinances which had to do with the ceremonies of the old Jewish dispensation. And it is because the unlearned misapply Bible statements about these different kinds of laws that they become confused.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Change of Sabbath - Part 1

Today I want to answer the question which so many listeners have been concerned about since our first broadcast on the Sabbath question. How did the change take place, substituting Sunday for Saturday as the day of worship? This is possibly one of the most disturbing religious questions among thinking Christians today. Unfortunately, the issue is not examined publicly very often for reasons that we'll consider today. But multitudes have wondered when, how and why the change came about. We have established in previous broadcasts that the Bible itself speaks with absolute consistency on this subject.

In both Old and New Testament there is not a shadow of variation in the doctrine of the Sabbath. The seventh day, Saturday, is the only day ever designated by the term Sabbath in the entire Bible. Not only was Jesus a perfect example in observing the weekly seventh-day Sabbath, but all His disciples followed the same pattern after Jesus had gone back to heaven. Yet no intimation of any change of the day is made. The apostle Paul, who wrote pages of counsel about lesser issues of Jewish and Gentile conflicts, had not one word to say about any controversy over the day of worship. Circumcision, foods offered to idols, and other Jewish customs were readily challenged by early Gentile Christians in the church, but the weightier matter of weekly worship never was an issue. Why? For the simple reason that no change was made from the historic seventh day of Old Testament times, and from creation itself. Had there been a switch from the Sabbath to the first day of the week, you can be sure the controversy would have been more explosive than any other to those Jewish Christians.

If the change did not take place in the Scriptures or through the influence of the apostles, when and how did it happen? In order to understand this, we must understand what happened in that early church soon after the apostles passed off the stage of action. Paul had prophesied that apostasy would take place soon after his departure. He said there would be a falling away from the truth. One doesn't have to read very far in early church history to see just how that prophecy was fulfilled. Gnosticism began to rise up under the influence of philosophers who sought to reconcile Christianity with Paganism. At the same time, a strong anti-Jewish sentiment became more widespread. Very speculative interpretations began to appear regarding some of the great doctrines of Christ and the apostles.

By the time Constantine was established as the emperor of Rome in the early fourth century, there was a decided division in the church as a result of all these factors. I think most of you know that Constantine was the first so-called Christian emperor of the Roman Empire. The story of his conversion has become very well known to students of ancient history. He was marching forth to fight the battle of Milvian Bridge when he had some kind of vision, and saw a flaming cross in the sky. Underneath the cross were the Latin words meaning "In this sign conquer." Constantine took this as an omen that he should be a Christian, and his army as well. He declared all his pagan soldiers to be Christians, and became very zealous to build up the power and prestige of the church. Through his influence great blocks of pagans were taken into the Christian ranks. But, friends, they were still pagan at heart, and they brought in much of the paraphernalia of sun-worship to which they continued to be devoted. We mentioned in a previous broadcast about the adoption of Christmas and Easter into the church. At the same time, many other customs were Christianized and appropriated into the practice of the church as well.

You see, at that time the cult of Mithraism or sun-worship was the official religion of the Roman Empire. It stood as the greatest competitor to the new Christian religion. It had its own organization, temples, priesthood, robes—everything. It also had an official worship day on which special homage was given to the sun. That day was called "The Venerable Day of the Sun." It was the first day of the week, and from it we get our name Sunday. When Constantine pressed his pagan hordes into the church they were observing the day of the sun for their adoration of the sun god. It was their special holy day. In order to make it more convenient for them to make the change to the new religion, Constantine accepted their day of worship, Sunday, instead of the Christian

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

Sabbath which had been observed by Jesus and His disciples. Remember that the way had been prepared for this already by the increasing anti-Jewish feelings against those who were accused of putting Jesus to death. Those feelings would naturally condition many Christians to swing away from something which was held religiously by the Jews. It is therefore easier to understand how the change was imposed on Christianity through a strong civil law issued by Constantine as the Emperor of Rome. The very wording of that law, by the way, can be found in any reliable encyclopedia. Those early Christians, feeling that the Jews should not be followed any more than necessary, were ready to swing away from the Sabbath which was kept by the Jews.

Some of you may be greatly surprised by the explanation I've just made, and I'm not going to ask you to believe it blindly. I have before me a multitude of authorities to verify what has been said. Here are historians, Catholics and Protestants, speaking in harmony about what actually took place in the fourth century. After Constantine made the initial pronouncement and legal decree about the change, the Catholic Church reinforced that act in one church council after another. For this reason, many, many official statements from Catholic sources are made, claiming that the church made the change from Saturday to Sunday. But before I read those statements I shall refer to one from the Encyclopedia Britannica under the article, Sunday. Notice: "It was Constantine who first made a law for the proper observance of Sunday and who appointed that it should be regularly celebrated throughout the Roman empire." Now you can check these statements in your own encyclopedias or go to the library and look into other historical sources.

Here is a statement from Dr. Gilbert Murray, M.A., D.Litt., LL.D., FBA, Professor of Greek at Oxford University, who certainly had no axe to grind concerning Christian thought on the Sabbath question. He wrote: "Now since Mithras was the sun, the Unconquered, and the sun was the Royal Star, the religion looked for a king whom it could serve as a representative of Mithras upon earth. The Roman Emperor seemed to be clearly indicated as the true king. In sharp contrast to Christianity, Mithraism recognized Caesar as the bearer of divine grace. It had so much acceptance that it was able to impose on the Christian world its own sun-day in place of the Sabbath; its sun's birthday, the 25th of December, as the birthday of Jesus." History of Christianity in the Light of Modern Knowledge.

Looking a bit further into historical statements, Dr. William Frederick says: "The Gentiles were an idolatrous people who worshipped the sun, and Sunday was their most sacred day. Now in order to reach the people in this new field, it seems but natural as well as necessary to make Sunday the rest day of the church. At this time it was necessary for the church to either adopt the Gentile's day or else have the Gentiles change their day. To change the Gentiles day would have been an offense and stumbling block to them. The church could naturally reach them better by keeping their day." There it is, friends, a clear explanation by Dr. Frederick as to how this change happened. Another statement very parallel to this one is found in the North British Review.

But let's move on to a statement from the Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 4, p. 153. "The church after changing the day of rest from the Jewish Sabbath or seventh-day of the week to the first, made the third commandment refer to Sunday as the day to be kept holy as the Lord's day."

Now a quote from the Catholic Press newspaper in Sidney, Australia. "Sunday is a Catholic institution and its claims to observance can be defended only on Catholic principles. From the beginning to end of Scripture there is not a single passage that warrants the transfer of weekly public worship from the last day of the week to the first."

The Catholic Mirror of September 23, 1894, puts it this way: "The Catholic Church for over one thousand years before the existence of a Protestant by virtue of her divine mission, changed the day from Saturday to Sunday."

To point up the claims we're talking about, I want to read from two Catechisms. First, from the Convert's Catechism of Catholic Doctrine by Reverend Peter Giermann. "Question: Which is the Sabbath day? Answer: Saturday is the Sabbath day. Question: Why do we observe Sunday instead of Saturday? Answer: We observe Sunday instead of Saturday because the Catholic Church in the Council of Laodicea transferred the solemnity from Saturday to Sunday."

Second, from Reverend Steven Keenan's Doctrinal Catechism we read this: "Question: Have you any other way of proving that the Church has power to institute festivals of precept? Answer: Had she not such power, she could not have done that in which all modern religionists agree with her; she could not have substituted the observance of Sunday, the first day of the week, for the observance of Saturday, the seventh day; a change for which there is no Scriptural authority."

Then from Cardinal Gibbons' book, The Question Box, p.179, "If the Bible is the only guide for the Christian, then the Seventh-day Adventist is right in observing Saturday with the Jew. Is it not strange that those who make the Bible their only teacher should inconsistently follow in this matter the tradition of the Catholic Church?"

One more statement taken from the book, The Faith of Millions, p. 473. "But since Saturday, not Sunday, is specified in the Bible, isn't it curious that non-Catholics who profess to take their religion directly from the Bible and not from the Church, observe Sunday instead of Saturday? Yes, of course, it is inconsistency but this change was made about fifteen centuries before Protestantism was born, and by that time the custom was universally observed. They have continued the custom even though it rests upon the authority of the Catholic Church and not upon an explicit text from the Bible. That observance remains as a reminder of the Mother Church from which the non-Catholic sects broke away like a boy running away from home but still carrying in his pocket a picture of his mother or a lock of her hair."

That is a most interesting statement, is it not, friends? And it is a very true statement. There is some inconsistency somewhere along the line, because we have examined the statements of history, and you can check them for yourself in any library. I'm not reading anything one-sided here at all. I've tried to give you an unbiased picture. Although we have seen the claims made by the Catholic Church in their publications, we are not reading them to cast any reflection upon anyone, by any means. We are simply bringing you a recital of what has been written and what claims have been made.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Change of Sabbath - Part 2

Once upon a time the lines were drawn very clearly in Protestant theology concerning sources of authority. "The Bible and the Bible only" was the rallying cry of Reformation-based movements. Today we look about us to find the spiritual descendants of those true Protestants of the long ago and we hardly recognize what we see. Modernism and higher criticism has taken a terrible toll upon those who once accepted the divine credentials of the Bible. For this reason, it's no longer a great source of theological concern that some modern religious practices have no basis at all in the Scriptures. And I refer to theological leaders when I say that, friends, not to the average layman. Multitudes of Protestant laymen are hungry for the old-time Bible ring of Scriptural sermons. They still want to know that every doctrine has its roots in a plain, "Thus saith the Lord."

It's from among these Bible-loving Christians that the question is so often raised, "Why do we keep Sunday instead of the Bible Sabbath?" You see, they study their Bibles enough to know that there's no mention of any first-day observance at all in the Scriptures. Friends, there should be a million more concerned Christians studying to find a Bible answer for their beliefs and practices. What saith the Bible? This should be the only question in regard to doctrine. Often ministers will comfort the conscientious questioner with the assurance that some change was made in the Sabbath somewhere back there in antiquity, but they never produce the text, friends, because that's the strange missing text of the Bible. No change was made in the days of Jesus or the apostles. You'll find no Bible record of such an occurrence.

I want you to notice what a well-known Baptist author said about this peculiar omission in the Bible. Dr. Edward Hiscox is the author of The Baptist Manual and some other books also. In a speech before a group of ministers, he said this: "There was and is a commandment to keep holy the Sabbath day but that Sabbath day was not Sunday. It will be said, however, and with some show of triumph that the Sabbath was transferred from the seventh to the first day of the week. Where can the record of such a transaction be found? Not in the New Testament, absolutely not. Of course, I quite well know that Sunday did come into use in early Christian history as a religious day as we learn from the Christian Fathers and other sources, but what a pity that it comes branded with the mark of paganism, and christened with the name of the Sun God, when adopted and sanctioned by the papal apostasy, and bequeathed as a sacred legacy to Protestantism."

Well, that's a very interesting statement, dear friends, and it summarizes what a lot of other Protestant leaders have also thought and said about this subject of the Sabbath. In fact, we could go on here giving other statements. Here's what Sir William Domville of the Church of England had to say about this matter. "Centuries of the Christian era passed away before Sunday was observed by the Christian Church as the Sabbath. History does not furnish us with a single proof or indication that it was at any time so observed previous to the Sabbatical edict of Constantine in 321 A. D."

The Presbyterians have this to say in the Christian at Work. "So some have tried to build the observance of Sunday upon apostolic command whereas the apostles gave no command on the matter at all. The truth is, as soon as we appeal to the littera scripta, that is the literal writing of the Bible, the Sabbatarians have the best of the argument." Now from the Methodist Theological Compendium we read this: "It is true there is no positive command for infant baptism nor is there any for keeping holy the first day of the week."

Dr. W. R. Dale, a Congregationalist spokesman says this in his book called The Ten Commandments: "It is quite clear that however rigidly or devotedly we may spend Sunday, we are not keeping the Sabbath. The Sabbath was founded on a specific divine command. We can plead no such command for the observance of Sunday. There is not a single line in the New Testament to suggest that we incur any penalty by violating the supposed sanctity of Sunday."

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

The Lutheran position is revealed in the Augsburg Confession of Faith from which I read now. "The observance of the Lord's Day, that is Sunday, is founded, not on any command of God, but on the authority of the church."

The Episcopalian spokesman, Neander, writes in his History of the Christian Religion and Church, "The festival of Sunday, like all other festivals was always only a human ordinance and it was far from the intentions of the apostles to establish a divine command in that respect. Far from them and from the early apostolic church to transfer the laws of the Sabbath to Sunday."

And then in his Ten Rules for Living by Clovis G. Chapell, he says, "We ought to remember that the Sabbath is God's gift to man, that it was given not for the benefit of God but for the benefit of ourselves. It fits into human needs and in this it is like every other of these rules. Not one of them is for God's benefit; all are for ours. We realize, of course, that our Sabbath is not the same as that observed by the Jews. Theirs was the seventh day of the week while ours is the first. The reason we observe the first day instead of the seventh is based on no positive command. One will search the Scriptures in vain for authority for changing from the seventh day to the first. The early Christians began to worship on the first day of the week because Jesus rose from the dead on that day. By and by this day of worship was made also a day of rest, a legal holiday. This took place in the year 321 A. D. Our Christian Sabbath, therefore, is not a matter of positive command."

Now this statement I have just read was taken from Dr. Chapell's little book Ten Rules for Living, page 61. Oh, we could continue, friends, and read from many other Protestant sources these acknowledgements that the Sabbath day hasn't been changed—not in the Bible at least. There's not a text in the Scriptures to indicate that any change did take place or that any change even could take place. Now just in finishing our quotations here, let's refer to two other statements, this time from Catholic sources. One is taken from the American Sentinel. It is a statement by Father Enright, president of the Redemptorist College in America. He says, "It was the holy Catholic Church that changed the day of rest from Saturday to Sunday, the first day of the week, and it not only compelled all to keep Sunday but urged all persons to labor on the seventh day under pain of anathema. Protestants professed great reverence for the Bible and yet by their solemn act of keeping Sunday, they acknowledge the power of the Catholic Church. The Bible says 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy' but the Catholic Church says 'No, keep the first day of the week' and, lo, the entire civilized world bows down in reverent obedience to the command of the holy Catholic Church." Now friends, this is a statement from Father Enright who was then the president of the Redemptorist College in America.

Well, these are only a few of many statements by Protestant spokesmen on the subject of the Sabbath. There's no clearer, simpler subject in the Bible than this one. Because no other day has ever been called the Sabbath except the seventh day. I realize that these thoughts may be new and upsetting to some of you. But, friends, I present these things in love today. We're dealing with a commandment which is found in the very heart of God's great moral law. We're talking about a rule which was written by the very finger of God on imperishable stones. This is not a law that man made. It's a law God made. And these rules still apply. They've never been abrogated. The seventh-day Sabbath is a memorial of creation, the birthday of the world, and the sign of our sanctification. Notice this verse in Ezekiel 20:12. "Moreover also I gave them my sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them." You see, friends, the work of conversion and sanctification in a human heart requires the same creative power that brought the world into existence. So the Sabbath represents that power of a new creature in Christ, just as it memorializes the world brought forth in the beginning. And just as Jesus rested from the work of creation on the seventh-day Sabbath in Genesis 2:1-3, so He rested from His work of redemption in the tomb over the Sabbath in the New Testament after His death.

One of the most blessed promises of the Bible is found in Isaiah 58:13, 14. "If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable; and shalt honour him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Notice that God speaks here as though we're trampling upon His holy Sabbath. He says that we should take our feet off that day and keep it holy. Then the principles of true Sabbath-keeping are laid down. "Not doing thy own way, nor finding thine own pleasures, nor speaking thine own words." What a spiritual exercise we have here, friends. This matter is not just physical. It's a matter of worship in the heart as well as rest in the body.

Some people have said, "Well, if we just rest in our bed on the Sabbath and don't go out to do the physical work, we'll be keeping it holy." Not so. The Bible says that even our thoughts are involved here. The only way we can keep the Sabbath truly is by being in an attitude of worship towards God and having thoughts that have been made spiritual as well as a body that is resting physically. And those who honor Him in Sabbath-keeping, God will bless with the richest measure, causing them to ride upon the high places of the earth. That's a wonderful promise, friends, but the best of all is the one in Isaiah 66:22, 23. It tells how all the redeemed will keep the Sabbath with Jesus in the earth made new. Listen. "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord."

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Counterfeit Sabbath - Part 1 Listen to the audio version Now!

People who live in the Washington, D.C., area generally find great pleasure in taking their friends and relatives who are visiting for a sightseeing tour of the Nation's Capitol. Always high on the list of things to see are the series of monuments and memorials such as the Washington Monument and the Lincoln and Jefferson Memorials.

Can you imagine the confusion, though, if one day as people walk up to the towering Washington Monument they see a sign on it that says "Lincoln Monument" or "Jefferson Monument"? They would demand to know what happened, and they wouldn't take a simple "It was changed" for an answer. They would want to know when, and by whom, and they would demand to see an official act of Congress making the change. Nothing else would suffice.

So it is with the Sabbath that we have been discussing for the last three broadcasts. Some people claim that it has been changed to Sunday. But we have a right to demand to see where and when the change was made. And if the change was made by any less than Jesus Himself, or at least by His immediate followers, the New Testament Bible writers, we would rightly consider it invalid. So what does the Bible say about Sunday, the first day of the week? Is there any spiritual significance attached to it in God's Word? Let us see.

We discussed in our last broadcast that Christ's example from the beginning to the end of His ministry was a Sabbathkeeping example. As we would walk down the street there in Nazareth on a Friday afternoon, we would have seen Jesus and Joseph scurrying about the carpenter shop putting things in order and then closing the door as the sun sank low in the west, for Christ's example was a Sabbathkeeping example. We read that in Luke 4:16, you remember. We discovered a couple of other things that I want us to review for just a moment before we launch into our study. We discovered first of all that the Sabbath was given to man—not just to the Jews, but to man—way back there in the Garden of Eden, because it was part of creation week. While we believe that God is the Creator, we discovered that it was Jesus Christ who was the active agent of creation. Then we read from the Ten Commandments and we discovered there that the very commandment that men forgot is the one that God said to remember. We discovered also that the Ten Commandments is the only part of the Bible written by God's own finger.

Now, the dilemma that we face is that with the counsel of Scripture so crystal clear that we could not misunderstand, why is it that we have two camps in the Christian world, one that believes the first day of the week is the day that Christians ought to observe, the other that believes the seventh day is the Sabbath of Christians, even in post-resurrection time? How can we know which is right?

We have already discovered that we are not concerned with what any church teaches. We are concerned only about what the Word of God says. That is our authority, friend. That is the only place we can turn for help, for security, for a foundation for our faith. We must have a "Thus saith the Lord" and "It is written" for every practice in our Christian experience.

The first day of the week as a day of worship has been quite widely accepted in the Christian world, as you know. But the question which confronts us is, Why? Surely there must be a reason. Why is it that the majority of Christians admittedly observe a day other than the seventh day of the week? If we are going to call ourselves Christians, then it goes without saying that we are going to take as authority for our belief the Word of God. If that is true, then it is only logical to conclude that we must find a Bible reason for setting aside a day that is so plainly spoken of in Scripture. And so the thing we want to do is to examine for just a few moments the basis on which Sunday finds its way into the Christian church. We are going to examine what the Bible has to say about the first day of the week.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

We will not find the word "Sunday" there, since, with the exception of "Sabbath" and "the preparation," the Bible uses only numbers to designate the days of the week. We need to start back in the book of beginnings. We are going to see if we can discover the foundation upon which Sunday observance rests. Our first pillar is Genesis 1:5. This, of course, is the account of creation week. Notice carefully, "And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night, And the evening and the morning were the first day." Now, it says nothing here about the day being holy, being sacred, being set aside as a day of worship. It says nothing about it other than listing it in the creation narrative. It does tell us one important thing, and that is that "the evening and the morning were the first day."

You see, the Bible day begins at evening, or at sundown. As we go on through Genesis 1, we discover that the evening and the morning were the second day, and so on. The Bible day begins at sunset. We haven't discovered anything here that would give us any sanction for the first day of the week as a day of worship, or any other day, for that matter. So let's turn now to the texts that are in the New Testament concerning the life of our Lord that mention the first day of the week.

We have come to the experience of our Lord to see just what the New Testament tells us about the first day of the week, because we must have a "Thus saith the Lord" for this Christian practice. You see in Matthew 28:1, 2: "In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre." You will recognize this immediately as the account of the crucifixion—the resurrection weekend of our Lord. This is simply Matthew's account of the events that took place. Here again, this text doesn't tell us much, but notice it says, "in the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week." You see, it makes a distinction between the Sabbath and the first day of the week. This is the first mention of the first day of the week in the New Testament, but it doesn't give us much help. All right, let's go on.

We go to the Gospel according to Mark. You will find these next few references are parallel accounts of this same crucifixion-resurrection weekend. Mark 16:1, 2: "And when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him. And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun." This doesn't tell us much—just a simple narrating of the events. Notice now in verse 9 in this same chapter, Mark 16:9, "Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils." Here again we have just an historical account—nothing setting one day apart above another—simply telling us that this was the day on which Jesus arose.

Now to the next Gospel account, Luke 23 and 24. Let's begin with Luke 23:54-56. "That day was the preparation, and the sabbath drew on." (This was the day on which Jesus was crucified, the sixth day of the week, or the day we commonly call Friday. The Christian world, of course, calls this day Good Friday.) "That day was the preparation, and the sabbath drew on. And the women also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid. And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the sabbath day according to the commandment."

Our next text, Luke 24:1, reads: "Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them." Here again, we find nothing about the first day of the week being sacred, and notice this is the Sabbath when Jesus was in the tomb. It would seem logical that if ever there was an excuse for the disciples to treat a bit lightly the seventh day of the week, they might have had excuse here. Christ had been crucified. He was now in the tomb; His body needed to be prepared for burial. Apparently they were still concerned about Sabbath observance, because as the Sabbath drew on they returned to their homes and "rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment," after the death of our Lord. We have discovered nothing there about the first day of the week being holy, either.

Now we go to John's account. This is the last of the Gospel narratives. John 20:1 reads: "The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre." Nothing here that will help us, either; but just across the page we find another text, verse 19. Notice, please, what it says: "Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you." Now here is a record of a first-day-of-the-week meeting in the New Testament, after the resurrection of our Lord. There is no question about it. But, I would like to ask you a question here: Were the disciples here in honor of the resurrected Lord? "Well," you say, "Absolutely! It says so right in that verse, 'The same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled in honor of the resurrection.'" No it doesn't say that. It says, "where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews." Were they celebrating the resurrection here? Absolutely not! Why, they didn't even believe that Christ had risen from the grave. They weren't setting aside the new day of worship; they weren't meeting in honor of the resurrection; they weren't meeting in honor of anything. They were scared to death—that is what it says. Their Master had just been crucified; they didn't know but that as His followers, the same fate might befall them. So, they were meeting in the upper room, not in honor of the resurrection, but "for fear of the Jews." They were talking over their plight—Where do we go from here?—What happens now? And as we read on in this chapter we notice that Jesus came and spoke to them and convinced them that He had risen from the grave, and they were startled. They thought they had seen a ghost, because they had not yet believed that Jesus had risen from the grave. So, we certainly cannot discover from this text that this has anything to do with Sunday sacredness, or with anyone keeping a day holy.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Counterfeit Sabbath - Part 2 Listen to the audio version Now!

For over forty years the world's scientific community accepted without question a colossal hoax simply because it looked like great evidence to support a theory that they believed in. Now let me make it clear that they didn't believe this theory because it was scientific but only because they wanted to believe it.

The fraud that took in the bulk of scientists for forty years was the Piltdown man, passed off by its discoverers as conclusive proof of man's evolution from lower animals. No one ever seriously investigated it for more than forty years. Then finally a doubter insisted on a closer inspection and discovered that the skull had been deliberately altered to look like an ancient half-man, half-ape and was nothing but a hoax. The scientists believed in Piltdown because they believed in evolution; they wanted to find evidence for their theory, so they fell hook, line, and sinker for the Piltdown hoax.

We must be very careful, friends, about what we accept as fact. Even though it seems to fit what we have been taught and we want to believe it, we must be careful to check it out and see if it really is true. For example, take the texts we have been discussing in recent broadcasts. These are texts that mention the first day of the week. We must be careful to ask ourselves about each one. Do any of them actually say that Sunday is a day of worship? It is possible for some to read things into the texts because they want to believe Sunday is sacred.

Last time we considered all but two of the texts in the Bible that mention the first day of the week. Now we will turn to the next reference, Acts 20: 7. I want you to notice it carefully. "And upon the first day of the week when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow: and continued his speech until midnight." Here it is. Here is a meeting of the disciples on the first day of the week. Now, let me ask several questions here, and I want you to listen very carefully, because the answers to these questions are most important. First of all, if we discovered that the disciples were meeting on the first day of the week, that they were celebrating the Lord's Supper and that they were having a religious service, a preaching service, would that make that day holy? Here is another question. Does the meeting of Christian people on any day of the week set that day aside as a day for Christians to worship? Here is another question. Just exactly what day of the week was it that the disciples met here together? I want us to look very carefully now at this text. Acts 20: 7, 8. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight. And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together."

Now, you will remember that we read back in Genesis 1, "The evening and the morning were the first day." We discovered that the evening, in Bible reckoning, the dark part of the day comes first. Now, let me ask you: If this were the dark part of the first day of the week it would be the time we now call Saturday night. The New English Bible interestingly enough says, "On the Saturday night, when we met in our assembly for the breaking of bread, Paul, who was to leave next day, addressed them and went on speaking until midnight." The dark part of the first day of the week would be what we call now Saturday night.

The disciples met on Saturday night. They broke bread together. Now, we have another thing to discover here. Does the breaking of bread make a day holy? Will you turn back to the book of Acts, the second chapter for just a moment, Acts 2:46. "And they (speaking of the disciples), continuing daily with one accord in the temple, and breaking bread from house to house, did eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart." Here is the record. They were breaking bread every day. And remember, Jesus gave them the communion service, the Lord's Supper, on what day of the week? It was what we now call Thursday night, the night before His crucifixion, you see, which was on

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

Friday. Then, if we are going to say that when the disciples met together to break bread, it makes the day holy, we are going to have to keep Thursday night. The point is simply this, Christian people meeting together to break bread does not make the day holy.

There is something else here in this text that we ought to notice. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, (we discovered that this was Saturday night) Paul preached unto them." You remember the story—Eutychus was sitting in the window, fell asleep and fell out and fell to his death below. They went down and God miraculously brought the man to life again. Then Paul preached on through the rest of the night, it says, and the next morning which would be Sunday morning, he walked nineteen miles across the isthmus to Assos and caught a ship. This is Sunday morning. Now, if Paul has a new belief, if Paul has a new day to put in place of an old one, that had been taken out of the way, then he made a terrible mistake here, didn't he?

The point, I think, is evident, friends, there is nothing in this text that even suggests that the first day of the week was the day that had taken the place of the Sabbath that God had given to mankind. Of course not! Why should God change the day that was a token of His creative power? God was still the Creator; why should He change the memorial of that occasion? We discover from the pages of the New Testament that He did not.

We have another text to look at. 1 Corinthians 16:1, 2. "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." Now, at first reading someone may feel it suggests here that we are to go to church and give an offering on the first day of the week. But, is that what the verse says? "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store." You see, Paul was making a missionary journey here and they had had quite a time of poverty and privation back in Jerusalem. So he sent a letter out and said, "Now, if you will set aside some funds for the poor saints back in Jerusalem, I'll pick it up. But do that the first day of the week before you go out and start up a new week of business, and then it will all be taken care of and you won't have to do the bookkeeping after I get there." That is what he is saying here. There is nothing suggested about going anywhere and giving an offering, not at all. We certainly have no evidence here upon which to base the change of the Sabbath from Saturday to Sunday.

We only have one text left in the New Testament, and really, we are going to discover that this doesn't say what it is purported to say at all. We looked at it in an earlier broadcast; Revelation 1:10. The apostle John, speaking under inspiration, says, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet." John simply says that he was under special inspiration on this day. On which day? On a day he calls "the Lord's day."

If you were to look it up in a dictionary, you might discover that under "Sunday" it would say "The first day of the week, the Lord's day." Now, our beliefs are not shaped by the dictionary, but by the word of God. So we must ask, "which day does the Bible say is the Lord's day?" We discovered that the Lord has a day (Revelation 1:10), that Jesus said that He was "The Lord of the Sabbath day (Matthew 12:8), and that the seventh day is the Sabbath of which He is Lord (Exodus 20:10). As we put together three texts, letting the Bible explain itself, we discover that the Lord does have a day, that the Sabbath is the day of which He is Lord, and that the seventh day is the Sabbath. So really, friend, we can't base the keeping of another day than the Bible Sabbath upon any of the verses that we have discovered here. Interestingly enough that is all of the texts anywhere in the New Testament that even suggest the first day of the week. However, we haven't solved our dilemma, have we?

God is not taken unaware by anything that happens. God knew that there would come into the Christian church a time of apostasy and falling away. As a matter of fact, the apostle Paul writes about that. There were some of the believers in Thessalonica that believed Christ was going to come within the next few months. The apostle writes to them, to assure them that there were some things that must take place yet before Jesus would come. 2 Thessalonians 2:3 says, "Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day (the second coming of Christ) shall not come except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God."

Here, dear friends, is an amazing prophecy. God tells us that there would come a great apostasy from within the church. This rebellious power "opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God." God said through the apostle Paul that a great apostasy would take place before Christ would come back. Friends, scarcely were the bodies of the disciples cold in their graves before this apostasy began. As a matter of fact, it tells us in verse 7, "The mystery of iniquity doth already work." Already there was beginning to come this compromise and apostasy into the early church.

During this time in sacred history, one after another of the apostles died and other men rose to take their places. One after another of the great beliefs, the great teachings of Scripture, were compromised. It was during this time, for instance, that baptism by immersion was replaced by baptism by sprinkling. It was at this time that prayers to God became replaced by prayers to the saints. We could go down the list of Christian truths and notice how one after another of them was compromised. It didn't happen overnight. It took a period of generations in some instances. However, it isn't difficult for us to see how that could happen, because many have told us that the thing that has been a great concern to them is that the standards in their own churches are crumbling. It seems in just one short lifetime that virtually every Christian standard has been compromised and pushed aside in the interest of popularity by some church. Then, it isn't hard for us to see how this compromise could come into the Christian church back there, and that is exactly what happened.

The Sabbath was one of those truths that were compromised. Let me explain just very briefly how it happened, and if you remember your history from this period, this will be familiar to you. At the beginning of the Christian era Sunday was popularly observed through the Roman world by public services in which hymns were chanted and prayers offered. As Christianity made its first impact on the people of that age, it was violently opposed by paganism. Scarcely had a century passed before semi-Christian philosophers were teaching in the church. Many of them taught that there was some good in all systems of religion and advocated the adoption of various pagan rites and practices.

For example, the peoples of the East had long been accustomed to worship with their faces toward the rising sun. Although this custom was vigorously condemned by Old Testament prophets (Ezekiel 8:15, 16), the new teachers encouraged the Christians to face east in prayer, "as the type of Christ, the Sun of Righteousness."

Church leaders who desired to win the pagans to Christianity endeavored to minimize the differences and multiply the points of resemblance between the two systems. Since Sunday was the day upon which God began the creation and upon which Christ arose from the dead, ingenious teachers suggested that Christians might appropriately worship upon the first day of the week. Over the course of decades, the fusion of the two philosophies became a reality.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Counterfeit Sabbath - Part 3 Listen to the audio version Now!

An archaic remnant of early American history still exists on the law books of most of the United States. I am speaking of the so-called Blue Laws that restrict various activities of Sunday. The laws are religious and discriminatory but tradition still keeps them on the books. For example, in one state it is illegal to shave on Sunday, and in another it is illegal for a man to kiss his wife in public on Sunday. One state allows you to open your barber shop on Sunday, but not your beauty shop. In others you can buy alcohol but not milk, comic books but not clothes, hammers but not nails, and on and on.

There are the Sunday laws based on a belief in the sacredness of Sunday. But as we are seeing in recent broadcasts, there is no scriptural basis for observing Sunday as a day of worship.

Here is an interesting statement by Dr. Edward Hiscox, author of the Baptist manual, from a paper before a Baptist minister's conference in New York a number of years ago; "There was and is a commandment to keep holy the sabbath day, but that sabbath day was not Sunday. It will be said, however, and with some show of triumph that the Sabbath was transferred from the seventh to the first day of the week, with all of its duties, privileges, and sanctions. Earnestly desiring information on this subject which I have studied for many years, I ask, where can the record of such a transaction be found? Not in the New Testament, absolutely not. There is no Scriptural evidence of the change of the Sabbath institution from the seventh to the first day of the week." Notice his concluding thought. "What a pity that Sunday comes branded with the mark of paganism, christened with the name of the sun god, then adopted and sanctioned by the papal apostasy and bequeathed as a sacred legacy to Protestantism." Now, friends, that is a pretty strong statement. Here is another one of interest by Dean Stanley, a historian in his book, Lectures on the Eastern Church. "The retention of the old pagan name, dies solas, day of the sun, (Sunday) for the weekly Christian festival is in great measure owing to the union of pagan and Christian sentiment, with which the first day of the week was recommended... to pagan and Christian alike as the 'venerable day of the sun.'"

Could it be then that we will have to change the support for Sunday? We found nothing for it in Scripture. Could it be that we have to revise the pillars, the foundation upon which Sunday is based? Friends, on the basis of our study in this series, I think we can come to no other conclusion. I think we are led to agree that the first day of the week is based, not on Scripture, not upon a command of our Lord's, not upon a "thus saith the Lord," but upon tradition.

Now, I want to say this as kindly as I know how. We must take one more look for a moment in the Old Testament for I want to show you that God is never caught unaware. God foresaw this change centuries before it came about. The book of Daniel was written about seven hundred years before Christ. Daniel is describing a vision which he had and he is describing an apostate power that was to arise. Notice his description. Daniel 7:25. "And he (that is this great apostate power) shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High (persecution, you see) and think to change times and laws." God says through the prophet Daniel here that a religious power would arise and actually seek to change God's Law. We can see that is just exactly what happened. A religious power arose in the form of the apostate church and sought to put in place of the day that God had given, a man-made institution. Is it any wonder that Jesus had so much to say during His ministry about "in vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines, the commandments of men?"

In 321 A.D., the pagan Roman emperor, Constantine, passed a civil statute setting aside Sunday as a civil day of rest. That was the first civil Sunday law.

How long was it before Sunday became common Christian practice? I want to read a sentence from Socrates, a historian in the fifth century (not to be confused with Socrates, the Greek philosopher) Writing in 440 A.D., he says, "Although almost all churches throughout the world celebrate the sacred mysteries (or the Lord's Supper) on the Sabbath every week, yet the Christians at Alexander and at Rome, on account of some ancient tradition, have ceased to do this." Did you catch the significance of that statement? For nearly five centuries almost all of the Christians of the world were still keeping the Sabbath, except at Rome and Alexandria where this compromise began to come in.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

Now, someone says, "That is all very clear, but there is one thing that bothers me very much. How about all of the Christians who have lived and died keeping earnestly and honestly another day? What is God going to do with them?" May I share with you an illustration that I think will help clarify that question? Let's say that a lady goes down to the dry goods store in your city to buy some yardage. The clerk measures it off there on the counter and she takes it home and stretches it out on the floor and lays the pattern out on it. But, it won't quite fit, and she thinks. Why, that is strange. I wonder why that is." Then she turns the pattern all around, but it just won't go on that material. So, she wraps it all up and puts it back in the sack and takes it back to the store. Laying it down on the counter, she says, "You short changed me." The man is embarrassed and says, "I am terribly sorry; let's see." Then he stretches it out on the yardstick there and it measures just right. Now, she is embarrassed, and so she takes it back home rather crestfallen and stretches it out on the livingroom floor again and gets the pattern down and very carefully places it just as the instructions say. But, lo and behold, it comes out short. She just can't figure it out. So, she gets out a yardstick and she measures it. Sure enough, according to her yardstick, it is short. She wraps the material back up again and this time with the material under one arm and the yardstick under the other, she marches back down to the store, saying, "This is short! I measured it by my own yardstick." So, he lays her yardstick out on the counter with his and finds that they are a different length. Now, who is right? Well, the only thing they can do is to have a man from the Bureau of Standards come and, with an official yardstick, measure to see which one is right. Sure enough, the one that was built into the counter years ago is short.

Now, the man who owns the store feels very badly, but the history of the store is like this. Many years before, a man built the store and in building the counter had a yardstick built in that was intentionally short. He figured that over the course of years he could measure off the material and save a little. That way he would be adding a little to his profit. Some years later, he retired and willed the store to his son. The son knew nothing about the short yardstick. So, all during the time he owned the store he had sold material by this short yardstick. Then the son sold the store to its present owner, who also knew nothing about the shortage, and through the years he has sold material there, too.

Let me ask you a question. Was the man guilty who built the store and built this short yardstick into it in the beginning? Absolutely! Was the son who inherited it and sold, as far as he knew, a good yard's worth of material every time, was he guilty? Absolutely not! He was living up to the best of what he knew; he was being an honest man. Was the present owner being dishonest up until this time. No, of course not. He thought he was giving full measure. Ah, but listen. Now, when the light comes to the owner and he sees that that yardstick is short, now he has a new responsibility, doesn't he. He must make a correction in his dealings. Do you see the point?

Back there in those days when the Sabbath was changed, when that short measure was put into the yardstick, that power which made that change is guilty and stands before God condemned. But, all of the honest people who through the centuries have kept the man-made day, living up to the best of their ability, following God to the best of their knowledge, God takes that into account for He only holds us responsible for what we know—for what we understand of His will. All through these years, I am sure there are many here who have been keeping Sunday, honestly and earnestly desiring to do the Lord's will, and God doesn't count that against us. However, when the light comes, then there comes with it a responsibility, doesn't there?

We have one more text to read. I want us to look at it because these are words from the lips of our Lord, and they are so important in our study that we cannot ignore them. The verse is scarcely one line long. John 14:15, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." We keep the Sabbath because we love Jesus Christ, and that is the only reason.

An evangelist was studying with a lady, and when he came to this subject, she invited the pastor of her church for the study. They had a wonderful time fellowshiping together. Then, after they were through with the study, she turned to the pastor of her church and said, "Pastor, how about it? What do you think about this Sabbath business." He said to her, "Well, what he says here is true and it is all right, but really, I don't think it makes much difference. I don't think there is anything for us to be concerned about."

Oh, friend, listen, some day that minister and the evangelist are going to stand before the judgment bar of God, and either it makes a difference or it doesn't. Either Sunday is the day which Christians ought to keep, or the Sabbath is the day which Christians ought to keep, because we have discovered the Lord has a day. As we stand before the judgment and God says "You kept the wrong day—you disobeyed me." Do you know what I am going to say? I am going to turn to Matthew and I am going to say, "Matthew, I very earnestly and very carefully studied your book, seeking to know the Lord's will for my life. You lived with Jesus, you knew about the change, why didn't you leave it for me to read?" Then I am going to turn to Mark and I am going to say, "Mark, why didn't you record that in your gospel? It is the shortest one. Your's is just summary, but surely this was one of the most important things Jesus ever did. Why didn't you leave us a record of it." Then I am going to turn to Luke and say "Luke, you were a physician, you were a careful historian. Why is it that you didn't say something about the change?" Then, I am going to turn to John, the disciple Jesus loved, and say, "John, why didn't you tell us? You told us what it meant to love Jesus; you told us how we should follow Him because we love Him. Why didn't you say something about a new day of worship in the place of the Sabbath?" Then I am going to turn to Paul and say, "Paul, you wrote half the New Testament. You were the apostle to the Gentiles, and yet you said not one word about a new day of worship taking the place of the old. Why not?" Then, very reverently, I am going to turn to Jesus and say, "Lord, my only desire in life was to do Your will. My only goal was to be what You wanted me to be. My only desire was to please You in everything I did. I earnestly searched for some word to the contrary to what I was doing, but I found nothing. Why didn't you leave that record?"

On the judgment day, friend, if God says, "Joe, you kept the wrong day," that is what I am going to do. But if in the judgment day, a Sunday keeper comes up and God says, "Why did you keep the wrong day?" to whom can he turn?

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Eighteen Reasons - Part 1 Listen to the audio version Now!

Proponents of the growing humanist movement are attempting to change the social fabric of our times with their radical new labels for old sins. The most amazing thing is that many theological leaders are beginning to approve this liberal permissiveness. For a long time there has been a gradual slackening of support for the Ten Commandments, even in religious circles. The obsession for more freedom has led to a denial of any absolute standard of right or wrong. To support the extreme liberalism of such a position, many are suggesting that the Ten Commandments were abolished at the time Jesus died on the cross. Texts are being cited in support of this strange, doctrinal departure from the faith. Today we're going to examine some of these texts and show how unreasonable the current interpretation has become.

So many times people say, "Well, the law of Moses was nailed to the cross and that included the Ten Commandment law, so we don't want anything to do with it." It is true that some ordinances came to an end at the cross, but let's be careful to identify these ordinances correctly. Were the Ten Commandments nailed there, and did they cease to operate at the time Jesus died? Let's notice a text in Ephesians 2:15. "Having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments contained in ordinances; for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace." Now this does say that a law of commandments containing ordinances was nailed to the cross. It apparently was abolished, it says, through Christ. But what commandments were those? Let's read on in another text, Colossians 2:14. "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross."

Now notice, friends, which law is being dealt with here. It says that one was blotted out—it was apparently a law that was against us, contrary to the Christian. Paul goes on in verses 16 and 17 to explain which law he is talking about and which ordinances are meant. "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days: Which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ." Now here he spells it out for us. He says the laws which he's talking about and the ordinances involved here are the ones having to do with meats and drinks and new moons and things which are a shadow of things to come. There's nothing in the Ten Commandment law at all that's a shadow. It's all plain, solid commandments intended for all the world. In fact, it's the foundation of God's government. Somebody asks, "Well, what about the Sabbath days mentioned here? Does that refer to the seventh-day Sabbath? Is it shadowy? Is it something that was to be nailed to the cross and done away with?" No, this reference to sabbaths does not refer to the Ten Commandments at all, or to the seventh-day Sabbath of the Ten Commandments.

You see, there were certain yearly sabbath days that had nothing at all to do with the moral law of the Ten Commandments. These sabbaths came once a year and they came on certain, set days that put them on a different day of the week every year. Let's read a description of them back in Leviticus 23, beginning with verse 24. You'll discover that there were four of these yearly sabbaths or Jewish festivals spoken of here in this particular chapter, and all of them were looking forward to or pointing forward to the great deliverance from sin which would come through Christ. "Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a sabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation." This festival came on a certain, set date every year and was called a yearly sabbath. It was a shadow or type of the coming of Christ as the Saviour. In verses 27, 32 and 34, other yearly sabbaths are brought to view in which people were to rest. And then, finally, in verses 37 and 38, it's all summed up—these yearly festivals or ceremonial sabbaths. "These are the feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, . . . everything upon his day: Beside the sabbaths of the Lord."

There it is. Notice how the yearly, shadowy sabbaths are clearly separated from and distinguished from the seventh-day Sabbath of the Lord. They were included in the

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

ceremonial law of Moses, but the sabbath of the Lord was in the heart of the moral Ten Commandment law. There's great confusion unless these two codes of law are recognized and kept separate. Remember that man had the least to do with the Ten Commandments than with any other part of the Bible. God spoke that Law directly to the people and they heard it with their ears. Deuteronomy 4:12, 13. "And the Lord spoke unto you out of the midst of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; only ye heard a voice. And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone."

God first spoke it, then He wrote it with His own fingers on tables of stone, then Moses was commanded to put those tablets inside the Ark of the Testament. Now let's think of the law of the ordinances for a moment. They were rules which concerned the sacrificial offering, circumcision, and typical feasts pointing forward to Christ. God did not speak these things directly to people. He gave them to Moses to deliver to the people. God did not write them at all. Moses wrote them. They were not graven on stones, but written in a book. The book was not placed inside the Ark, but in the sides of it. Notice the text in Deuteronomy 31:24. "And it came to pass, when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished, that Moses commanded the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, saying, Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee." We are told in Psalm 111:7 and 8 that the law of God is eternal. But these ordinances were blotted out and abolished. They had nothing to do with the Ten Commandments. They were dealing only with the typical, ceremonial, shadowy ordinances.

Perhaps the clearest distinction could be made by asking a few questions. The day before Jesus died, a man who was guilty of sin was under obligation to bring a sin offering as an expression of faith that God would accept him and forgive him. It was a sin for that man to refuse to show his faith in this way. But was it a sin for that man to refuse to bring an offering the day following Jesus' death? You say, "No, because the blood of Jesus had been shed and no one needed to kill any sacrifice again because Christ had come." Now let me ask you this: Was it sin to break the Ten Commandments the day before Jesus died? Of course it was. And it was a sin to steal, kill, or break the Sabbath, the day after He died as well. It was just as wrong to break any of those Ten Commandments the next day as it was the day before He died. Then we have to admit that the two laws were different, and they were not on an equal basis after Jesus died. The ceremonial law came to an end right there. The sacrifices no longer continued beyond the cross. They were nailed to it. Those things were contrary to the Christian because they were only pointing forward to Christ. When Christ came, type met anti-type; the shadow had met the substance, and it was no longer necessary to bring sacrifices.

Let's recognize then, that we're dealing with two laws; one of a ceremonial, temporary nature that existed until the cross, and the other one, the Ten Commandment law of God, which is eternal, and which continues, and which applies to all men of all times and generations. This is not some strange teaching, by the way, because I have before me now the BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER of the Church of England, and under the Articles of Religion I read these words: "Although the law given from God by Moses as touching ceremonies and rites, do not bind Christian men, yet notwithstanding no Christian man whatsoever is free from the obedience of the commandments which are called moral."

Here you see the two distinct codes of law—the ceremonies and the moral Ten Commandments. This agrees perfectly with what John Wesley said about the two laws in his book SERMONS ON SEVERAL OCCASIONS, Volume 1. He says this: "The ritual or ceremonial law delivered by Moses to the Children of Israel containing all the injunctions and ordinances which related to the old sacrifices our Lord did indeed come to destroy, to dissolve, and utterly abolish. But the moral law contained in the Ten Commandments and enforced by the prophet, Christ did not take away. It was not the design of His coming to revoke any part of this." The great reformer, Martin Luther, subscribed to that same doctrine. In his SHORTER CATECHISM we read this question: "Are we under obligation to keep the ceremonial law of the Jews? Answer: No, the ordinances which it enjoined were only types and shadows of Christ and were fulfilled by his death. This distinction between the Jew and Gentile was now removed. The ceremonial law was abolished. Question: Are we under obligation to keep the moral law? Answer: Yes, because it is founded on the nature of God and cannot be changed. It is of universal application which was impossible with respect to the ceremonial laws. Christ demands obedience to this law."

And now maybe we should have a statement from the noted world evangelist, Billy Graham, taken from his MY ANSWER column in the newspaper. Here's the question: "Some people I know tell me that the Ten Commandments are part of the law and do not apply to us today. They say that as Christians we are free from the law. Is that right?" And here's the answer that Billy Graham gave in his newspaper column: "No, it is not right. And I hope you'll not be misled by these false opinions. It is very important to understand what the New Testament means when it says that Christians are free from the law. It certainly does not mean that they're free from the obligations of the moral law of God and are at liberty to sin."

You see, the word "law" is used by the New Testament writers in two senses. Sometimes it refers to the ceremonial law of the Old Testament. This ceremonial law was of a passing character and was done away when Christ came. From this law Christians are indeed free, but the New Testament also speaks of the moral law which is of a permanent, unchanging character and is summarized in the Ten Commandments. This law sets forth God's demands on human life and man's duty to God and his neighbor. That it definitely applies to the Christian is made clear in Romans 13, and with that statement of Billy Graham I heartily concur.

And so, friends, with that we let the case rest today. The law of God has not been abolished. The Ten Commandments are just as strong and binding today upon the world as they were when God wrote them. In spite of the fact that many theologians are not in agreement and many college and university young people do not want to accept it, the Word of God speaks out loud and clear on this subject.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Eighteen Reasons - Part 2 Listen to the audio version Now!

One of the most frequent questions raised about the keeping of the seventh-day Sabbath concerns the authenticity of our present calendar. It is believed by many that somehow, somewhere, time has probably been lost in the centuries since calendars were first invented. This does raise an interesting issue, and one that should be explored thoroughly. If the days of the week have been confused and the weekly cycle changed, then it would be impossible to discover the true seventh-day Sabbath as the one specified by the Ten Commandments. So in today's broadcast we'll just answer questions that have been raised by those who seek to discredit the observance of a certain day of the week for the Sabbath. In particular I'll consider actual objections that have been made to the keeping of Saturday, the seventh day of the week on our present calendar.

This is more than a passing interest since there is presently a world opinion move to seek a complete change in the calendar. But does this move reflect upon the accuracy of our calendar? Has time possibly been lost or confused in the recording of days, weeks, and years? Let's briefly examine the origin of our Gregorian calendar. The calendar was first invented—at least the one upon which our present calendar has been based—by Julius Caesar before Christ was born. This calendar was made up of 365 1/4 days. This was giving room for the leap year that comes every fourth year. Actually, however, instead of being exactly 365 1/4 days in length, the year was approximately 11 minutes less than that. So in the course of a few centuries the calendar was not in harmony with the solar system. That may not seem like very much time, but over a period of hundreds of years, it would accumulate in the numbering of the calendar and throw it out of harmony with the stars and the heavenly bodies.

By 1582 the numbering of the calendar was out of harmony with the heavenly bodies by ten days, so Pope Gregory XIII adjusted this condition by calling October 5th the 15th. Let's try to imagine a calendar for a moment. It's Thursday, October 4, 1582. The next day, of course, should be Friday, October 5th, but instead of making Friday the 5th, it was called the 15th instead; so ten days were dropped from the numbering. Great Britain made this adjustment in 1752 and it was necessary to retrench 11 days at that time, making September 3rd, September 14th. Under the present plan we retrench a day once every 129 years. Notice that the weekly cycle is not affected by the change that was made. It was only in the numbering of the calendar. Friday still followed Thursday. Saturday still followed Friday. The weekly cycle remains historically as it always has—there has never been a change to affect the order of the days of the week, or the weekly cycle itself.

Somebody says, "Time has been lost, surely, in these countless generations." But can we be sure of that? How do we know that the real seventh-day Sabbath of today on our calendar is the very same one, for example, that Jesus kept, and the very same one that was sanctified at the time of creation? A great many have wondered about this. No, time has not been lost and we can be sure of the right Sabbath today. Now follow closely and let's prove this point. The Bible says that in the beginning God made everything in six days and rested the seventh day. There we have the origin of the week. God made the weekly cycle, and woe to the person who tampers with anything God made. After two thousand years roll by, we come to the time when God is leading His people from Egypt to the promised land. During their sojourn in the wilderness for forty years God poured out manna or bread from heaven every day of the week except the Sabbath. Surely God knew which day was the Sabbath then, and it was the very point on which he tested the people. There's no chance of a day or any time being lost down that far, because God Himself was handling the situation.

Then at Mt. Sinai God wrote the Ten Commandments on tables of stone for the children of Israel and He said in Exodus 20:8-11: "Remember the sabbath day...the seventh day is the sabbath...For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth,...wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it." Another two thousand years rolled by and the

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

Son of God was born into the world. He surely would know which day is the Sabbath and whether any days had been lost or added. In Luke 4:16 we read that He kept the Sabbath "as his custom was." No time has been lost thus far. Even Joshua commanding the sun to stand still could not confuse the Son of God as to which day the true Sabbath was. Anyway, God blessed the seventh day and not just the seventh part of time. Some folks say, "He just blessed one day in seven. If we keep that, it's quite sufficient and acceptable." But no, that's not the way the Bible reads, and dare we change or modify any part of God's Holy Scriptures? It says, "the seventh day is the sabbath."

The calendar that is used today is the same as the one that was used in Christ's day except that one slight change we mentioned a moment ago which did not affect the weekly cycle at all. What is more, how could the whole world lose or gain a day when it is impossible for even one family to get confused without their neighbors soon setting them straight? The Jewish race is the most powerful evidence that the Sabbath has never been lost. They've observed every seventh day from the time of Abraham. How could a whole nation lose track of counting time? It would be impossible unless the whole nation just slept over an extra twenty-four hours and then no one ever put them straight about it afterward. But that could never, never happen.

Just in case you still have a question, let me read you some statements from great astronomers of the world. First of all from Edgar Larkin, who is the Director of the Mt. Lowe Observatory. Here's what he said in answer to a letter: "Astronomers dare not depend upon any human device nor human chronologies save as they are attested by the movements of the time pieces in the sky. Our days, weeks, and years only exist as unit measurements in computing the unerring revolutions of the heavenly orbs. Lost or changed time would be instantly detected by the modern astronomer." So you see, no time could ever be lost. If it were, these men would know about it and they would tell us; but on the contrary, they tell us it has never been lost.

Here's a statement from THE NEW ASTRONOMY by Dr. Todd. "The uniformity of the earth's rotation has been critically investigated by Newcomb and no change in the length of the day as great as one one-thousandth of a second in one thousand years could escape detection. For more than three thousand years science has gone backward and with profound research reveals the fact that in that vast period the length of the day has not changed by the hundredth part of a single second of time." That's pretty conclusive, isn't it?

And now a statement by W. W. Campbell, Director of Lick Observatory in Hamilton, California. "The week of seven days has been in use ever since the days of the Mosaic Dispensation and we have no reason for supposing that any irregularities have existed in the succession of the weeks and their present days from that time to the present." I think that's quite sufficient to show that there has been no astronomical loss of time—none whatsoever.

Now we'll move on to another objection that is sometimes raised. Somebody says the law was fulfilled by Christ and we don't have to keep it anymore. How many people have been deceived by this argument! They think Christ kept the law and that ended it for them—they don't have to worry about it at all. Many a sincere person has accepted that kind of reasoning. Let me ask you a question: What kind of person would want to do away with a law that's holy, spiritual, perfect, righteous, truthful, and unchangeable? All these words are used in the Bible to describe the Ten Commandments. And who would want to live in a country where there is no law? In Matthew 5:17 Jesus said, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil."

What does it mean to fulfill, friends? Some folks think that means to bring it to an end, but notice Matthew 3:15: "And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness." There's the same word, even in the original, the word "fulfil." What does it mean? "Fulfil all righteousness" means to obey or fill it up with obedience—that's what it means. It doesn't mean to bring to an end. You'll find that Jesus put emphasis upon the idea that the Law could never be changed or destroyed. In fact He said that whoever would think of breaking even the least of those Ten Commandments and would teach others to do so, would be called the least in the kingdom of heaven. (Matthew 5:17-19.)

Now we ought to examine one more argument that is often used. And that is that we only have two commandments to go by now—love to God and love to man. This reason is often given for not keeping the Sabbath. A minister once said that Jesus did away with the Ten Commandments and gave us only two. But let's look at Matthew 22:37, 39. Jesus said that the first and great commandment is to love God with all thy heart, soul, and mind. And the second is like unto it, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Now verse 40: "On these two commandments hang the law and the prophets." In other words, the Ten Commandments hang on these two great principles—love to God and love to man. It says they're all hanging there, friends. That means the Sabbath commandment must be hanging there among them. If we love God with all our heart, soul and mind, we'll surely want to keep the first four of the Ten Commandments because they have to do with our relation to God. And if we love our neighbor as ourself, we'll want to keep the last six as the standard of a Christian as it relates to our duty to our neighbor. Remember what Jesus said—the first and great commandment is to love God. If a person loves Jesus, he'll want to worship Him, and that's why the Sabbath was given. That's why it is so very, very important to remember.

The Sabbath is a great, wonderful gift from Heaven to us, that we might remember the fact that God created us and that He created all of this world in six days. It verifies week by week the story of creation as found in the Bible. The Sabbath is written into the very heart of the Ten Commandments by the finger of God Himself.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Forgery - Part 1 Listen to the audio version Now!

We've been talking for a few days about the wonderful subject of the Sabbath that was written right into the very Law of God. To begin today I would like to call your attention to a very curious fact. Here it is: Christ and His apostles preached hundreds of sermons and they gave hundreds of Bible studies but never—no, not even one time—do we find a single scriptural reference where either Christ or the disciples told us that the first day of the week is to be considered sacred; nor do we find either Christ or His disciples indicating that the day should be counted as a holy day. This is in spite of the fact that millions of people today believe that somehow Sunday is a special, holy day to be observed as the Sabbath. There are millions of people all over the world who worship on Sunday and keep it as a holy day. Many of them are very great theologians and scholars. Many of them are loyal Christian people who love the Lord with all their heart; and it seems unthinkable, completely incredible, that all these folks—the millions of them—could be content with a doctrine that's not even found in the Bible, and with a holy day that man alone has invented. Yes, it does seem unbelievable; I agree with you, but nevertheless it is true. Herein lies one of the greatest deceptions in modern religious life, because most of the millions who keep Sunday have been assured that it is supported by Bible authority. If there is one such passage in the Bible we want to know about it. I'd like to know about it, and I'm sure you would like to discover that text as well. I say this with all sincerity: if there is such a text in the Bible we must search until it's found. If you know of any such text, please write to me and let me know, because I want to follow that and obey it as a teaching of the Scripture, as a teaching of Christ.

There's only one way that we can be certain of this, and that is to read and examine every single verse in the Bible that even mentions the first day of the week. If there's any place in all the Book of God that says the first day of the week is holy, we ought to be able to find it by reading these passages—every passage that mentions Sunday or the first day of the week. And so today, that's exactly what we're going to do. Somebody will say, "Well, my, that will take a very long time." But, friends, it won't. There are not two hundred passages, for example, that speak about Sunday. There are not even fifty; in fact, there are not even ten. In all the Book of God from cover to cover, there are only nine verses of Scripture that even mention the first day of the week. And I hope that as we read these passages and give a little time for study of each one that you'll listen very carefully and very prayerfully because so much is at stake. Millions of people the world over are involved, and in order to be certain we must know what God says. So that's why we invite your attention to His Word today.

The first Bible text that mentions the first day of the week is found in the first book of the Bible, the first chapter and the fifth verse, and this is what it says: "And God called the light Day, and the darkness he called Night. And the evening and the morning were the first day." Genesis 1:5. Now the first question: Does it even hint that at some time, under certain circumstances, it might become a holy day? No, indeed, it doesn't. Well, we may as well leave that one; and as we leave it, I remind you that it's the only verse in all of the Old Testament that even mentions the first day of the week.

We come now to the New Testament and we'll read a verse from Matthew: "In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre. And, behold, there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it." Matthew 28:1, 2. Once more, is there any command here to keep the day holy? No. Is there any hint that someday people might be supposed to keep it holy? What about it? Of course not—not even the slightest hint in this text. It just simply says that it was on this day, the first day of the week, that Jesus arose from the grave.

"And when the sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him. And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun." Mark 16:1, 2. Now the very first question is easy to answer. Does this text say anything at all about the first day being a holy day? Or, does it hint that it ever will be holy? No, it does not. But there is something here that does need to be pointed out. This text actually proves that the Sabbath is past when the first day of the week comes. That's what it says. It says, "When the sabbath was past, they came and brought their spices on the first day of the week." Have you ever heard anybody call the first day of the week "Sabbath"? Surely you have; I'm certain you have. It's heard in many radio sermons, and maybe you've heard it even in church on Sunday morning. Something like this is usually stated: "We're very happy to have you with us this beautiful Sabbath morning." But, friends, on the authority of Mark 16:1, 2, this is impossible. It's impossible to keep Sabbath on the first day of the week because the Scripture teaches pointedly and plainly that the Sabbath was already past when the first day of the week came; so it is not proper to call the first day of the week the Sabbath.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

- ➤ More Free Books!
- ➤ More Radio Messages!

Let's go on now to the fourth Scripture, found in the same chapter, Mark 16:9: "Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils. And she went and told them that had been with him, as they mourned and wept." Again, does this verse say the day is holy? Or, does it give any hint at all that it ever will be kept holy? No, it just isn't there. It doesn't say that at all. It merely gives the historical account of the fact that Jesus arose on that day, the first day of the week.

Let's pass on now to the next text of Scripture, Luke 24:1-3: "Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them. And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre. And they entered in and found not the body of the Lord Jesus." Now once more, does it say that we should keep the day holy? Is there any hint that in the future sometime the day should be kept holy? Indeed, no. So we have found nothing yet, but we shouldn't be too much alarmed because we still have a number of opportunities left and all it takes is just one verse. We're looking for even one scriptural reference that might give some authorization to keep Sunday. It would be plenty for us if we found one text.

So we come to our sixth opportunity, in John 20:1, 2: "The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre. Then she runneth, and cometh to Simon Peter, and to the other disciple, whom Jesus loved, and saith unto them, They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him." Isn't it a little strange? We have read what the four Gospel writers have to say about Easter Sunday morning and not a single one of them says anything at all about its being a holy day, nor did any of them hint that the Sabbath was changed to the first day of the week. Strange, but very true, just the same. We have considered six of the nine texts and we have found nothing yet, but we still have three more opportunities. So let's look at these next three verses carefully.

The seventh Scripture which mentions the first day of the week is John 20:19: "Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, 'Peace be unto you.'" Some people say, "Ha, there it is. That's the one! I wasn't worried about those others. That's the one I was waiting for you to read." Many people do believe that here is a Scripture that teaches that the disciples were holding a great, Easter resurrection meeting in honor of the resurrection, with the thought in mind of inaugurating that day as a holy day. You may have heard that preached upon, but is that what the Bible says? Does this text say, "Where the disciples were gathered together in honor of the resurrection to inaugurate the keeping of the first day of the week"? Of course not. It doesn't say that at all. It says, "Where the disciples were assembled" for what?—"for fear of the Jews." Now, let's keep our theology straight. The Bible says absolutely nothing about their being there in honor of the resurrection to hold a little meeting to start a new holy day. It says they were gathered there because they were afraid. They had every reason to be afraid, by the way. After all, if the Jews took the life of Christ, certainly they wouldn't hesitate to kill the disciples also; so they went into this room and closed the door. They barred the door, and I suppose they pulled down the window shades and said, "Shhhh, we may be next." That's why they were there. They were afraid. Some people say, "Yes, I believe that. I think they were there because they were afraid, alright; but even though they were afraid, I still say they were there in honor of the resurrection and were inaugurating the keeping of the first day of the week as a holy day in honor of the resurrection." I've heard that repeated, over and over again—but let me tell you frankly, I don't know where it comes from. I promise you one thing: it's not in the Bible. The Scripture teaches the opposite.

Now let's read another verse, from Mark 16:14. Notice how clear and plain this is:

"Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen them after he was risen." Do you see what this text is teaching, friends? This text says that the disciples didn't even believe that Jesus was raised from the dead when they were meeting in that upper room. Then, pray tell me, how can man, women, child, theologian, anyone, anywhere, maintain that this meeting on the first day of the week was in honor of the resurrection to start a new holy day when the Scripture specifically teaches that the disciples did not believe in the resurrection at that time? The women had told them, but they said, "We don't believe it." And afterward, the Scripture says, Jesus came and upbraided them—He scolded them for not believing, when the report came to them. So we can immediately mark off this text. It doesn't say anything at all that would give authority for keeping the first day of the week holy. We still have two more verses to consider, and those two will complete the entire list of nine—nine places in the Bible where the first day of the week is mentioned.

We will keep these last two references until tomorrow and go into them in detail, because if there is any authority at all—if there's any justification for a person to keep Sunday holy—we'll find it in these last two texts of Scripture; so be sure to tune in tomorrow when we complete this interesting and fascinating search for the missing text in the Bible.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Forgery - Part 2 Listen to the audio version Now!

We have been studying now for a number of days about the great Sabbath question, one of the most perplexing, perhaps, that faces modern Christianity. Millions of people have been keeping, sincerely, no doubt, the first day of the week as the Sabbath, the day of rest and worship. Yet right in the middle of God's great ten commandment law there is written the fourth commandment which says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. In it thou shalt not do any work," etc. Now why is it, friends, that millions of people are keeping Sunday, the first day of the week, when actually the Bible commands the keeping of the seventh day of the week, which is Saturday?

In order to find out if there is some Bible authority for these millions to keep the first day of the week, we have been making a search of the Bible. We've been reading every single text of the Bible which mentions the first day of the week. There are only nine in the entire Bible, and we read all except two in yesterday's broadcast. And so we continue today with these last two scriptures in which we must find our authority, if there is any, for keeping Sunday holy. The eighth scripture that mentions the first day of the week is 1 Corinthians 16:1, 2. This is one that is used quite often. Notice what Paul says: "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."

Now some people claim that this is the reason they keep the first day of the week holy. They say that here is a meeting being held every single Sunday, with a collection being taken, indicating that the apostolic Church kept Sunday as a holy day. Now that is what people say, friends, but let me ask you this question: "Is that what the Bible says, really? Does this text say that the first day of the week, or Sunday, is a holy day?" No indeed, my friend. People have tried to make it say that, but it simply doesn't say that at all. It says, "Let every one of you lay by him in store." Now some folks haven't been too clear as to just what that means, and as a result many people have made a Sunday School offering out of this and had meetings being held every Sunday, when the text says absolutely nothing of the kind. It says, "Let every one of you lay by him in store." This was a private thing, a laying aside at home. In fact, that is what a number of Bible versions say. I have it right here in the Spanish version of the Bible. It says in connection with verse 2, "en su casa." Those of you who know Spanish know what that means. That's "your home," or "in your house." Put the money aside in your house. "Lay by him" was a private laying of it at home. A translation from the Eastern text by George Lamsa says, "Put aside and keep in the house." Many English versions say the same thing. Here is Moffatt's, for example: "On the first day of the week let each one of you put aside a sum from his weekly gain." Now honestly and truly and fairly, friends, does this sound to you like a Sunday School offering being taken up each week? Why, of course it doesn't. It was a private laying aside at home.

Perhaps you are wondering about verse one, which mentions a collection. What was that collection all about, anyway? Well, that is a good, fair question, and we ought to answer it. We find that in those days, according to Acts 11: 27-30, "came prophets from Jerusalem unto Antioch. And there stood up one of them named Agabus, and signified by the Spirit that there should be great dearth throughout all the world: which came to pass in the days of Claudius Caesar. Then the disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judaea: Which also they did, and sent it to the elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul." Now friends, this shows that they were having a great drought, and the poor Christians up in Jerusalem were suffering greatly. Paul was writing letters around to all the churches, getting them to contribute to the necessities of the poor, Christian people up at Jerusalem. We read in Romans 15:26: "For it hath pleased them of Macedonia and Achaia to make a certain contribution for the poor saints which are at Jerusalem." Now those passages, along with others, show that Paul had a burden for the people of Jerusalem. There was a terrible famine in Judaea, and in the city of Jerusalem many were starving—but out in Greece

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

and Asia Minor there was plenty of food. So the apostle got to thinking about it and according to the Scripture he wrote letters to those churches and he said to them in effect, "Now you know that our brethren in the churches in Judaea are starving because they don't have enough food to eat, and they don't have clothing to wear. The famine has really been hard. Why don't you help them? And I suggest that you put aside a sum from your weekly gain every first day and when I come we won't have to have a fund raising."

Now friends, I'm convinced that Paul didn't like to take pledges. He didn't want to go around when he got to the church and knock on the doors of the people and say, "Now, Brother Smith, there is a famine over in Jerusalem. How much are you going to pledge to help those people?" He was having it all done ahead of time. He said, "Put it aside, have it ready, and when I come you can bring it in and I will take it with me." Now perhaps you are also wondering, if that is true, why he said to put the money aside on the first day of the week. Well, I think that he had a very good reason for this. These people kept the Sabbath. They even taught the Gentiles to keep the Sabbath. The Christian and the Apostolic Church were Sabbath keepers. Now the Sabbath begins at sundown on Friday night, so these people all worked through the week up to just about sundown—perhaps an hour or so before—and then they closed their businesses and went home. No business was carried on during the Sabbath. Then on Sunday morning they went down to their businesses and took out their books and figured their profit—what they had spent, what they had taken in, what their gross and net profits were—and then they put aside their tithes and paid their bills. So the Apostle suggested that it would be a good time for them right then, on that first day of the week, at the beginning of a new work week, to put aside something for the famine relief fund, and that's why he mentioned the first day of the week.

Now we come to the final text in the Bible which mentions Sunday, or the first day of the week. This one is found in Acts 20 and begins with verse 7. I hope that you will read this passage very carefully, for it is the one that is used most often. If you ask for a Scripture as to why someone keeps Sunday you will most often be given Acts 20, verse 7 and onward. Now let's read these passages: "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight. And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together. And there sat in a window a certain young man named Eutychus, being fallen into a deep sleep: and as Paul was long preaching, he sunk down with sleep, and fell down from the third loft, and was taken up dead. And Paul went down, and fell on him, and embracing him said, Trouble not yourselves; for his life is in him. When he therefore was come up again, and had broken bread, and eaten, and talked a long while, even till break of day, so he departed. And they brought the young man alive, and were not a little comforted."

All right, friend, there it is. Now this is the only place in the New Testament where a religious meeting was held on the first day of the week. Let's ask a few questions about it. We should remember that long before this there was on record a specific, pointed statement in regard to the Sabbath day, and that is found in the very heart of the ten commandment law. It says, "The seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God." Now if there is to be any change, it certainly will have to be pointed out and we must demand specific, pointed information on it.

Thinking back on this passage, let's ask ourselves, "Does this passage in Acts 20:7 say that the first day of the week is a holy day?" No, indeed, it does not. Does the passage say that the Sabbath has been changed to the first day of the week? No, it doesn't say that either. Does it even say that they met every first day of the week? Not in the least, it doesn't. Now I know that many people read that meaning into it, but it just isn't there. Now if this passage doesn't say any of these things, then we can put a great big "X" right over it and forget about it as a proof text for Sunday keeping. It means absolutely nothing as far as Sunday sacredness is concerned. If it says none of these things it just simply doesn't say enough. But, inasmuch as this text is used very often, we are going to spend a little more time on it.

Why were they having a meeting, anyway, on the first day of the week? The Scripture passage mentions the reason. It says, "Upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them." Then he gives the reason. It says, "ready to depart on the morrow." Now why did he preach to them? Because he was leaving the next day, and if you will go on down to verse 25 you will find that Paul was never to see these people alive again. He had the witness of the Spirit that he was to be taken and put to death. So here he was preaching to them all night long. I'm sure he wasn't usually this long-winded. It wasn't a regular weekly service, by any means. It was so long that a certain young man fell down out of the window, after going to sleep during the sermon. Paul went down and brought him back to life again and came up and kept on preaching "even till the break of day." So there it is, friends. It was a special, farewell meeting, and that is the reason Paul was preaching to them all night long.

Another thing we can note about this is the time of day the service was held. Notice that it was a night meeting. We're told that there were many lights in the upper chamber where they were gathered together. Now in the Scripture, which comes first, the light part or the dark part of the day? The dark, of course. Please read the first chapter of the Bible. That's where you first notice it. It says that "the evening and the morning were the first day." It doesn't say the morning and the evening. God did not make any mistake here. You see, the day begins, according to the Bible, with the dark part first—at evening. Notice Leviticus 23:32: "From even unto even, shall ye celebrate your sabbath." When you celebrate it from evening until evening, from sundown to sundown, that's God's way of doing it. It begins Friday night at sundown, and this is the way the Christian church observed it. It ends Saturday night with the going down of the sun. Don't take my word for this, friends. Ask your pastor. Look it up in a Bible dictionary. You'll find it to be true. That's the way the Bible reckons time. They were meeting on the dark part of the first day of the week, which means that it had to be on what we call Saturday night. It was a Saturday night meeting. How long did it continue? Paul preached all night long into the early hours right up to sunrise the next morning. Then Paul took his departure and walked across to meet the ship at Assos.

Maybe somebody is saying, "Oh, but listen, you forgot the important part. It says there that they came together to break bread. They broke bread on the first day of the week, or conducted the communion service. They had the "Lord's Supper." But, friends, that is where we are not sure. It's impossible to prove it is referring to the Lord's Supper, but let's assume that it is referring to it, and that they really did get together there on the first day of the week for that purpose. Does that prove that it is a holy day? Listen, if having the Lord's Supper on a certain day proves that it is a holy day, then I submit to you that we would have to keep Thursday, for the Lord Jesus instituted the Lord's Supper on Thursday. Now why don't we keep Thursday? Because everybody knows the fact that the Lord's Supper was held on a certain day doesn't mean that the day is holy.

So in spite of the fact that we carefully examine these nine passages of the Scripture, there is no evidence whatsoever of Sunday sacredness. We just have to come to the conclusion that keeping Sunday is not a Bible doctrine at all. It just isn't in the Bible. We have tried to be very fair and honest in the way we have looked at all these texts in the New Testament concerning the first day of the week. Friends, this subject is one of the most important that faces Christianity today. What are you going to do about the claims of God's Sabbath?

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

15 Minute Radio Messages

Classic Christian's Secret

Sermons

Today my radio message is going to be a very simple one indeed. There will be no finespun theology, no philosophy, no big words; for, we must try to come to grips with one of the greatest enemies in ...

Classic Crumbling Authority

Sermons

Late in the 1960s, one of the leading figures in the Civil Rights movement issued this controversial statement: "One has a moral responsibility to disobey unjust laws." But how controversial did t...

Classic Dead End Roads

Sermons

The day you were born you started down a dead-end road—a road that is long, wide, sometimes exciting, sometimes alluring, but dead-end. It comes to a terminus. When it does, you are through travel...

Classic Faith that Works

Sermons

We have all heard a great deal about faith and works and how they operate in the Christian experience of an individual. One cannot be a successful Christian without having an abundan...

Classic Faith vs Feeling

Sermons

There are some people who sincerely believe that feeling is the test of religious experience, yet some people who have an experience of ecstasy turn right around and break the commandments of God. Fr...

Classic God's Free Grace

Sermons

One of the marvels of the scientific world is the amazing precision which exists in the realm of nature. Every one of the billions of created worlds in space moves more accurately than the finest tim...

Classic Grace or Disgrace - Part 3

Sermons

Today we continue discussing one of the most important subjects in all the world—law and grace. I believe the most important question in the world is found in Matthew 10: 16. A rich young man came ...

Classic Grace or Disgrace - Part 4

Sermons

We ended our last broadcast by describing that wonderful scene right outside the Garden of Eden. Of course, it was terrible in some respects. Adam had been driven out of his beautiful garden home, b...

Classic Grace or Disgrace - Part 6

Sermons

Today we come to the sixth and last chapter in our series of studies on law and grace. So far in our broadcast we've found some very wonderful answers to questions. For example, by what standard w...

Classic Grace or Disgrace - Parts 1 & 2

Sermons

The topic today is Law, Grace, or Disgrace. There are some questions I would like to ask as we begin the broadcast today. First, are you living under the law? Are you? Whatever your answer, are yo...

Classic Inflation and Free Gifts

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

- Creation / Evolution
- Grace
- Law Of God
- Salvation
- Sabbath

➤ Joe Crews, founder of Amazing Facts, was a humble servant of Jesus Christ, who was often called "the Paul Harvey of Christian broadcasting". For nearly 30 years Joe's voice was heard over the airwaves and now you can hear some of these powerful messages again here.

Sermons

Authorities tell us that it now costs $118.30 to buy the same bag of groceries that we could buy 4 years ago for only $100.00. Every month the price of groceries, clothing, shoes, rent, and automobile...

Classic Jonah - Part 2

Sermons

In my last broadcast we followed the tragic footsteps of Jonah's course in running away from God. We learned that Jesus Himself has endorsed the authenticity of the story so often do...

Classic Law & Grace - Part 1

Sermons

What is all this talk about the Ten Commandments being abolished? You have heard about it just as I have, I am sure. Perhaps you have even heard a preacher make this statement. It's very common n...

Classic Law & Grace - Part 2

Sermons

The newspapers are teeming today with the latest reports of last night's list of muggings, robings and assaults which took place on the streets of our beautiful once-safe city. Friends, isn't it ...

Classic Limiting God

Sermons

Did you hear about the man who telephoned the U.S. Naval Department greatly excited to tell them he had found a way to destroy all enemy submarines? When the Admirals showed interest...

Classic Looking to Jesus

Sermons

Much has been written in sports magazines about the amazing athletes who have bested the four-minute mile. For years it was the tempting carrot that led Olympic runners to keep on pacing and practici...

Classic Plan of Salvation

Sermons

One of the greatest natural gifts that a man possesses is the power of choice. The justice of God is revealed in His creation of every individual as a free moral agent. Man was made with this power ...

Classic Prodigal Son - Part 1

Sermons

Jesus had the ability to tell a beautiful story and this is one of the most beautiful that He told. A certain man had two sons, and the younger of them (the more inexperienced) said ...

Classic Riches of Grace

Sermons

I read recently of a business executive who made contact with people daily through interviews in his office. This man demanded from the company a long office with his desk located at the very end of ...

Classic Saved by Grace - Part 1

Sermons

In the early days of the 1849 gold rush in California, an Eastern miner went West seeking his fortune in gold. Soon he "struck it right," and immediately sent for his wife and eight-year-old son....

Classic Saved by Grace - Part 2

Sermons

In yesterdays broadcast we began a thrilling search for God's way of salvation in both Old and New Testament. Contrary to popular opinion we discovered that men and women have always been justified...

Classic Soul in Conflict

Sermons

Night had fallen in Jerusalem. The aged priest in the temple and his youthful assistant had retired for the night. As they lay sleeping, a voice called Samuel, the young man who was...

Classic Space Age and Death

Sermons

Can the space age conquer death? Will scientists succeed in creating life in their laboratory test tubes.

No one will deny the fact that this modern age of scientific discovery has seen many th...

Classic Suicide

Sermons

The tenth leading cause of death in the United States is suicide, and among teenagers from 15 to 19 it is the second leading cause of death. These statistics are based upon the official record. It ...

CLassic

Two Laws - Part 2

Sermons

In our last broadcast, we introduced the question of the two laws spoken of in the Bible. Multitudes of Christians have been perplexed about the Old Testament requirements of salvation in comparison ...

CLassic

Two Laws - Part 3

Sermons

A strange objection is often raised by people who don't like to hear the Ten Commandments mentioned or preached about. They ask, "Why preach the law when nobody can be saved by obeying it? Furth...

CLassic

What Must I Do? - Part 1

Sermons

There are a lot of questions that may seem important to you, but the question we are going to discuss today is the MOST IMPORTANT IN ALL OF THE WORLD. And you want to know what it is? That is why yo...

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

15 Minute Radio Messages

Classic Biblical Myths - Part 2

Sermons

On today's broadcast, and for the next few days, we want to examine some very common Biblical myths. Now, don't get the wrong idea, friends. Let me state without reservations that the Amazing Fa...

Classic Biblical Myths - Part 4

Sermons

Today we are going to explode one of the most common myths that church members are hung up on, and it is one of the most serious misconceptions, also. It is serious because it relates to the authorit...

Classic Big Lie

Sermons

One of the most amazing stories to emerge from the lavish Federal hand-out programs involved a Chicago street gang and the First Presbyterian church. According to testimony received by a Senate subco...

Classic Bigger Barns

Sermons

Suppose that as Abraham Lincoln was finishing his Second Inaugural address and had just reached the lofty paragraph beginning, "With malice toward none, and charity for all," some persistent and r...

Classic Broken Promises - Part 1

Sermons

Some of the strangest and wildest opinions have been held, and are still being held, concerning the subject of the Ten Commandments. One would think that only the worst type of violent criminal could...

Classic Broken Promises - Part 2

Sermons

Today I'm going to continue our subject of law and grace, and especially in relation to the two covenants of the Bible. In our last broadcast we noted that this is a greatly misunderstood doctrine ...

Classic Christ's Covenant

Sermons

The story is told in Matthew 19:16-22 about a certain man that came to Jesus with a very important question. "Good Master," he asked, "What good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?..."

Classic Covetousness

Sermons

A long time ago I read about a millionaire in France who was a miser. In order to make sure of his wealth, he dug a cave in his wine-cellar so large and deep that he could go down into it with a ladd...

Classic Crumbling Authority

Sermons

Late in the 1960s, one of the leading figures in the Civil Rights movement issued this controversial statement: "One has a moral responsibility to disobey unjust laws." But how controversial did t...

Classic Eighteen Reasons - Part 1

Sermons

Proponents of the growing humanist movement are attempting to change the social fabric of our times with their radical new labels for old sins. The most amazing thing is that many theological leader...

Classic Eighteen Reasons - Part 2

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

- > Creation / Evolution
- > Grace
- > Law Of God
- > Salvation
- > Sabbath

> Joe Crews, founder of Amazing Facts, was a humble servant of Jesus Christ, who was often called "the Paul Harvey of Christian broadcasting". For nearly 30 years Joe's voice was heard over the airwaves and now you can hear some of these powerful messages again here.

Sermons

One of the most frequent questions raised about the keeping of the seventh-day Sabbath concerns the authenticity of our present calendar. It is believed by many that somehow, somewhere, time has prob...

Classic Faith that Works

Sermons

We have all heard a great deal about faith and works and how they operate in the Christian experience of an individual. One cannot be a successful Christian without having an abundan...

Classic Faith vs Feeling

Sermons

There are some people who sincerely believe that feeling is the test of religious experience, yet some people who have an experience of ecstasy turn right around and break the commandments of God. Fr...

Classic Five Ways - Part 1

Sermons

The Pure Food and Drug laws of America are designed to protect us from deception in what we buy. There are other laws against deceptive packaging and labeling. Millions of dollars have been wasted t...

Classic God is Particular - Part 1

Sermons

Many, many times people have said to me "I don't think it makes any difference what a person believes, as long as he is earnest about it." Perhaps you have heard this same statement. These fol...

Classic God is Particular - Part 2

Sermons

Today we continue to study into that interesting question, "Is God Particular?" Yesterday we reviewed some very fascinating stories from the Bible which indicate that God means exactly what He sa...

Classic God is Particular - Part 3

Sermons

We've been talking for two days now about the importance of obeying God and doing exactly what He asks us to do. We've learned already that God means just what He says. We can't take His comma...

Classic God's Free Grace

Sermons

One of the marvels of the scientific world is the amazing precision which exists in the realm of nature. Every one of the billions of created worlds in space moves more accurately than the finest tim...

Classic Grace or Disgrace - Part 5

Sermons

For several days now we have been dealing with the Law of God in its relationship to the grace of God. We considered the strange idea that some Christians have that the Ten Commandments do not apply ...

Classic I Have a Question - Part 1

Sermons

Today we are going to answer some more questions that have come to our attention here at the Amazing Facts headquarters. Many of our listeners have been sending in serious Bible questions and we've...

Classic I Have a Question - Part 4

Sermons

Our broadcast today will be concerned with more sincere Bible questions that have come to us from our faithful listeners. We do so appreciate the many letters that have come in from you and also the ...

Classic Inflation and Free Gifts

Sermons

Authorities tell us that it now costs $118.30 to buy the same bag of groceries that we could buy 4 years ago for only $100.00. Every month the price of groceries, clothing, shoes, rent, and automobile...

Classic Is Conscience Safe?

Sermons

Today I wish to ask you a question. Is your conscience, that inner voice which speaks to you, a guide that is safe to follow? What of the man who feels that what is right and what i...

Classic Law & Grace - Part 1

Sermons

Sermons

What is all this talk about the Ten Commandments being abolished? You have heard about it just as I have, I am sure. Perhaps you have even heard a preacher make this statement. It's very common n...

Classic Law & Grace - Part 2

Sermons

The newspapers are teeming today with the latest reports of last night's list of muggings, robings and assaults which took place on the streets of our beautiful once-safe city. Friends, isn't it ...

Classic Laws of Health - Part 1

Sermons

The defiance of authority which marks our violent age has become the subject of much study by the experts. No one seems to understand how or why it has happened. And no one has any idea what to do t...

Classic Questions and Answers - Part 2

Sermons

Today we continue the series of special Questions and Answers broadcast on the Amazing Facts' program. Many of you have sent in your sincere Bible questions. Now we come to the first question that...

Classic Sin Nobody Admits - Part 1

Sermons

Our subject today is, The Sin That Nobody Admits. It is the sin we are afraid to mention. We must be afraid to mention it, because no one ever mentions it about himself. People hav...

Classic Sin Nobody Admits - Part 2

Sermons

We often pick up newspapers and read about individuals who have misappropriated millions of dollars. These embezzlers often skip the country, taking the money, and leaving financial r...

Classic Sowing & Reaping

Sermons

In the state of Washington a law was passed taxing retail sales of gasoline but the Legislature slipped up on one important little thing. It failed to attach a penalty for violation of the law. Deal...

Classic Successful Guide for Living

Sermons

Preparation for New Years on Times Square is a revealing process. The plate glass windows are boarded over, police reinforcements are strategically placed, for intoxicated people and overcrowded cond...

Classic Suicide

Sermons

The tenth leading cause of death in the United States is suicide, and among teenagers from 15 to 19 it is the second leading cause of death. These statistics are based upon the official record. It ...

Classic Ten Commandments

Sermons

Today we're going to examine the foundation of this lawless age and its permissive psychology. The frightening statistics of our moral degeneracy are ever before us. We can't deny them or ignore...

Classic The Man God Tried to Kill

Sermons

During the Civil Rights movement of the 1960s, freedom marches were held all across the United States. Listen, friends, have you read the account of history's greatest and most successful freedom m...

Classic Two Laws - Part 1

Sermons

Some people think God changed at the cross. If He did, the majority of people are all right. If he didn't, there are going to be a lot of people disappointed in the Judgment.

Now, I don't ...

Classic Two Laws - Part 2

Sermons

In our last broadcast, we introduced the question of the two laws spoken of in the Bible. Multitudes of Christians have been perplexed about the Old Testament requirements of salvation in comparison ...

Classic Two Laws - Part 3

Sermons

A strange objection is often raised by people who don't like to hear the Ten Commandments mentioned or preached about. They ask, "Why preach the law when nobody can be saved by obeying it? Furth...

Classic

What Must I Do? - Part 1

Sermons

There are a lot of questions that may seem important to you, but the question we are going to discuss today is the MOST IMPORTANT IN ALL OF THE WORLD. And you want to know what it is? That is why yo...

Classic

What Must I Do? - Part 2

Sermons

Today I want to continue the subject that we introduced in the last broadcast concerning God's plan for saving mankind. We talked about the tragic fall of Adam and Eve into that first sin and how J...

Classic

What Must I Do? - Part 3

Sermons

Millions are wondering just what has happened to the American conscience when larceny continues to climb by an over-all 12 percent more every year. Shoplifting has reached scandalous proportions, and...

Classic

Whispers

Sermons

Today we're going to study about the most cruel word found in all the Bible. This word describes a class of people who indulge in the most devilish, despicable work ever invented by ...

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

15 Minute Radio Messages

Classic Battle for the Mind - Part 2

Sermons

We're living in an age of dishonesty and deceit. Everywhere we turn our eyes see the sham and pretense of a morally bankrupt society. The ridiculous posture of modern advertising has done much to ...

Classic Bridges of Life

Sermons

The story is told of two prisoners who lived in the first century after Christ who found themselves under the custody of the laws of the land. On the surface it appears that these me...

Classic Certainty of Salvation

Sermons

Today we turn to a very important phase of the gospel story and the tremendous question, How can we know that we're saved? So many times men and women wonder about this. They ask, "How can I be ...

Classic Choosing - Part 1

Sermons

Have you every been aggravated at people because they make so many mistakes? Well, just remember one thing, friends, that only one person in all the world has lived without making any mistakes, or co...

Classic Citadel of Decision

Sermons

Today we're going to look into the amazing secret of the Christian's victory over self. Self is the greatest enemy any person has ever encountered. If we can overcome in this one area, every oth...

Classic Cities of Refuge

Sermons

It has been well said that the religion of many people is like a headache—they have no desire to lose their head, but it hurts them to keep it. This leads to the question—Is Christianity hard or ...

Classic Conversion

Sermons

The moon is the nearest body in the heavens to this earth, and man has taken the giant step of mastering the lunar space travel problems. But then we realize that the other heavenly bodies are much f...

Classic Corroded Spirits - Parts 1&2

Sermons

One of the most popular beloved parables which Jesus introduced, was the parable of the Prodigal Son. How many times we've recited it and dwelt upon that wasted life, the hogs, the husks and the ho...

Classic Dead End Roads

Sermons

The day you were born you started down a dead-end road—a road that is long, wide, sometimes exciting, sometimes alluring, but dead-end. It comes to a terminus. When it does, you are through travel...

Classic Enoch

Sermons

Today, and in our next broadcast, we are going to deal with a question which frequently comes to us from radio listeners. The question is: Where are Enoch and Elijah? Now the Bible is crystal clear...

Classic Excuses

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

- > Creation / Evolution
- > Grace
- > Law Of God
- > Salvation
- > Sabbath

> Joe Crews, founder of Amazing Facts, was a humble servant of Jesus Christ, who was often called "the Paul Harvey of Christian broadcasting". For nearly 30 years Joe's voice was heard over the airwaves and now you can hear some of these powerful messages again here.

The psychologists have a word which they use in describing those who constantly run away from responsibilities and making decisions. They call it rationalization. Most of us refer to the same thing ...

Classic Rich Man & Lazarus

Today we want to consider the same theme that we've been dealing with for a number of days on the broadcast. We want to look into one of the most controversial texts of the Bible. It's a parable...

Classic Second Coming

The question, "How would you order your life if you had the chance of living it again?" is an interesting one. Often, as we look back over our past life and see the many mistakes we have made, we...

Classic Three Steps to Heaven

If you want to really humble yourself, let me make a suggestion. Go outside some clear night and look up at the gigantic star fields overhead. In 1975 astronomers at UCLA discovered a great galaxy o...

Classic Translation of Elijah

Today we are going to continue the subject which was introduced in our last broadcast. In that broadcast we gave the evidence that the patriarch Enoch was translated and taken to heaven without seein...

Classic What Must I Do? - Part 2

Today I want to continue the subject that we introduced in the last broadcast concerning God's plan for saving mankind. We talked about the tragic fall of Adam and Eve into that first sin and how J...

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Forgotten Day - Part 1

Listen to the audio version Now!

Many of us are familiar with the seemingly endless sheaves of paper called computer printouts. They give us, in a matter of moments, detailed information about events and things that have been programmed into the computer at an earlier time. Page after page of facts and figures is tediously typed out by the machine giving us a word picture of what it "remembers" about a particular item.

But there is one computer that doesn't need programming. It automatically records all events that occur around it in the most minute detail. And it doesn't employ printouts to recall its information but instantly reproduces the items to be remembered in a full color, stereophonic sound, motion picture. Its program is unlimited. It handles all types of information, stores it indefinitely and never becomes overloaded.

Quite a machine? Indeed! All this and it only weighs about three pounds. And you carry one around with you all the time. It is the human brain, a marvelous computer that works wonders. And the procedure by which past information and events are reproduced in color and sound movies is called memory.

Scientists tell us we never really forget anything and that events we cannot recall from the earliest of childhood are still recorded on our brains and affect our behavior today—with one notable exception. There is a memorial to the most significant events in human history that we all should remember. In fact, the God who created us specifically commanded us to remember this memorial—but almost the whole world has forgotten. I am speaking of the Sabbath—God's great memorial of creation—that the world at large has forgotten. Yet it is the only one of God's commandments that specifically says "Remember." Most people can remember the ones that start "Thou shalt not." But the world has forgotten the one that says "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy!"

There are two main divisions among Christian people on the matter of which day is to be kept as the Sabbath, or the Lord's day. Our desire as we turn to the Bible is to put man's opinions and suppositions aside and see what God has to say about this important matter. I say important, because any subject on which God has expressed His will is important.

In the book of Revelation the apostle John speaks of the Lord's day. "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Revelation 1:10. He doesn't say which day of the week it was. The only way we can find out which day of the week he was speaking of is to compare that verse with other Scriptures.

God inspired the prophet Isaiah to write these words: "If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable...." God says the Sabbath is His holy day. The Sabbath, then, according to the Bible is the Lord's day. In a special sense it belongs to the Lord.

In Mark 2:27,28 Jesus is speaking, and He says: "The Sabbath was made for man." God made man first and then He made the Sabbath to be a blessing to man, a day of rest and spiritual communion. The Jews had made the Sabbath a burden. They had surrounded the Sabbath with scores of man-made regulations, even specifying just exactly how far a person could travel on the Sabbath day and making it a legalistic bondage and a burden instead of a blessing and a delight as God intended that it should be.

If Christ is Lord of the Sabbath then it follows naturally that the Sabbath is the Lord's day. We find that there is a harmony all through the scriptures. You notice it says, "The Sabbath was made." Mark 2:27. It didn't just happen into being, but it came as a result of thoughtful and careful planning. Now, if it was made, this question naturally follows: "Who made it?" As we find the answer to this question in the Bible, it will become even more clear that the Sabbath is the Lord's day.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

Ephesians 3:9. "And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ." All right, let's be sure we got that. It is plain Scripture—so clear that no one could misunderstand it.

God created all things by Jesus Christ. The Sabbath was made. Christ made everything that was made, therefore, God through Christ Jesus made the Sabbath. That is why the Bible speaks of the Sabbath as the Lord's day. The Lord Jesus Christ made that day.

In John 1:10 it speaks of Jesus again. It says that "He was in the world, and the world was made by him and the world knew him not." You remember it says in the 14th verse, "And the word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." You know, I talk to folks who tell me that they've gone to church for years and yet they come to me and say, "We didn't know that Christ existed before he was born nineteen centuries ago!"

You remember Jesus prayed to His Father as He finished His task here on earth, "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." John 17:5. You remember also that when God was planning the creation of man He said, "Let us make man in our image." Genesis 1:26. God wasn't alone. God the Father and God the Son together planned and carried out the creation of man, according to the Bible. And the Bible, of course, must be our guide. Again, in Hebrews 1:1,2, "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." God, through Jesus Christ, made the worlds. He made this world; this earth and everything in it. "And without him was not anything made that was made." John 1:3.

Interesting isn't it, that in the light of all these Bible texts we so seldom hear a sermon on Christ as the Creator. Let me tell you one reason for that. When it becomes clear that Christ made the Sabbath in the beginning before the entrance of sin, it forever settles the issue as to which day is the Lord's day and the Bible Sabbath. The day that the Lord Jesus Christ made, the day over which he claims the Lordship, is naturally and biblically, His day. The devil does not want this issue made clear. He wants to keep men in confusion. He wants to dishonor God's law against which he has for centuries been in rebellion.

Going back to the book of beginnings—the book of Genesis—we read, "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed..." which day? "The seventh day and sanctified it because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." Genesis 2:1-3. Now tell me, if God's plan was that we should choose any day that happened to be convenient and make that our Sabbath, why did God take a specific day and place His blessing upon it, making it a holy day? Is there any other day in all the Bible of which we are told that God blessed that day and made it holy for man to keep? I know of no other day that God has blessed with the three-fold blessing of resting upon it, blessing it, and sanctifying it, or setting it apart for a holy purpose. Remember, this all took place before Adam sinned, while all things were yet perfect. The Sabbath was a part of God's perfect plan.

Then notice as we come to the book of Exodus where the Ten Commandments are written out. It doesn't say to keep one day in seven, but it says, "Remember," harking back to something they already knew about. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Exodus 20:8. God's command wasn't just to take a day and make it holy. As a matter of fact, we can't do that because, "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." Romans 3:23. Only God can make something holy. God made the day holy. His command to us is to remember that and to keep it holy. If I were to give you my blue coat and say, "Now you take this coat and bring it back tomorrow night, but just this one thing, you keep it white." I dare say that not one of you would take me up on that. You couldn't keep this coat white, because it isn't white to start with. No more can we keep holy something which isn't holy to start with.

God has given us six days to do all our work but the seventh day is the Sabbath—whose Sabbath does it say it is? Notice Exodus 20:10, "But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God." Really that should settle it. There is the answer. Our question today isn't to know which day is the Sabbath of the Jews or the Baptists or the Adventists or the Roman Catholics or the Methodists, but the question that should arise in our hearts today is, "Which day is the Lord's Sabbath? Which day is the Lord's day?" And here is the Bible answer. "But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God."

You know, the Bible says that one man esteems one day above another. Another man esteems every day alike, but here you find out which day God esteems above all others. The day that God has made holy. And here we have God's command to keep it.

Sometimes I hear ministers talking about the Jewish Sabbath. And, of course, they are referring to the day that we now call Saturday, the seventh day. Now, it is true that the Jews kept it, and they still keep it, but friends, that doesn't make it Jewish. God made the Sabbath two thousand years before the first Jew was born. So, surely, we can't refer to the Lord's Sabbath as Jewish.

Notice the reason God gave for keeping the Sabbath. "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day and hallowed it." Exodus 20:11. God had a definite purpose in mind when He made the seventh day the Sabbath. It was ever to remind us that God created the world and all things therein. It was a sign of allegiance to the true God. It was test of obedience, a proof of love.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Forgotten Day - Part 2

Listen to the audio version Now!

Friends, do you remember the news reports a few years ago when it almost literally rained cats and dogs on an American city? In a cloud burst not only rain but also various small animals and many types of debris fell on the bewildered people. In another place it rained fish and frogs. It was a rare phenomenon; but objects light enough to be picked up by strong winds have been swept away and carried heavenward to be dropped on some unsuspecting locality miles away. Today I want to tell you about bread that fell from the skies six days a week for forty years.

We established last time that the Sabbath given by God was the seventh day, Saturday, instead of Sunday as observed by the majority of the Christian world. We found that God said to remember it, and that it is a sign of our love and obedience to Him. As our discussion of the true Sabbath continues now, we will show how God performed more than 6,000 miracles to prove which day He wanted man to observe.

Before the children of Israel ever reached Mt. Sinai where God wrote the Ten Commandments, notice what God says, "Then said the Lord unto Moses, Behold, I will rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day, that I may prove them whether they will walk in my law, or no." Exodus 16:4. The test God used to prove them, to see whether they would keep His law, not Moses' law, was the Sabbath.

"Six days ye shall gather it (He was speaking of the manna which fell from heaven) but on the seventh day, which is the Sabbath, in it there shall be none." Exodus 16:26. Before God ever wrote those Commandments on the tables of stone He said the seventh day is the Sabbath. When some of the people went out looking for bread on the Sabbath, the Lord said, "How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?" Exodus 16:28.

The law that has to do with the Sabbath day is God's law, written by God's own finger, and is the only part of the Bible God wrote with His own finger. It always has been wrong to break the Ten Commandments and it always will be.

It is interesting to notice that God performed more than 6,000 miracles to enable His people to keep the Sabbath. Every week God provided three specific miracles. For forty years the children of Israel wandered in the wilderness, with 52 weeks in each one of those years. They spent at least 2,000 Sabbaths out there, and each week God provided a double portion of manna on the preparation day (Friday), and allowed it to keep fresh for the next day. You remember they experimented by keeping it over night on other days of the week, but in the morning it was rotten. God preserved it so that it remained fresh for the Sabbath day only. On the Sabbath no manna fell. God was supplying the manna. Six days, just as regular as clockwork, God showered it down to feed His wandering people, but on the seventh-day Sabbath He withheld the manna. He gave them a double portion on the day before. There is a wonderful spiritual lesson here for us. When we honor God's Commandments He will give us enough in the six work days to care for all our needs. God has always honored that promise.

"For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day, wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day and hallowed it." Exodus 20:11. Who was it that blessed the Sabbath day? The Lord. Notice what the Bible says about the Lord's blessing in 1 Chronicles 17:27. "For thou blessest, O Lord, and it shall be blessed forever." God blessed the Sabbath. The Bible says that when God places His blessing on something, it is blessed forever. Again in Numbers 23:19,20, "God is not a man, that he should lie. . .He hath blessed and I cannot reverse it." I have no right to reverse it. God has blessed the Sabbath, and it shall be blessed forever.

The wonderful thing about God and the Bible is that we have something solid, something

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

unvarying, something that doesn't change. The Bible says, "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever." Hebrews 13:8. If it weren't for that, how would we ever know how to please the Lord? The only thing that gives us courage to believe we can live a life pleasing to God by the grace of Christ, is to know that what Christ taught 1900 years ago still holds good. Jesus Christ is "the same yesterday, and today, and forever." He left us an example that we should follow in His steps. What was Christ's example in Sabbath keeping? The example is clear. "As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read." Luke 4:16. The custom of Jesus, then, was a Sabbath-keeping custom. Jesus is the same yesterday, today, and forever. If He should come back today, He'd keep the Sabbath.

Friends, as this matter unfolds before you, you may be seeing it for the first time. I ask you, in Christ's name, to take it to heart and put it into practice right away. Begin immediately to keep the Lord's Sabbath, and you will find a rich blessing. Dr. Lyman Abbott, in an editorial published in the "Christian Union," June 26, 1890, said: "The current notion that Christ and His apostles authoritatively substituted the first day for the seventh is absolutely without any authority." It is amazing how many Protestant and Catholic ministers admit there is no Bible authority for changing from the seventh day, Saturday, to the first day, Sunday. Certainly in the New Testament there is no record of any such change. Christ never once mentioned Sunday. Never once did He mention the first day of the week.

In Matthew 24:20 Jesus did mention the Sabbath and inferred that Christians should be keeping it forty years after the crucifixion. The followers of Jesus understood that even after His death on the cross they were still to keep the Sabbath day according to the Commandment. That is not just my opinion. Let's turn to the New Testament again, Luke 23:54-56. "And that day was the preparation, and the sabbath drew on, (speaking, you see, of the day on which Jesus was crucified) And the women... beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid. And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the sabbath day according to the commandments." Jesus had been laid away in the grave. These women worked right up until sundown and then they rested on the Sabbath day as Jesus had taught them, according to the Commandment. Certainly they didn't understand, like so many modern theologians, that the Sabbath was nailed to the cross and done away with. They kept it the day after Christ died on Calvary's hill. They kept it according to the Commandment. According to the Commandment the Sabbath is the seventh day, the day we now call Saturday. And the Bible tells us we are to keep it from evening until evening.

"From even unto even shall ye celebrate your sabbath." Leviticus 23:32. Lest someone might say, How do we know when evening is?, God put it down in the Bible by inspiration, telling us that evening is when the sun sets. See Mark 1:32.

You know, it is wonderful that God put the Sabbath out of reach of human hands. Sometimes our clocks stop. Sometimes we go on daylight saving time and push the clock ahead one hour. This causes confusion for one who attempts to keep a day holy by man's standards, but we don't have to depend on the clock to tell us when God's Sabbath comes. He placed the Sabbath beyond any human interference by decreeing that the Sabbath would be marked by the setting of the sun—from evening until evening. And, of course, there is a very basic reason for that—it was the portion of time God had blessed. There wouldn't be any point in keeping a day from midnight to midnight if God blessed it beginning with the evening or with the sundown. "God called the light day," we read back in the first chapter of Genesis, "and the evening and the morning were the first day." Verse 5. In other words, the very first day began with the dark part which we call night, followed by the light part which we call day. When we come down to the close of God's creation work week after He had finished creating man and everything in the world, God's Sabbath began. The evening and the morning, the dark and the light, were the sixth day, and then the Sabbath began with that next evening. And it was that portion of time in which God rested. It was that portion of time on which God placed His blessing.

Now the answer to any further question is found as we look at Calvary's cross. Jesus is the way in the Sabbath as in every other question. It is interesting how clear it becomes as we view it in the light of Calvary. Christ died on Friday. That is where Good Friday comes from. Virtually all the Christian world recognizes that. Christ arose on Sunday. Easter always comes on Sunday because Christ arose on Sunday, the first day of the week. Now the Bible says that the day between the day on which Christ died and the day on which He rose again is the Sabbath day according to the Commandment. See Luke 23:54-56. The day on which God placed His blessing, and the day God commands all men to keep.

You remember it was on "the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared and certain others with them." Luke 24:1. After resting on the Sabbath they resumed their work on Sunday morning. There are some who believe that after Christ's death the first day of the week became the Sabbath. Let's notice what the Bible says in Mark 16:1,2. "And when the Sabbath was past. . .very early in the morning of the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun." They rested on the Sabbath, they began their work on the first day of the week. That was the practice of New Testament Christians. We find it again in Acts, which records the activities of the New Testament church. "When the Jews were gone out of the synagogue the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath.... And the next Sabbath came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God." Acts 13:42, 44. Now if they had suddenly changed from keeping the seventh day to keeping the first, they would have come to Paul and said, "You preached to the Jews today, on the Sabbath, and you can come tomorrow, that is Sunday, and preach to us, the Gentiles." But they didn't say that at all. No, they said, "We'll be back in church next Sabbath and then you can preach to us, too." So the practice of the New Testament church of the apostles is so clear there is no excuse for misunderstanding it.

The Bible even carries us beyond to the time when God will establish His kingdom, and it says, "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." Isaiah 66:22,23. Now, if God gave the Sabbath in the Garden of Eden, and blessed it before there was any sin, and if all the Old Testament prophets kept it, and if Jesus and the apostles kept it, and we are going to be keeping the Sabbath again when God has made an end of sin, surely we ought to be keeping it now too.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Forgotten Day - Part 3 Listen to the audio version Now!

Sometime after the first atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima in Japan, workers were sifting through the rubble and found a wrist watch whose hands were permanently fused into its face, forever recording the exact instant of the explosion, the moment time stopped.

But time really didn't stop except for one tragic city and thousands of poor victims. Time never stops. It is perhaps the world's only remaining constant; relentlessly marching on, 60 minutes to the hour, 24 hours to the day, etc. Time can be wasted, but never lost.

This fact is important to remember as we continue our discussion of the Sabbath of the Bible. We have established from Scriptures that Saturday the seventh day, not Sunday, is the Bible Sabbath and that God wants us to keep it. Today we will examine what the churches themselves say about the Sabbath. But first we want to consider a very common question, "How can we be sure that the seventh day today was the seventh day of Bible times; has time ever been lost?"

Some persons who have not made a thorough study of the matter have thought that calendar changes have caused time to be lost, thus making it difficult to identify the true seventh day. The calendar changes have not affected the order of the days of the week. Saturday has always been followed by Sunday, Sunday has always been followed by Monday, and so on. The astronomer Hinckley says, "By calculating the eclipses, it can be proven that no time has been lost, and that the creation days were seven divided into twenty-four hours." Professor Totten of Yale University tells us, "In spite of all our dickerings with the calendar, it is patent that the human race never lost the septenary sequence of week days, and that the Sabbath of these latter times comes down to us from Adam, through the ages, without a single lapse. No day is missing, no cycle calls for less, all call for the same, and all unite in a concert of testimony not to be shaken by men or the devil." Quoted by Sidney Collet in All About the Bible, p. 287.

We can trace the Sabbath from creation. The weekly Sabbath goes back to a time before man sinned. It could not possibly be a type or shadow of the gospel, because the need for the gospel had not yet arisen when the Sabbath was made. Paul speaks of other sabbath days which were a shadow of things to come. He said we shouldn't judge men in respect to those sabbath days or holy days which were shadows of things to come. You see, the Jews had seven annual sabbaths that came just once a year like Easter, the 4th of July, etc. They were added after sin. And they were done away with at the cross. The Bible is clear about that. Like the offering of lambs, they were a part of the ceremonies that pointed forward to Christ. The cross of Jesus Christ is the one factor that definitely establishes the unchanging nature of God's law, which of course, includes the Sabbath. If God could have changed His Ten Commandments, Christ need not have died. Christ died on the cross to pay the price of our sin, which is breaking the Ten Commandments. 1 John 3:4. It was because God couldn't change those ten holy laws and still be a just God that Jesus had to die upon the cross.

Many Protestant ministers admit that the Sabbath was changed from Saturday to Sunday without Divine command. First of all, we quote from a Luthern leader, Pastor H. Bielenberg, June. 20, 1933: "There is no command in the Bible to keep Sunday as a day of rest. Why do we keep Sunday? The seventh day is not the first."

The Luthern historian, Johann Mosheim says, "The church, we say, has ordained Sunday. We are bound to submit ourselves to her authority; how weak is this prop! Jesus has freed us from the ordinances of men. The church has no right to make laws. Sittenlehr, Vol. 5, p. 486. It certainly has no right to make laws which conflict with the Bible.

Dr. Flowers, of the Church of England, says, "In the New Testament the observance of Sunday as a day of rest, or indeed, in any particular way, is not enforced by a single

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

word or suggestion." Book of Sermons, p. 131.

A Methodist minister makes this admission, "There is not on record any divine command to the apostles to change the Sabbath, the day on which it was held by the Jews, to the first day of the week." Watson's Theological Institute, Vol. 2, p. 511. If we don't have God's command, we don't have any authority. And that is what is lacking in respect to Sunday.

A Methodist journal says, "If the New Testament silence on any subject proves that matter is unimportant, then the Christian emphasis on the observance of Sunday is really a mistake. Nowhere does the Bible tell us to observe Sunday. Nowhere does it say that Saturday Sabbath-keeping is wrong." Epworth Herald, Editorial, July 21, 1923.

Five hundred years ago the majority of people believed in salvation by works until Martin Luther came along. They called him a heretic for preaching justification by faith. This was just an indication that the church had been in darkness during the Dark Ages and God was calling out great men—men of the word—to rediscover the teachings of Jesus that had long been buried under tradition. The reformation continues; the time has come for the Bible Sabbath to be restored.

R. W. Dale of the Congregationalist Church says, "It is quite clear that however rigidly or devoutly we may spend Sunday, we are not keeping the Sabbath." The Ten Commandments, P. 106, 107. The Bible says to keep the Sabbath. If keeping Sunday doesn't satisfy the Bible command, then we ought to be doing something about it.

Dr. Archibald Hodge of the Presbyterian Church says, "God instituted the Sabbath at the creation of man, setting apart the seventh day for that purpose and imposed its observance as a universal and perpetual moral obligation upon the race." Tract No. 175, Presbyterian Board of Publications. "There is not the slightest evidence," says Dr. Donald Fraser of the Presbyterian Church, "That our Lord, or His apostles regarded or taught others to regard the first day of the week."

The Baptists say, "It is sometimes argued that Christ abrogated (annulled) the Mosaic law, and therefore there is no longer any obligation to keep the Sabbath; but He Himself declares that He came not to destroy the law, but to fulfil it. Notice that He never says that He abrogated the Sabbath." Baptist Sunday School Quarterly, March 1929.

Some people say, "That is it! That is why I don't have to keep the Sabbath. Christ fulfilled the law." Dear friends, a criminal could take hold of the same kind of reasoning and say, "Well, that is it. That is why I can steal. Christ kept that commandment. I don't have to keep it." You see, that kind of reasoning isn't consistent. It doesn't add up. It isn't logical. It isn't Biblical.

Doctor E.T. Hiscox of the Baptist church says, "It will be said, however, that the Sabbath was transferred from the seventh to the first day of the week. Earnestly desiring information on this subject... I ask, where can the record of such a transaction be found? Not in the New Testament, absolutely not." From a paper read before a New York Ministers' Conference, November 13, 1893. Dear Friends, if it isn't in the New Testament, then it isn't for us, as New Testament Christians. And the Bible is clear on this and evidently these different spokesmen, representing a number of different churches were also possessed of very definite convictions on this matter.

Chamber's Encyclopedia under the article, Sabbath, says, "By none of the church Fathers before the fourth century is it (Sunday) identified with the Sabbath, nor is the duty of observing it grounded by them, either on the fourth commandment, or on the precept of Christ or His apostles." Chamber's Encyclopedia says again, "Unquestionably the first law, either ecclesiastical or civil, by which the sabbatical observance of Sunday is known to have been ordained is the sabbatical edict of Constantine, A.D. 321." Article, Sunday. That is a long time after the last book of the New Testament was written; after God had once and for all settled what our duty as New Testament Christians was. Sunday came in far too late to be a part of the New Testament.

"The earliest recognition of the observance of Sunday," says The Encyclopedia Britannica, "is a constitution of Constantine in 321 A.D., enacting that all courts of justice, inhabitants of towns, and workshops were to be at rest on Sunday." Vol. XXIII, p. 654. They didn't call it the Lord's Day, but "the venerable day of the sun." The day on which the pagans from ancient times worshipped the sun.

The Bible has foretold an attempted change of the Sabbath from the seventh day of the week to the first day. On future broadcasts we are going to explain this prophecy more fully. Suffice it to say now that the Bible describes the power that would speak great words against the Most High: that would war against God's saints; that would think to change times and laws, and says that God's people would be given into the hands of this power for a time.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

God's Answer - Part 2

Listen to the audio version Now!

In our last broadcast, we introduced the subject of evolution, and we promised to tell you today God's answer to evolution, to give the most authoritative explanation yet of evolution. We found yesterday, of course, certain basic tenets of the evolutionary theory. We told about three things that must be true, and must be proven true, before the theory of evolution can stand any test. We discovered that all three of those contentions of the evolutionists fell flat—they didn't hold water—they were not scientific at all. In fact, the entire theory has been proven absolutely unscientific and untrue.

You know, friends, the great God we serve has given an abundance of evidence in science of the power of God. You take, for instance, the law of gravitation. How is it that the sun and earth attract each other through ninety-three millions of miles of space? There is nothing between them. We know they do attract but we don't know how. The best answer, I think, is in Colossians 1 where it says that through Christ "all things consist," or hang together—that is the actual meaning of the Greek word.

A remarkable interview took place a few years ago dealing with this subject of the power and majesty of God. The man interviewed was Dr. Willis R. Whitney, Vice-President of General Electric in charge of scientific research. Here is the news account of that interview. "We have our theories, said the scientist, but can't prove them." He picked up a small bar magnet from his desk. "Bring this near to a steel needle and the needle will leap to the magnet. No one knows why but we have worked out elaborate explanations. We speak of lines of force and we draw a diagram of the magnetic field. We know that there are no lines there and field is just a word to cover our ignorance." Then he laid the magnet over a wooden vase in which was imbedded another bar magnet and the other magnet floated in space about a half inch above the vase. "What supports it? Sir Oliver Lodge says it's the all-pervading ether, but Einstein denies that there's any ether. Which is right? I say the magnet floats in space by the will of God. The magnet repels another magnet by the will of God and no man today can give a more precise answer." "What do you mean by the will of God?" I asked. "Let me answer that with another question. What do you mean by light?" shot back the scientist. "The beam of light comes speeding from a star traveling hundreds of years and finally it reaches your optic nerve and you see the star. How does it do that? We have our corpuscular theory of light, our wave theory, and now our quantum theory, but they're all just educated guesses. About as good an explanation as any is to say that light travels by the will of God. The best scientists," he added, "have to recognize that they're just kindergarten fellows playing with mysteries. Our ancestors were and our descendants will be also." Well, friends, there it is, coming from a great scientist.

The study of the development of an embryo shows the marvelous plan of nature. The embryo will develop just in the right way. When the nerve cells begin to grow, they travel with uncanny accuracy exactly to their appointed place in the body of the developing embryo. All these things point to a great designer in nature. Sir William Dawson, President of Yale University and noted geologist, admitted, "I know nothing about the origin of man except what I'm told in the Scriptures that God created him. I do not know anything more than that and I do not know anyone who does." So, friends, we see beyond any question that true science confirms rather than refutes the Bible story of creation.

Charles Darwin in his book, DESCENT OF MAN, discusses the thought at length as to where man might have made his appearance in the dim ages past. Then he adds this, "But it is useless to speculate on this matter." Well, friends, I'll say the same thing. I only wish Darwin had realized how useless such speculation was before he unleashed his godless theory to prey on the world. I wish he had thought of that before his idea had robbed millions of youth of their faith and left them cold and disillusioned. I wish he had thought of it before the wave of crime and juvenile delinquency began which can be traced in large measure to the results of his theory. The majestic words, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," found in Genesis 1:1, are still the best explanation of life in existence. They express the most sublime elements to be found anywhere in philosophy.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

The way this creation came about is explained in Psalms 33:6 and 9. "By the Word of the Lord were the heavens made and all the host of them by the breath of His mouth, for He spake and it was done; He commanded and it stood fast." Why the very Word of God caused the worlds to come into being. Even modern physics believes matter and energy to be interchangeable so what could be more reasonable than the very power of God brought the worlds into existence. Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the One who died on the cross to pay the price of our sins, was the active one who performed the creation of the world. In John 17:5 we read that He was in existence with the Father before the world was.

Now notice in Genesis 1:26 and 27, "And God said Let us make man in our image." Why is the plural form used here? Friends, it is because Christ worked with His Father in the creation. We read this in John 1:1-3. "In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by Him and without Him was not anything made that was made. And the Word was made flesh and dwelt among us and we beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." That is Jesus. He was the Creator. The fact that Christ was the Creator is further confirmed by the words of Hebrews 1:1, 2. "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days, spoken unto us by His Son whom He hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also He made the worlds." So there is no question about it, friends, God and Christ are eternal; they are powerful; they formed life in the beginning; and it is to them that we owe our existence.

God desired that His people should always remember with gratitude His creative power. By remembering this, they would also remember the moral law of conduct which God laid down for His children. It would remind them of the Creator's power to create a new heart within us to take the place of the old sinful heart. Looking down across the centuries, God could see the dangers of forgetting Him through Godless philosophies and theories. Consequently, He made provision for men to remember Him and His creative power by setting aside a memorial of His work. At the end of six days of the creation week, the Lord looked upon His handiwork and realized that it was very good. Then, He instituted the Sabbath as a perpetual reminder of His love to all the human family. This is recorded in Genesis 2:2 and 3. "And on the seventh day God ended his work which He had made and He rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had made and God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it because that in it he had rested from all His work which God created and made." The Sabbath was thus given at the very time of creation. God sanctified it. To sanctify means to set apart for holy use. Therefore, the Sabbath was set apart for holy use even before sin came into this world.

My friends, the Sabbath is God's answer to evolution. The seven-day week which it has commemorated and kept in existence is not based on any movement of the heavenly bodies. There is only one logical explanation of the fact that a seven-day week has come to us through history and has been known among all peoples of the earth. That explanation is that God created this world in six days and rested the seventh and commanded that every seventh day after that was to be kept in His honor. Evolutionists are at a loss to explain the seven-day week. The Sabbath has always been kept down through history. When the children of Israel were going to leave Egypt, Pharaoh complained that Moses made them rest. The original Hebrew word is Sabbath. In other words, Moses led the people to better Sabbath observance before he ever led them to liberty.

In Exodus 16 it is clearly shown that the children of Israel knew about the Sabbath before the Ten-Commandment law was given from Mount Sinai for they were told not to gather manna on the Sabbath day. Then came that majestic hour when God gave His law with His own voice from the heights of Sinai and later wrote it with His own finger on tables of stone. In the very heart of that Law was the Sabbath commandment given in Exodus 20:8-11. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. In it thou shalt not do any work, thou nor thy son nor thy daughter nor thy manservant nor thy maidservant nor thy cattle nor thy stranger that is within thy gates for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day, wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath Day and hallowed it."

So solemnly is the warning given concerning the necessity of Sabbath observance that in Jeremiah 17:19-27 God's people were told that their fate and their future depended upon their faithful observance of the Sabbath. God warned that if they failed to keep the Sabbath, the city of Jerusalem would be burned. The actual destruction of the city in 70 AD was a grim reminder of the prophecy of Jeremiah. The Sabbath, of course, was kept by Jesus. In Luke 4:16 we read that it was His custom to go to the Synagogue on the Sabbath. In Mark 2:27 He claims the Sabbath as His special day and tells us that it was made for the whole human race. In Matthew 24:20 He warns His disciples concerning the destruction of Jerusalem which was to take place forty years later. "Pray ye that your flight," from the city, that is, "be not in the winter neither on the sabbath day." So Jesus actually urged his disciples to pray for forty years so that the sanctity of the Sabbath would not be marred for them on the occasion of the destruction of Jerusalem.

Not only was the Sabbath observed by Jesus, but it was observed by the apostles. Acts 18:4 shows us that their manner or custom was to worship on the Sabbath. Acts 16:13 shows that it was the case even when they weren't meeting in the Jewish Synagogue, when they were over in a Gentile land, in Greece. Acts 13:42 tells of an instance when all Jews and Gentiles alike met with the disciples several times on the Sabbath. And in the writing of the Apostle Paul in Hebrews 4:9 after he had been discussing the Sabbath, he says, "There remaineth therefore the keeping of a Sabbath unto the people of God." (That is the marginal reading.)

And so, my friends, a final text in Isaiah 66:22. The Sabbath will remain so long as the earth stands for it will even be kept in the new earth. Listen! "For as the new heavens and the new earth shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." So there you have it, friends. The Sabbath is eternal. God gave it to remind men of His power as the creator. So that they would not begin to question that creation account in Genesis, and if men had always kept the Sabbath, there would be no evolutionists now, no atheists, no agnostics in all the world. And so God is trying to call people back to the Sabbath, back to His law again, so that all this infidelity can be brushed aside and men might once more serve the true and living God.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

I Have a Question - Part 5 Listen to the audio version Now!

We are going to continue today with our series on questions that have been sent in by our radio listeners. I'm sure that you've had some of your own questions answered even if you haven't written in to us; but friends, we'd like to have that card or letter containing your sincere Bible question. A bit later maybe we can work it into our series of questions and answers on the broadcast. Here's our first question today.

If God is all powerful, why does He not kill the Devil?

Now, I hope that most of you have been listening to our broadcast and have heard the messages on Satan, his origin and destiny. The devil was once a beautiful, sinless angel who stood by the very throne of God in heaven. His name was Lucifer, and he began to desire to take the place of God Himself. He became jealous and envious of the position of the Creator, and at last his disaffection was spread to one third of the angels and there was war in heaven, according to Revelation 12, and Satan was cast out with his disgruntled angelic followers. Now there is no doubt that God could have destroyed that beautiful angel before sin had blossomed into open rebellion. The question is, what effect would it have had to destroy the angel who was beginning to transgress. First of all, none of the other angels would have understood just why God destroyed Lucifer. After all, sin had never been known before in those wonderful realms, and the results of transgression were not clearly known. Had Lucifer been suddenly snatched from their midst and destroyed, it would have created an atmosphere of fear among the heavenly hosts. They would have never known whether Satan's charges were true or false. There would have ever been a lingering doubt or suspicion about the right or wrong of God's act. For this reason, God allowed sin to follow its course of development through the ages. God created both angels and men with the power of choice. He wants us to make decisions on the basis of love for Him rather than fear. This is why He allowed the course of sin to develop through the ages. It had to be demonstrated that the devil was absolutely wrong in his rebellion. The only way this could be properly demonstrated was to have an outworking of it through the centuries and have everybody see the results of it. Just remember this, God did not create a devil. He created the beautiful sinless angel who turned himself into an evil one. Another reason God did not destroy Satan when sin first began to grow in his heart, was because He loved that beautiful creature He had made. Just as parents would not think of taking the lives of their children just because they begin wondering from the path of right, so God would not take the life of Lucifer because he had started indulging in sin. Finally, though, the justice of God is going to bring all of His creatures to judgment and sin will be punished in both angels and men. The wages of sin is death. After God's final disposition of sinners and sin, there can be no question at all concerning His justice and also His love. Finally, as an explanation of the existence of Satan, I wonder if it doesn't keep Christians growing in their Christian life because they have to face the adversary day after day. Nobility in growth and character is possible only when we meet temptation and overcome it. The devil's presence, of course, is a very obnoxious and aggravating evil, but yet it provides opportunity for us to exercise our spiritual muscles and our spiritual faith in God.

I think the experience of fishermen in their boats will help us understand a little bit of what I am trying to say here. Every boat in certain fishing fleets is provided with a tank that is so placed that through its perforated sides the water is constantly flowing in from the sea. Into this aquarium-like enclosure the fish are immediately released after they have been hauled in by the nets. Once they get into these small circumscribed quarters, the fish seem perfectly content. But even so, the fishermen know that the live fish must be disposed of as soon as they can get to the waiting dealers, for experience has shown them that the captives will soon become soft and flabby and listless. The security of the pen, in other words, will take its toll on the fish. They will not be as salable when they get to the shore because they've relaxed in their aquarium enclosure.

One fisherman who seemed to understand some basic principles of life better than the

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

other fishermen struck upon an ingenious plan. It was a plan which guaranteed that he would have the finest, firmest, and most vigorous fish of any in the fleet. When he returned from the fishing grounds, this man's catch was eagerly sought for and always brought the highest price. In vain his comrades tried to unravel the mystery, but through the years, he was as silent as a sphinx. After the old fisherman's death, his daughter, carrying out her father's instructions, told the secret. It was simple, but dramatic and effective. Her father, she announced, had made it a rule to keep a pugnacious catfish or two in the well of his boat. These fighting fish kept the finny freight in a state of alert agitation and alarm. The security the captured ones had in the tank of all the other vessels was denied those who found themselves in the same aquarium with the catfish. Compelled to live in a state of alarm and vigilance similar to their normal life in the sea, they maintained their stamina and strength. The utter security of all the other pens resulted in the deterioration of the favored fish. So friends, to ask the question: Why did not the old fisherman kill the catfish? is to suggest that evil might possibly have some uses after all. And maybe that is the purpose for having the devil around. It keeps us on our toes spiritually, it keeps us trusting in the power of a mighty delivering God. We human beings might be very secure without the devil, and yet we might be morally spineless and just like automatic machines. It is the climate of constant struggle and temptation which actually builds great characters as well as great civilization.

All right, we come to another question, and I think we'll have time to answer it on today's broadcast. You've been speaking a great deal about the Sabbath, but is it not true that time has been lost and the calendars have been changed so that we really don't know which day is the Seventh-day Sabbath?

I'm glad this question has been asked, friends, because it sure needs answering and clarifying. The fact is that time has never been lost. The greatest astronomers of our day assure us that it's impossible for any time to be lost in the history of the past. They are able to reach back by their wonderful methods of calculation and by the precision of the stars in the sky. They can definitely tell us that time has not been lost.

Now what about the calendars? Has it been changed so that we can't tell which day is which? Has the weekly cycle been confused to such a point that we really can't find the true seventh day of the week today? Let me say this about the calendar—we have today what is called the Gregorian Calendar. In the days of Jesus, they had the Julian Calendar, which was introduced by Julius Caesar long before Jesus was even born. Those astronomers believed that the exact length of the year was 365 1/4 days. But friends, the truth is that the year is eleven minutes less than 365 1/4 days. That doesn't seem to be very much but over a period of hundreds of years, eleven minutes added up. By 1582, the numbering of the calendar was ten days out of harmony with the solar system. In that year of 1582, Pope Gregory XIII corrected the mistake by making a small change in the calendar. It was Thursday, October 4, 1582 and the next day was Friday, October 5. But Gregory made Friday the 15th instead of the 5th. In other words, he dropped 10 days out of the numbering of the calendar so that it would come back into harmony with the heavenly bodies. But please take note that there was no change in the weekly cycle whatsoever. Friday still followed Thursday and Saturday still followed Friday, just exactly as it is today. There was no confusion in the order of days. Great Britain did not make this adjustment until 1752 when it was necessary to retrench eleven days, making September 3rd the 14th. Under the present plan, we retrench a day once every 129 years. You can readily see that the weekly cycle is not affected—but the change was made in the numbering of the calendar. Friday still followed Thursday and Sabbath still came after Friday.

So there it is, friends. No time has been lost. This is the reason God made the seven-day weekly cycle in the beginning. It was God who made everything in six days, and He set aside the seventh day as the Sabbath. It was sanctified, holy, and had God's special blessing upon it. Time has never been lost from that time to this. That historic week of seven days has been carried through the centuries unchanged. We know we have the very same seventh-day Sabbath that Jesus had when He was here. There can be no question on this point. The true Sabbath is right in front of your eyes when you look at the calendar in your own home.

^ Top

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Limiting God Listen to the audio version Now!

Did you hear about the man who telephoned the U. S. Naval Department greatly excited to tell them he had found a way to destroy all enemy submarines? When the Admirals showed interest in his discovery, the caller eagerly explained that his plan involved setting the ocean in a boil so that all the submarines would be bubbled up to the surface where they could be destroyed. When they asked the man how he proposed to make the ocean start boiling, he replied, "Well, I've given you the plan, but you'll have to work out the details."

Of course, everybody knew that the caller was either a nut or some kind of a jokester making a prank telephone call. It is so ridiculous that we laugh at the whole preposterous suggestion of the man.

But today I want to point you to a text in the Bible that sounds almost as incredible as the ocean boiling idea. When we first read this verse, it sounds so unlikely that we have to blink and read it again to make sure that our eyes are not deceiving us. It is undoubtedly one of the most daring texts in all the Scriptures. Here it is, taken from the midst of Psalms 78 verse 41: "Yea, they turned back and tempted God and limited the Holy One of Israel." So there it is in all of its strange boldness. It actually says the poor weak human beings can limit the great God of the Universe. Is that possible, friends? How could it be? Surely there must be something here that we don't understand at first glance.

So let's look into the background and setting of this Psalm for a moment. The entire Psalm is a description of the children of Israel as they left the land of Egypt and traveled into the dry hot barren wilderness of Sinai. Behind them was Egypt where they had been slaves; but behind them was also the food supply and the water. It was worse than they had expected in the desert. They quickly grew faint and discouraged. Their hearts turned back to the land of Egypt where they, at least, had the necessities to keep alive. Now it seemed that they would perish; so they began to murmur and complain-against Moses, and even against God.

The Bible says they tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel. In spite of their miraculous deliverance from the hand of Pharaoh, they doubted that God was with them, and that He would take care of them. And the Bible says that this lack of faith limited God in what He wanted to do for them.

So that is what the text means, friends. We can never limit God in His purpose and plan for the Universe. He moves the planets and stars and suns in their appointed paths without consulting us. And no man has the power to change God's designs for a single heavenly body. But listen, you can still limit God and change God's plan concerning what He wants to do in your life! You are a free moral agent with the individual choice over your own life. Even God cannot accomplish His purpose for your life unless you permit Him. God can do nothing for you without your consent. All the miracle demonstration of grace in your heart was wonderful, but you had to agree to it. The shattering breakthrough against sin in your life was God's work, but you had to give permission for Him to carry out His plan for your deliverance. The simple fact is that we can limit the illimitable and powerful God of Heaven in what He would like to do in our lives. We can veto and nullify the plans that God laid for our lives long before we were born.

I want you to think about this today and ask yourself a question. What might your life be like today if you had fully cooperated with God, and had permitted Him to carry out His full purpose in your life? Believe me, friends, things would be altogether different with every one of us today.

The Holy Bible has some sad reading on this subject. For example, Jesus had gone back to His home town of Nazareth where He had grown into manhood. What a tremendous

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

honor it was for that tiny village to welcome the Son of God-the Messiah-into their streets. But, do you know, they did not react as we might think they would to the visit of Christ. He would not receive Him, and they wouldn't listen to His message of truth because He was too plain and homespun. They rejected Him because He had lived in their town and was the son of the village carpenter. Notice what they said in Matthew 13:55,56: "Is not this the carpenter's son? Is not his mother called Mary? And his brothers James and Joses and Simon and Judas? . . . And they were offended in him. . . . And he did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief."

Listen, friends. Jesus wanted to work His miracles in Nazareth just as He had done in Capernaum. His relatives and neighbors lived in Nazareth; some of His boyhood playmates and friends were still in town. Perhaps some of them were sick or blind, and all of them needed to know the Saviour of the world. Jesus longed to touch them, to heal them, to lift their weight of sin and suffering, but He could not. They limited Jesus by their lack of faith. He could not deliver them.

How often we read in the Scriptures the words of Christ, "According to thy faith, be it unto you." And that is the limit of what Jesus can do for any one of us today. There are wonderful things that He wants to do for us now, just as He longed over the people of Nazareth. He has all power to meet every problem and need. He is ready to move in your behalf to smash obstacles out of your path. He holds the Universe in His hand, but He can't do a single thing for you unless you are willing. You can limit God still in His desires for your victory and your happiness.

And do you know how we do it, friends? Lack of faith is one thing that hinders, of course, but the Bible tells us about something else that completely frustrates our prayers and prevents God from doing His will for us. Here it is in Isaiah 59:1,2: "Behold the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear, but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear." That is one of the most true and demonstratable statements in the entire Bible. Everywhere people are limiting God by their sins-their jealousy, their hatreds, doubts, impurities. Known sin is like a chain that binds and fetters until the experience stagnates and loses its vital, fervent element. Finally, the life begins to dry up, and the beautiful design of God is vetoed and nullified.

Listen, those sin barriers have to come down before God can do His miracles for you. He can still heal and deliver in this twentieth century as well as He did in the first. There is no limit to what can be accomplished, when the sin barrier is removed. According to thy faith, be it unto you!

About 160 years ago man could travel no faster than a horse could run. The horse barrier stood in the way of human progress. But in 1830 a tremendous thing happened-man broke through the horse barrier by inventing the "iron horse"-the locomotive that could outrun the fastest animal alive. Then one breakthrough followed another until two brothers learned how to overcome the tug of gravity, and mankind became airborne for the first time. But then the SONIC barrier appeared like an invisible demon to shake the stoutest plane to pieces as it approached the speed of sound. It seemed insurmountable, but finally the engineers designed a streamlined fuselage that solved the sonic problem.

Then the THERMAL barrier arose to threaten progress, causing the metal body to melt like butter as it approached the speed of Mach 3, or three times the speed of sound. New alloys were developed which withstood the fierce heats, and now the scientists declare that the "impossible" things are merely the things they haven't had quite enough time to work out yet. And they are probably right. But if the flesh is able to do all of this, what can the mighty arm of Omnipotence do if we only give God a chance? The "sin barrier" is the last obstacle standing in the way and preventing God from carrying out His purpose in your life and mine. How long will we keep limiting the illimitable God in His plans for our lives?

Now I want to point you to one of the most dramatic examples in the Bible to show what sin can do. It is found in Joshua 7:11-13. The armies of Israel had crossed over the river Jordan and were moving forward to occupy the land that God had given them. God had promised to deliver the enemy into their hands, so they confidently marched against a little town that stood in their way-the town of Ai. But to their dismay, every assault was thrown back and they seemed to have no power to stand against the little band of the enemy. Joshua was so discouraged that he rent his clothes, fell on his face before the Lord, and pleaded for an explanation. Well, the Lord gave him an explanation all right, and it wasn't a very pleasant one. He said, "Israel hath sinned . . . for they have even taken of the accursed thing, and have also stolen . . . and they have put it even among their own stuff. Therefore the Children of Israel could not stand before their enemies." Verse 11.

That is right-somebody in the camp of Israel had broken the law of God. They had stolen something and hidden it in their tent, and the next day they found out that it was Achan. He had taken a goodly Babylonish garment and 200 shekels of silver, and it was buried in his tent. The Bible says they brought the accursed things from their hiding place "and laid them out before the Lord" (verse 23). Then Achan was destroyed for his presumptuous sin, and the armies marched forward to victory over all this town-their enemies in Ai.

Listen, doesn't this help explain why there is so little power in the lives of Christians today? Sometimes there are hidden sins-willful transgressions that have shut out the Spirit of God and the power of God. Those sins must be confessed. They must be laid out before the Lord before the victory can be granted. The blessing of Heaven falls only upon the obedient. Here is the proof for that statement, and I am reading it right out of the New Testament, Acts 7:32: "And we are his witnesses of these things, and so is also the Holy Ghost, whom God hath given to them that obey Him." Now there it is! The Holy Spirit is given only to those that obey Him. No wonder the modern church is so barren of power. They have rejected the Ten Commandments as out-of-date, and old-fashioned. Theologians, pastors and evangelists have turned their backs upon the great moral law that God wrote with His own hand, and have openly encouraged transgression. Some have denied the binding obligation of only certain of the Ten Commandments, but most of them have thrown aside the fourth one altogether. That is the one about the Sabbath Day which identifies the Creator as the only true God to be worshipped. The Sabbath was set aside, and made holy by God Himself and commanded by God and written by His hand. "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy, six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work. . . ."

Well, you already see what I am pointing out, don't you, friends? What does the commandment say? "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God . . ." Yet how many Christians even profess to keep that commandment today? The seventh day is Saturday, and it is used, contrary to God's express command, as a common day of work and business. The Bible says the blessing of God and the Spirit of God is given to those who obey Him.

Oh, how we need a revival in the churches today-a revival of obedience. And that kind of a revival would bring a spiritual revival also as the Spirit of God would be poured out upon those who loved Him enough to obey Him.

Listen to the audio version Now!

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Lord's Day - Part 1

Sometime ago a friend of mine was driving through Ohio on his way to New York City. At least he thought he was heading for New York until suddenly he saw a huge bus speed toward him and past him, plainly marked New York City. It was puzzling to say the least. Either that bus driver was wrong or he was wrong. So he drove in to the next service station and asked, "Say, isn't this the way to New York City?" The attendant smiled and said, "Yes, if you want to go 25,000 miles."

Only then did he realize that he had turned the wrong direction after stopping at a turnpike restaurant. He quickly turned around and headed in the right direction.

This experience of my friend illustrates very clearly what is happening to a lot of people in their religious life. No matter how sincere a person may be, he might be sincerely wrong. Something more is needed than sincerity in order to reach the right destination. Some times Christians discover that they have been mistaken. Sometimes they have been misled by others and find themselves going in the wrong direction. It is tremendously important that Christians keep open minds and hearts and be willing to change directions if necessary to keep in harmony with constantly unfolding truth. After all, truth cannot be everything. Truth is circumscribed in religion by what is in the Bible. It doesn't conform to everything, but it must conform to what is revealed in the Bible. People may be and will be wrong, but God's Word never is.

Let's apply that to a strange situation we find in the world today. Although we have the same Christ, the same Bible, yet we find two Sabbath days kept by Christians. And the sincere heart cannot help but ask, "Which is right?"

There are multitudes who have been told, and who honestly believe, that the keeping of the seventh-day Sabbath was abolished at the cross and that the first day of the week—the day we now call Sunday—became the Lord's day in honor of the resurrection. There is another group of Christians, equally sincere, who believe that the original seventh-day Sabbath is the true Lord's day to be observed by all—even this side of the cross.

Friends, if ever I have asked God to help me speak with fairness and honest candor, it is now. For we all know, multitudes of sincere, devoted men and women are walking where their forefathers have walked without once thinking to question why they keep the day that they do. Yet we must learn—and I believe we have learned—one vital truth. It is this. We must have Scripture support for every Christian practice that we follow.

Now if we are wrong on the Sabbath question—wrong either way—God's word will certainly reveal that error. And I believe that every honest man and woman wants to know the truth, even if the truth turns out to be different from what he expected it to be. If the Scriptures reveal that I am keeping the wrong day, then I ought to be perfectly willing to change. Don't you think?

I know there are those who say it doesn't make any difference which day you keep, so long as you keep one day in seven. Ever hear anyone talk like that? Does it make a difference? Is any day acceptable to God? Let's turn to the Book, to the Bible in your hand, and see what we discover. We shall read three simple, clear statements. First will you turn to Revelations 1:10. "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet."

Evidently the Lord has a day. But which day is it? "For the Son of man is Lord even of the Sabbath day." Matthew 12:8. There must be something different about the Sabbath. Through the prophet Isaiah God speaks of the Sabbath and calls it plainly "my holy day." Isaiah 58:13. And no where in Scripture does He designate an other day as his.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

The Lord, then, has a day. And that day is the Sabbath. But now we ask, which of the seven days is the Sabbath? We turn for our answer to the very heart of the Ten Commandments. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work: but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." Exodus 20: 8-10. That is clear, isn't it? Now we have learned three things. The Lord has a day. The Sabbath is the Lord's day. The seventh day is the Sabbath.

And now verse 11. This tells us why God made the Sabbath. "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, and hallowed it." Evidently there is a mighty strong link between the Sabbath and creation and the Creator.

By the way, who made the worlds? Who made this earth? You say, "God did." Yes. But let's turn to Ephesians 3: 9. "And to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ." John 1: 10 declares "He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not." Could any statement be clearer? Yes, Christ, as He pre-existed before Bethlehem, created this world.

Watch what happened. "And on the seventh day God ended His work which He had made; and He rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it He had rested from all His work which God created and made." Genesis 2: 2,3. Do you see it now? The One who made this earth is the One who made the Sabbath. Jesus had every right to say, "The Son of man is Lord of the sabbath day." For He had made it. He had every right to say, "If ye love Me, keep My commandments." For it was He Himself, back in Eden, who first gave commandments to men.

Do we really sense the impact of what we have just discovered? Listen. The Christ of Calvary is the Creator of Genesis. To reject one is to reject the other! Have you ever thought of that? To reject one is to reject the other! Oh friends, why do we try to isolate the Sabbath and put it off somewhere by itself? Why are we so unwilling to leave it just where God put it—in the very center of His eternal law?

Do you know that if I would go into a city and talk about juvenile delinquency and community betterment and salvation from sin—if I should point men to the word of God regarding adultery, stealing, killing, and show how Christ can give victory—every Christian would stand right back of me and many non-Christians as well. They would say, "Brother Joe, what a wonderful work you are doing for humanity!" But the moment we mention the Sabbath of the fourth commandment, eyebrows are lifted. Questions are raised. Excuses are piled high. Why? I ask you. Why?

It is perfectly all right to talk about the first or second commandment or the sixth or the seventh or the eighth. But don't mention the fourth. Why? Let's be consistent. You can see that the commandments stand or fall together. Either they are still in force or they aren't. Either it's wrong for me to lie and kill and steal, or it isn't. We don't make excuses for breaking the other commandments. Why the fourth? I have often wondered how so clear and simple a matter as our relationship to grace and the commandments of God—I say, I have often wondered how so clear and simple a matter can be made to appear so confusing. People say, "I'm saved by grace. I don't need to keep the law." Did you ever hear anybody reason like that? But friend, do grace and pardon release us from obedience to the very law that we have broken? If I am saved, will I pick your pocket? Will I lie? Will I steal? Will I kill? No. Commandment keeping becomes a possibility to the heart that loves his Lord. It's love that makes all the difference.

Do you see? Salvation from the power of sin is a gift from God. He cancels our sin debt of the past through no good works of our own. And then, when we are forgiven, it is our delight to do God's will. Not to merit heaven, you understand. But because we love Him. Commandment keeping, you see, is not a means of salvation. It is an evidence of it. Keep that clear distinction in mind, and you will never have any confusion on this vital point.

Now some, without really thinking it through, have told us that the seventh day Sabbath is Jewish and therefore is not for us. But Jesus said, "The Sabbath was made for man." And that means all men. The Saviour Himself made the Sabbath two thousand years before there was a Jew. He gave the Sabbath along with marriage, and the Sabbath is no more Jewish than is marriage. Woman was made for man. Did you ever hear anyone say, "I can't get married because it's Jewish?" Did you?

The deeper you study into this thing, the more thoroughly you investigate, the greater will be your conviction that something is wrong somewhere, that in some very vital issues we have been just slipping along, following the crowd, never thinking to question. At this point you maybe saying, "I believe you are right. Evidently the seventh day is the right day to keep. But how can we know that the day we now call Saturday is the seventh day of Bible times?" Let's look at the following texts: Luke 23: 52-56; 24: 1. "This man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus. And he took it down, and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid. And that day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on. And the women also, which came with Him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how His body was laid. And they returned and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment. Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared and certain others with them."

Do you see how these words settle the matter? Three days are mentioned here—the preparation day, the Sabbath, and the first day of the week. Notice that two of the days are given sacred titles. The other is given simply a number—the first day of the week. Oh, I know it doesn't say Friday, Saturday, Sunday. But we all know that Jesus was crucified on the day we now call Friday, and rose from the dead on the day we now call Sunday. The Sabbath is the day in between. It's as simple as that!

And keep in mind that these words were not written that weekend and rushed off to press. No. They were written many years this side of the cross. Yet the inspired writer still calls the seventh day the Sabbath, and Sunday simply the first day of the week. Significant, isn't it? Think it through.

I hope you will not be satisfied with a shallow look at this Sabbath subject, friends. It is terribly important to understand exactly how you relate to those ten commandments that God wrote with His own hand.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Lord's Day - Part 3

Drug use, ritual and political murders, homosexuality, vandalism, blasphemy, perversions of every kind are practiced in the name of freedom. How deceived can we get? No person arrives at freedom by breaking the law—just nobody. True freedom is found in obeying the law. Who is in jail? Who is in prison? Those who break the law or those who obey it?

People disobey God's law thinking that it is against them. Not so. God's law is for you. You obey it, and it does you good. It is only as you break it that you are in trouble.

We turn our thoughts now to the commandment which is probably broken more than all of the other nine. And the amazing thing is that it is broken just as much by the preachers and church members as it is by the atheists and infidels. Many don't even realize they are doing it, but you'll understand better as we move into the subject.

Today we continue talking about the fifteen texts which are strangely missing from the Protestant Bible. In fact, friends, these texts are missing from everybody's Bible. For some reason certain traditional ideas have been so rooted and inbred through the years that millions are convinced that those ideas are inspired and infallible—that they are actually contained in texts of the Bible. On the contrary, they are not even true. The Bible has nothing to say about them, and they are based solely on hearsay and tradition.

One of these issues revolves around the weekly day of worship which God commanded in His Ten Commandments. The vast majority hold that Sunday is the right day to sanctify in spite of the clear precise wording of the fourth commandment, which says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." The most amazing fact of all is that these millions keep a different day than the one God commanded without having any real Bible reason for doing so. Most of them would concede that they do it by habit or custom and not because there are moral reasons for doing so.

But we are interested in deeper reasons for serving and obeying the Lord, friends. And that is why we take a closer look at the strange reasoning of those who defend the sanctity of a day that God never made holy. God said, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord ... in it thou shalt not do any work." The seventh day is Saturday, not Sunday. It always has been. There has never been any confusion on the part of calendars or weekly cycles to cast doubt on this point. One day only was sanctified, hallowed and blessed by God. The seventh day stands apart from all the other days of the week. It is God's blessed, sanctified rest day.

God wants a distinction to be made between the seventh and the other days of the week. Many people today say it makes no difference whether we observe one day or another day as the holy day, but God says it does make a difference. "Her priests have violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my sabbaths, and I am profaned among them." Ezekiel 22:26.

Speaking through the prophet Isaiah, God calls the Sabbath "my holy day." "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honorable; and shalt honour him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord." Isaiah 58:13,14. God says the Sabbath is His holy day. He says that when we honor the Sabbath we honor Him. He says people have their feet upon His Sabbath and He asks that they take their feet off from His holy day. There is no text in the Bible where the first day of the week is said to be holy.

The first day of the week is mentioned eight times in the New Testament but never is it called a holy day. If the first day were to be understood to be sacred after the resurrection of Christ then surely the Lord would have so stated in one of these eight places in which reference is made to it. Let us examine the eight New Testament Scriptures which mention the first day. Turn first to Luke 24:1-6: "Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them. And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre. And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jesus."

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

Every line of the New Testament Scriptures was written after Christ had died upon the cross, had been raised from the dead, and had ascended to heaven. If Christ intended for Sunday to be kept in honor of His resurrection, we would expect this fact to be clearly stated in one of these eight places which mention the first day of the week and the resurrection of our Lord; but this statement in Luke says nothing about observing the first day in commemoration of the resurrection. Moreover, Luke emphasizes that the Sabbath was the day before the first day of the week. Going back to Luke 23:52-56 we read, "This man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus. And he took it down, and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid. And that day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on. And the women also, which came from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid. And they returned, and prepared spices, and ointments; and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment."

Luke speaks here of three days. He calls the day Christ was crucified the preparation day. It was the day to prepare for the Sabbath. The next day after the crucifixion was the Sabbath, and Luke says that the men and women who followed our Saviour kept the Sabbath according to the commandment. The day after the Sabbath on the first day of the week, these followers of Christ came to the tomb of our Lord and found that He had risen.

Now let us turn to Matthew's account of Christ's resurrection upon the first day of the week. "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre. And behold there was a great earthquake: for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door and sat upon it." Matthew 28:1,2.

Here we have a second text mentioning the first day of the week, and the resurrection of our wonderful Saviour, but Matthew says nothing about observing the first day of the week in honor of Jesus' resurrection. He did state that the Sabbath was already ended when the first day of the week had come.

Mark's two references to the first day of the week in Chapter 16 of his gospel, verses 2 and 9 pertain to the resurrection of Christ on that day, but offer no suggestion that the day is to be kept holy in consequence of that great event.

Thus far we have considered four of the first day texts. All of them deal with the resurrection of Christ. All were written after the crucifixion and the resurrection. Not one of them even hints that we should observe Sunday to commemorate our Lord rising from the dead.

John renders the same account as that which was given by Luke, Matthew and Mark. Says John, "The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre." John 20:1.

All four gospel writers call Friday, the day Christ was crucified, the preparation day. All four say the Sabbath was the day before the first day of the week. There is no text that says that Jesus ever observed the first day of the week as a holy day. There is one text that some have used to try to make a case that Jesus observed Sunday. And that brings us to the sixth text in the New Testament that mentions the first day of the week. Here it is, "Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you." John 20:19.

Some have said Jesus and the disciples were here having a meeting on the first day of the week to honor our Lord's resurrection. But the Scriptures prove this conclusion to be erroneous. The Bible says, "When the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews." The disciples were not conducting a religious meeting. They had locked themselves in for fear of the Jews.

Jesus found it necessary to convince the disciples that He had arisen from the dead. They were not having a meeting in honor of His resurrection. In Mark 16:11-14 we read of Christ's rebuking the disciples in that upper room because they did not believe He was risen.

There is no text in the New Testament that affirms that the apostles ever observed the first day of the week as a holy day. This brings us to the seventh text that mentions the first day. Some have striven to make this Scripture say that the apostles were Sunday observers. Read Acts 20: 7-38. Let us read first Acts 20: 7. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight." In verses 22 and 23 it is clear that Paul knew this was his last meeting with that group of believers, hence his farewell sermon carried on into the first day of the week. There is no suggestion here that Paul was observing the first day as holy.

In verses 13-17 we are told that the Apostle Paul had a meeting on Wednesday with the elders of Ephesus and far more is said concerning this Wednesday meeting than is said about the Sunday meeting, and yet no one concludes that the Apostles were observing Wednesday as a holy day. On either day it was simply stated that they had a meeting.

If it be said that the disciples broke bread upon the first day of the week, let it be remembered that Jesus broke bread with the disciples the night of His betrayal which was Thursday night. I Corinthians 11:23-26; Matthew 26:26-30. In Acts 2:46 it is said that the church broke bread every day. So because the disciples broke bread upon the first day of the week does not mean that there is any sacredness attached to the day any more than that Thursday is holy because Christ and the disciples broke bread on that night.

Rather than being a Sunday observer, the Apostle Paul was a Sabbath keeper. It was his habit or practice to observe the Sabbath. "And Paul as his manner was, went in unto them, and three sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures. Acts 17:2.

There is no text which says that it was customary for the church to meet on Sunday. And this brings me to the eighth and last text in the New Testament which mentions the first day of the week. Some have thought that I Corinthians 16:1, 2 refers to a meeting of the church on Sunday. Let us read it. "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given orders to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." This does not say that the church was having a meeting on Sunday. Neither does it say that the church is to have a meeting on Sunday. The Apostle Paul writes instruction concerning a collection for the poor saints. He said on the first day of the week when the Corinthians found how God had prospered them the week before they were to set aside a collection for the saints.

The Modern Speech New Testament reads: "On the first day of every week let each of you put on one side at his home." The Apostle was writing to the Corinthians, the people of Corinth. These people were Sabbath-keepers. You will find this in Acts 18:1-4. Please examine the reference on your own.

The Apostolic church had their religious services on the Sabbath. We read this in Acts 13:42-44: "And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath. Now when the congregation was broken up, many of the Jews and religious proselytes followed Paul and Barnabas: who speaking to them, persuaded them to continue in the grace of God. And the next Sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God."

The Apostle Paul preached to the Jews one Sabbath. The Gentiles asked for the Word of God to be preached to them the next Sabbath. What a splendid opportunity for the Apostle Paul to say: "I preached to the Jews today because it is their Sabbath, but we keep Sunday, and I will preach to you tomorrow." But no, both Jews and Gentiles came together the next Sabbath to hear the great preacher Paul present the gospel of Christ.

We have examined all eight texts in the New Testament which mention the first day of the week, and we see that there is no support in any of these for Sunday observance. We'll have to rest the matter right there for today because our time is gone. But, friends, don't be satisfied with just a superficial, emotional reason for your religious practices. Make absolutely sure that you have a sound Bible reason for your faith.

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Lord's Day - Part 4

You have heard it said: "Two hundred million people can't be wrong." The idea is that we should go along with the two hundred million. Is it safe to follow the crowd? Is it the thing to do? Suppose the crowd is wrong, should you follow it anyway? I know it is hard not to do that, especially for young people, but should you not have backbone and do it anyway? How about standing for the right because it is right? Does it pay? Is it the thing to do? You may be amazed, but God has something to say about this very thing. Listen: "Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil." Exodus 23:2. Words couldn't be plainer than those. Don't follow the crowd, don't follow the majority group, says the Lord, if it is wrong.

But I can hear you argue, the crowd is likely to be right. But no—there is where you're wrong. The crowd is generally wrong. How was it in Noah's day? Suppose you had followed the crowd then, what would have happened to you? Where would you have ended up? But suppose you had used your thinker, suppose you had listened to Noah's preaching, believed and got in the Ark. What then? Of course, it takes courage to buck the crowd. It did in Noah's day, and only eight people had that kind of courage. But they are the ones that didn't drown. It takes courage, moral courage, to stand alone for Jesus and His truth against family, friends, and relatives. But remember this: There will be no cowards in heaven. And more than that, there are no cowards on the "straight and narrow" road which Jesus told us to travel to get to heaven and eternal life. There was Jesus—what kind of courage did He have? What do you think it took to leave heaven and come to this sinful world? What do you think it took to be rejected by His own people, to be persecuted, spit upon, mocked, whipped and crucified?

Suppose you had followed the crowd in Lot's day. What would have happened? Where would you have ended up? You would have been burned with the fire and brimstone from heaven and burned to ashes. And here's a thing we should keep in mind: the fire that destroyed the city of Sodom and its people was a type of the fire that will destroy sinners in the final day. Here is where the Bible says that: "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." 2 Peter 3:7. Why was Lot saved out of Sodom? Why was he not burned up? Because he followed the crowd? No, because he didn't. Lot did not engage in the filthy talk and conversation of the people. He did not engage in their wicked and evil practices.

Suppose you had followed the crowd in Jesus' day? Where, then, would you have ended up? Well, you would not have been with Jesus and the twelve. They were the few, the minority group. But listen, if you had followed the crowd then, you would have helped to crucify Jesus. If you had identified with Jesus in His day, you would have been against the Scribes, Pharisees and Saducees, the religious leaders of that day. They would have been against you as they were against Jesus. They would have "cast you out of the synagogues." They would have stoned you or put you to death by crucifixion and other ways. I wonder how many living today would have stood with Jesus had they lived in His day?

Suppose you follow the crowd today? Where will you end up? Not in heaven! For most people are not headed in that direction. You would end up on the "broad way" that leads to destruction that Jesus talked about. Do you know, friends, that if every other person in the world did wrong, that would not excuse you and me for doing it. Each person will stand on his own individual feet, stand in his own shoes as we sometimes say. Jesus says, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, and I will receive you."

No, the crowd is not safe to follow—not even in religious matters. Perhaps I should say—especially in religious matters. For the past three broadcasts we have been considering the amazing fact that millions keep Sunday, the first day of the week, under the misconception that their observance of Sunday is based upon a text of the Bible. We continue now to point out the 15 texts that are not found in the Word of God. Many think they are there, but they are not.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

For example, there is no Bible text where the first day is called the Lord's day. We do read that there is a Lord's day. John has written, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." Revelation 1:10. But the Lord's day is the seventh day Sabbath. Never once is the first day called the Lord's day. God has said, "But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." Exodus 20:10. "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day. . ." Isaiah 58:13. "The Son of man is Lord also of the Sabbath." Mark 2:28.

There is no Bible text that says to keep the first day of the week in honor of Jesus' resurrection. Many times the New Testament speaks of the resurrection and of its importance, but not once does it say to honor Sunday in commemoration of the resurrection. Baptism by immersion was given to memorialize the resurrection, and Sunday observance is not sanctioned by Christ for this purpose. See Romans 6:3-7.

There is no text in all the writings of the Apostles that authorizes the observance of the first day of the week.

There is no text that gives any instruction as to how to keep the first day of the week. The Bible has instructed how to observe the seventh day Sabbath. In Leviticus 23:3 we are instructed, "Six days shall work be done: but the seventh day is the sabbath of rest, an holy convocation." We are to rest and have a holy gathering upon the Sabbath. We are told in Exodus 16:22-25 that we are to prepare our food the day before the Sabbath. Friday is said to be the preparation day. "And it came to pass that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man: and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moses. And he said unto them, This is that which the Lord hath said, Tomorrow is the rest of the holy sabbath unto the Lord: bake that which ye will bake today, and seethe that which ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over lay up for you to be kept until the morning. . . . And Moses said, Eat that today; for today is a Sabbath unto the Lord: today ye shall not find it in the field."

Isaiah says the Sabbath is not to be a day for our worldly pleasures. "If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord honourable; and shalt honour him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words." Isaiah 58:13.

The Sabbath is to be kept from sundown Friday night to sundown Saturday night. "From even to even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath" we read in Leviticus 23:32. Even is when the sun sets, when the sun goes down, when it begins to grow dark. "At even, at the going down of the sun." Deuteronomy 16:6. "And at even, when the sun did set." Mark 1:32. "And it came to pass, that when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark before the Sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the Sabbath." Nehemiah 13:19.

We are not to buy and sell on the Sabbath. Nehemiah 13:15-18. We are not to work on the Sabbath. Exodus 20:10. There is in the Bible explicit instruction as to how to observe the Sabbath. There is absolutely no instruction as to how to observe Sunday. Those who observe that day must map out their own plan for its observance. They have no guidance in the Bible on this matter.

There is no text where we are told not to work on the first day of the week. We are told that we are not to labor on the seventh day.

There is no text that says the seventh day of the week is no longer God's holy day. Christ did nail to the cross the law governing the offering of sacrifices, and the yearly sabbaths upon which they were offered, but the holy seventh day Sabbath which was given as a memorial of creation is still to be observed, and will be honored when this earth is made new and restored to God's original purpose.

The prophet Isaiah has written, "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." Isaiah 65:17-19. "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord" Isaiah 66:22,23. Each Sabbath in the new earth we shall come together to worship God. The Sabbath extends from Eden to Eden restored. It reached from the earth in a perfect condition when it was first created to the earth restored to a perfect state.

There is no Bible text that says the apostles taught their converts to keep Sunday. There are texts which teach baptism, and the Lord's supper, but none that teach the observance of Sunday.

There is no Bible text that says grace frees us from obeying the Sabbath commandment. Under grace we have no license to worship false gods, to bow to graven images, to take God's name in vain, to dishonor our parents, to kill, to commit immorality, to steal, to lie or to covet. Neither under grace do we have license to break the Sabbath of God.

There is no text that says the seventh day Sabbath which God blessed and sanctified has been abolished. There is no text that says God has ever removed His blessing and sanctification from the seventh day.

There is no text that says that if a person keeps all the ten commandments but the Sabbath that God will wink at his sin of Sabbath breaking. Rather, we have been told we will be judged by this law and that we will be held responsible for obedience to everyone of these commandments. "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill thou art become a transgressor of the law. So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty." James 2: 10-12.

Jesus made the Sabbath to be a holy day. Therefore, let us keep it out of love for Him. Jesus commanded, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Then why should we ignore His commandment? Jesus Himself set the example in Sabbath keeping. Let us follow His example. Luke 4: 14-16. 1 Peter 2: 21. It was Jesus' custom to go to the house of God on the Sabbath. We are to follow in His steps. Our feet ought to go to the house of God on the Sabbath. Let us not go to the market place to buy our stock of groceries for the coming week on the Sabbath, let us not go to the shop, the store, and the office on the Sabbath. Let us go to God's house on the Sabbath and do as Jesus did.

Friend, look to Calvary and behold the sacrifice Jesus made to save you, and to save all of us, and then heed His appeal, "If ye love me, keep my commandments" John 14: 15.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Missing Text - Part 1

How strange it is that tradition often displaces authoritative truth in the minds of multitudes of sincere people. Statements that have been repeated for years finally are approved simply because the repetition has given a stamp of authority. This is especially true in the field of religion. The average Christian, unfortunately, does very little study of the Bible for himself. His convictions have been formed by listening to his pastor explain religion. Now there's nothing wrong in giving attention to the preacher, but friends, we should put his preaching to the acid test of the Bible. This matter of eternal life is too important to trust to the interpretations of any other person. We're admonished to search the Scriptures and try the spirits. Notice this text in 1 Peter 3:15. "... be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." Put with that another text in Isaiah 8:20. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

A truly spiritual pastor will urge his flock to study the Bible to test his message. No man's opinion is worth very much, not even the very best preacher's. The fact is that leading theologians are drifting farther and farther from the anchor of Bible truth. Thousands of men who occupy leading pulpits today have lost their faith in the historic Scriptures. For this reason, if for no other, the individual Christian should seek to know the Bible truth for himself, letting the Bible explain and interpret itself. He must be able to give an answer for his beliefs and practices. The average church member can only defend his faith by saying, "Well, my preacher said it," or, "My church teaches that way." It's amazing how much religion is taken for granted.

Repeated practice through the generations has ingrained some traditions, making them seem like inviolate truth. Some very common religious practices are not even found in the Bible at all. Oh, most people think they are. They've heard misquoted texts and vague references, but the Bible statement itself is missing. One of the strangest cases of this is in the observance of Sunday by millions. The missing text for observing the first day of the week has been the object of long search and study. It is now acknowledged by leading churchmen that no biblical authority exists for the practice. The familiar ten commandments do indeed set aside a day for worship and rest; but, that day is Saturday, the seventh day of the week, not Sunday, the first. Listen to the wording of that law, friends, in Exodus 20:8-11. "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work. ..." Notice, it says plainly "the seventh day is the sabbath." I'm sure that every listener agrees that Saturday is indeed the day specified here. The calendar on your wall confirms this fact. Saturday is the seventh day of the week. How strange then that so many are keeping a different day than God specified. What is the explanation? Friends, here's a perfect example of church members taking tradition without searching the Bible for themselves.

We're certainly interested in knowing for sure which day Jesus observed as the Sabbath. We won't consider our own convenience in this question at all. If Jesus kept Wednesday holy, then we want to keep that same day. If He commanded the observance of Tuesday, we're all willing to make that our Sabbath. Personally, I'm not particular which day it is so long as I know that it's the one He blessed and kept.

Our purpose now is to approach the Word of God with an unbiased, sincere mind in order to find the truth on this question and know for sure which day is holy. Which day did Jesus observe? Luke 4:16 tells us, "And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read."

Because most of the Christian world keeps Sunday as a day of rest and worship, we will investigate the Bible authority for this practice. If the Scriptures teach Sunday-keeping, then certainly we ought to be in the forefront to stand right with it. It's only right and honest that we give careful study to every mention of the first day of the week in the New Testament before making any decision. There are only eight references to Sunday, and we will consider them separately. If there is any authority, it is bound to appear in one of these Scripture texts.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

Let's read first in Mark 16:9. "Now when Jesus was risen early the first day of the week, he appeared first to Mary Magdalene, out of whom he had cast seven devils." Here we have the simple historical account of the resurrection of Christ on the first day of the week. The crucifixion, as we know, took place on Friday afternoon, and Jesus rested in the tomb over the Sabbath. Early on the first day of the week, Sunday, he rose from the grave. This forms the basis for the observance of Easter Sunday. Mary was one of the first to discover that He was risen when she came seeking Him early that morning. Notice verses 1 and 2 of the same chapter. "And when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, had bought sweet spices, that they might come and anoint him. And very early in the morning the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun." One interesting thing about this text, friends, is that it contains no intimation that Sunday was to be a special day of rest. The Sabbath was past when the first day of the week had come, making it plain to see that Sabbath and Sunday are two different days altogether.

Now let's turn to Luke 23:54-56; 24:1. "And that day was the preparation, and the sabbath drew on. And the women also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid. And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the sabbath day according to the commandment. Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them." This is simply another reference to the events of the resurrection day. The women came to see the body of Jesus on Friday afternoon and then returned to their homes to prepare spices for the actual burying. And what did they do on the next day, Saturday? Notice the wording, they "rested the sabbath day according to the commandment." And according to the commandment, "the seventh day is the sabbath," so these women knew nothing about any change of the Sabbath. They saved their work until the Sabbath was past, then came early the first day of the week to prepare the body for burial. Please remember that this account was written about 35 years afterward, giving plenty of time for any change of the Sabbath to be known by all. Under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, the gospel writers would have made clear any new institution in the matter of Sabbath observance. Since all the gospels contain a consistent record of faithful seventh-day Sabbath-keeping, there is absolutely no intimation of first-day observance.

We now turn to the fourth mention of the first day of the week, found in Matthew 28:1. "In the end of the sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary to see the sepulchre." We should never forget that when the resurrection day came, the Sabbath was already ended. Still there is no evidence that Sunday is to be kept holy. So we move on to our next text in John 20:1. "The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early, when it was yet dark, unto the sepulchre, and seeth the stone taken away from the sepulchre." This is another narrative record of the coming of Mary to the tomb early on Sunday morning, very similar to the other texts we've already considered. Still, no evidence here for Sunday-keeping.

Continuing our honest search for Bible evidence, we turn to John 20:19. "Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you." This verse has often been misconstrued to mean that the disciples were meeting to honor the resurrection of Jesus. But the truth of the matter is that those disciples didn't even believe that Christ had risen. It was Sunday afternoon just after the resurrection in the early morning of that day, and they were assembled in great fear behind locked doors for fear of the Jews. You see, the rumor had been circulated that the disciples had stolen away the body of the Lord. No wonder they were afraid.

Now let's read a text to show that they really did not believe their Master had risen. "And they, when they had heard that He was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not. And they went and told it unto the residue; neither believed they them. Afterward he appeared unto the eleven as they sat at meat, and upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen him after he was risen." This is from Mark 16:11, 13, 14. Therefore, we see how utterly mistaken it is to say the disciples were celebrating a joyful memorial of the resurrection. They would not believe until Jesus Himself came and appeared to them personally.

I've heard it said that Jesus always met with His disciples on the first day of the week after He arose from the dead. But the Scriptures reveal quite a different story. His appearance is mentioned in John 20:14, and there is no mention of which day of the week it was, but He came to them when they were fishing on the sea and called them to come to shore and meet Him. So, we're sure that it wasn't any rest day or holy day.

The seventh mention of the first day of the week is found in 1 Corinthians 16:1, 2. "Now concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given order to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him that there be no gatherings when I come.” Some have believed this to be the record of a church gathering with a regular offering being taken. But closer examination shows that it was not a religious meeting at all. Paul was sending men who would pick up their contributions to take up to Jerusalem—food, clothing, and money was no doubt included. Paul wrote ahead to tell the Corinthian believers to lay aside whatever they could give and have it ready when they came. The supplies were for the famine-stricken believers in Jerusalem. Please note that other translations say “lay by in store at home.” Weymouth also adds these words, “keep any profit he may have made.” So you see, it was a matter of storing up at home whatever they could afford from the profits of their business. In no sense can it be inferred that there was a religious meeting held or an offering taken.

Well, there is only one other text in the New Testament that mentions the first day of the week. And, by the way, it is the only time a religious meeting was held on Sunday. We'll be back tomorrow with a broadcast to consider this text. If there is any authority for Sunday-keeping, it will be found in that final reference.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

“Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath.”

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Missing Text - Part 2

Today we continue the fascinating search for a missing text of the Bible. Countless millions have taken it for granted that their religious customs were in perfect harmony with the teachings of historic Christianity. But, friends, they've assumed that on the basis of tradition rather than on personal Bible study. History reveals that the majority have generally been wrong in this matter of religious practice. There's really only one sure criteria of truth and that's the revealed Word of God—the Bible. No Christian should be without personal conviction based upon personal study of that great textbook of truth.

In our last broadcast, we suggested that few people really understand why they observe Sunday as a religious or holy day. The average Christian has accepted the authority of Sunday purely on the basis of majority practice. Yet, the Bible commands that we search the Scriptures and be able to give a reason for the hope within us. Every person should know why he is what he is—religiously speaking. This idea of blind adherence or unthinking submission to a creed which affects our entire life is just not reasonable, friends, and neither is it biblical. We want to be sure that our doctrine is based on absolute truth.

Now what is the truth anyway? Jesus said in John 14:6, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." Again, in John 17:17 we read, "Thy word is truth." Here the example of Jesus is set forth as a perfect pattern for us to follow. The Word of God is also presented as an infallible standard of truth. So the great question is raised, "What day did Jesus keep as a holy day?" And then, "What day is upheld consistently throughout the Bible as the day for Christians to observe?" If we can find the answers to these questions, friends, we'll know what we ought to be doing about the Sabbath today.

First of all, let's read about Jesus' custom in weekly worship. We read this in Luke 4:16, "And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read." Now there it is, plain and clear. There's the way, the truth, and the life on the subject, friends, because Jesus as a regular practice observed the Sabbath day. Without exception, the Sabbath day of the Scriptures is the seventh day of the week, or Saturday, as we understand it and know it today. That's the way it is on our modern calendars.

But somebody says, "Well, maybe that custom was changed after Jesus died." In order to settle this question, we started an investigation yesterday of every single text in the New Testament which mentions the first day of the week. Actually there are only eight of these texts and we completed seven of them in our previous study. Not one single example was found of Sunday observance. In fact, those first seven instances actually confirmed that Sunday was the day of the resurrection of Jesus and was used just like any of the other ordinary days of the week—as a work day instead of some holy day.

Now today we'll examine that final text, the eighth one, in the New Testament which mentions the first day of the week. It is the only text which records a religious meeting on Sunday. Now friends, if there's any authority at all for observing this day, we'll certainly find it as we look at this final reference. So let's read in Acts 20:7, 8. "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them, ready to depart on the morrow; and continued his speech until midnight. And there were many lights in the upper chamber, where they were gathered together." All right, let's pause there for just a moment. Here, as I mentioned a moment ago, we have the only record of a religious meeting being held on the first day of the week. Now if there's any authority for Sunday-keeping we're going to have to find it right here in this text. So let's look at it carefully and let's look at it honestly.

First of all, it says that they broke bread on that day. Now does the breaking of bread mean that the day was holy and that they were observing it as some Sabbath or sacred occasion? No. In fact, we read in Acts 2:46 that those early disciples broke bread daily. That fact does not imply that it was a holy day at all. If it was, then every day was holy because they surely broke bread daily in the early church. In this instance under consideration, Paul was having a special farewell meeting before going on up to Jerusalem. The people realized that they would never see Paul again alive. In Acts 20:25

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

he told them that he had the witness of the spirit, that he would see their faces no more. So this was a very, very special occasion for him to be with his people, the people whom he had brought to Christ, for the last time. This explains why Paul preached to them all night long. Certainly that is not a procedure that marked the regular worship services of that day. But, anyway, he preached right on up to midnight. Then the young man was killed, and he continued preaching afterward until the very break of day.

Now let's ask this question at this point. When did this meeting take place according to our method of reckoning time? As most of you realize, the Bible method of measuring the day is from sunset to sun-set and not midnight to midnight. Our way is a pagan method which came in after the days of Jesus. The evening and the morning were the original elements of a day, as you'll find in Genesis, chapter 1. Please refer to Leviticus 23:32 and you'll read there that the Sabbath is to be observed from even unto even, or from evening to evening. When does the evening begin? If we can find that, we'll know exactly when we should begin keeping the Sabbath. The answer is found in Mark 1:32. "And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto him all that were diseased." Now there it is. The evening is at sundown. And if you'd like to have further evidence on this point, just read Nehemiah 13:19, Joshua 10:26 and 2 Chronicles 18:34. In other words, that day, the Sabbath began at sunset and ended at sunset. And the first day of the week began at sunset and ended at sunset. The first day begins at the time we call Saturday evening, at the going down of the sun on Saturday evening, and it continues until the going down of the sun on Sunday evening. That constitutes the first day of the week.

Notice that the text says there were many lights in the meeting place where they were gathered. This means that the service was held in the dark portion of that first day which is what we would call Saturday night. Paul kept right on preaching until midnight and, at that time, you remember a young fellow fell down from the loft—he was sitting in the window, apparently listening to Paul preach—and was killed. After he went down and brought the boy back to life, it says that he kept on talking for "a long while, even till break of day." And then what did Paul do, friends, early Sunday morning after that all-night meeting with the church? Acts 21:1 makes it clear that Paul walked about 25 miles across the peninsula to meet the ship at Assos, for there he was to be taken in and go on with them up to Jerusalem. So here we have clear evidence that Paul was not holding a regular service at all and neither did he keep that day holy. This was not a weekly meeting. It was a special service in which Paul was preaching to them. He would never see them again. He had the witness of the spirit that he was to be put to death, so he simply stayed with them as long as he could and that took him right in through the night even till the breaking of day. I suppose one of the main reasons we have this story in the Bible is because of the mighty miracle when Paul raised that young fellow from the dead and brought him up alive again at midnight.

Well, there it is, friends. We've read and considered every single text which mentions the first day of the week in the New Testament. Nowhere have we found any evidence either in command or example that we should sanctify Sunday as a day of rest or worship. On the other hand, teachings and example of Christ and His disciples present irrefutable proof that the Sabbath was to be kept then, and it is also to be kept now—no change has ever been made in it. You'll not find any text in all the Bible that says there was any change made in the day that was appointed by God for men to use for worship.

Now what about Paul, that great apostle of the Gentiles? He came much later, of course. He came after Jesus died and after He was resurrected and ascended back to heaven. Did he observe the same Sabbath as Jesus did and that all the other disciples did before Him? Let him bear witness to that in Acts 17:2. "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three sabbath days reasoned with them out of the scripture." Now there it is. That was Paul's manner or custom. Just as we read a moment ago that it was Jesus' custom to go in on the Sabbath to preach and worship, so Paul went regularly to do the same thing. Now friends, he didn't go into the synagogue just to please the Jews or to preach to the Jews. In Acts 13:42-44 we find that he also preached to the Gentiles on that day. Let's read it. "And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath ... And the next sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God."

Here's a wonderful place for Paul to put those Gentile Christians straight if he wanted them to keep any other day except the seventh day. After he had been preaching to the Jews on this Sabbath, the Gentiles came to him and said "Now we want you to preach to us." If there had been some change in that early church as far as the day of worship was concerned, Paul would have said to those Gentile Christians, "Listen, I'll preach to you tomorrow morning. That will be the first day of the week and I'll meet with you on that day for worship." But Paul didn't say anything of the kind. In fact, he just said to them, "I'll meet you next Sabbath and preach to you then" and the whole city came together, the Bible says, and heard him preach the next Sabbath day. He was preaching to the Gentiles. Acts 18:4, 11 tells us of 78 Sabbaths that Paul kept in succession in one certain city. "And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks." And "he continued there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them." So for a year and a half he made tents during the week, and went in to teach them on the Sabbath. And he taught the Gentiles as well as the Jews.

Well, somebody brings up the question, "How can I do what is right?" Now, friends, in order to keep the Sabbath—in order to keep any of the commandments of God—we've got to get the Lord of the Sabbath into our hearts first. If we have Him abiding within, we'll have no trouble keeping those commandments. They'll not be a burden. They'll not be some hard, laborious thing to do if we love Him and He's abiding in our hearts. We'll be able to do it out of love. I hope that's the way you're doing it today. And after making this study, why don't you make your decision right now that by the grace of God, you're going to follow Him in keeping the Sabbath holy.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Paganism in the Church - Part 1

Listen to the audio version Now!

Today I'd like to introduce a series of talks entitled "Paganism In The Church." And friends, I will not be pulling any punches during this special series of broadcasts. I can't even tell you how long they will continue, but the time has come for us to see the reality of this age- old controversy between good and evil. Multitudes of Christians complacently accept the trappings of heathen doctrine without even recognizing its evil origin. Unless we know the full truth of what the Bible teaches on these great doctrines, the enemy of our souls will be able to masquerade his own lies in the costume of truth.

Today there are only two supernatural powers operating in the world around us-the power of God and the power of Satan. If something is taking place before our eyes which has no explanation from a human basis, it would have to be accounted for by one of the great superhuman powers of God or Satan.

In today's broadcast I would like for us to trace through time and through the Bible how the devil has so cleverly counterfeited many of the good things of God that millions are actually ascribing good things to Satan and evil things to God. The impersonation and imitation on the part of Satan has been so subtle and deceptive that entire Christian churches have been deceived by it.

It all started in the days of Adam and Eve when God instituted a religious ceremony after the entrance of sin. It was to be a temporary system pointing forward to a divine Saviour who would redeem the world from the curse of sin and death. It revolved around the slaying of a lamb representing the Messiah who would later come to give His own life as an atoning substitute for man. That system of sacrifice was not easy for Adam and Eve to carry out. They had to watch an innocent animal bleed to death by their own hand. Every time they lifted that knife to cut the throat of another beautiful lamb their own sin and its terrible results came vividly to mind.

Satan watched Adam very closely as he went through this ceremony. By observing the symbolism of that sacrificial offering Satan realized that God had given Adam a way of escape from his sinful dilemma, and he determined to do something about it. If he could set up his own sacrificial system that would turn men away from the worship of God, he could be worshiped instead of the Creator. By cleverly counterfeiting the institutions of God Satan himself could build a religious system that would honor him instead of the true God of heaven. So immediately he began to set about to institute his own sacrificial system that would even demand more than God's system. As we shall find later it even required the offering up of sons and daughters. Also, since God had established a special holy day for His worship in the Garden of Eden-the Sabbath-Satan determined that he also would have a special day of worship that would glorify him.

The overall counterfeit plan of Satan involved robbing God of His authority and worship. In Isaiah 14:13,14 the course was laid out by the boastful words of Lucifer. He said, "I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God; I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north; I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the most High."

Now friends, there is the embryo of Satan's plan. If he intended to be like God he would have to have a government, a throne, and a false worship based on a counterfeit religion. I want you to see how he established that substitute form of worship. It was to be set up on the principle of sun-worship. Since the sun was the most potent force in nature and was the source of earthly light and power, it seemed a ready made symbol of Satan himself and what he was seeking to ascribe to himself.

But let's pause now and get the Bible authority for this plan of the devil. First of all, notice that Lucifer's name actually means "day star." You will find that in the margin of

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

your Bible by Isaiah 14:12. Describing Satan the Bible says, "thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness." Ezekiel 28:17. Listen, the day star of this world is the sun and that is why Lucifer or Satan chose the sun as the object through which he would be worshiped. And even though it took hundreds of years to achieve, Satan scored a strategic victory in his campaign for sun worship when he finally was able to substitute the pagan day of sun worship in place of God's true seventh-day Sabbath. And the greatest tragedy is that millions of modern Christians are unaware that, by keeping Sunday, they are rejecting the one great sign God commanded men to observe in recognition of His being the only true God. They do not understand that they are observing a day which was dedicated to sun worship many, many centuries ago.

I have been amazed, friends, in reading the historical sources to discover that Sunday-keeping reaches back to hundreds of years before Christ was born. As a matter of fact, Sunday-keeping is almost as old as Sabbath-keeping, because very early in history Satan set up his counterfeit system.

Now, let's look at the biblical background of the practice. The book of Job, so we are told by the biblical authorities, was one of the first books written and was probably written by a contemporary of Moses himself, and did you know that this ancient book talks about the worship of the sun? Listen to this: "If I beheld the sun when it shined, or the moon walking in brightness; and my heart hath been secretly enticed, or my mouth hath kissed my hand: This also were an iniquity...for I should have denied the God that is above." Job. 31:26-28. Did you get that friends? Job said, "If I backslide and my heart has been enticed to worship the sun or the moon, it would be a sinful denial of the true God."

By the way, maybe you have wondered at times about the origin of the modern religious custom of kissing the hand-this seems to be the root of such a practice pagan sun-worship. I tell you, friends, I am glad for the words of Scripture that can reveal the things of God to us, aren't you?

Did you know that God had a hard time with his own people in regards to that satanic practice of sun worship? The devil made it so alluring and fascinating that the children of Israel were constantly turning away from the true Sabbath-keeping and from worshiping the true God of Heaven. Did you ever wonder about the text in Exodus 32:1-4 concerning the golden calf that the Israelites made while Moses was up in the mountain with God? Verse 5 says, "they rose up early on the morrow." That calf was called "apis" by the Egyptians and was tied in with their pagan sun worship. That is why they rose up early -to worship the sun. No wonder Moses was so outraged that he threw down the tables of stone and broke them to pieces. Do you see, friends, how this thing came into the church long before the days of Jesus?

Now let's look at another interesting fact-you have heard of Baal worship, of course. The Old Testament is full of stories about it. But did you know that Baal worship was sun worship? In 2 Kings 23:5 we read this, "And he put down the idolatrous priests, whom the kings of Judah had ordained to burn incense in the high places in the cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jerusalem; them also that burned incense unto Baal, to the sun, and to the moon, and to the planets, and to all the host of heaven." There it is in plain language. Satan has perfected an entire false religious system based upon sun worship or Baal worship. And God's own people were often drawn away by it. Satan himself was being worshiped under the title of Baal. The Bible calls Baal worship devil worship. Did you know that? Here it is in Leviticus 17:7, "And they shall no more offer their sacrifices unto devils after whom they have gone whoring." Later on at Baal-peor we read about that terrible apostasy of Israel. In Numbers 25:2-4 it says, "And they called the people unto the sacrifices of their gods; and the people did eat, and bowed down to their gods, and Israel joined himself unto Baal-peor; and the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel."

No wonder God was displeased with them; they were worshiping Baal, the sun god, and Baal worship is actually worshiping devils. This is why the Pharisees accused Jesus of casting out devils in the name of Beelzebub. That is the Greek word for the Hebrew name of Baalzebub, the sun-god of Ekran spoken of in 2 Kings 1:2,3. The Pharisees said, "This fellow doth not cast out devils but by Beelzebub, the prince of devils." Matthew 12:24. Here again we have proof that Baal worship is devil worship.

But listen to this: Down through the centuries the distinguishing mark that separated the pagans from God's people was their day of worship, which was Sunday, or Sun's day. The pagans worshiped the sun on Sunday. They took the first day of the week and gave it the highest honor by naming it in honor of the sun god and worshiping the sun on that day. God's people kept the Sabbath, or seventh day of the week-the day that God had blessed and made holy at creation. Thus, the distinguishing mark of the heathen was their Sunday; and the mark of God's people was the Sabbath. (Read Ezekiel 20:12-20).

Imagine, if you can, what a spectacle for the universe to behold! Through the centuries, God's people kept the commandments of God including the Sabbath and offered their sacrifices which typified or represented the death of Christ when he would come and die for sinners. On the other hand were the heathen who worshiped the sun, kept Sunday, and offered their own sons and daughters in the fire or crucified human victims on crosses to appease the sun god. I say again, what a terrible thing for Heaven to behold! How the Devil tried to insult Christ's sacrifice! Satan tried constantly to get God's people away from the true God and the true Sabbath; but God continued to send messages to His people through the prophets that they should obey Him.

In the next broadcast we shall uncover the pagan foundations upon which many doctrines of modern, popular Christianity have been founded. Please don't miss any of these broadcasts, friends, because the hour is too late to just putter around the edges of the truth. Vague generalities and platitudes may have satisfied another generation, but this happens to be the last generation just before Jesus returns, and we must know for sure where we stand.

Listen to the audio version Now!

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Paganism in the Church - Part 2

Listen to the audio version Now!

In our last broadcast we introduced a special series of studies about paganism in the church. We discovered the amazing fact that Satan has developed, from the earliest ages, a counterfeit, opposition system of religion which was intended to attract worship away from the true God of Heaven. That false system had its sacrificial plan just as God had a plan of sacrifice, but Satan's pagan worship required the offering up of human beings, often the sons and daughters of the worshipers. A counterfeit holy day was instituted in honor of the sun god, and this was designed by Satan to rob God of his peculiar authority as the Creator of the universe.

Satan, also, tried to compete for the loyalty of the world by setting up a very ancient center of sun worship called Babylon. To understand what Babylon means, let us go back to the days after the flood, when men refused to obey the instruction of the Lord to scatter over the earth. Settling on the plains of Shinar (Genesis 11:4), they said, "Go to, let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth." They called the tower "Babel, the gate to heaven," but God called it what it was, "Babel, confusion," for there the language of the people was confused and they were forced to scatter. This heaven-defying clan of men wanted to have one city, the capitol city of the world, one government to rule the world, and one religion to sway the hearts of mankind. It was Satan's attempt to defy God and His authority. The ring leader in this scheme was one named Nimrod.

We read in the Bible about Nimrod, the man who had something to do with the beginning of pagan sun worship. We read about him in Genesis 10:8-10. "And Cush begat Nimrod: he began to be a mighty one in the earth. He was a mighty hunter before the Lord: wherefore it is said, Even as Nimrod the mighty hunter before the Lord. And the beginning of his kingdom was Babel (margin, "Babylon")."

In another translation of the Bible called the Targum, we read this: "Nimrod became a mighty man of sin, a murderer of innocent men, and a rebel before the Lord."

Nimrod, one of the great-grandsons of Noah, is accredited with being the originator of sun worship. Nimrod was a great leader, and he was the first empire builder. He was the founder of Babylon. According to history, his wife, Semiramis, was a very great and wicked queen; and through Semiramis we find the devil trying to counterfeit God's great, wonderful plan of salvation. She was the first deified queen of Babylon, and Nimrod was the first deified king. When Nimrod died, the people mourned. They said that he was a god. Semiramis, in order to elevate her own position, said to the people that she was the queen of heaven and that her spirit was that of the moon, and when she died she would dwell in the moon, even as Nimrod was already in the sun.

Satan was laying the foundation for every system of falsehood and error the world has ever known. They took the Truth of God and perverted it, changed it into a lie, and "worshipped and served the creature (Satan) more than the Creator." Romans 1:25. Here is a truth that should be deeply impressd upon your minds today: Paganism is devil worship. Let us never forget that this system of religion, while professing to be the true religion, is actually devil worship. It professes and claims to be the Truth of God. In reality it is Satan's masterpiece, the "mystery of iniquity."

Every year, when the cold season began, the people believed their sun god was leaving them. They came to learn that his lowest dip on the horizon, about December 21, was followed by his gradual return, until in midsummer he was directly overhead at noonday. It was on the 25th of December that they began to notice this gradual return of the sun god. This day they called the birthday of the sun. Thus, the winter solstice came to be regarded as a time of great importance; and at the festival inaugurated, there was feasting and merriment in honor of the return of the all powerful sun god. It was their belief in the annual journey of their god that Elijah alluded to in his conflict with the priests of Baal, the Syro-Phoenician sun god. (1 Kings 18:27, if "he is a god; either...he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked").

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

Tammuz was hailed as the son of the sun. He was idolized and even worshipped. The first letter of his name became, in time, the symbol of sun worship. Human sacrifices to the sun god were offered on this initial letter made of wood, known as the cross "T." His birthday, December 25, was honored more and more. When Tammuz died, the pagans instituted forty days of weeping for him before the full moon, following the vernal equinox.

Think of it, dear friends. Satan worked many years before the conception and birth of the true Messiah, Jesus, to counterfeit through sun worship His miraculous conception and birth.

Let me read about this very thing in the Bible. Perhaps some of you never knew that the Bible mentions this. I am reading from Ezekiel 8:12-18, "Then said he unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen what the ancients of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery? for they say, the Lord seeth us not; the Lord hath forsaken the earth. He said also unto me, Turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations that they do. Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the Lord's house which was toward the north; and, behold, there sat women weeping for Tammuz. Then said he unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? turn thee yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations than these. And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and, behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the east; and they WORSHIPPED THE SUN TOWARD THE EAST. Then he said unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? Is it a light thing...to commit the abominations which they commit here? for they have filled the land with violence, and have returned to provoke me to anger: and, lo, they put the branch to their nose. Therefore will I also deal in fury: mine eye shall not spare, neither will I have pity: and though they cry in mine ears with a loud voice, yet will I not hear them."

God's people were constantly coming in contact with paganism, which was nothing more or less than sun worship. They were constantly being tempted to follow the religion of the pagans instead of the Bible. Satan succeeded many times in leading God's people into sin and pagan sun worship. The prophet was shown greater and still greater abominations. He was shown the people turning their backs on the temple of God and worshipping the sun toward the east.

They also worshipped the moon goddess, Semiramis, the so-called queen of heaven. Let me read you what they did, in Jeremiah 7:16-18. "Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for I will not hear thee. Seest thou not what they do in the cities of Judah in the streets of Jerusalem? The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough, to MAKE CAKES TO THE QUEEN OF HEAVEN, and to pour out drink offerings unto other gods, that they may provoke me to anger." These cakes were round and on them was cut a cross in honor of the sun god, and they were offered to the queen of heaven. Today they are called hot cross buns.

Let us notice now a few striking and outstanding things that took place; and keep in mind that the devil, who is really the author of pagan sun worship, had been working for centuries to get this false worship so implanted in the world that God's true plan of salvation through Jesus Christ would be insulted and, if possible, be made a failure.

First, the exact date of Christ's birthday was not known; and so it was suggested, "Why not call it the same date as the birth of Tammuz, which was December 25?" That, too, was the time when the sun had reached its lowest point on the horizon and started back up the heavens. The sun god had come to life, so to speak. Thus, gradually but surely, December 25 came to be known as the birthday of Christ. The papal church finally instituted a special mass on that day, "Christ's Mass," and so December 25 became "Christmas." The yule log burning in the fire, followed by the green tree lighted with candles, all came in from the pagans' worship, representing Nimrod's being dead, while his spirit still lived in the sun, and was alive again in Tammuz, his son.

Again, Christ was crucified and resurrected in the spring of the year, near the time of the moon festival. The devil was on hand again to bring in the idea of having a celebration the same time as the heathen and even doing as they did, but calling it "in honor of the resurrection." The cakes to the QUEEN OF HEAVEN became the "hot cross buns." (Read Jeremiah 7:16-18). The forty days of "weeping for Tammuz" became Lent, and at the close of Lent came Easter Sunday. (Read Ezekiel 8:12-18). This goddess Ishtar (Easter) came to be known as the goddess of springtime, "new life," or as history records it, the "goddess of reproduction." The pagans went out to some mountain side, early Sunday morning and worshipped this goddess as the sun was rising in the east. They gave themselves to immorality and indecency of every description. The eggs and rabbits were used as symbols of fertility and germination, "life."

Listen, friends, what an insult to our Lord and Saviour, Jesus! Because He arose from the dead (came to life) early Sunday morning, Satan succeeded in transferring the insulting festival to the pagans over in honor of Christ's resurrection; and so today, we still have the EGGS and RABBITS, and the HOT CROSS BUNS and the early SUNRISE SERVICE, all in honor of Christ's resurrection. It all came into the church gradually and was blessed by the Catholic church and given to the world.

Well, our time has slipped by, but we will continue our series in the next broadcast. Friends, don't miss the next link in the chain because I will be talking about one of the most breathtaking, arrogant deceptions that Satan ever devised, and how he used it to try to humiliate the Son of God.

Listen to the audio version Now!

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Paganism in the Church - Part 3

Listen to the audio version Now!

Today we come to the climax of our series on "Paganism in the Church," and the subject today is centered in the symbol of the cross. Although the cross has become a revered relic and often even an object of worship, I would like to explore the ancient background of this cherished symbol. In our last broadcast we discovered that the Bible describes the worship of Tammuz, the Pagan God of the Sun. Satan inspired those idolatrous people to represent Tammuz by the letter "T," the first letter of his name. It came to be a world-wide symbol of sun worship and all the moral pollutions attached to that kind of worship. The heathen actually sacrificed human beings to the devil on crosses. Centuries before Jesus was born crucifixion was a method of worshiping the pagan sun god.

When sun-worshipping generals went to battle they offered thousands of human sacrifices to the devil. It is said that Alexander the Great, after a victorious campaign, crucified over 10,000 human beings on the cross to celebrate his victory. Three-thousand chief Babylonians were crucified at one time as a sacrifice to the Devil.

When the Catholics first went down into South America and Mexico, soon after these were discovered, they were amazed to find that the sun-worshipping heathen there had crosses. They were amazed because they did not know that these people knew anything about crosses. They did not know anything about Christianity, but they had crosses because they were the sign of Tammuz-the Sun God. But listen, friends, the time finally came for the Son of God to be born. The exact day of His birth no one knows. But He lived to be thirty-three and one-half when He was crucified, which was in the spring of the year at the time of the Passover. Listen friends, it is almost too terrible for words. You remember Tammuz was exalted by Satan to be the false Messiah or rival of Jesus. The symbol of the cross, the first letter of his name, "T", was the sign of sun worship. Down through the years, many times as Satan had succeeded in leading Israel into sin and Pagan sun worship, it had seemed that the sun god was victorious over the true God. Jesus, the Creator of the world, came into a world that had forgotten Him. He suffered every insult at its hands and, finally, died upon the symbol of sun worship, the cross; as Paul says, "Even the death of the cross."

In order to show that his system of worship was superior to that of God's and to show his supremacy, Satan heaped the supreme insult upon Christ by crucifying Him upon the cross, the symbol of sun worship! Think of the Son of God dying in such awful humiliation while the people looked on, in derision. What mockery! And what rejoicing then by the demons! The Son of God delivered by His own people and crucified by the sun-worshipping Romans on the symbol of sun worship! Think of the great Son of God dying in such awful humiliation while the people looked on, wagging their heads in mockery.

But Satan saw that his disguise was torn away. His administration was laid open before the unfallen angels and before the Heavenly Universe. He had revealed himself as a murderer. The last link of sympathy was broken. "And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of His Christ; for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night." Revelation 12:10. Yet Satan was not then destroyed. For the sake of man, his existence must be continued. Men, as well as angels, must see the contrast between the Prince of Light and the Prince of Darkness. He must choose whom he will serve.

Now as we look at Calvary, what do we see? We see the Author of life with His form stripped of all of its clothing. He is hung before the sun, on the symbol of the cross-the cross that was once the symbol of heathen worship and heathen pollution. And on that Friday afternoon, the sun was darkened. God placed His hand over the sun while Christ hung upon the cross. Now, the blackening of the sun by God's hand was not just an incidental thing. It had some significance to it. (Luke 23:44). There was a reason why

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

that sun was darkened. You see, that sun to the heathen was the symbol of the Devil or Sun God. So God placed His hand over the sun to show that He controlled the sun. God said, "That is as far as you can go." God darkened the sun to prove He was the creator and had power over these things!

But now let's answer a most important question friends. Do you know why Jesus came forth from the tomb before daybreak on that Sunday morning? According to all the background I have given, you must realize that at sunrise on the first day of the week men would be worshipping the Sun, or the Devil, while Jesus Christ would be in the tomb. Yes, at sunrise Satan would be worshiped. It is Friday night, the moments are tense. Now, to make sure of his victim, the devil had the tomb of Jesus Christ sealed with a seal. Do you know what the name of that seal was? It is called the Roman seal, but in Latin the name was "SINGLEM-SOLIS," which in Latin means, "The seal of the sun." So on that tomb of Jesus Christ they placed "Singlem-solis" the seal of the sun god, and the Devil thought he had his victim there to stay. He sealed Him with the seal of the sun.

But on the first day of the week, it was revealed before daylight just who was superior. Christ rested in His tomb as the Sabbath passed on. He knew that sun worshippers everywhere the moment the sun rose would worship Satan. But before the rising of the Sun, when the stone is still in place and there are over 100 Roman guards on watch, together with a host of evil angels and Satan, something happens. There are other visitors there also, angels that excel in strength were there to welcome the Prince of Life. So in John 20:1 it says He came forth "while it was yet dark." Look also at Matthew 28:2-6.

Friends, here is the reason why Jesus came forth on the first day of the week while it was yet dark. It was because God did not permit the Devil to be worshiped on his day when the sun rose while His Son was still in the tomb. God brought Him forth from the dead, and he came forth while it was yet dark for God did not leave His Son in that tomb while the Devil would be worshipped on his day. I am glad that God saw fit to bring forth His Son, and that He was able to proclaim as He came forth from that grave, "I am the resurrection and the life."

Jesus Christ on Calvary and in His resurrection conquered, friends. He came forth as an eternal conqueror, and where the resurrection is questioned, the atonement is forgotten. We are not left to conclude for ourselves that Jesus triumphed over Satan. God's Word declares it (Colossians 2:15). There were principalities and powers there that morning, but Christ triumphed over them! And Jesus Christ was out of that tomb when the sun rose, and the Devil was not worshipped while Christ lay in His tomb. Christ's victory was over the grave, and principalities, and everything that Satan stood for.

It had been Satan's plan to make the first day of the week-the pagan day of the sun-a triumphant celebration over the defeat and death of Jesus. But he lost that opportunity when Christ burst the power of the tomb before those heathen worshipers could gather to have their sun-day ceremonies. God did not allow them to triumph over the death of His Son. Satan had failed in his efforts to exalt the pagan day of sun worship.

But what a tragedy that 300 years later, Satan was able to accomplish what he failed to do at Calvary. By a clever compromise with heathen sun worship, he influenced a backsliding church to accept the counterfeit Sunday in place of the seventh-day Sabbath. Let's take a look at the way it all happened.

The Pagans worshiped the sun on Sunday (Sun's day). It was the heathen festival in honor of the sun god. Webster's Unabridged Dictionary says of Sunday, "So called because the day was anciently dedicated to the sun or to its worship." The North British Review, Vol. 18, p. 409; calls Sunday "the wild solar holiday of all Pagan times." And Gibbon, in a note; paragraph 2, chapter 20, says that "Constantine styles the Lord's day Dies Solis (day of the sun), a name which could not offend the ears of his Pagan subjects." The Schaff-Herzog Encyclopedia has the following to say on the subject of Sunday: "Sunday (Dies Solis of the Roman calendar, day of the sun: because dedicated to the sun), the first day of the week, was adopted by the early Christians as a day of worship. The (Sun) of Latin adoration, they interpreted as the (Sun of Righteousness)... No regulations for its observance are laid down in the New Testament, nor, indeed is its observance ever enjoined."

Think of it, the Sabbath (seventh day), which God blessed and made holy for man to worship the true God upon, was gradually set aside and the festival day of Pagan sun worship was taken into the church. Professor Hutton Webster, Ph.D., in his book "REST DAYS," p. 270; has this to say: "What began, however, as a Pagan ordinance, ended as a Christian regulation, and a long series of imperial decrees, during the fourth, fifth, and sixth centuries enjoined with increasing stringency abstinence from labor on Sunday."

Paganism with all of its pomp, and ceremonies, and holy days crept silently into the Christian Church until it developed into an Apostate system of religious worship. Notice this statement from SCHAFF'S CHURCH HISTORY, page 375; "Not a few pagan habits crept into the church concealed by new names. This is conceded by the most earnest of the Fathers. Leo the Great speaks of Christians in Rome who worshiped the sun, before repairing to the church of St. Peter. In the celebration of Sunday, as it was introduced by Constantine, and still continues on the whole continent of Europe, the cultus of the old Sun god Apollo mingles with the remembrance of the resurrection of Christ."

So that is the story, friends, concerning the devil's most masterful deception of all history. Not only did he bring in the Pagan forms of worship, but he managed to install the old heathen day of sun worship in place of the holy Sabbath of the Lord. And he continues to blind people to what the Bible teaches on this subject, so that they will still follow pagan tradition instead of the commandments of God. No wonder Jesus exclaimed "But in vain ye do worship me, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men." Matthew 15:9.

Listen to the audio version Now!

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Questions and Answers - Part 5

Listen to the audio version Now!

Today we will be answering questions sent in by some of our radio listeners. Here is an interesting question which has to do with the condition of man in death. "Please explain I Peter 3: 18-20."

So we read these verses and find Peter speaking about the death of Jesus, "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit; By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; Which sometime were disobedient, when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved by water." There has been considerable misunderstanding of these verses of scripture. It has been preached that Christ actually descended into the lower regions of the earth and preached to lost souls that were in prison there in some purgatory or limbo. Friends, this is very far from what the text actually says. Let's look at it closely now and get the real message of these verses. It says Christ hath once suffered for sin that He might bring us to God being out to death in the flesh. But quickened by the spirit by which also He went and preached. First of all, notice how Christ preached to those spirits in prison. He did it by the Spirit, and that is capitalized in your Bible, it actually refers to the Holy Spirit. So whatever Christ did in preaching during this period of time, He did it through or by the Holy Spirit.

Alright, with that in view, let's ask this, "When was the preaching done?" Well, it plainly says in verse 20; when once the longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing. So the preaching was actually done while the ark was being built. During the preaching of Noah to that antediluvian world. Now, one more question. "To whom was the preaching done?" Well, it says here the spirits in prison. Throughout the Bible we find this terminology used in describing those who are bound in the prison house of sin. What Peter is telling us here is simply that Christ through the Holy Spirit was present while Noah preached, Christ was there through the Holy Spirit to speak conviction to their hearts and appeal to them to come into the ark. Friends, there is absolutely nothing here which indicates that Jesus departed from the body during the time He was dead to go to any subterranean place to minister to wicked spirits. The three questions are clearly answered in the text itself, that He preached by the Holy Spirit, He did it while the ark was preparing, and He did it to the spirits in prison or to those individuals whose sinful lives were bound in the prison house of sin.

Moving on to the next question now, "Granted that Saturday is the seventh day of the week and that the commandment of God requires us to observe that day, how do you account to the fact that so many millions of people observe Sunday instead of the true Sabbath?"

Friends, I wish I could understand the reason for this. Of course it is not our assignment to interpret the reasons for people's actions. I ceased long ago trying to analyze the reasons why people do certain things in the field of religion. I suppose that a great deal of it is attributable to tradition and the popularity of a cause. Apparently, in this case, multitudes were born into a society which simply accepted things as they were and Sunday-keeping was a part of the social routine. Unfortunately, millions of Christians have never bothered to inquire into the reasons of their own faith and practice. They are willing to accept the practices of their contemporaries and of those who have gone before them. Most of these same people also accept the word of the pastor on Sunday morning without any question or personal investigation. What a sad commentary this is on the condition of true religion in America today.

1 Peter 3:15 tells us, "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." Friends, this is the command, that we ought to be able to answer when people ask us, "Well, what do you believe?" We should be able to give an answer right out of the word of God. Do you know that most people can't even give any kind of reasonable explanation for the hope that they have. You ask, "Why do you belong to a certain church?" They just shrug their shoulders. Maybe they say it is because of some particular belief that the church holds. But when you ask them what it is, they can seldom tell what the church believes—much less what they personally believe.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

This matter of Sabbath and Sunday observance is one of the most perplexing, perhaps, in the Christian churches of today. The average Sundaykeeper has no idea at all as to why he observes that day as a holy day. He certainly has never read any Bible texts that would intimate that it should be done. There is no such scripture in all of the Bible. The commandment of God throughout the Old and New Testament is for the keeping of the seventh day of the week, which is Saturday, of course. We very well know that Sundaykeeping did come into existence after the apostles passed off the stage of history completely. But what a tragedy that it came through human agencies that were not ordained of God to make any such change in His divine law. The keeping of Sunday today is based purely upon the traditions that passed down through the centuries from this unauthorized change of the Sabbath from Saturday to Sunday. Bible prophecy actually predicts that such a change would be made. Even the power that would attempt the change is identified in the scriptures. If you would like to get that information in its entirety, why not drop a card or letter and ask for the booklet entitled, "The Beast. The Dragon, and The Woman."

But, now let's get back to the question that was sent in. "Doesn't it prove something to see all the vast majority of people following Sunday instead of the Sabbath?" Friends, it doesn't prove a single thing about the right or wrong of it. If we came to any conclusion it would probably have to favor the minority group. Because throughout the ages, the majority has certainly not been on the side of truth. From the beginning of human history it has consistently been the small minority who represented right and true position. Even the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States upheld state laws requiring rest on Sunday does not determine any truth about Sunday sacredness.

In the days of Noah, there were only 8 people against all the rest of the inhabitants of the world, who held on to the true faith. Throughout the days of the Old Testament we find only a remnant who dared to be different enough to follow God's true plan. In the days of the New Testament and down through the centuries since that time, we find that the majority have generally been wrong and, often times, persecuting the faithful few. Jesus said, "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth to life and few there be that find it." He even asked this daring question, "Will there be faith in the earth when the Son of man cometh?" Apparently, there will not be very many people following the self-denying path of truth as laid out in the word of God. So if we are looking for those who are following the right way, friends, we will certainly not be looking for the vast majority.

"There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." The only way we can possibly determine what is right or wrong is to search it out in God's word. To look at the people will simply confuse and mislead. There is only one right way and that is the way Jesus walked. There is only one final authority, and that is the holy Scriptures. We are not even concerned on this broadcast of what people are doing and saying about issues. We are greatly concerned about the teaching of the Bible on these things. We do not preach to entertain the people, or to make people feel particularly good or comfortable. The plain word of God will always have a sharp cutting edge, and unless it brings conviction of truth and transformation of life, it is not really accomplishing its purpose.

Let me say this though, the great problem in evangelism has always been to make people act on the truth. It is not hard to convince about the truth of God's word. The Bible is amazingly clear and simple. Its message is logical throughout. Even during great evangelistic crusades we are able to convince hundreds and thousands of people concerning the special message of truth for this hour. But when we ask how many people are going to obey the truth that is now known and understood, very few are willing to respond.

What a strange thing it is that multitudes actually pray for the truth to come to them. For years they may intercede before God, asking that they might come to know the truth of the scriptures. Then when God answers their prayer and brings them a knowledge of these things, they are often not willing to walk in the light of it. This is particularly true of the Sabbath question. I have had scores and scores of people to confess that they do believe Saturday to be the true Sabbath, they cannot deny because the word of God is too clear and explicit on the subject, but these same people often hold back from making their decision to keep the Sabbath. They find it inconvenient and difficult to make arrangements in their home, or with their job, or their social life. They seem to feel that their own convenience is much more important than obedience to the Ten Commandments of God. Friends, never make the mistake of thinking that we can avoid the claims of God's holy law. Don't ever believe for a moment that God is not particular about us obeying His commandments. "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." James 4:17.

We are also told in 1 John 3:4 that "Sin is the transgression of the law." Paul makes it clear that the law spoken of here is none other than the Ten-Commandment law. He said, "I had not known sin except the Lord said, thou shalt not covet." Romans 7:7. So the breaking of God's Ten Commandments constitutes sin.

James says, "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law." James 2:10, 11. So summing up the answer to this question, we can say that the vast majority of people are keeping Sunday simply because they have accepted the tradition of their ancestors without any question and without investigating as to whether it is right or wrong. Secondly, the people who do look into it and understand that Sunday is not the Sabbath of the Lord, often do not have the moral conviction to deny their own convenience in order to follow the command of God. May I say finally, though, that the religious leaders and teachers who have comforted people in their disobedience of the fourth commandment will have to give the most solemn answer in the judgment for this mistake. Multitudes of these ministers do understand that Saturday is the true Sabbath of God, but they are not speaking about it. They have even dared to tell people that God will accept the substitution of another day for the fourth commandment. A fearful weight of accountability has been assumed by such teachers. As watchmen on the walls of Zion who did not blow the trumpet to warn of transgression and spiritual danger, these shepherds will be called to give an account.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Sabbath - Part 1

The daily papers are crowded with reports of labor union promotion, of shorter working hours, and higher wages. The last few years have seen tremendous changes in favor of greater employee benefits. The average workman of today has more leisure time on his hands than any category of worker did in former years. If present trends continue to develop, the possibility of a four-day work week is altogether possible. Such a development would not seem nearly so revolutionary as another bit of legislation did when it was enacted long before a single labor union had been formed. This law was put into effect a few thousand years ago and is still enforced today, believe it or not. We read the actual wording of it in Exodus 20:8-11. "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it."

There it is, friends, one of the oldest and most enlightened labor laws ever enacted. It was written and sealed by the hand of God Himself, and placed right in the heart of His great moral law of ten commandments, which is still binding today upon every creature under heaven. Oh, what a world this would be if all men honored that law. War, crime and sin would disappear from our society overnight. Every problem of nations and individuals would be solved at the same time. Friends, if even one of those laws should be universally obeyed, this world would be a new, wonderful place in which to live.

You say, "Well, with labor laws as they are now, everybody is taking at least one day a week from the job." Yes, but notice God didn't say to take just any day off. It was not left for man to decide on the day. The Creator Himself chose the day, then He blessed it, sanctified it and hallowed it, so men would be able to keep it. No one can keep a day holy that God didn't make holy. God commanded the seventh day of the week because it was the birthday of the world. You'll read that in Geneses 2:1-3. "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." Now, friends, let's ask three questions about the Sabbath: Who made it? For whom was it made? And why was it made?

First, please notice that Jesus Christ Himself is the great Creator of the world, and He made the Sabbath. This may sound strange to some, because many people think of Christ as being born in a manger 2,000 years ago. That's true, of course, but He had already existed from all eternity in heaven. He was there when the foundations of the earth were laid. Listen to this text in John 1:1, 3, and 14 concerning creation and how it was done, and who did it. "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made. And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth." Put with that the words of Paul in Hebrews 1:1,2: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, Hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds."

These two verses plainly tell that Jesus was the agent of creation. By Him were all things made in the whole of the universe. During those first six days of time He commanded and the world of matter appeared out of nothing. He formed man and breathed life into that lifeless clay. But on the seventh day He did something very significant and very wonderful, which we just read about in Geneses 2:1-3. Notice that the seventh day was set apart by the Christ who blessed the Sabbath in the beginning and rested from the work of creation. That's why I love to preach about this subject, friends, because it is so closely connected and intertwined with the Lord Jesus Christ.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

I've heard some people say that the Sabbath was a shadow which disappeared at the cross. But friends, there could be no shadow of anything before the entrance of sin. Many ceremonies came later as shadows or symbols of the coming of Christ, but they were only necessary because of sin's existence. Shadows were never needed before the first sin was committed.

Now let's ask the second question, "For whom did Christ make the Sabbath?" Listen to the answer in Mark 2:27 in the words of Jesus, "The sabbath was made for man." The word "man" is used here in the generic sense to include every person in all the world. The Sabbath was made for man—and by the way, the Bible says that woman was also created for man, revealing the fact that marriage and the Sabbath are the two institutions which come to us straight from the Garden of Eden. They were both hallowed and instituted by Christ Himself in the days before the curse of sin had ever tainted the atmosphere of this world.

I realize that some people believe the Sabbath was made just for the Jews. They don't seem to realize that Jesus made the Sabbath about 2,000 years before there was a Jew. Wouldn't it be absurd to think that He made the Sabbath for a people who would not even appear for another two millenniums? Did He hallow it at creation simply to wait until some Jew appeared? If so, why did Jesus say it was made for man? It was never intended only for the Jews any more than the marriage institution was intended only for the Jews. The truth of the matter is that the Scriptures never call it the "Sabbath of the Jews," but rather the "Sabbath of the Lord."

And thirdly, "Why did Jesus make the Sabbath?" It was to be a memorial of creation, a sign of His power to make something out of nothing. It would forever testify that in just six days the world had been created for man. In a sense it was to be the birthday of the world. The event for which it was instituted would perpetuate it as an everlasting memorial. Something was done on that day, friends, which can not be changed any more than we can change our own birthday. American Independence Day is July 4, 1776, and it would be foolish to designate some other day as Independence Day. We could call some other day by that name, but the declaration was signed on July 4, 1776, and there it must remain. Likewise, the Sabbath could no more be changed than our own birthdays without having creation done over again and another day hallowed by God.

Now what difference does Christ's blessing make on an event or person? We pray for Him to bless our children and our homes. Evidently everyone feels that His blessing will make a great deal of difference. Even so, it did make that seventh day different from the other six days when He blessed it, sanctified it, and hallowed it. It would forever be different and distinct from the ordinary six working days of the week. We'll find in our study today that it has been God's own day down through the ages to this very hour. Let's prove it by tracing the Sabbath through the Scriptures and seeing how He regards it.

In Exodus 20 we find the ten commandments recorded just as they were written by the finger of God. In the very heart of the law is that fourth commandment we read a moment ago. "Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work." Now notice that this verse begins with the word "Remember." Why is that? Because the Sabbath was an institution already in existence, having been established in Eden; therefore, God only had to remind man of that which He had already blessed and sanctified for a day of rest.

Friends, some people have been known to ridicule the Sabbath as something belonging just to Moses and the Jews. But actually the ten-commandment law is the only part of the Bible which man had almost nothing to do with. God was so particular that they should be given properly that He wrote them with His own finger. Notice Exodus 24:12: "And the Lord said unto Moses, Come up to me into the mount, and be there: and I will give thee tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that thou mayest teach them." Let men beware how they ridicule that portion of Scripture written by God. The fact is, we can narrow our conclusions down to say that Christ was the author of the ten-commandment law. Do we know that? Read 1 Corinthians 10:1-4. "Moreover, brethren, I would not that ye should be ignorant, how that all our fathers were under the cloud, and all passed through the sea; And were all baptized unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea; And did all eat the same spiritual meat; And did all drink the same spiritual drink: for they drank of that Spiritual Rock that followed them: And that Rock was Christ." Now compare that with Nehemiah 9:13-15, keeping in mind that Christ was the Rock in the wilderness that followed the children of Israel. "Thou camest down also upon mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments, and true laws, good statutes and commandments: And madest known unto them thy holy sabbath, ... And gavest them bread from heaven for their hunger, and broughtest forth water for them out of the rock for their thirst. ..."

Now, friends, who was that rock? Christ was the Rock according to 1 Corinthians. So He was with the Israelites all through their journeyings, and He was the one who dealt with them. He gave them water out of the rock and He wrote the law. He is called the "lawgiver" in Isaiah 33:22. Now we can understand why Jesus could say that He was the Lord of the Sabbath. He made it and wrote it on tables of stone as a perpetual reminder. Oh, friends, this is why the Sabbath is such a blessed institution. Jesus was so closely connected with it. Have you experienced the holy joy which is a part of true Sabbath-keeping? Tomorrow we'll continue to trace the history of the Sabbath right through to the time of Jesus and the apostles.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Sabbath - Part 2

The story of Israel's survival for 40 years in the desolate wilderness of Sinai is one of the epic stories of sacred history. Probably there has never been another instance recorded of so many people learning to live in such primitive isolation. Food became one of the most severe problems to face the million or more men, women, and children having to wrest their livelihood from the forbidding deserts of the Sinai Peninsula. Without the miraculous intervention of God the entire migration would have ended in the stark tragedy of death by starvation.

In Exodus 16:4 we begin to read the account of God's provision for the people through daily supplies of manna, which was a white, bread-like substance that fell each day on the camp of Israel. The people gathered it fresh, right off the ground. It tasted like wafers and wild honey, and has often been referred to as angel's food. For 40 years the supply never diminished, and as they wandered in the wilderness, the manna was a constant reminder of God's care over them.

But there is one interesting fact about the way this food was given from heaven. God made it a test for His people, and it revolved around the keeping of His ten-commandment law. The particular point of the test was the observance of the seventh-day Sabbath. Listen to the Bible account: "Then said the Lord unto Moses, Behold, I will rain bread from heaven for you; and the people shall go out and gather a certain rate every day, that I may prove them, whether they will walk in my law, or no. And it shall come to pass, that on the sixth day they shall prepare that which they bring in; and it shall be twice as much as they gather daily. And it came to pass, that on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for one man: and all the rulers of the congregation came and told Moses. And he said unto them, This is that which the Lord hath said, To morrow is the rest of the holy sabbath unto the Lord: bake that which ye will bake to day, and seethe that ye will seethe; and that which remaineth over lay up for you to be kept until the morning. And they laid it up till the morning, as Moses bade: and it did not stink, neither was there any worm therein. And Moses said, Eat that to day; for to day is a sabbath unto the Lord: to day ye shall not find it in the field. Six days ye shall gather it; but on the seventh day, which is the sabbath, in it there shall be none. And it came to pass, that there went out some of the people on the seventh day for to gather, and they found none. And the Lord said unto Moses, How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws? See, for that the Lord hath given you the sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days; abide ye every man in his place, let no man go out of his place on the seventh day. So the people rested on the seventh day." Exodus 16:4, 5, 22-30.

Now, friends, notice that God worked three miracles every week to show the people which day was the true Sabbath. First of all, He allowed them to gather just enough for one day—it would spoil if kept over. Then He told them to gather twice as much on the sixth day, to keep it over for the Sabbath and it would not spoil. And He sent no manna on the seventh day. So three times God worked a miracle on the weekend to show them which day should be observed. Some apparently wanted to keep a different day, so they went out on the seventh day to gather the food, and, of course, there wasn't any. God met them and said, "How long do you refuse to keep my law?" Notice, they were actually breaking God's law by not keeping the specified seventh day. Perhaps they were going to keep a different day. Maybe they had in mind to observe one of the other days of the week, but God said, "No, you can't do that. You're breaking my law when you come out here and try to gather on the seventh day—the Sabbath."

This experience also reveals that the ten-commandment law of God was known long before it was written at Mount Sinai. Some disclaimers of the law try to show that the moral code was not known until Sinai, and that it was given only to the Jewish people at that time. Friends, this is a great delusion. Please note that this manna test took place before the commandments had been given at Mount Sinai. The fact is that these ten eternal rules of God's government had been in existence from the very beginning of time. True, they hadn't been put into written form, but they were known from generation to generation. A look at a few texts will show this is true.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

The Bible says, "... for where no law is, there is no transgression." Romans 4:15. Again, "... sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John 3:4. And then, "For the wages of sin is death." Romans 6:23. Put these three texts together—"for where no law is, there is no transgression ... sin is the transgression of the law ... the wages of sin is death." Now one more text. Romans 5:14. "Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses." Now if death reigned from Adam to Moses, and if death is the wages of sin, and sin is the transgression of the law, and there is no transgression without a law, then there was bound to have been a law present even before Mount Sinai. Do you see that? When man broke the law and sinned, death passed upon him. Otherwise, how did Cain know that he had sinned after killing his brother? Joseph knew that adultery was sin because he said, "... how then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" Genesis 39:9. Of Abraham, God could say that he "kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes, and my laws." Genesis 26:5. You see, friends, those ten commandments had been handed down through six generations of men for twenty-five hundred years, not in written form, but by word of mouth. It would be just as illogical to suppose that they knew nothing about God because there was no written Bible as to believe they were ignorant of the ten commandments.

You may be wondering now if Christ continued to regard the seventh day or if He later changed His mind about the binding claims of His law. Listen to His words as He spoke to the multitude in Matthew 5:17, 18. "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Jesus did not do away with any part of that moral law, friends. The seventh day is the Christian Sabbath not only because it's the Sabbath Christ made and a part of the law He gave, but because it's the only Sabbath He ever kept. Notice in Luke 4:16. "And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up, and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read." What is the significance of this great fact that Jesus kept the Sabbath regularly, as His custom? First Peter 2:21 tells us that Jesus is our example in all things. Notice, "For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps." Friends, I keep the seventh-day Sabbath because Jesus made it, blessed it, commanded it, and then set us an example by keeping it Himself as a regular, customary practice. And He actually rested from His work of redemption on the Sabbath as He had rested from the work of creation in the beginning. When was Jesus crucified? We've all heard about Good Friday and Easter Sunday, haven't we? We know that Jesus did rise on the first day of the week and He died on the day that is commonly called Good Friday. Jesus actually died around five o'clock on Friday afternoon, and was placed in the tomb before sunset. He rose Sunday morning about the breaking of day, thus He rested in the tomb over the Sabbath. Let's read it in Luke 23 beginning with verse 52. "This man went unto Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus. And he took it down, and wrapped it in linen, and laid it in a sepulchre that was hewn in stone, wherein never man before was laid. And that day was the preparation, and the sabbath drew on." Notice that He died on the day called the preparation day and the Sabbath was approaching. "And the women also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid." Here is something very important, friends. The women continued to keep the Sabbath according to the commandment even after the death of Jesus. The commandment says the seventh day is the Sabbath. So these women, then, were continuing to keep the same seventh-day Sabbath even after Christ died. Please read on in verse 56: "And they returned (that is, they returned home) and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the sabbath day according to the commandment. Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them. And they found the stone rolled away from the sepulchre." Luke 24:1, 2.

These verses indicate that Jesus arose from the dead on the first day of the week, or Sunday, as we call it. Most of the Christian world celebrates Easter Sunday in honor of that event. But according to our text, "the Sabbath according to the commandment" was the day before He rose from the dead, which is Saturday. It's the seventh day of the week, the very one which was blessed by Jesus as a holy day.

Someone has suggested that maybe the day was changed at the cross and that we should now observe the day of His resurrection. Friends, there's not a single intimation that such should be the case. The seventh-day Sabbath continued to be observed by the disciples in the years following the resurrection. His disciples and His mother knew nothing about such a change. In fact, Jesus instructed His disciples to pray that they should continue to observe the Sabbath after His resurrection and Ascension. Read it in Matthew 24:19, 20. "Woe unto them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days! But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." Here Jesus is predicting the destruction of Jerusalem that took place in 70 A.D. by the Roman armies. He told His disciples to pray that at that time, forty years after His death, they would not have to flee on the Sabbath. Certainly this shows that Christ had no idea of any other day of worship coming in to displace the Sabbath. It was still His own special day that He made and which He was now sharing with men.

Friends listen, the Sabbath of "paradise lost" will become the Sabbath of "paradise regained." All who are saved in the kingdom of God will keep the Sabbath by worshipping before the throne of God. In Isaiah 66:22, 23 we read: "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." And so we have the Lord's Day spanning the ages.

Perhaps you're thinking that only a small, insignificant number have ever kept the Sabbath, but that's wrong, friends. The fact is that all the prophets, judges, and patriarchs of the Old Testament were Sabbath-keepers. Moses, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, Joseph, all the disciples and Paul were observers of the seventh-day Sabbath. And towering above them all is Jesus, my example and yours, lighting the way by keeping holy the Sabbath He made, that He blessed, and commanded in order that we might share in the blessing which He placed upon it.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Seduction of the Innocent Listen to the audio version Now!

Some of the startling announcements of the great achievements of man in our twentieth century have conditioned the American public to believe almost anything it sees in print. Wild theories and speculations garbed in scientific language are swallowed by gullible readers. For example, the theories of evolution are taken for granted in many quarters, having found their way into the universities, high schools, and even grade schools of our day.

Perhaps we should pause and define the terms we've been using on today's broadcast. What is evolutionism? What is creationism? The evolutionist endeavors to explain the origin of our solar system and the species of animal and vegetable life on this earth by projecting what is termed "natural law" backward to some beginning in the dim, dark past. It is a belief that all things, animate and inanimate, evolved into their present complexity after billions of years.

Creationism, on the other hand, is a belief in the account of God's Holy Word concerning miraculous, instantaneous creation by an all-wise God. It is the acceptance by faith of what God says in His Word, and that faith is based on evidence that surrounds us and leaves us without excuse. A creationist accepts the simple "Thus saith the Lord" rather than trust in his own ability to reason regarding the origin of all things.

Let us now contrast the teaching of evolutionists and of creationists on the origin of this earth. To show the evolutionistic teaching on this question I quote from a textbook entitled Child's History of the World by Virgil M. Hillyer. This is a textbook used in many of the public schools of America today. I quote from this source for two reasons. First of all, because it presents the evolutionary theory in all of its simplicity without the use of scientific terms difficult to be understood. Second, to show how Satan has connived to bring the theories of evolution before the very youngest minds to corrupt and confuse their belief in God's Word. I quote: "One of these stars is our Sun—yes, our Sun. The other stars would look the same as the Sun if we could get as close to them. But at that time, so long, long ago, our Sun was not just a big, round, white, hot ball as we see it in the sky today. It was then more like the fireworks you may have seen on the Fourth of July. It was whirling and sputtering and throwing off sparks.

"One of these sparks which the sun threw far off got cool just as a spark from the crackling log in the fireplace gets cool, and this cooled-off spark was—

"What do you suppose?

"See if you can guess—

"It was our World—yes, the World on which we now live.

"At first, however, our World or Earth was nothing but a ball of rock. This ball of rock was wrapped around with steam, like a heavy fog.

"Then the steam turned to rain, and it rained on the World, and it rained, and rained, and it rained until it had filled up the hollows and made enormously big puddles. These puddles were the oceans. The dry places were bare rock." Pages 5-9. Mind you, this is the account of the beginning of all things that our boys and girls are learning in the grade schools of America today.

Now let us turn to God's Word and discover what He Himself says about the origin of our earth. In Genesis 1:1 we read: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." And in Genesis 2:1-4: "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made. These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made the earth and the heavens."

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

The psalmist, David of old, testified as to the origin of this world in the words of Psalm 33:6, 9: "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth . . . . For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast." The Bible is filled with such statements. Both Old and New Testament writers testify as to how this world came into existence. Our belief in this matter determines whether or not we accept God's authority as the Author of sacred Scripture.

Evolutionists place the age of our world into the millions, and some into the billions of years. Amazing indeed are the vast differences among the evolutionary scientists in their attempts to establish the date of the birth of our world. However, we can have confidence in Bible chronology which indicates that this earth is not yet 6,000 years of age. Many are confused by modern science in its attempts to measure the age of our world by the time it takes to develop the fossils and strata of the earth. It is well to remember that the scientist has established his own standards of measurement as to how long it has taken for these formations—once again mere theories and speculations.

I tell you friends, we ought to be really upset and concerned as we see evolutionism and its theories creeping into Christian doctrines. Deistic evolutionists and theistic evolutionists are trying to harmonize God's Word with the theories of evolution. The first puts God into the picture as the One who created the first living matter, but then permitted evolution to take over. The second teaches that God creates by the process of evolution. But as Bible-believing Christians we can be but one thing: creationistic theists, that is, those who believe that God created and sustains all things.

One of the popular theories in the Christian world today that incorporates the doctrine of evolution is that God took, through the process of evolution, six long periods of time for the creation of this world rather than six literal days, indicated in Genesis 1. A form of this theory was first promoted by Augustine in the early Christian centuries and later taught by the famous theologian, Thomas Aquinas, in the Roman Church. But in the book of Exodus, chapter 20 and verse 11, we read the fourth commandment in which the question is answered as to how long it took for the creation of our world. "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it." Here God Himself testifies as to how long it took Him to create the world.

Yes, if we do away with creation as taught in the sacred Word of God, then we must do away with all of the teachings of the Bible, for the truths of sacred Scripture are based on the authority of God as the Creator. The whole plan of salvation would be nullified, for if we had no Creator, we would have no Redeemer.

Surely it takes more faith to believe the evolutionary theory than the Bible account of the beginnings of this world. The evolutionists teach that the world came about quite by chance through a great cosmic explosion out in space, resulting in a piece of the sun breaking off and becoming our world, and that the complexity of life upon this planet also came about quite by chance.

Now, enough for the origin of our earth. Let's now turn to the question of the origin of life, that is, the beginnings of the species of animal and vegetable life upon this planet. I return again to our statement from the Child's History of the World, a textbook, you recall, used in the public schools of America, in which by simple language the evolutionary theory is taught.

"Then, after this, that is, after the evolution of our earth came the first living things—tiny plants that you could only have seen under a microscope. At first they grew only in the water, then along the water's edge, and then out on the rock.

"Then dirt or soil, as people call it, formed all over the rock and made the rock into land, and the plants grew larger and spread farther over the land.

"Then, after this, came the first tiny animals in the water. They were wee Mites like drops of jelly.

"Then, after this, came things like Insects. Some that live in the water, some on the water, some on the land, and some in the air.

"Then, after this, came Fish, that live only in the water. Then, after this, came Frogs, that live in the water and on the land too.

"Then, after this, came Snakes and huge lizards bigger than alligators, more like dragons; and they grew so big that at last they could not move and died because they could not get enough food to eat.

"Then, after this, came Birds, that lay eggs and those Animals like foxes and elephants and cows that nurse their babies when they are born.

"Then, after this, came Monkeys.

"Then, last of all, came—what do you suppose? Yes—People—men, women and children."

And then to be certain that these evolutionary ideas are drummed into the minds of these boys and girls the quotation goes on: "Here are the steps; see if you can take them: Star, Sun; Sun, Spark; Spark, World; World, Steam; Steam, Rain; Rain, Oceans; Oceans, Plants; Plants, Mites; Mites, Insects; Insects, Fish; Fish, Frogs; Frogs, Snakes; Snakes, Birds; Birds, Animals; Animals, Monkeys; Monkeys, People; And here we are! What do you suppose will be next?"

Friends, is there any wonder why our world is filled with atheists and infidels and agnostics when such teachings as this are placed in the minds of our boys and girls?

Evolutionism is a hoax. A classic example is that of the Piltdown man. Let me tell you about it. One day in 1908 a lawyer by the name of Charles Dawson was walking along a farm road close to Piltdown Common in Sussex, England. He noted that workmen had unearthed pieces of bone. So he began to dig and uncovered part of a human skull. Later he was supposed to have returned to the spot to find the jaw which had been missing from this skull. The scientific world accepted his finding as one of the missing links that they had been looking for. It was acclaimed by some of the greatest scientists of our century to be the remnants of England's earliest man who lived 300,000 years ago. However, on November 21, 1953, the British Museum announced that the jaw was not what it was claimed to be—the missing link, but it was the jaw of a modern chimpanzee about 50 years old. Chemical filings were analyzed by Dr. J. S. Weiner and Professor W. E. LeCros Clark, both of Oxford University, and Dr. K. P. Oakley of the British Museum and the hoax was uncovered.

The evolutionist claims that when proper amounts of certain elements like nitrogen, oxygen, hydrogen, and carbon chanced to come together under certain favorable circumstances of temperature, humidity, etc., the first living cell became a reality. They go on to explain that through the process of mutation and chance evolution, things continued to develop until the complex forms of animal life became what they are today. But the genealogy of Luke 3 traces the ancestry of Christ back to Adam and Eve and to God Himself, not to some primary form of life such as the mollusk or quadruped or to some one-celled piece of protoplasm along the water's edge.

God reveals how man became a reality in this world. In Genesis 1:26, 27: "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness: and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." Again in Genesis 2:7: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul."

Surely the marvels of human physiology give evidence of a divine Creator. Consider the circulatory system, the digestive system, the nervous system. Think of the human heart pumping thousands of gallons of blood each day. Think of the cooling system containing two and one-half million sweat glands that keep the body at a constant 98° temperature. Think of the human ear with twenty-four thousand supersensitive sound-receiving filaments capable of detecting sound vibrations of sixteen to thirty thousand per second. Think of the human brain with fifteen million brain cells capable of retaining millions of thoughts. Think of the human eye taking thousands of Kodachrome pictures each minute in full dimension. Indeed, like David of old, we would be led to testify: "I am fearfully and wonderfully made. Marvelous are thy works." Psalm 139:14.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

“Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath.”

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Sunday Tradition

One of the czars of Russia, walking in his park one day, came upon a sentry standing before a patch of weeds. The czar asked him what he was doing there. The sentry did not know. All he could say was that he had been ordered to his post of duty by the captain of the guard. The czar then sent his aid to ask the captain of the guard. But the captain could only say that the regulations had called for a sentry at that particular spot. His curiosity had been aroused. The czar ordered an investigation. But no living man at the court could remember the time when there had not been a sentry at that post, and none could say why he was there, or what he was guarding.

Finally, the archives were opened and after a long search the mystery was solved. The records showed that Catherine the Great had once planted a rose bush in that plot of ground and a sentry had been put there to see that no one trampled upon it. The rose bush died, but no one thought to cancel the order, and so for many years the spot where the rose bush had once been was watched by men who did not know what they were watching. It became a tradition. They really did not know why they were there. They were just there.

Do you know that we have many religious teachers today standing guard over doctrines and practices, the origin of which they do not know, and they are certainly not rooted in the Scriptures. Simply a tradition. They think they are guarding some sacred plant of truth, when in reality they are standing guard over some weed of error.

This brings us to our first text today, found in Matthew the 15th chapter, verse 13: "Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." That is to say, every religious doctrine and practice which is not rooted in the Holy Scriptures will in the end be destroyed. And if you want to stand among the victorious ones in the end of time then anchor your faith in the doctrines and practices that God Himself has planted.

How can we know truth? There is only one way, and that is to study carefully this book that God has given to us. When it comes to something so important to salvation certainly no Christian should depend upon the sayings of another man. He will not follow tradition but will search diligently what God has to say to him through the Bible.

Today we present the Bible text man has forgotten—the text God said to remember. In Exodus 20 we find the ten divine precepts of our Creator. These Ten Commandments govern man's relationship to his God and to his fellow men. We seem to have little difficulty in interpreting the first commandment which says, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me;" or the second or the third that reminds us not to take the name of the Lord our God in vain; or the fifth that tells us to honor our father and mother; the sixth, that reminds us not to kill; the seventh, not to commit adultery; the eighth, not to steal; the ninth, not to bear false witness; or the tenth, not to covet. All Christians everywhere testify to the necessity of abiding by the principles of these divine commands of God. All are of equal importance. In James 2:10-12 we read: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law. So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty." So all of these Ten Commandments are of equal importance. Let us be mindful that these Ten Commandments are unchangeable, unalterable. In Malachi 3:6 we are told: "For I am the Lord, I change not." And in Psalms 89:34 we read: "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips." Surely if the Lord Himself testifies that His law is unchangeable, that He Himself would not alter it, then we as mere men dare not tamper with this divine constitution of the government of God. In fact, the Lord commands us in Deuteronomy 4:2 "Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish ought from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you."

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

Among the Ten Commandments we find the forgotten Bible text, the very one God asked us to remember. Notice again, if you will, Exodus 20, read verses 8 through 11:

"Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it."

Notice that this commandment is prefaced with the word "remember"—"don't forget this one." Could it be the Lord knew that of all His ten divine precepts this would be the one most forgotten by all? And so He said, "Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy." Here the Lord makes crystal clear the day which He made holy as the Sabbath day. Notice verses 10 and 11 where He says: "But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God...rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it." And so as we remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy, we must remember also which day the Lord set apart as His holy day. That was the seventh day of the week, or Saturday, as we know it today.

Notice that this Sabbath commandment, along with the rest of the commandments was given through Moses in written form 2,000 years after creation. But the Sabbath itself goes back to creation itself. In Genesis 2:1-3 we read: "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it." There are some who think that the teaching of a seventh-day Sabbath is something new, but in actuality it is the oldest institution known to man, for it dates back to creation week itself, just as does the institution of marriage. It is interesting to note, too, that the seventh day Sabbath is not a Jewish day, for it was given 2,000 years before there was a Jew. Indeed, Jesus said in Mark 2:27, "the sabbath was made for man"—not for the Jew only, but for man.

Now, what was the purpose of the Sabbath? Why was it given in the very beginning of time? "It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed." Exodus 31:17. Here we recognize that the Sabbath, if kept by Christians, is a sign that they believe it was God who created the world in six days and rested on the seventh. In Exodus 20:11 the same reason for the Sabbath was given—"in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it." The Sabbath, then, becomes a memorial of creation, a sign or a symbol of the great creative power of God. The Stars and Stripes, the red, white and blue flag, stands today as a symbol of the great nation of America. It is indeed a privilege for every red-blooded American to salute and pledge allegiance to the flag. None of us would stand by idly and see the Stars and Stripes dragged in the mud. Dare we, then, fellow Christians, see the symbol of God's eternal government torn away from its moorings and dragged in the mud of tradition?

Jesus is surely our example in all things. We will follow Him then in this matter of Sabbath observance, for Jesus was a Sabbathkeeper. "And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read." Luke 4:16. Yes, it was the custom, the practice, of Jesus to observe the sacred, holy Sabbath day. In John 15:10 Jesus testified: "I have kept my Father's commandments." In Matthew 15:9 He says: "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." The seventh day Sabbath stands today as a commandment of God. The first day of the week, or Sunday-keeping, stands today only upon the traditions of men.

Multitudes of Christians today believe that there must be some good reason why Sunday-keeping has replaced Sabbathkeeping; some reason why the first day of the week is kept today instead of the Old Testament Sabbath. But the Bible is silent upon such a change.

Did the apostles keep the Sabbath? The followers of Jesus, after beholding the body of Christ in the sepulcher, "returned and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the sabbath day according to the commandment." Luke 23:56. There is no record anywhere in the New Testament indicating that the disciples or followers of Jesus honored any other day as the sacred Sabbath of the Lord.

In the book of Acts we find repeated references to the Sabbath long after the resurrection of Jesus. In Acts 13:14 we read: "But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and sat down." In verse 42: "And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next Sabbath." And in verse

44: "And the next sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God." As Paul continued his missionary journeys, he continued to honor the seventh day Sabbath. In Acts 16:13 we read: "And on the sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither." Also in Acts 17:2: "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three sabbath days reasoned with them out of the scriptures."

Yes, it was the custom of Paul, as it was of Christ, to observe the Sabbath commandment. "And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks" (in the city of Corinth, Greece), Acts 18:4. He continued there for a year and six months (verse 11). and every Sabbath he was found in the church with the people.

The Apostle Paul, as he himself testified in Acts 24:14, that he, "believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets" kept this commandment. It was he who taught that the keeping of the law which was holy, just and good was not a means of salvation, but a result of salvation, an evidence that the love of Christ had entered one's heart. As one who loved His Lord, Paul, like all the apostles, continued to follow in the footsteps of Jesus in obedience to the commandments of God. There is absolutely no text in the Bible from Genesis to Revelation indicating that a new Sabbath should be substituted for the old. In fact, there are only eight texts in the New Testament which mention the first day of the week. Surely if there was to be a change from the seventh to the first day, it would have to be mentioned in one of these eight verses.

Why, then, do many keep Sunday, you ask? Well, because they were taught to; because their mothers and fathers did, and their grandfathers, perhaps, before them; because they had thought it must be in the Bible; because you thought there must be some good reason for it. But as we put the first day, Sunday, to the test of Bible truth, we find it must fall, with all the other traditional teachings of mankind which came into the church during the Dark Ages. But in these last days, in fulfillment of Bible prophecy, the true Sabbath is again to be revealed as part of the great reformatory movement to take place before Jesus returns.

In Isaiah 58:12, 13 we are told of the great reformation which specifies the revival of the true Sabbath. "And they that shall be of thee shall build the old waste places: thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations; and thou shalt be called, The repairer of the breach, The restorer of paths to dwell in. If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable; and shalt honour him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words." To those who accept this last-day revival of the true Sabbath, the promise is given in verse 14: "Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord." What a day of delight it becomes when the true Sabbath, the seventh day of the week, is again accepted and honored as the Holy of the Lord.

The Bible also teaches that the Sabbath will be kept in heaven. "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." Isaiah 66:22, 23. What a privilege it will be to gather around the great white throne in the kingdom of glory each seventh-day Sabbath to worship our Maker and our Saviour!

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

When God Said Remember - Part 1 Listen to the audio version Now!

One of the most perplexing questions facing the religious world today is being deliberately stifled by many leading churchmen. The sincere inquiries of laymen and Bible students are being turned aside by those in authority. Yet the question demands attention and requires an answer. It is the question of the Sabbath. The reason it looms so large in the minds of so many is that it's a part of the Ten Commandments, which God wrote with His own hand and delivered to the world. It is found in the very heart of the Ten Commandments and is the longest and most detailed of them. Furthermore, God distinguished this commandment by urgent wording found nowhere else in the Decalogue. It is introduced by the command, "Remember." Yet I submit to you that the world has largely forgotten what God said to remember. Not even the latest memory pills will bring the human race to remember what God wrote in the middle of His great moral law.

Specifically, what did God command us to remember? Let's read the commandment itself in Exodus 20:8-11. "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates: For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day: wherefore the Lord blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it." Now, this raises an interesting question, friends. Why do millions keep Sunday, the first day of the week, instead of Saturday, the seventh day as the commandment specifies? Why do they not keep the day God said to remember?

Right now, let's look at the Bible reasons for keeping the day God commanded. Everyone really should have a Bible reason for his religious practices. Listen to this text in 1 Peter 3:15: "But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts: and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you with meekness and fear." There it is. The Bible forever settles it. Every Christian ought to have an answer from the scriptures for everything he believes. So you say to me, "Well, why DO you keep Saturday as the Sabbath when nearly everybody else keeps Sunday?" With God's Word in hand we are going to answer that question today. That's why I trust you will listen very, very carefully and prayerfully to this broadcast.

The first Bible reason for keeping the seventh day Sabbath is that Jesus kept the seventh day holy and asked all His followers to do the same. Here's the scripture to prove that Jesus kept the Sabbath. "And he came to Nazareth, where he had been brought up: and, as his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and stood up for to read." Luke 4:16. This verse of scripture is too plain for anyone to misunderstand or misconstrue. It plainly says that Jesus habitually kept the Sabbath. That was His custom.

Now let's read a scripture or two that tells us we should follow His example. We all believe it, but let's read it from the Bible so we can be sure. John 12:26: "If any man,"—notice that expression—"If any man serve me, let him follow me." A great many people think they are serving the Lord who are not actually serving Him, because the Lord said if any man serve Me, then let him follow Me. It doesn't make any difference what a person's persuasion, color, or background may be—this statement refers to everybody. The Lord removed all doubt when He said "any man." That plainly means every individual who is listening to this broadcast, because the word "man" is a collective noun meaning mankind—everyone. If any man, woman, or child will serve Me, let him follow Me. Those are Christ's own words. To serve Him, we must follow Him. Now let's read the word of the apostle Peter in 1 Peter 2:21. "For even hereunto were ye called: because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps." That again is a scripture too plain for anybody to misconstrue. The scripture simply makes it clear that if I'm going to be a Christian, I must follow Him. And if I'm going to follow Him, then I must keep the Sabbath, because Jesus kept the Sabbath. Right here a great many folks will say, "Now, wait a minute. I don't feel that the Sabbath is binding today. The Book of Revelation speaks of the Lord's Day. I worship on the Lord's Day. I have nothing at all to do with the Sabbath." Well, let's turn to that Book of Revelation and read this passage that's so often mentioned. It's found in Revelation 1:10. "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet." Now let's analyze this scripture a little bit. It's often used as a proof-text to prove that we ought to worship on the first day of the week. You've just heard that scripture read, friends. Does the verse say that the Lord's Day is the first day of the week? Of course not; absolutely not. Does the verse say that the Lord's Day is the Sabbath Day? No, it doesn't say that, either. Sabbath keepers couldn't use this verse to prove that the Lord's day is the Sabbath, neither could Sunday keepers use it to prove that the Lord's day is Sunday. All this verse states is that the Lord has a special day called the Lord's day. That's all Revelation 1:10 could ever prove.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

Our last question is this: If He has a day, then which day is the Lord's day? Can we find the answer to this question from the Bible without seeking the theories of men? The answer is, Yes. We can find the answer right in the Book of God. Let's take a New Testament scripture first, and an Old Testament scripture along with it. The New Testament scripture is Matthew 12:8. "Therefore the Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath day." Now, friends, if the Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath day, then the Sabbath surely is the Lord's Day. That's the New Testament scripture. The Bible actually refers to the Sabbath as His day. God claims only one holy day, the Sabbath.

You may be reasoning like this: "How do we know that the 'Sabbath' and the 'Lord's day' are not simply other ways of saying 'the first day of the week'?" I bring this up because many people have actually made that claim. I've heard the argument quite recently. But let's see what God says. Turn now to the Old Testament text in Exodus 20, and I'm going to read beginning with verse 10. Listen carefully now, because God settles the matter right here once and for all. "But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God." Did you get that, friends? Now tell me, you folk who have calendars hanging right there on the wall, what day of the week is the seventh day? Why, Saturday, of course. You can't get away from it. It's right there witnessing from your calendar on the wall. The seventh day is the Sabbath. So, on the authority of God's eternal Word, the seventh day, the Sabbath, the Lord's Day, all mean the same thing and all refer to the day that we now call Saturday. So if we're going to follow Jesus, and He kept that day, then we must likewise observe Saturday as the holy Sabbath.

Now I want you to look again at Exodus 20 for a few moments, because this is the chapter where the Ten Commandments are recorded. I've been much amazed to discover that there are many people, church people even, who do not realize that one of the Ten Commandments has to do with the Sabbath. People learn the Ten Commandments and study them and yet some do not know that one of them has to do with the Sabbath we're talking about today. It's the fourth commandment of God's law. We read it at the beginning of this broadcast. "Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work: But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God." Now, remember friends, this is a part of the Ten Commandments. Why is it that people the world over, who are the best of Christians, have lost sight of that? I call your attention to the fact that it's one of the Ten Commandments because God says that the Ten cannot be changed. I want to read two verses to prove this. The first is Psalm 89:34 where the Lord says, "I will not alter the thing that is gone out of my lips." And then in Exodus 20, the chapter containing the Ten Commandments, we read in verse 1, "And God spake all these words." So the Lord said it and He can't change it once it has been said. His words cannot be changed. That's what the Old Testament proves.

Here's the New Testament verse: Luke 16:17. "It is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail." Now a tittle is a little tiny marking in the Hebrew alphabet likened to the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i." God's law cannot be changed even as little as that; it's just impossible. That's another reason why I keep the seventh day Sabbath—God's unchangeable law commands it. It's the fourth commandment, and I hope every person listening will see that it's just as serious to break the commandment that says, "Remember the sabbath day" as it is to break the commandments that say "Thou shalt not steal" and "Thou shalt not kill." They are all in the same law, written by the same God. It's God's idea, friends, not mine or yours. Here's a question that has disturbed me for many years: How can any man, woman, or child feel free to ignore any commandment that the eternal God gives? That's a question we ought to study and analyze very seriously today, friends.

A certain Protestant Christian had a good job working in the office of a shipping firm. One day while he was out in the shipping department, one of the workmen there somehow suffered a minor accident as he went about his business. Holding the bruised finger, the man swore violently, taking the Lord's name in vain. This Christian felt badly about it and thought maybe he should do something, so he went over to him and said,

"Friend, we really ought to be careful about our speech, shouldn't we? When you talk like that you are breaking one of God's Ten Commandments, the one that says, Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. That's commandment #3." The man, of course, was considerably taken aback. He put his head down sheepishly and said, "Yes, that's right. I'm awfully sorry I slipped. I want you to know that I appreciate your saying something to me about it, and I'll try to be more careful about it in the future."

So this Christian gentleman started back to his office feeling very good and patting himself on the back for teaching somebody that it was very important to keep the Ten Commandments. As he walked along, however, a voice seemed to say to him, "But you are breaking the fourth." That man stopped in his tracks as if frozen, and his heart began to pound. Perspiration broke out on his forehead. He stood there for one awful moment and then, heartbroken, he made his decision to follow God and keep the fourth commandment. You see, the Sabbath truth had come to him before. He had known about it, studied it, analyzed it and even believed it; but, he tried to get away from it. He thought of what his friends at church and at work might think, and he was afraid he might even lose his job if he decided never to work on Saturday again. But as he stood there for that long moment he thought, "Here I am, telling somebody else how awful it is to break the commandments and I'm breaking them myself." He turned, went into his office and shut the door. He got down on his knees and confessed his sins, and from that moment on he kept the Sabbath.

Now listen, friends. When the great God of heaven commands us to do something, what is there to do but obey? May the Lord burn that into every heart today. I know that you're wondering about the folks who don't know these truths. Perhaps you are thinking this is a hard, unreasonable message. And what about my grandmother, one of the greatest saints that ever lived? Certainly she will be saved, and yet she never knew about the Sabbath.

Well, she probably will be saved, friends. The scriptures teach that we are accountable only for the truth we understand. James 4:17 is a very important passage that every Christian should underline in his Bible. Listen: "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin." When we know the truth but don't follow it, we sin. In John 9:41 Jesus said, "If ye were blind, ye should have no sin; but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth." Yes, friends, God judges us according to the light we have. Many dear people will be in the kingdom of God who never even heard of the Sabbath, but they lived up to all the light they knew, and God honors them for that. He will require of you all the truth that you understand, and now since this great truth of the Sabbath has come to you directly from God's Word, friends, what will you do about it? Tomorrow we will continue this study and give more Bible reasons for keeping the same Sabbath as Jesus kept and commanded us to keep.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

When God Said Remember - Part 2 Listen to the audio version Now!

Yesterday we entered into a study of God's law and in particular the fourth commandment of that Decalogue. We learned that Jesus is our example in all things and He kept all the commandments of God. His life sets the pattern for ours. And the Bible says that He not only kept all of the commandments, but especially it was His habit to go into the synagogue and worship on the Sabbath day. Now we're going to continue today by studying Bible reasons for keeping that same day that Jesus observed and the one that was written by God in the Ten Commandments.

The next reason for keeping the Sabbath is simply this, friends; that the disciples of Jesus kept it as He did. There have been many arguments about this, but I'd like to read you some passages from the book of Acts where we find the record of the disciples' work. I want you to note what it says here about Sabbath keeping. This is Acts 13:14. "But when they departed from Perga, they came to Antioch in Pisidia, and went into the synagogue on the sabbath day, and sat down." Here they were in Antioch keeping the Sabbath. Acts 16:13 is another one. "And on the sabbath we went out of the city by a river side, where prayer was wont to be made; and we sat down, and spake unto the women which resorted thither." Here they were in Philippi, a city in Macedonia, and they were keeping the Sabbath out by the riverside. Now many people feel that the only reason the disciples worshipped on the Sabbath was to preach to the Jews and that they never worshipped on that day otherwise. But I call you to witness, that here they were in Greece now; there was no Jewish synagogue there as far as we know, and they went out to the riverside. These Christian people met, worshipped, and prayed there on the Sabbath. That's Acts 16:13. Why didn't they meet on Sunday with those folk in the Gentile country of Macedonia? I'll tell you why, friends. Because those disciples kept the Sabbath.

Acts 17:2 says, "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three sabbath days reasoned with them out of the scriptures." Sabbath keeping was Paul's manner or custom, the exact same custom that Christ had, worshipping on the Sabbath. Acts 18:4, "And he reasoned in the synagogue every sabbath, and persuaded the Jews and the Greeks." Now notice, Paul was preaching every Sabbath and not only to the Jews but to the Greeks or the Gentiles, not on Sunday, the first day of the week, but on Sabbath. Here's another one. Acts 13:42 and 44. "And when the Jews were gone out of the synagogue, the Gentiles besought that these words might be preached to them the next sabbath." Many people say, "Well, he preached to the Jews only on Sabbath but when he preached to the Gentiles, it was on the first day of the week." But now here we find the Gentiles asking that he also preach to them on the Sabbath. Now notice verse 44. What did Paul do about this request? "And the next sabbath day came almost the whole city together to hear the word of God." Why, friends, there it is, Sabbath keepers! That's what the scripture says very, very plainly about the apostles.

Now we do know this. Paul positively did not teach Sunday keeping. You say, "Well, how do you know that? Well let's read a verse on it now. Acts 28:17. Paul was under arrest, and this is the way our text reads: "And it came to pass, that after three days Paul called the chief of the Jews together: And when they were come together, he said unto them, Men and brethren, though I have committed nothing against the people, or customs of our fathers, yet was I delivered prisoner from Jerusalem into the hands of the Romans." Now I want you to notice that Paul said to all those Jews gathered together, "Brethren I'm here in prison at the hands of the Romans but I want you to know that it wasn't because I taught anything against the teachings of our fathers." Now everybody, even the most orthodox Sunday-keepers today, will tell you that the Jews kept Saturday. No one denies that the Jews kept the Sabbath and Paul, standing there before them, was saying, "I did nothing in my preaching or teaching against the tradition of the Jews." Now either Paul was telling an untruth or Paul did not teach Sunday keeping, friends. Of course we know Paul was telling the truth, so the disciples were Sabbath keepers and they taught Sabbath keeping.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

More Free Books!

More Radio Messages!

Let me say this further, neither Christ nor the disciples ever thought or taught that the first day of the week was a holy day. We plan to go into that more fully tomorrow when we'll read every text in the Bible that even mentions the first day of the week and examine every one of them carefully. If we don't get to it tomorrow, we'll get to it the next day. But be assured of this, friends, the first day of the week as a holy day is not in the Bible at all.

Now, the next reason for keeping the Sabbath is that it's necessary if I plan to be blessed. Let's read Isaiah 56:2. "Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil." Now, do you want to be blessed, friend? I'll tell you how—keep the Sabbath. A lot of folks will say, "Oh yes, but that was for the Jews." Well, let's read on now in verse 6: "Also the sons of the stranger that join themselves to the Lord, (now here you have Gentiles, friends) to serve Him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: for mine house shall be called an house of prayer for all people." And so, if the Book means anything—and it means everything, of course—Sabbath keeping is necessary if we are to receive God's full blessing. By the way, that word "blessed" actually means "happy". Nothing will bring peace of mind and inner happiness like Sabbath keeping. For spiritual, mental, and physical well-being, it's unequalled. These ancient records of scripture recommend rest, Sabbath rest, for health and happiness long before modern medicine ever made the discovery or made the recommendation.

Well, I could give many, many more reasons as to why we should keep the Sabbath. I shall give more, though, in a later broadcast, but these are the four key reasons that I've given so far and I hope you'll study them over very carefully, friends.

Now I'd like to examine a few reasons people give for not keeping the seventh day Sabbath. The first one is, "It's Jewish." You've heard that over and over again. A person becomes a member of the Sabbath keeping church and folks will say every time, "Oh, you've become a Jew" or "That's Jewish." Well, friends, I've looked through the Bible again and again and have never been able to discover where the Lord called it a Jewish Sabbath anywhere. I have, however, discovered where He called it something else. Exodus 20, verse 10. We read it a moment ago. "The seventh day is the sabbath of the —Jews, is that what it says? No indeed. It says, "The seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God." Now people may call it the Jewish Sabbath but God calls it the Sabbath of the Lord. Isaiah 56:6—notice what it says now. "Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants and lay hold of the sabbath." Now he's speaking here of keeping the Sabbath and he says we'll be blessed in doing it but notice that these people joined themselves to the Lord when they began to keep the Sabbath. People say you've joined the Jews when you keep the Sabbath but the Bible says that you've joined the Lord. God has an entirely different opinion from men today about some of these things.

Mark 2:27 is a text that must be brought in right here. "The sabbath was made for man," Now a great many people, if they were writing the Scriptures, would change that and say that the Sabbath was made for the Jews, but that isn't what the Bible says. The Bible says that the Sabbath was made for man—MAN. When was it made? Let's go back into Scriptures, way back to the beginning, in the Book of Genesis, Chapter 2, verses 1, 2, and 3. We find this story. "Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them. And on the seventh day God ended his work which he had made; and he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made. And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it: because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." According to the Bible then, the Sabbath was made way back in the beginning for man. Now how many men were living when the Sabbath was made? Why, just one, of course, and his name was Adam, and Adam was not a Jew. It was 2500 years after Adam was made before the first Jews appeared. But God made the Sabbath at creation and made it for man. Once again, that's a collective noun meaning all mankind—all men and women everywhere, for all time. The Sabbath is for everybody. Now I hope that you'll see that today, friends. I hope you'll understand it. This is not a fantastic fanatical new message. No, indeed, this message is as old as the Bible, as old as the world. Talk about old-time religion; the old time way is the Sabbath-keeping way. That's what the Bible taught from long long ago.

Now the second excuse some people give as a reason for not keeping the Sabbath is this. "Oh, any day will do as long as a person is sincere." Did you notice when we read these verses from Genesis 2 that the Scripture says that it was the seventh day. He rested on the seventh day. He sanctified it. He hallowed it. That means that He took this day and set it apart for a sacred use. That's what sanctify means—to set apart for sacred use. Now it didn't say a seventh day, it said the seventh day. Let me use an illustration here that I think you'll remember. It's very important. You'll hear this thing over and over, "any day will do as long as you're sincere." That's not what the Bible says, though, and this may help you to understand the thing clearly.

Suppose we lined up seven ladies right here in front of this microphone, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, right on down to the end and there is my little brown-haired wife at the end, and all of them here total up seven. We'll number them just as God did in creation. The evening and the morning were the first day, evening and morning were the second day, and one was set apart—the seventh. Let's let the seventh day be represented by my wife at the end of this line of seven ladies. She's the seventh lady right on the end. Suppose I said, "Now, friends, I have a new theory. I don't think it makes any difference which of these seven is my wife. Just any one will do and I'm going to prove it to you. We'll start over here and I'll start counting in the middle of this group, 1, 2, 3, and then back to the other end, 4, 5, 6, 7—I end up counting on lady No. 4 and say, "That one can be my wife. It won't make any difference as long as I'm sincere about it." What would you think about that, friends? Well, I'm not too concerned about what you would think; I'm more concerned about what you'd do. You'd run me off the air and out of this city because there's something radically wrong with that kind of thinking. One was set apart as my wife by the sacred marriage vows—only one. Its the same thing with the Sabbath. God took it, set it apart, lifted it up above the other days, stamped upon it holiness, and said, "It is My holy day." Now who can say that it doesn't make any difference, friends?

Well, our time has slipped away from us again and we're going to have to wait until tomorrow to continue this important study right out of the Scriptures about the holy Sabbath day. Keep listening, friends, because we want to exhaust this subject if we can. There are so many angles to it and we want to answer every question that has ever come up in your mind about the keeping of God's Ten Commandments and about the importance of this Sabbath in particular.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

When God Said Remember - Part 3 Listen to the audio version Now!

Continuing today with our sincere search in the Sabbath question, we'll examine more Bible reasons for keeping the Sabbath commanded by God in the Ten-Commandment Law. We found that the seventh day is Saturday on our modern calendars. In fact, calendars bear witness in every home as to the true Sabbath day. Yes, the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord.

We've been looking into some real reasons why people should keep it and some of the reasons that folk give for not keeping it, on occasion. Here's a reason that some folk give for not keeping the seventh day Sabbath. How do we know that our seventh day is the same one Jesus kept anyway? Well, let's read something now from the book of Luke, chapter 23, beginning with verse 54. "And that day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on." Now you read the preceding verses and you'll discover that this was the day Christ was crucified, the day we call Good Friday. Going back to Mark 15:42 which says specifically that the preparation is the day before the Sabbath, we read: "And now when the even was come, because it was the preparation that is, the day before the Sabbath." So friends, we call that day Friday now, and that day was the preparation. I'm reading on now in verse 55, "And that day was the preparation, and the Sabbath drew on. And the women also, which came with him from Galilee, followed after, and beheld the sepulchre, and how his body was laid. And they returned, and prepared spices and ointments; and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment."

There you have the preparation day and then the Sabbath. And then in chapter 24, verse 1, "Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared, and certain others with them." So in three verses right together you have the description of three days. The first day was the one of His crucifixion, called the preparation day before the Sabbath. The next day is the Sabbath according to the Commandment, and then the next day, it says, was the first day of the week, the day He arose from the dead. Now if you'll turn back to Mark 16:1 and 2, you'll discover that the Scripture teaches that the first day of the week is the day that comes right after the Sabbath. Combining those three verses, we have the weekly cycle preserved. We know exactly the day that Christ kept. The preparation day we call Friday, then there is the Sabbath of the Commandment—the Fourth Commandment—and then immediately following that is the first day of the week. So the day that Christ kept was the day that comes just before the first day of the week. Now that's why God had this recorded here so there could never be a question about it.

Maybe you wonder if the calendar was changed. It really used to worry me, friends, until I looked that up. Down in the library you'll find an encyclopedia that will give all the information on the Sabbath question. I mean the calendar question in relation to the Sabbath. And the encyclopedias make it very clear that no change has been made in the calendar since Christ's day that affects the weekly cycle. Anyone who will bother to go look it up will find out immediately that there is nothing to the change-of-calendar argument at all. From the day of the Romans to our own time the calendar weekly cycle has been preserved perfectly. The Romans gave us our calendar in fact. August was named after Augustus Ceasar. Julius Ceasar had July named after him. They're the ones who gave us our calendar and you can easily trace it back to the Roman time. History as we think of it today comes to us from the Grecians who lived before the Romans. They gave us the great historian, Herodotus, who is called the father of history. Since this is true, it's easy to trace the calendar back to Rome as any brief study will reveal. Such a study shows that no change has taken place in our weekly cycle. There's no question about it. There's nothing changed in the weekly cycle from the days of Christ until now.

Many have said that they don't keep the Sabbath because Sabbath was changed at the cross to Sunday at the time of the resurrection of Jesus. They believe that when Jesus died, that did away with the Law so that the Sabbath came to an end also. I want to state, friends, that there's no Scripture at all to support that. In case you know of anybody who has such a Scripture, I would be happy to have it and will give one thousand dollars for such a Scripture because I know it just simply isn't in the Bible. In fact, we have something here in the Bible that teaches just the opposite. The Bible shows that Christ didn't change the Sabbath at His death or resurrection and He taught His disciples, in fact, that there could be no change of the Sabbath. Reading now Matthew 24: 20. "But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day." Christ was teaching here about things to come in the future. He told them that Jerusalem would be destroyed. There wouldn't be one stone left upon another and then he said, "Pray that you won't have to flee on the Sabbath day." Now Christ knew that Jerusalem would be destroyed in AD 70, forty years after he ascended. Why did He tell them to pray their flight would not be on the Sabbath? Friends, Christ intended for His followers to be keeping that Sabbath forty years after He had gone back to heaven, just as He intended for them to be keeping it down here in this present age.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

A lot of people say, "Well, I keep Sunday in honor of the resurrection." I suppose that's one of the most common statements made. Certainly none of us would want to say anything that would detract from the beauty and glory of the resurrection. It was, indeed, a glorious event. We're grateful for it. It's a very wonderful thing to happen. But when it comes to something so important as a commandment of God, then we must have the Scripture for it. So, with all kindness and all firmness, I say, "Where is the Scripture that tells us we should keep the first day of the week in honor of the resurrection?" Friends, we honor God by obeying Him. That's what Jesus said. John 15: 14, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." We honor Him by obeying Him; not inventing our own holy day, not substituting some man-made law or day in place of something that God instituted. It is obedience that counts. The Bible does give a memorial to the resurrection. You'll find it in Romans 6: 4-6. The Lord says specifically that baptism is a memorial of the resurrection. Baptism is commanded in honor of the resurrection and not Sunday keeping. Sunday keeping in honor of the resurrection is man's idea, not God's at all.

Sometimes when people come up to the Sabbath question, they say, "Well, I keep every day holy." I think we ought to just state plainly, friends, that it's impossible to do that. It's impossible for anybody to keep everyday holy; in fact, it's impossible to keep anything holy unless it was made holy by God Himself. Suppose a man was wearing a black suit and he says, I'm going to keep this black suit nice and white. Could he do that? Why, of course not. You can't keep a black suit white because it wasn't white to begin with. Neither can a person keep a day holy that was never made holy to begin with. The difference between the Sabbath and any other day is the difference in the Bible and any other book. One is man-made; the other is God-made. Which will you take?

The difference between the Sabbath and any other day is the difference in a piece of cloth and the flag. Here's a white handkerchief and here's a flag; both of them are cloth. It would be possible for me to have a handkerchief made from the same kind of material, but there's a great deal of difference in the two pieces of cloth. One of them has been set aside and stamped as something special. Thirteen alternative stripes of red and white, fifty stars on a field of blue, sets this piece of cloth apart from all other pieces of cloth. It means something. And it's the same thing with the Sabbath. The Lord made one of His ordinary pieces of cloth or days, and He lifted it high above the others and He stamped upon it something sacred. It became His Sabbath. He said, "I've set this apart. It's a holy day. Keep it holy; lift it up; it's My banner; always hold it high."

The Lord is not pleased with people who trample upon sacred things. If I took the flag down from its stand and threw it on the ground and began to trample on it, you wouldn't permit it, would you? If you would, you're not worthy of the name "American." You would rightly say, "What's the matter with you? That flag represents America!" Well, that's the way it is with God's Sabbath, friends. A sacred heart of His law, the commandment, He set apart and lifted up. He wants us to keep our feet off holy things. That's what the Bible says in Isaiah 58: 13. "If thou turn away thy foot from the Sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day;" (in our language, we would say, get your foot off the Sabbath—we don't use the expression, turn away thy foot). If somebody puts his foot on something, we say, "Get your foot off!" but the Lord said, "If you want to be blessed, get your foot off My Sabbath, a holy sacred thing." That's the first thing to do. Then, He says, I can bless you. Read on down through verse 14 and see how God promises a blessing to those who stop trampling upon sacred things, and especially upon His Sabbath.

Suppose an alien came over and wanted to be naturalized to this country, the day he went in to take his final naturalization test, the American flag was hanging nearby and he put it on the floor and stood on it. Don't you imagine the officer in charge would angrily exclaim, "Well, the first thing you'll have to learn is to get off the American flag! What's the matter with you?" Well, friends, that's what God is saying here. Take your feet off holy things if you want to be blessed. That's a very serious crime against heaven.

Did you know that the Lord foresaw the apostasy of our day? Read it in Ezekiel 22:26. He knew these things were coming. He said here, "Her priests have violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they shewed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my sabbaths, and I am profaned among them." Friends, this may come as a real shock to you, but I pray God that you'll not shrug it off lightly and say, "Well, that's the way he believes; I'll believe as I wish." I pray God that you'll get on your knees and give this thing deeper study. As you do, you'll become convinced that somewhere back there in the streams of time the whole world made a wrong turn. The whole world has gone astray on a direct plain commandment of God. Many are following along today innocently, not asking questions, just supposing that Sunday keeping is right. Of course, God understands that. But, friends, you ask your pastor, ask religious leaders that you know, look it up in the encyclopedias, study the Scriptures, see if it's true. Demand Scripture for evidence.

I want to say again that this is too solemn a thing to treat lightly. Suppose somebody today stood up in your city and said, "I have the light. It's all right to steal." Would you take that lightly? No, indeed, you'd say, "Where does your light come from? You show me. That involves a commandment of God." We ought to feel the same way about the Sabbath. God has given a commandment. If somebody says differently from that commandment, you say, "I'm from Missouri. Show me." It could cost us our eternal salvation if we're wrong.

Did you know the Lord promises to keep the Sabbath with all the redeemed people in the Kingdom of Heaven? We read it in Isaiah 66:22 and 23. "For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." There it is. God's plan, way back in the beginning, was exactly the same; it never changed. When the time came for Him to write the ten commandment law, He put His Sabbath right into the middle of it because His plan was not changed. The years passed by. Jesus was born. But God's plan regarding the Sabbath had not changed because Jesus kept the Sabbath; the disciples followed next and they keep the Sabbath and taught Sabbath-keeping. Once more, the centuries passed by, on past our day and right on into the kingdom of God and, according to the Scriptures, Sabbath keeping will still be a part of God's great plan, because the redeemed will keep it there.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

A Beast in Bible Prophecy is a Symbol for a Nation

And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy.

The Bible interprets its own symbols so that we need not speculate at all.

Kings and kingdoms are used synonymously in the Bible, where you have a kingdom you also have a king. The following two verses make this principle even more clear:

"These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth." Daniel 7:17

"Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth..." Daniel 7:23

^ Top

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

A NATION IN WESTERN EUROPE - THE SAME AS IN DANIEL 7

And I stood upon the sand of the sea, and saw a beast rise up out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns, and upon his horns ten crowns, and upon his heads the name of blasphemy. And the beast which I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat, and great authority. Revelation 13:1-2

The book of Daniel will help us understand the symbols in Revelation.

As chapter 7 begins, Daniel sees four beasts coming up out of the sea. In prophecy, what does a beast represent? What does the sea represent?

"The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon the earth." Daniel 7:23. "The waters ... are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." Revelation 17:15.

Answer: Beasts represent kingdoms or nations. Water represents multitudes of people or large populations.

The four beasts of Daniel 7 represent the four world kingdoms: Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome. (Review more details here)

The lion beast of Daniel 7 represents the empire of Babylon.

The bear with three ribs in its mouth symbolizes Medo-Persia.

The leopard beast of Daniel 7 represents the world kingdom of Greece.

The world empire of Rome is symbolized by the monster beast of Daniel chapter 7.

The 10 horns on the last beast represent the 10 kings or kingdoms into which pagan Rome was eventually split (Daniel 7:24). (These 10 kingdoms are the same as the 10 toes of the image described in Daniel 2:41-44.) Roving barbarian tribes swept in upon the Roman empire and carved out land niches for their people. Seven of those 10 tribes developed into the countries of modern Western Europe, while three were uprooted and destroyed.

Visigoths--Spain
Anglo-Saxons--England
Franks--France
Alemani--Germany
Burgundians--Switzerland
Lombards--Italy
Suevi--Portugal
Heruli--Rooted up
Ostrogoths--Rooted up
Vandals--Rooted up

"I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ John Wyclif (1324-1384, Completed the 1st English translation of the Bible)

"Why is it necessary in unbelief to look for another Antichrist? Hence in the seventh chapter of Daniel Antichrist is forcefully described by a horn arising in the time of the 4th kingdom. For it grew from [among] our powerful ones, more horrible, more cruel, and more greedy, because by reckoning the pagans and our Christians by name, a lesser [greater?] struggle for the temporals is not recorded in any preceding time. Therefore the ten horns are the whole of our temporal rulers, and the horn has arisen from the ten horns, having eyes and a mouth speaking great things against the Lofty One, and wearing out the saints of the Most High, and thinking that he is able to change times and laws." (Daniel 7:8, 25 quoted) ..."For so our clergy foresee the lord pope, as it is said of the eighth blaspheming little head."

Translated from Wyclif's, De Veritate Sacrae Scripturae, vol. 3 pp. 262, 263

For more quotes see: Reformers Reveal the Beast

whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things. Daniel 7:8

The clues in Revelation 13:1-2: beast, sea, seven heads, ten horns, leopard, bear, lion, and dragon, help us to realize that God is speaking about the same nation that he showed to Daniel.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

The Number 666

In Revelation 13:18, God says to count the number of the beast's name and that it is the number of a man. When we think of the papacy, the man we naturally think of is the pope. What is his name? One of the pope's official titles is "Vicar of the Son of God," which is "Vicarius Filii Dei" in Latin (the official language of the church). Newspaper articles, when referring to the pope as "Vicar of Christ," will often enclose the words in quotation marks to show that they are a translation of his title, or name. The book of Revelation is saying that the Roman numeral value of the letters of his name will equal 666. Let's see whether or not this point fits the papacy:

V = 5
I = 1
C = 100
A = 0	F = 0
R = 0	I = 1
I = 1	L = 50	D = 500	112
U = 5*	I = 1	E = 0	53
S = 0	I = 1	I = 1	501
112	53	501	TOTALS = 666

*Please note that in Roman numerals the U and the V have the same value of 5. Notice the words; DURANTE, FUNCIO, TRIBUNAL, and INQUISICION inscribed on this placard located at the Museum of the Inquisition in Lima Peru.

In the April 18th, 1915 edition of Our Sunday Visitor, Rev. John F. Noll, editor, the following question was addressed on page 3, in the section titled Bureau of Information:

What are the letters supposed to be in the Pope's crown, and what do they signify, if anything?

"The letters inscribed in the Pope's mitre are these: Vicarius Filii Dei, which is the Latin for the Vicar of the Son of God. Catholics hold that the church which is a visible society must have a visible head. Christ, before His ascension into heaven, appointed St. Peter to act as His representative. Upon the death of Peter the man who succeeded to the office of Peter as Bishop of Rome, was recognized as the head of the Church. Hence to the Bishop of Rome, as head of the Church, was given the title 'Vicar of Christ.'" Our Sunday Visitor 1, 2, 3.

There should be no doubt remaining. All the characteristics portrayed in Revelation 13 fit the papacy. And this power has a specific mark that we dare not receive.

Now please note that there are many godly, loving Roman Catholic Christians whom God counts as His children. There have also been many gracious and courageous popes who loved

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ John Calvin (1509-1564, founder of the Presbyterian Church)

"I deny him to be the vicar of Christ, who, in furiously persecuting the gospel, demonstrates by his conduct that he is Antichrist--I deny him to be the successor of Peter..I deny him to be the head of the church." "Some persons think us too severe and censorious when we call the Roman pontiff Antichrist. But those who are of this opinion do not consider that they bring the same charge of presumption against Paul himself, after whom we speak and whose language we adopt...I shall briefly show that (Paul's words in 2 Thessalonians 2) are not capable of any other interpretation than that which applies them to the Papacy" John Calvin, Tracts, Vol. 1, pp. 219,220. John Calvin, Institutes.

For more quotes see: Reformers Reveal the Beast

God. This lesson is not an attack upon our Catholic friends. It is an attack upon the devil, who lures churches away from scriptural truth. However, God Himself has told us that this institution has a mark we dare not receive. Sincere Protestants, Catholics, Jews, and non-Christians will all be eager to discover what this mark is so they can avoid receiving it. Let's thank God that in His word He has exposed Satan's ugly plans to destroy us all.

In the next section we will study the "mark" of the beast. If you receive the mark of the beast, you will be lost. Many will discover that avoiding the mark will involve a tremendous struggle. But God can give us the faith of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, who were willing to face death in order to honor God.

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

The Seat of the Dragon

The beast--which has a mark that we must avoid--obtained its power, authority, and capital city from the dragon. According to Revelation 12:3-5, the dragon is the power that sought to destroy the child Jesus at the time of His birth. It was Satan who inspired Herod, a king for the pagan Roman empire, to slay all the male babies in Bethlehem (Matthew 2:13, 16). To whom did pagan Rome give her authority and capital city? History is clear that pagan Rome turned over its power and capital city to the church of Rome. The following historical quote is typical:

"The Roman church ... pushed itself into the place of the Roman World-Empire, of which it is the actual continuation. ... The Pope, who calls himself 'King' and 'Pontifex Maximus,' is Caesar's successor."* This point clearly fits the papacy, as well.

*Adolph Harnack, What Is Christianity? (New York: Putnam, second edition, revised, 1901), p. 270.

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

> The Truth about the Sabbath

The History of the origin of Sunday Worship. View it.

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Protestant Beliefs

"Reformers Reveal the Beast of Revelation 13 and the Little Horn of Daniel 7."

Most reformers spoke of the papacy as antichrist. The papacy has since that time, received it's deadly wound by France in 1798 (Rev. 13:5,10) and is again becoming popular and powerful just as the prophecies predicted! (Rev. 13:3)

Martin Luther (1483-1546) [founder of the Lutheran Church]

"nothing else than the kingdom of Babylon and of very Antichrist....For who is the man of sin and the son of perdition, but he who by his teaching and his ordinances increases the sin and perdition of souls in the church; while he yet sits in the church as if he were God? All these conditions have now for many ages been fulfilled by the papal tyranny." Martin Luther, First Principles, pp. 196-197

John Calvin (1509-1564) [founder of the Presbyterian Church]

"I deny him to be the vicar of Christ, who, in furiously persecuting the gospel, demonstrates by his conduct that he is Antichrist--I deny him to be the successor of Peter...I deny him to be the head of the church." "Some persons think us too severe and censorious when we call the Roman pontiff Antichrist. But those who are of this opinion do not consider that they bring the same charge of presumption against Paul himself, after whom we speak and whose language we adopt...I shall briefly show that (Pauls words in 2 Thessalonians 2) are not capable of any other interpretation than that which applies them to the Papacy" John Calvin, Tracts, Vol. 1, pp. 219,220. John Calvin, Institutes.

John Wesley (1703-1791) [founder of the Methodist Church]

"He is in an emphatical sense, the Man of Sin, as he increases all manner of sin above measure. And he is, too, properly styled the Son of Perdition, as he has caused the death of numberless multitudes, both of his opposers and followers... He it is...that exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped... claiming the highest power, and highest honor... claiming the prerogatives which belong to God alone." Albert Close, Antichrist and His Ten Kingdoms, London: Thynne and Co., 1917, p. 110.

King James (1566-1625) [Authorized the King James Version of the Bible] "The faithfull praiseth God for the Popes destruction, and their deliverance," and for "the plagues which are to light on him and his followers." "The Pope by his Pardons makes merchandise of the soules of men: Heaven and the Saints reioyce at his destruction, albiet the earth and the worldlings lament for the same"

James I, Paraphrase, in Workes, pp. 47, 57

John Wyclif (1324-1384) [Completed the 1st English translation of the Bible] "Why is it necessary in unbelief to look for another Antichrist?

Hence in the seventh chapter of Daniel Antichrist is forcefully described by a horn arising in the time of the 4th kingdom. For it grew from [among] our powerful ones, more horrible, more cruel, and more greedy, because by reckoning the pagans and our Christians by name, a lesser [greater?] struggle for the temporals is not recorded in any preceding time. Therefore the ten horns are the whole of our temporal rulers, and the horn has arisen from the ten horns, having eyes and a mouth speaking great things against the Lofty One, and wearing out the saints of the Most High, and thinking that he is able to change times and laws." (Daniel 7:8, 25 quoted) ..."For so our clergy foresee the

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ Back to the identification points of the beast of Revelation 13 and the little horn of Daniel 7.

Words of Care and Concern

Lest some should think that we are attacking fellow Christians by identifying this little-horn power, please keep in mind that the prophecies that expose the Roman Catholic church are aimed at the religious institution and not individuals. There are sincere, devout Christians in all churches. Daniel chapter 7 and Revelation 13 identify this religious institution, the papacy, which compromised with paganism, like so many other churches that arose after her. These Bible prophecies also issue the strongest warnings against following her or choosing to obey her rather than the Word of God. See John 14:15, Acts 5:29, and Revelation 14:6-12, 18:1-4.

lord pope, as it is said of the eighth blaspheming little head." Translated from Wyclif's, De Veritate Sacrae Scripturae, vol. 3 pp. 262, 263

William Tyndale (1484-1536) [1st translator of the Bible from the Greek] "The pope's forbidding matrimony, and to eat of meats created of God for man's use, which is devilish doctrine by Paul's prophecy,... are tokens good enough that he is the right antichrist, and his doctrine sprung of the devil." 1 Timothy 4:1-3 Tyndale, An Answer to Sir Thomas More's Dialogue, in Works, vol. 3, p. 171 Visit <http://www.williamtyndale.com> for more information on William Tyndale.

John Knox (1505-1572) [Scottish Reformer] He preached that Romish traditions and ceremonies should be abolished along with "that tyranny which the Pope himself has for so many ages exercised over the church" and that he should be acknowledged as "the son of perdition, of whom Paul speaks." In a public challenge he declared: "As for your Roman Church, as it is now corrupted... I no more doubt but that it is the synagogue of Satan, and the head thereof, called the Pope, to be the man of sin of whom the apostle speaketh." Knox, The Zurich Letters, p.199

Philipp Melancthon (1497-1560) [Associate of Martin Luther] "Since it is certain that the pontiffs and the monks have forbidden marriage, it is most manifest, and true without any doubt, that the Roman Pontiff, with his whole order and kingdom, is very Antichrist. Likewise in 2 Thess. II, Paul clearly says that the man of sin will rule in the church exalting himself above the worship of God, etc." Translated from Melancthon, Disputationes, No. 56, "De Matrimonio", in Opera (Corpus Reformatorum), vol. 12 col. 535

Huldreich Zwingli (1484-1531) [great Swiss reformer quoted on Dec. 28, 1524] "I know that in it works the might and power of the Devil, that is, of the Antichrist... the Papacy has to be abolished... But by no other means can it be more thoroughly routed than by the word of God (2 Thessalonians 2), because as soon as the world receives this in the right way, it will turn away from the Pope without compulsion." Principle Works of Zwingli, Vol. 7, p. 135.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

The Deadly Wound

As already mentioned, the papacy received what appeared to be a deadly wound in 1798 when General Berthier took the pope captive to France, where he died in exile.<sup>1</sup> Half of Europe thought that this event signaled the end of the papacy, but God had said that the wound would be healed and that the papacy's power and influence would be restored until the entire world would follow her leading. Malachi Martin, consummate Vatican insider, reveals the following in his book The Keys of This Blood: "The pope is the best-known person of the 20th century (p. 123), has formed personal relationships with the leaders of 91 countries (p. 490), and is prepared for worldwide rule now" (p. 143).<sup>2</sup> Even a novice would recognize that today the papacy is, in many ways, the most influential power on earth. And with each trip the pope makes, his power and influence grow. Multiplied millions worldwide look to the papacy as the only hope for world unity, peace, and decency--precisely as God predicted. The papacy clearly fits these points too.

<sup>1</sup>Joseph Rickaby, "The Modern Papacy," Lectures on the History of Religion, (London: Catholic Truth Society, 1910), Vol. 3, Lecture 24, p. 1.

<sup>2</sup>Malachi Martin, The Keys of This Blood (New York: Simon & Schuster, 1990).

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

The Mark of the Beast - Part 2

...continued from part 1

God pronounced a curse upon Cain, and when Cain complained about his sentence, the Lord placed a mark upon him lest future generations take revenge for this first homicide.

The book of Revelation tells us that there will again be a battle over how to worship and everyone will be identified by either the seal of God or the mark of the beast.

As it was in the days of Cain and Abel so it will be again at the end of time. The disobedient will persecute the obedient and think they are doing God a service. (John 16:2) Those who receive the mark of the beast will be aggravated with God's faithful people for worshipping God as He has commanded.

Those who, receive the mark of the beast will, like Cain, have a sign that protects them from the aggravated disobedient. However, this same mark, or sign of disobedience, will result in the reception of the 7 last plagues and eternal death.

One of the strongest warnings in all of the Bible involves the mark of the beast:

"And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand, The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb:" Revelation 14:9-10

Who will be protected through the seven last plagues?

Revelation 7:3 Saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads.

NOTE: Those who receive God's seal in their foreheads will be protected during the plagues (See Psalm 91:7-11).

What is this "seal" the righteous have in their foreheads?

Isaiah 8:16 Bind up the testimony; seal the law among my disciples.

NOTE: God's seal is found in His law. A seal is what makes a document official, and it normally contains three characteristics: Name, Office, and Territory. An example would be

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

Lessons from Noah

"God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." John 4:24

"Cyrus king of Persia" in Ezra 1:1.

Which of the Ten Commandments contains all the elements of a seal?

Exodus 20:11 For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is.

NOTE: The fourth commandment is the only one that contains all three elements of a seal: (1) "The Lord"--His name, (2) "made"--His office as Creator, (3) "heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is"--His territory.

4. What has God given as a special sign of His power?

Ezekiel 20:12 I gave them my sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them.

Ezekiel 20:20 Hallow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God.

Exodus 31:13 Verily my sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you.

NOTE: God clearly states that He gave the Sabbath as a sign of His power to create and sanctify. It is His seal, or mark of authority. The words "seal," "sign," "mark," and "token" are used interchangeably throughout the Bible (compare Genesis 17:11 with Romans 4:11 and Revelation 7:3 with Ezekiel 9:4).

5. What does the second beast of Revelation 13 force all to receive?

Revelation 13:16 And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads:

6. What is the mark of the beast?

NOTE: We already identified the first beast of Revelation 13. What is its mark of power and authority? The best way to discover its mark of authority is to ask the papacy directly. Notice the following section from a Catholic catechism: (For review see: The Little Horn, The Beast of Revelation 13, and Protestant Beliefs)

"Q. Which is the Sabbath day?

"A. Saturday is the Sabbath day.

"Q. Why do we observe Sunday instead of Saturday?

"A. We observe Sunday instead of Saturday because the Catholic Church transferred the solemnity from Saturday to Sunday."<sup>1</sup>

Here is another statement from a catechism:

"Q. Have you any other way of proving that the Church has power to institute festivals of precept?

"A. Had she not such power, she could not have done that in which all modern religionists agree with her--she could not have substituted the observance of Sunday the first day of the week, for the observance of Saturday the seventh day, a change for which there is no Scriptural authority."<sup>2</sup>

"Protestants ... accept Sunday rather than Saturday as the day for public worship after the Catholic Church made the change... But the Protestant mind does not seem to realize that ... in observing Sunday, they are accepting the authority of the spokesman for the Church, the pope." Our Sunday Visitor, February 5th, 1950. See This Rock

So the papacy is saying that its mark of power and authority is making Sunday a holy day--a change that virtually the entire Christian world accepts. (See supplement entitled "What Important Question Does the Papacy Ask Protestants?")

<sup>1</sup>Peter Geiermann, The Convert's Catechism of Catholic Doctrine (St. Louis: B. Herder Book Co., 1957 edition), p 50.

<sup>2</sup>Stephen Keenan, A Doctrinal Catechism (New York: P.J. Kenedy & Sons, third American edition, revised, n.d.), p. 174.

Is either the mark of the beast or the seal of God visible?

Hebrews 10:16 Saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them.

Ecclesiastes 9:10 Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might.

Exodus 13:9 And it shall be for a sign unto thee upon thine hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes, that the Lord's law may be in thy mouth.

Isaiah 59:6, 7 Their works are works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands. ... Their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and destruction are in their paths.

NOTE: Neither the mark of the beast nor the seal of God is outwardly visible. The forehead represents the mind, and the hand is a symbol of work. "On the hand" and "between the eyes" are consistent symbols in Scripture for a person's thoughts and actions (Exodus 13:16; Deuteronomy 6:8; 11:18).

A person will receive the mark of the beast in his forehead by choosing to believe that Sunday is a holy day in spite of Bible truth. A person will be marked in the right hand by working on God's Sabbath or by outwardly keeping Sunday laws for convenient reasons--such as a job, family, etc. Although the sign is invisible to men, God will know who has which mark (2 Timothy 2:19). In a sense, each person will mark himself. If I respect and regard God's holy Sabbath, He will mark me as His own. If I regard the beast's false Sabbath, He will mark me as belonging to the beast.

How does Jesus determine if we are His servants?

Romans 6:16 Know ye not, that to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey.

John 14:15 If ye love me, keep my commandments.

Does anyone have the mark of the beast now?

Revelation 13:17 No man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.

NOTE: No person has the mark now. When it becomes a forced issue, only those who have received the mark of the beast will be able to buy or sell. At that time, people who keep God's holy Sabbath will do so at the risk of their lives (Revelation 13:15), and those who choose to profane His holy day and officially cast their votes by placing the laws of men above the Law of God will be marked as belonging to Antichrist. All who are loyal to Jesus and His holy day will receive Jesus' glorious seal, thus making them His forever. Those who try to remain neutral will be counted for Antichrist (Matthew 12:30).

What two things does the Antichrist power attempt to change?

Daniel 7:25 He shall ... think to change times and laws.

NOTE: Daniel 7 reveals an Old Testament description of the Antichrist power. It clearly predicts that the beast would attempt to change both God's laws and times. The papacy has tried to change God's laws by: (1) omitting the second commandment against veneration of images, (2) shortening the fourth commandment from 94 words to just eight in order to avoid mentioning which day is the Sabbath, and (3) dividing the tenth commandment into two commandments. The papacy attempted to change God's times by: (1) teaching people to recognize the first day of the week as the Sabbath instead of the seventh day, and (2) adopting the pagan Roman practice of beginning each day at midnight instead of sundown. God's timing for the Sabbath is from sundown Friday night to sundown

Saturday night (Leviticus 23:32). No mortal should ever dare to tamper with God's sacred law or times (Matthew 5:18).

What was God's criticism of His ancient priests, or pastors?

Malachi 2:8, 9 Ye have caused many to stumble at the law. ... Ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law.

Hosea 4:6 My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge: because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children.

NOTE: God is still hurt when His pastors are partial to eight or nine commandments and cause many to stumble over His command to keep the Sabbath holy. Virtually all churches admit in their official writings that there is no Scripture support for Sunday sacredness. Tragically, both Protestantism and Catholicism stand guilty before the judgment bar of God for throwing out the Bible Sabbath! God Himself gave the Sabbath as a sign, or mark, of His power to create and His power to sanctify and save (Exodus 31:17; Ezekiel 20:12). Dare any man tamper with this sacred sign, which represents the great God of heaven and all that He stands for?

How did God's ancient leaders regard the great things of His law?

Hosea 8:12 I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing.

NOTE: Times have not changed. God has placed the Sabbath, His great sign, in the middle of His law and begins that commandment with the word "remember." Yet many people today feel that keeping His seventh-day Sabbath is a strange thing.

What specific, solemn rebuke did God give to religious leaders regarding His holy Sabbath?

Ezekiel 22:8 Thou hast despised mine holy things, and hast profaned my sabbaths.

Ezekiel 22:26 Her priests have violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane ... and have hid their eyes from my sabbaths, and I am profaned among them.

NOTE: God pointedly rebukes religious leaders who say that the Sabbath doesn't matter and who claim "Thus saith the Lord" when it is not true.

What specific sin does God command His leaders to denounce?

Isaiah 58:1, 13, 14 Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgression. ... If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the Sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord honourable; ... Then shalt thou delight thyself in the Lord.

NOTE: God charges spiritual leaders to call Sabbath-breaking a sin and to insist that His people keep His Sabbath day holy. As with the disciples of old, our only safety is in obeying God rather than men (Acts 5:29).

When you decide to accept Jesus and fully follow Him, what happens?

Matthew 11:29 Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls.

NOTE: Glorious rest and peace enter your heart at conversion. The Sabbath, which means "rest," is a symbol of the rest and peace that comes from the new birth (Hebrews 4:1-10). Those who are truly born again will keep the Sabbath as a blessed sign of that rest (notice verses 4, 9, 10). There is no joy like the joy that comes to a converted person who keeps God's Sabbath holy.

Before you can say "no" to the mark of the beast, you must say "yes" to the seal of God. Jesus is waiting at the door of your heart for an answer. Will you decide now to move under His glorious Sabbath banner as evidence that you have accepted Him as your Creator and Saviour?

Supplemental Study

What Important Question Does the Papacy Ask Protestants?

Protestants have repeatedly asked the papacy, "How could you dare to change God's law?" But the question posed to Protestants by the Catholic church is even more penetrating. Here it is officially: "You will tell me that Saturday was the Jewish Sabbath, but that the Christian Sabbath has been changed to Sunday. Changed! but by whom? Who has authority to change an express commandment of Almighty God? When God has spoken and said, Thou shalt keep holy the seventh day, who shall dare to say, Nay, thou mayest work and do all manner of worldly business on the seventh day; but thou shalt keep holy the first day in its stead?

This is a most important question, which I know not how you can answer. You are a Protestant, and you profess to go by the Bible and the Bible only; and yet in so important a matter as the observance of one day in seven as a holy day, you go against the plain letter of the Bible, and put another day in the place of that day which the Bible has commanded. The command to keep holy the seventh day is one of the ten commandments; you believe that the other nine are still binding; who gave you authority to tamper with the fourth? If you are consistent with your own principles, if you really follow the Bible and the Bible only, you ought to be able to produce some portion of the New Testament in which this fourth commandment is expressly altered."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Library of Christian Doctrine: Why Don't You Keep Holy the Sabbath-Day? (London: Burns and Oates, Ltd.), pp. 3, 4.

For many other quotes on this subject see: Modern and Historic Statements on the Sabbath

Continue learning Bible truth by studying the Amazing Facts online Bible Lessons.

Some of the topics include:
The USA in Prophecy
How to have a good marriage
What happens when you die
The Origin of Evil and much more...

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Embedded Secure Document

The file <http://www.sabbathtruth.com/Resources/Download/PBLib/BK-FDS.pdf> is a secure document that has been embedded in this document. Double click the pushpin to view.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Does God's Grace Blot Out the Law

The devil, through sin, has just about wrecked this world of ours. We live in an age of rebellion against all restraint and law. Our nation stands aghast at the big-city, gang-defiance of social order and property rights, including the right to live. Murder, robbery, and personal assaults have become the trademark of both urban and suburban 20th-century life.

Each day as we read the newspaper it seems that the quality of life has edged downward a little bit further. At times we are tempted to believe that things can get no worse, and that conditions have hit rock bottom. Yet, the next day, even more violent, bizarre crimes are reported, and we simply shake our heads in disbelief. It is difficult to comprehend how a nation like America with its rich Christian heritage could ever depart so far from its founding principles. Even the non-Christian countries are not plagued with as much crime and overall violence as this so-called Christian nation. More crime is reported in Washington, D.C., in 24 hours than Moscow reports in a full year. No doubt the reporting methods are not the same, but it still presents an alarming picture.

The problem becomes more serious when we realize that lawlessness also reaches into the area of religion and affects millions who would never think of killing or raping. It is probable that the great majority of church members in America today carry few convictions against breaking at least one of the Ten Commandments. A very insidious doctrine has been developed in both Catholic and Protestant theology which has tended to minimize the authority of God's great moral law. It has led many to look lightly upon transgression and has made sin to appear unobjectionable. In fact, sin has lost its horror for multitudes and has become an acceptable mode of life for both youth and adults. Witness the current trends in lifestyle which support this view.

How many young men and women are living together without benefit of marriage! Yet they do not believe such living arrangements should be designated as sin. A large portion of shoplifters are professing Christians, and most of those who belong to churches believe that there is no sin whatsoever involved in violating the seventh-day Sabbath of the fourth commandment.

How can we explain this paradoxical situation among those who profess such high regard for the Bible, and such love for Christ? This question becomes more significant when we consider the historical position of Christianity toward the Ten-Commandment law. Almost all of the great denominations have officially placed themselves on record as supporting the authority of that law. Yet very subtle errors of interpretation have crept into the modern church, leading to the present state of confused loyalty toward the Ten Commandments. How earnestly we need to look at that law and study its relation to God's grace and to salvation itself. It is so easy to accept the popular clichés concerning law and grace without searching out the biblical facts by which we will finally be judged. We must find authoritative scriptural answers to questions like these: In what sense are Christians free from the law? What does it mean to be under the law? Does God's grace nullify the Ten Commandments? Is a Christian justified in breaking any of the Ten Commandments because he is under grace? These are the questions we shall address ourselves to in this important study.

Condemned to Die

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

Let us push aside the rubbish of confusion which has obscured the truth about how men are saved. Multitudes have heard emotional discourses on sin and salvation, but they still do not understand the logic and reason which require a blood sacrifice.

Can you imagine the horror of standing before a judge and hearing the sentence of death pronounced against you? Probably not. But you have felt the driving guilt and fear when God's Word stabs you with this sentence: "The wages of sin is death." Romans 6:23. Why fear and guilt? Because "all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." Romans 3:23.

The words are there and the meaning cannot be mistaken. The word "all" might just as well be spelled John Smith or Mary Jones or whatever your name happens to be. The shocking fact is that you are under the sentence of death! You have been found guilty before the law, and there is no court of appeal in the world that can reverse the sentence and find you not guilty. The fact is that you are guilty, just as guilty as sin. According to 1 John 3:4, "sin is the transgression of the law," and you must plead guilty to breaking the law. Whose law did you break? Paul answers quickly, "I had not known sin, but by the law: for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet." Romans 7:7. There it is! The great Ten-Commandment law is the one which was broken, and it demands death for the transgressor.

In desperation the sinner searches for a way to be justified in the sight of that broken law. How can the sentence of death be turned aside? Can man atone for his sins by obeying the commandments of God for the rest of his life? Back comes the answer in language that no one can misinterpret: "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight." Romans 3:20.

Listen, there is a reason why works will not justify a soul. If a man is found guilty of stealing and is sentenced to ten years in jail, he may indeed justify himself by works. By serving the time of his sentence, the man may satisfy the claims of the law. He is considered perfectly justified and innocent because he has worked out his deliverance by fulfilling the sentence. In the same manner, a murderer may be justified by works if he serves the fifty years of his sentence. But suppose the sentence is death instead of fifty years? Can the prisoner then justify himself by works? Never! Even if he should work for one hundred years at hard labor, the law would still demand death. The truth is that "without shedding of blood is no remission. ... So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many." Hebrews 9:22-28.

This is why the sinner can never be saved by works. The penalty for sin is not ten years in prison or fifty years at hard labor. The sentence is death, and the law cannot be satisfied except by the shedding of blood. That unchangeable law with its unrelenting death sentence could no more be removed than the throne of God could be toppled. The guilt of the past cannot be erased by resolutions of good behavior in the future. The sinner finally is forced to confess that he owes something that he cannot pay. The law demands death and he cannot satisfy it without forfeiting his own life for eternity.

The Law Still Binding

Now we are brought to the question which has created confusion for multitudes of Christians: If the works of the law cannot save a person, is it therefore necessary to keep the law? Apparently this was a burning issue in the early church, because Paul asked the same question in Romans 6:1. "Shall we continue in sin, that grace may abound?" In other words, does grace give us a license to disobey the law of God? His answer is: "God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" Verse 2.

How interesting it is that Christians in this age of relativism can invent their own definitions which condone lawbreaking. The Bible says sin is violating the Ten Commandments - the law which has been described as irrelevant and old-fashioned by many modern theologians. Don't be deceived. Every one of those great moral precepts is just as timely and needful today as they were when God wrote them on the imperishable tables of stone. And nothing has ever happened to make them less binding than they were when God gave them. In fact, we are going to discover that Jesus came to magnify the law and to open up its spiritual application, making it more comprehensive than the legalistic Pharisees ever imagined. Under the distilling influence of Christ's perfect life of obedience, we can see the spiritual details of law-keeping which are neither recognized nor made possible apart from Him.

God's Law - A Mirror

At this point we must be very careful to designate also what the law cannot do. Even though it points out sin, it has no power to save from sin. There is no justifying, cleansing grace in it. All the works of all the laws would not be sufficient to save a single soul. Why? For the simple reason that we are saved by grace through faith, as a free gift. "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge of sin." Romans 3:20.

Do not stumble over this crucial point. We cannot earn forgiveness by working hard to obey. No sinner can gain favor and acceptance with God because he keeps the law. The law was not made for the purpose of saving or justifying. It was made to show us our need of cleansing and to point us to the great source of cleansing, Jesus Christ, our Lord. The Bible speaks of the law as a mirror to show us what kind of persons we really are. "For if any be a hearer of the word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding his natural face in a glass: For he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was. But whoso looketh into the perfect law of liberty, and continueth therein, he being not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work, this man shall be blessed in his deed." James 1:23-25.

It is obvious to all that a mirror cannot remove a spot from the face. Looking into the mirror all day, and even rubbing it over the face, will not provide any cleansing. Its work is to reveal the spot and to point the dirty one to the sink for actual cleansing. The law, in like manner, can only condemn the sinner by giving him a knowledge of his condition and then pointing him to the cross for true cleansing. "For by grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves: it is the gift of God: Not of works, lest any man should boast." Ephesians 2:8, 9. Paul further emphasizes this point in Galatians 2:16: "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ ... for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified."

Right here we must consider one of the most fallacious propositions ever set forth relating to the law. Countless sincere Christians have accepted the idea that the Old Testament encompasses the dispensation of works and that the New Testament provides for a dispensation of grace. Under this garbled plan people were saved by works in the Old Testament and by grace in the New Testament. This is simply not true. The Bible holds forth only one beautiful, perfect plan for anybody to be saved, and that is by grace through faith. Heaven will not be divided between those who got there by works and those who got there by faith. Every single soul among the redeemed will be a sinner saved by grace.

Those who entered into salvation in the Old Testament were those who trusted the merits of the blood of Jesus Christ, and they demonstrated their faith by bringing a lamb and slaying it. They looked forward in faith to the atoning death of Jesus. We look back in faith to the same death and are saved in exactly the same way. Be very certain that all the redeemed host throughout eternity will be singing the same song of deliverance, exalting the Lamb slain from the foundations of the world.

The "New" Law of Christ

Some try to dispose of the Ten Commandments on the basis of the "new" commandments of love which Christ introduced. It is certainly true that Jesus laid down two great laws of love as a summary of all the law, but did He give the idea that these were new in point of time? The fact is that He was quoting directly from the Old Testament when He gave those new commandments. "And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might." Deuteronomy 6:5. "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself." Leviticus 19:18. Certainly, those penetrating spiritual principles had been forgotten by the legalists of Christ's day, and they were new to them in relation to their life and practice. But they were not intended by Jesus to take the place of the Ten Commandments.

When the lawyer asked Jesus which was the greatest commandment in the law, he received the answer: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Matthew 22:37-40.

Notice that these two love commandments simply summed up "all the law and the prophets." They all hang upon these two principles of love. Christ was saying that love is the fulfilling of the law just as Paul repeated it later in Romans 13:10. If one loves Christ supremely with heart, soul, and mind, he will obey the first four commandments that have to do with our duty to God. He will not take God's name in vain, worship other gods, etc. If one loves his neighbor as himself, he will obey the last six commandments which relate to our duty to our fellow men. He will not be able to steal from his neighbor, lie about him, etc. Love will lead to obeying or fulfilling all the law.

Not Under the Law

Often we hear this argument in an effort to belittle the law of God: "Well, since we are not under the law but under grace, we do not need to keep the Ten Commandments any longer." Is this a valid point? The Bible certainly does say that we are not under the law, but does that imply that we are free from the obligation to obey it? The text is found in Romans 6:14, 15. "For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace. What then? shall we sin, because we are not under the law, but under grace? God forbid."

How easily we could prevent confusion if we accepted exactly what the Bible says. Paul gives his own explanation of his statement. After stating that we are not under the law but under grace, he asks, "What then?" This simply means, "How are we to understand this?" Then notice his answer. In anticipation that some will construe his words to mean that you can break the law because you are under grace, he says, "Shall we sin (break the law) because we are not under the law but under grace? God forbid." In the strongest possible language Paul states that being under grace does not give a license to break the law. Yet this is exactly what millions believe today, and they totally ignore Paul's specific warning.

If being under grace does not exempt us from keeping the law, then what does Paul mean by saying that Christians are not under the law? He gives that answer in Romans 3:19. "Now we know that what things soever the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law: that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God." Here Paul equates being under the law with "being guilty before God." In other words, those who are under the law are guilty of breaking it and are under the condemnation of it. This is why Christians are not under it. They are not breaking it - not guilty and condemned by it. Therefore, they are not under it, but are under the power of grace instead. Later in his argument, Paul points out that the power of grace is greater than the power of sin. This is why he states so emphatically, "For sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace." Grace overrules the authority of sin, giving power to obey God's law. This is the effective reason that we are not under the law's guilt and condemnation and also why Paul states that we will not continue to sin.

Suppose a murderer has been sentenced to death in the electric chair. Waiting for the execution the man would truly be under the law in every sense of the word - under the guilt, under the condemnation, under the sentence of death, etc. Just before the execution date the governor reviews the condemned man's case and decides to pardon him. In the light of extenuating circumstances the governor exercises his prerogative and sends a full pardon to the prisoner. Now he is no longer under the law but under grace. The law no longer condemns him. He is considered totally justified as far as the charges of the law are concerned. He is free to walk out of the prison and not a policeman can lay hands upon him. But now that he is under grace and no longer under the law, can we say that he is free to break the law? Indeed not! In fact, that pardoned man will be doubly obligated to obey the law because he has found grace from the governor. In gratitude and love he will be very careful to honor the law of that state which granted him grace. Is that what the Bible says about pardoned sinners? "Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid: yea, we establish the law." Romans 3:31. Here is the most explicit answer to the entire problem. Paul asks if the law is nullified for us just because we have had faith in Christ's saving grace. His answer is that the law is established and reenforced in the life of a grace-saved Christian.

The truth of this is so simple and obvious that it should require no repetition, but the devious reasoning of those who try to avoid obedience makes it necessary to press this point a bit further. Have you ever been stopped by a policeman for exceeding the speed limit? It is an embarrassing experience, especially if you know you are guilty. But suppose you really were hurrying to meet a valid emergency, and you pour out your convincing explanation to the policeman as he writes your ticket. Slowly he folds the ticket and tears it up. Then he says, "All right, I'm going to pardon you this time, but ..." Now what do you think he means by that word "but"? Surely he means, "but I don't want to ever catch you speeding again." Does this pardon (grace) open the way for you to disobey the law? On the contrary, it adds compelling urgency to your decision not to disobey the law again. Why, then, should any true Christian try to rationalize his way out of obeying the law of God? "If ye love me," Jesus said, "keep my commandments." John 14:15.

Obedience - The Test of Love

Someone may bring up the objection that after the law has accomplished its purpose of pointing the sinner to Christ for cleansing, it will no longer be needed in the experience of the believer. Is that true? No, indeed. The Christian will always need the watchdog of the law to reveal any deviation from the true path and to point him back to the cleansing cross of Jesus. There will never be a time when that mirror of correction will not be needed in the progressive growth experience of the Christian.

Law and grace do not work in competition with each other but in perfect cooperation. The law points out sin, and grace saves from sin. The law is the will of God, and grace is the power to do the will of God. We do not obey the law in order to be saved but because we are saved. A beautiful text which combines the two in their true relationship is Revelation 14:12. "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." What a perfect description of faith and works! And the combination is found in those who are "saints."

The works of obedience are the real test of love. This is why they are so necessary in the experience of a true believer. "Faith without works is dead." James 2:20. No man ever won a fair maiden's heart by words alone. Had there been no flowers, no acts of devotion, no gifts of love, most men would still be searching for a companion. Jesus said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Matthew 7:21.

Words and profession are not enough. The true evidence is obedience. Today's bumper stickers reflect a shallow concept of love. They say, "Smile if you love Jesus," "Honk if you love Jesus"; but what did the Master Himself say? He said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." John 14:15. And that is exactly what most people don't want to do. If love makes no demands beyond a smile or wave, then it is welcome; but if the lifestyle must be disturbed, the majority will reject it. Unfortunately, most people today are not looking for truth. They are looking for a smooth, easy, comfortable religion which will allow them to live the way they please and still give assurance of salvation. There is indeed no true religion which can do that for them.

One of the strongest texts in the Bible on this subject is found in 1 John 2:4. "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." John could write that with such assurance because it is one of the most deeply established truths in the Bible. Jesus spoke of those who said, "Lord, Lord," but did not do the will of the Father. Then He described many who would seek entrance to the kingdom claiming to be workers of miracles in the name of Christ. But He would sorrowfully have to say, "I never knew you: depart from me." Matthew 7:21-23. You see, to know Christ is to love Him, and to love Him is to obey Him. The valid assumption of the Bible writers is very clear and simple: If one is not obeying Christ, he does not love Christ. And if he doesn't love the Master, then he doesn't know Him. John assured us, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." John 17:3. Thus, we can see how knowing and loving and obeying are all tied closely together and are absolutely inseparable in the life of God's faithful people. The beloved John summed it up in these words: "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous." 1 John 5:3.

Is It Possible To Obey the Law?

Countless Christians have been taught that since the law is spiritual and we are carnal, no human being will ever be able in this life to meet the requirements of the perfect law. Is this true? Has it been given by God as a great idealistic, impossible goal toward which converted souls should struggle but never expect to attain? Is there some hidden reservation or secret meaning in the many commands to obey the ten great rules God wrote on stone? Did God mean what He said and say what He meant?

Many believe that only Christ could have obeyed that law and only because He had special powers that have not been made available to us. Certainly it is true that Jesus is the only One who lived without committing a single act of disobedience. His reason for living that perfect, victorious life is laid out in Romans 8:3, 4. "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh, That the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit."

Do not miss the point that Jesus came to condemn sin by His perfect life in the flesh in order that "the righteousness of the law" might be fulfilled in us. What is that righteousness? The Greek word "dikaima" is used here which means, literally, "the just requirement" of the law. This can only mean that Christ won His perfect victory in order to make the same victory available to us. Having conquered the devil, showing that in the flesh the law can be obeyed, Christ now offers to come into our hearts and share the victory with us. Only by His strength and indwelling power can the requirements of the law be fulfilled by anyone. Paul said, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." Philippians 4:13.

Not one soul can ever keep one of those Ten Commandments in human power alone, but all of them may be kept through the enabling strength of Jesus. He imputes His righteousness for cleansing and imparts His righteousness for victorious living. Christ came in a body of flesh like our own and depended wholly upon His Father in living His life to demonstrate the kind of victory which is possible for every soul who will likewise draw upon the Father's grace.

Judged By the Law

Now, a final question about the subject of the law: How many of the Ten Commandments does one have to break in order to be guilty of sin? James says, "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all. For he that said, Do not commit adultery, said also, Do not kill. Now if thou commit no adultery, yet if thou kill, thou art become a transgressor of the law. So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty." James 2:10-12.

Every individual will be judged at last by the mighty moral code of God's law. To break one is to be guilty of sin. The Bible indicates that the Ten Commandments are like a chain with ten links. When one link is broken, the chain is broken. So it is with the law. Those who stand in the judgment will have to meet the acid test of the Ten Commandments. If a practicing thief should seek entrance into the kingdom, he would be rejected. This is why Paul says thieves will not inherit the heavenly city. Furthermore, the Bible specifically declares that liars, adulterers, idolaters, and covetous men will not be in the kingdom. Why? Because the Ten Commandments forbid those things, and men will be judged finally by that law. Not one person will be admitted into heaven who is willfully violating any one of the Ten Commandments, because breaking one is breaking all.

Someone might object that this is making works the basis of entering the kingdom. No. It is really making love the qualifying factor. Jesus said that the greatest commandment of all is to love God supremely. He also said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." John 14:15. Those who practice any known sin are really confessing that they do not love God with all their heart, soul, and mind. So it is the lack of love which shuts them out; not the act of disobedience which exposes that lack. Only when love is motivating the obedience does it become acceptable to God. Any other work is man's vain attempt to earn salvation and to deny the efficacy of Christ's atoning sacrifice.

Ransomed for What?

A dramatic illustration of the law-grace doctrine is seen in the story of the slave auctions in old New Orleans long ago. Two planters were bidding for an old Negro slave who kept shouting his rebellion from the auction block. Finally, one of the planters won the bid and took the slave in his wagon back to the farm. Throughout the journey the defiant black man declared that he would not work for the new owner. When they arrived at the plantation, the planter dropped the shackles from the newly bought slave and said, "You are free to go. You are no longer a slave. I bought you in order to give you your liberty."

According to the story, the old man fell at the feet of the planter and said, "Master, I'll serve you forever."

In like manner, we were all held in the bondage of sin, condemnation, and death. Christ then paid the price to secure our freedom from that hopeless slavery. Lovingly He tells us that the reason He made the sacrifice was to set us free. What should our response be? Every ransomed child of God should fall at His feet and say, "Master, I love you for what you did for me. I'll serve you the rest of my life."

Think it through for a moment. Jesus had to die because the law had been broken. Sin demanded death. If the law could have been abrogated, the penalty of sin would have been set aside also. "For where no law is, there is no transgression." Romans 4:15. So strong was the authority of that unchangeable law that God Himself could not abolish it - not even to save His own Son from death.

The old, old story of the two brothers is almost a perfect illustration of both law and grace in operation. The older brother was a judge. His younger brother was brought before him as a transgressor of the law. From all the evidence it was clear to all that he was guilty. The court was tense. Would the judge mete out justice in such a case? The judge looked at his brother and sternly declared him guilty. Then he stunned the court by imposing the maximum fine. But immediately he left the bench and threw his arms around his brother and said, "I had to do it because you are guilty. I know you cannot pay the fine, but I will pay it for you."

The point of the story is dramatic in its impact. The brother was forgiven, but the penalty was not. It had to be paid. But by paying the maximum penalty, the judge not only did not abolish the law, but he greatly magnified it. He demonstrated that its binding claims could never be voided. In the same sense, God would not and could not abolish the law to save His beloved Son. It cost something to uphold the law and pay the maximum penalty. No one will ever know how much it cost the Son of God. But how thankful we should be that His love was as perfect as His justice. In His own body He bore the penalty, satisfied the law, and justified the transgressor.

Can't you see that no greater demonstration could have been made to prove the permanence of the Ten Commandments? In all the universe God could not have displayed a more convincing and irrefutable argument in favor of His law. Yet, in the face of this tremendous exhibition, misguided millions of poor, feeble men belittle the government of God by belittling His law. They seem not to understand that the law is only a reflection of His holiness and righteousness. To speak of its abolition is to border on treason against the divine government of heaven.

Look into that holy law right now for a divine revelation of what God wants your life to be. Confess that you have no strength to live up to that perfect standard. Then turn your eyes to the only One who has kept that law perfectly and who desires this very moment to enter your life with enabling power. He will fulfill the righteousness of the law - the just requirements of the law - in you, so that you can say with Paul, "Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me." Galatians 2:20.

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Hidden Eyes & Closed Ears Download PDF file Now!

Some of the most astonishing prophecies in the Bible have to do with the proportion of people who will be saved at the coming of Christ. Jesus clearly taught that only a comparative few would be ready to inherit His kingdom. He said, "Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Matthew 7:13, 14.

In Luke 18:8, by asking a very penetrating question, Jesus implied that the "few" might be even less than we could hope or imagine. "Nevertheless when the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Again, the Master spoke of the final separation in these words: "And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man." Luke 17:26. Only eight people were saved from the flood and "as it was then" so shall it be at His coming. Other Bible writers and prophets use similar language to portray the "little flock," the "remnant," and the "few" who will prove faithful to the very end.

The fact that so few will be saved is not nearly as shocking as the reason given in the Bible for their loss. It seems obvious that great multitudes will be excluded from heaven even though they professed Christ, worshiped Him regularly, and spend much of their time doing wonderful works in His name. Jesus said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity." Matthew 7:21-23.

These verses reveal that the earth will be flooded with a lot of false religion in the last days. Millions will be spending their time, their effort, and their money in promoting a religion that involves apparent miracles, apparent spiritual gifts, and much enthusiastic activity. All of this is explicitly spelled out in the teaching of our Lord. Yet those many will finally be utterly rejected by Jesus and shut out of heaven. Talk about startling truth! More people need to get their eyes open to this little-understood situation that will characterize the end time. Then we need to find out how to avoid the vast spiritual delusions which will cause so many religious people to be lost.

Why will they be rejected in spite of their devoted worship and ministry in the name of Jesus? It has caused some people almost to despair of salvation. How can one know that his own religion will not finally be found in this category? Let us seriously look for the answers to these questions. Our salvation does not depend upon our sincerity, but upon finding the truth in God's Word and obeying it!

Obedience Is the Acid Test of a Valid Religion

The first point we must understand is this: RELIGIOUS ACTIVITY IS QUITE USELESS IF WE ARE NOT DOING THE WILL OF GOD. Christ declared that calling on God's name, and even leading out in great selfless humanitarian programs, will be wasted if obedience to God's will is excluded. Mark this fact upon the table of your mind and never forget it-the Enter a description of what you are looking for.

➤ More Free Books!

➤ More Radio Messages!

Scriptures exalt OBEDIENCE as the distinguishing test of a valid religion. Those who engage ever so fully in the preaching the name of Jesus-with time, talent, and money-and do not keep His commandments, cannot meet the approval of God. In fact, because they are not obeying Christ, such worshipers actually open a door by which Satan can enter unrecognized and work miracles through them, IN THE NAME OF JESUS, which they ascribe to the power of God. The plaintive plea, "Have we not prophesied ... and in Thy name cast out devils?" is proof positive that their miracles had been done by some other power than that of Christ, albeit in His name. If Jesus never knew them, who else could work such miracles? Only Satan. The Bible speaks of "the spirits of devils, working miracles," in Revelation 16:14.

By the way, what did Jesus mean when He said, "I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity"? How does one really come to "know" the Lord? The beloved John tells us, "Whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him." 1 John 3:6. "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." 1 John 2:4. Knowing Him means we obey Him. Biblically, it is impossible to be a true child of God while refusing to obey the commandments of God. Willful disobedience cuts off the relationship, drives away the Holy Spirit by which we are sealed, and effectively removes the individual from the position of grace.

Now we begin to see how simple it is to test the religious spirits that are in the world today. It is time that we look past the stimulating music, the spellbinding oratory, and even the exciting witnessing programs and apply the test set up by the great Author of all truth-Jesus Himself. He made it exceedingly clear that the original requirements of God have remained unchanged. The condition of obedience which would have kept man in Eden becomes the condition for his restoration to Eden. "If ye love me, keep my commandments." John 14:15.

Love Is Not Legalism

We must not fail to emphasize at this point that element of love which must also attend all acceptable obedience. Forcing the forms of compliance without a personal love-experience with Christ the Saviour is fully as fatal a mistake as omitting all obedience. Jesus had to deal with the cold formalism of the Pharisees over and over again. And because He so thoroughly condemned the program of salvation by works, many have hastily assumed that He considered obedience unimportant. Now we need to see the beautiful balance in Christ's doctrine of faith and works. He taught that obeying in order to be saved is the worst kind of legalism, but obeying because we are saved is the acid test of a true religious experience. Obedience follows true faith just as surely as day follows night. Incidentally, the word "legalist" has been thrown around with too much abandon. I greatly fear that many sincere Christians have been accused of legalism only because their love for Christ led them to be more particular in their obedience than their accusers. Never forget that a legalist is one who believes that he can be saved by his works. The person who keeps the commandments because he doesn't want to displease the God he loves is not a legalist at all. The old argument is often heard, "I'd rather see a happy, loving Christian who doesn't keep all of the commandments than to see an unloving one who strictly obeys the law." Why try to measure degrees of guilt? Both are completely wrong. Our feelings have nothing to do with it. Christ has established the standard of measurement. Nothing less than a "faith which worketh by love" will be accepted.

But let us return to the alarming proposition that most of mankind will be lost, including the fervent religious activists. Worship is commanded in the Bible and is a necessary ingredient of true religion, but will a host of worshipping Christians be lost? Jesus said, "But in vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matthew 15:9. Another shattering statement of truth! People will engage in vain worship if they reject true doctrine in favor of man's tradition.

When Is Worship Vain?

On several occasions Jesus urged the necessity of walking in all known truth. "If I had not come and spoken unto them, they had not had sin: but now they have no cloak for their sin." John 15:22. "If ye were blind, ye should have no sin: but now ye say, We see; therefore your sin remaineth." John 9:41. When a man learns a point of truth in the Bible and refuses to obey it, he is guilty of practicing sin. Such a man is fighting the Holy Spirit whose primary work is to guide into all truth. This refusal to obey hardens the conscience, causing the Holy Spirit to finally withdraw and leads to the unpardonable sin. No wonder such worship is vain. By rejecting the commandments of God in favor of human traditions, the Holy Spirit is spurned. According to Acts 5:32 only those who obey are eligible to be filled with the Spirit.

Let us pause now and consider the profound significance of what we have discovered.

The vast majority of people will be lost, including many who work miracles in Christ's name, worship Him, and claim to know Him as His children. The reason they will be lost is that they do not love Him enough to keep all of His commandments. For some reason these ardent church workers have learned to look lightly upon the law of God. Most of them consider it legalism to believe that disobedience could keep them out of heaven. Satan has blinded their eyes to the beautiful, intimate relationship of love and obedience. Millions of Protestant Christians have actually been taught that their obedience or disobedience can have no effect whatever upon their ultimate salvation.

In view of the deep-rooted tradition of popular Christianity today, we can see how Satan has manipulated millions into a state of mind to reject the claims of God's moral law. Under the twisted interpretation of a cheap grace (someone has called it "sloppy agape") the stage has been set for the devil's master strategy of deception. The final contest between truth and error will revolve around the basic issue of loyalty or disloyalty, obedience or disobedience. And the focus will be squarely on the fourth commandment which contains the great distinctive sign of God's creative power and authority.

Sunday-A Tradition of Man

It seems more than coincidental that Jesus spelled out "traditions of men" as the false doctrine that would lead into vain worship. The chief tradition today which has turned multitudes from keeping the Ten Commandments is the doctrine of Sunday-keeping. Almost any Christian of any persuasion can defend and extol nine of the Ten Commandments. It is only the Sabbath which has stirred deep hatred and prejudice against the holy law of God.

Who inspired that attitude of contempt for the only part of the Bible which God wrote with His own hand? How have so many millions been led to equate obedience with legalism? The tragedy is that ministers have largely been responsible for turning people away from obedience. Repeatedly in my evangelistic crusades people tell me of angry tirades made by their own pastors against the Sabbath. Unable to give any Bible reason for Sunday observance, and frustrated by the insistent questions of their flock, many pastors turn to emotional attacks upon the validity of the law. I have found that these attacks generally follow two lines of argument. The fundamentalist group of preachers emphasizes the "spirit of the law" while insisting that the letter is not binding. This allows for the specific seventh day to be set aside for Sunday. The other group of more liberal theologians contends that no special day of worship is necessary and the believer is entirely free from all claims of the law.

Since sin is defined in the Bible as "the transgression of the law," and Paul affirms that "Where no law is, there is no transgression," any attack on the law serves only to weaken man's convictions about sin. 1 John 3:4; Romans 4:15. James tells us that the breaking of even one commandment is a violation of all ten, and constitutes transgression or sin (James 2:10-12).

Is it a serious matter to tear down confidence in this great hand-written moral code of God? Do men take sin more lightly when they lose faith in the authority of the Ten Commandments? Without question they do. The strange circumstance of ministers teaching people to sin is not easy to comprehend. It is only when we study the great lines of prophecy concerning these last days that we can begin to understand the phenomenon. Apparently, God had to deal with unfaithful pastors in both Old and New Testament times. Some strong judgments had to be pronounced against the shepherds who misled the flock. Watchmen who would not tell the truth about approaching dangers were held accountable for the deaths which resulted. Such preachers are actually turned into agents of the evil one. Paul wrote, "And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness." 2 Corinthians 11:14, 15.

Only the inspired Book would label these ministers in such a blunt manner. Apparently, God looks upon such men as actual ministers of Satan because they fear to tell the truth and, instead, give their own ideas. It is time to understand the great conspiracy of Satan to lead men of the cloth-high-placed religious leaders-to teach perverse doctrines in the name of Christ. Paul predicted that "the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine ... And they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." 2 Timothy 4:3, 4.

It is interesting to note that these last-day teachers are described as turning their ears away from the truth. This means that they saw it, understood it, but did not want to acknowledge it. God made exactly the same charge against His priests in the Old Testament. "Her priests have violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things: they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they shewed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my sabbaths, and I am profaned among them." Ezekiel 22:26.

The priests of the Old Testament hid their eyes from the Sabbath and the ministers of the last days would turn their ears from the truth. How tragic! In other words, they would see it but would try to get away from it by refusing to keep looking. I have often talked to ministers of various persuasions on the subject of the Sabbath. Some have honestly admitted that Saturday is the true Lord's day of the Bible. Others reject it for various reasons. A few just could not believe that God was so particular about which day to observe. They reasoned that God would be understanding with those who found it more convenient to keep a different day than the seventh day. Some ministers that I talked with do not really accept the Bible as the inspired Word of God.

Preachers in Doubt

It is shocking to realize how skepticism and higher criticism have robbed many pastors of their faith in the Bible. Even many of the old-line conservative evangelical denominations are becoming riddled with doubts about the inspiration of the Scriptures. Often that is used to justify their rejection of the Sabbath.

In one Amazing Facts crusade I spent an interesting afternoon with a Southern Baptist minister who had requested an interview on the Sabbath subject. Some of his members were attending the Amazing Facts crusade and had questioned him about what they had learned. For the first time in his life he delved into the subject in order to find answers for his people. Then he asked me to meet him in his church office. I listened in amazement as he explained why he could not accept the Sabbath. I was amazed because the Southern Baptists have had the historic reputation of being fundamental, Bible-believing Christians. But this young man, who graduated from the Louisville Southern Baptist Seminary in 1975, did not believe in the Genesis story of creation. He denied the flood story and affirmed his belief in evolution as the explanation of man's existence. He explicitly rejected the story of Jonah and the whale. Finally, I asked him if he believed in the virgin birth of Jesus. His answer was, "I don't believe it is necessary to believe in the virgin birth to be saved."

I wish I could tell you that this attitude is exceptional among the Baptists, but it is not. This pastor assured me that over half of the Southern Baptist ministers believed just like he did. I certainly hope he is mistaken about that estimation, and I'm frankly of the opinion that he was exaggerating the numbers. Nevertheless, I'm convinced that the majority of this young preacher's classmates had lost their faith in the inspired Word while studying at the seminary, just as he had.

Finally, under close questioning, he weakly affirmed some kind of personal faith in the virgin birth even though he didn't think it was too important. I asked him if his congregation knew about his views on the Bible, and he assured me that they did not. He did not dare preach the things that he believed. I said, "Dave, if your church knew what you have expressed to us, they would fire you on the spot." I could understand perfectly why he was afraid to preach his convictions.

It should not be too great a surprise to see this wave of skepticism growing. Basically, it is one of the signs of the end of time. We are watching prophecy being fulfilled before our eyes. What I have just told you is only one of the dramatic signs that Jesus is coming very soon.

Do you wonder how the seminaries and great denominations have drifted into this sort of open doubt of the Word of God? One reason is obvious. By denying the Sabbath they opened the door to doubts about the literal six-day creation. Another easy step led to the vast periods assigned to evolution. God gave the Sabbath as a divine reminder of His sovereign creative power. Representing His authority as the only true God, the Sabbath was to be a weekly reminder that the only God deserving of worship is the One who alone had the power to create and recreate. As a sign of both creation and redemption, observance of the Sabbath would be a perpetual protection against the evil of evolution as well as modernism. When the churches rejected the Sabbath, they also rejected the strongest bulwark which would have protected them from the kind of deadly disbelief which the young minister expressed. No man can be an evolutionist or a modernist who truly believes and keeps the Sabbath.

If the Sabbath Can Be Changed Then the Bible Can Be Changed

This state of confusing doubt is also the fruit of antinomianism which has been so widely espoused. By trying to do away with the moral law of the Ten Commandments, the churches have compromised the doctrine of an infallible Bible. If the Sabbath can be explained away, if the great basic moral law can be nullified, then almost any other part of the Bible can be rationalized. And it has been, by millions who were taught to do so by the preacher behind the pulpit.

What does God think about those who have created this shameful breach in His law? Through the prophet Malachi God describes the failure of His ministers to uphold the law: "For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts. But ye are departed out of the way; ye have caused many to stumble at the law ... according as ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law." Malachi 2: 7-9.

God charges the preachers with being partial in the law. That means they preached part of it but not all of it. They caused people to stumble at the law, which indicates that they influenced people to break it. Throughout the Old Testament God outlined the development of a Satan-inspired program to set aside His law.

Closing this subject, I would like to trace one chain of such prophecies, all links of which are related by a common symbol. I want you to notice the connecting thread which is picked up by both major and minor prophets and woven through their writings.

God's Law-A Protecting Wall

The chief symbol of God's law seems to be that of a wall, and it is used extensively throughout the Old Testament. Isaiah dramatically represented disobedience to the law as a break in the wall. "This is a rebellious people ... children that will not hear the law of the Lord. ... Therefore this iniquity shall be to you as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall." Isaiah 30: 9-13.

Follow closely now as we allow other inspired writers to enlarge upon this basic concept of the breached wall. Ezekiel indicated that some transgressors of the law would try to cover their act of sin by smoothing over the break in the wall. Unfortunately, they would substitute some weak, counterfeit material to make the wall look good but which would not prove to be acceptable at all. "Woe unto the foolish prophets. ... Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge ... and one built up a wall, and lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar." Ezekiel 13: 3-10.

Here God rebukes the spiritual leaders for not making up the gaps and breaches in the wall. As the watchmen on the walls they were to be the very first ones to notice any weakness and to warn of the break immediately and make restoration of the defenses. In this case, not only were the priests not making proper repair of the breach but were condoning a dangerous substitute of weak materials which God could not approve. The untempered mortar represents an effort to gloss over the seriousness of the defect by false teaching instead of leading the people back to full obedience. Repeatedly God had to warn the priests against weakening the authority of His law. Malachi warned the priests: "Ye have caused many to stumble at the law ... ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law." Malachi 2: 8-9. It was such an attitude that caused God to rebuke them for daubing the wall with untempered mortar.

The Wall Broken- The Sabbath Breach

Now we are ready to establish the interesting fact that the primary breach in the law had to do with the fourth commandment. The prophet picked up the theme of the wall again in Ezekiel 22: 26-28. "Her priests have violated my law, and profaned mine holy things ... and have hid their eyes from my sabbaths. ... And her prophets have daubed them with untempered mortar ... saying, Thus saith the Lord God, when the Lord hath not spoken."

Here we have a specific breach of the law (Sabbath breaking) connected with the untempered daubing. Again, it is the priests, or preachers, themselves who are responsible for the error. As we have already noted, they have broken the law by hiding their eyes from the Sabbath. This indicates that they clearly saw it but deliberately turned away and refused to recognize or obey it. But what does it mean that they daubed the wall with untempered mortar? It doesn't take a lot of intelligence to see that they were trying to fill up the Sabbath breaking with counterfeit material that did not really restore the wall at all.

Furthermore, they would try to make it seem that God had approved what they had done, saying, "Thus saith the Lord God, when the Lord hath not spoken."

Question: Have religious leaders tried to put some false, unscriptural day in place of the true Sabbath and tried to make it appear that God condones it? Indeed they have! Instead of restoring the true seventh-day Sabbath, which had been breached by pagan infiltration of the early church, they brought in a day dedicated to ancient sun worship. Without a line of biblical authority they honored that day with the title "Lord's Day" and continually say, "Thus saith the Lord, when the Lord hath not spoken."

God Measures the Wall

Does the Lord indeed approve of this unholy tampering with His perfect law? Jesus said, "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matthew 15:9. No amount of daubing with foreign, untempered material can make the wall whole again. Only the restoration of the original material, the seventh day of the week, can satisfy the great plumbline of God's scrutiny. He is the Author of that law-the builder of the wall-and He will accept nothing less than the full original strength and proportion. "Thus he shewed me: and, behold, the Lord stood upon a wall made by a plumbline, with a plumbline in his hand. ... Then said the Lord, Behold, I will set a plumbline in the midst of my people." Amos 7:7, 8. A plumbline is used to determine the exact straightness of a wall, and God will measure His people by His holy law. Jesus declared that even worship is vain and empty when the commandments of men are taught instead of His commandments. "Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your tradition." Matthew 15:6. By these words Christ surely established that tradition will be used to nullify His law. Thus we can see how the untempered mortar represents the tradition of Sunday worship, which is applied to the breach in the law. The result is the institution of a section of wall which is alien to the original, perfect one.

Someone may object that we are taking verses out of context and that the wall symbol does not refer to God's law in these modern days. The prophet Ezekiel indicated that the counterfeit wall would be daubed with untempered mortar in the last days, and that the seven last plagues would bring its total destruction. "Say unto them that daub it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall ... and a stormy wind shall rend it." Ezekiel 13:11.

Wall-Daubers Destroyed by the Plagues

Does the Bible give us any information about the time of this great deluge of hail? John the revelator describes the event in these words: "And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven ... and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great." Revelation 16:21.

Here is evidence that the false wall of tradition will be dealt with at the time of the seven last plagues. God speaks of that judgment on the wall as "my wrath" in Ezekiel 13:14-15. "So will I break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered mortar ... and it shall fall, and ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof. ... Thus will I accomplish my wrath upon the wall and upon them that have daubed it." What is His wrath?

God refers to the seven last plagues as His wrath: "Seven angels having the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God." Revelation 15:1. Do you get the picture now? His wrath in the destruction of the counterfeit wall is accomplished by the overflowing hail, which is one of the last plagues, also designated as God's wrath. This places the judgment on the wall-daubers at the end of time when the seven last plagues are poured out.

But how can we be sure that this untempered mortar is truly the tradition of Sunday worship? In case there is any doubt remaining on this point, please weigh this final proof. The wrath of God falls ONLY upon those who have the mark of the beast. "If any man worship the beast ... and receive his mark ... The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God." Revelation 14:9, 10.

Now let's do some reasoning together. The facts of God's Word are before us. Since the seven last plagues fall only upon those who have the mark of the beast, and since the counterfeit wall-builders receive the plagues, we have to conclude that the wall-builders have the mark. We have already shown that the Sunday tradition was used in the daubing. Does this mean that Sunday-keeping is connected with the mark of the beast? Indeed it does. For a full explanation of this fascinating connection, write for the free booklet, THE BEAST, THE DRAGON, AND THE WOMAN. Even without looking into the subject any further we can see that those who daub the wall (change God's law) are Sunday advocates and that they also receive the plagues which fall ONLY upon those who have the mark of the beast. One would have to be blind to miss the fact that the mark is tied closely to Sunday-keeping.

Let us now pursue the wall symbolism further in the writings of the Old Testament prophets. God was deeply concerned about the gap or breach that had been made in His law. He is quoted as saying, "And I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me." Ezekiel 22:30.

In view of the diversionary tactics of daubing tradition into the breach, creating a false wall, God is represented by the prophet as searching for someone who will "make up the hedge" and "stand in the gap." What a picture is presented here! Did God find those who would have the courage to restore unpopular truth? Does the Bible finally describe the faithful rebuilding of the wall to meet the specifications of God's plumbline?

Let Isaiah take up the thread now and paint the final picture. "And they that shall be of thee (of God) shall ... be called, The repairer of the breach, the restorer of paths to dwell in. If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord, honourable ..." Isaiah 58:12, 13.

Here, without any equivocation, we find a clear description of those who will repair the breach and restore the original wall. It is those who turn back to the true Sabbath, and who enter into the work of clearing the debris of tradition, so that the Sabbath may again glow as the delight of God's people—a holy day and honorable. Freed from the false allusions cast by antinomians and libertines, the law of God will be recognized as the great moral standard of grace-saved Christians—evidence of a genuine love relationship with Jesus.

Gathering up these golden threads of Bible truth, we can summarize the prophetic story very easily and quickly. In the last days great thrusts will be made by false shepherds to weaken the authority of God's law.

Influential religious groups will join forces to lead people to reject the true Sabbath. By setting aside the fourth commandment, a breach is made in the law which is represented as a protecting wall. While counterfeit material is used to restore the gap in the form of Sunday worship, God finds a people who will be called the repairers of the breach and who turn back to keeping the true Sabbath. Those who try to change His law by substituting the pagan day of the sun receive the mark of the beast and experience the punishment of the seven last plagues.

But let us close this discouraging prophetic picture on a note of hope and assurance. Not all will be found tearing down or trying to change God's law. In the book of Revelation God points out His saints and describes them in these words: "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Revelation 14:12. A remnant will not go along with the traditions of men. They will not accept any substitute for the requirements of God. As the last end-piece of the apostolic church, they are characterized by loving Jesus supremely and keeping His commandments. Satan's final desperate battle against God will take place over the loyalty of this little group. Here's the way John viewed that clash: "And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ." Revelation 12:17.

May God grant you the courage to be a part of that remnant church which has the faith of Jesus, the testimony of Jesus, and keeps all of His commandments. These truly may be designated as the saints.

In summary, note how link upon link of related texts show the fortunes and misfortunes of the wall—God's law.

1. The wall represents God's law. A breach in the wall represents breaking the law (iniquity). Isaiah 30:9-13, "This is a rebellious people ... children that will not hear the law of the Lord ... therefore this iniquity shall be to you as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall."
2. False ministers did not repair the break. But they did try to mend the gap with weak, untempered mortar, a counterfeit material. Ezekiel 13:3-14, "Woe unto the foolish prophets ... ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge ... and one built up a wall, and lo, others daubed it with untempered mortar."
3. The breach in the wall was the Sabbath, which the preachers saw, but hid their eyes from it. Instead of restoring the true Sabbath, they used the pagan Sunday (untempered mortar) as a substitute, claiming that the Lord said it was all right, when "the Lord hath not spoken." Ezekiel 22:26-28, "Her priests have violated my law, and profaned mine holy things ... and have hid their eyes from my sabbaths ... and her prophets have daubed them with untempered mortar ... saying, Thus saith the Lord God, when the Lord hath not spoken."

4. The counterfeit wall (Sunday) will be revealed and destroyed when the plagues fall (hail). Ezekiel 13:11, "Say unto them that daub it with untempered mortar that it shall fall: there shall be an overflowing shower; and ye, O great hailstones, shall fall and a stormy wind shall fall; and a stormy wind shall rend it."

5. Hail is one of the seven last plagues. Revelation 16:21, "And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven ... and men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great."

6. The plagues are called "the wrath of God." Revelation 15:1, "Seven angels having the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God."

7. The wrath of God (plagues) fall on those who have the mark of the beast. Revelation 14:9, 10, "If any man worship the beast ... and receive his mark ... The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God."

8. God's wrath (plagues) fall on those who used the untempered mortar (Sunday). The plagues and destruction prove that these events take place at the end of the world and that these prophecies apply to our day. Ezekiel 13:13-15, "I will even rend it ... and great hailstones in my fury to consume it. So will I break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered mortar ... Thus will I accomplish my wrath upon the wall and upon them that have daubed it."

9. God looked for those who would repair the gap or breach in His law correctly. Ezekiel 22:30, "And I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me."

10. God finds those who will repair the breach. They will restore the true Sabbath to its right place. Isaiah 58:12, 13, "And they that shall be of thee ... shalt be called, The repairer of the breach, The restorer of the paths to dwell in. If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day."

^ Top

s / m / t / w / t / f / s

Tell a friend about this site

"Everything you wanted to know about the Sabbath."

Copyright © 2008. All rights reserved.

SABBATH TRUTH

"Come unto me...and I will give you rest." Matt. 11:28

Sabbath Purpose | Which Day? | Sabbath in Prophecy | Sabbath Questions | Keep It Holy | Sabbath History | Sabbath Resources | Home

Laboring to Rest - How to keep the Sabbath Part #1

(Below is a transcript of a sermon given by Pastor Doug Batchelor.)

Now I would solicit your prayers to be compounded with Bill's prayer this morning for the message both today and next Sabbath as well. I'm going to address something that can be easily misunderstood and I would appreciate your prayers that I can present it the way the Lord would want me to. I'd like to talk today about how to keep the Sabbath. Part 1: Laboring to Rest. That sounds like a paradox, doesn't it? You'll notice in the scripture reading that Jennifer shared it says there in Hebrews chapter four, "Let us therefore labor to enter that rest." That sounds like a contradiction, but really that's what's happening as we prepare for the Sabbath. We're investing additional labor so that we might enjoy the rest of the Sabbath.

Anyone ever gone on a vacation? Not that I'm comparing the Sabbath with a vacation, but how many of you recognize that if you're going to have a good vacation it requires a little extra work and preparation to enjoy the vacation? Would you admit that? It seems like sometimes you've got to recover from the vacation when you get home because it takes that extra energy. I believe that in order for us to really enjoy the release and peace that God has designed for this blessed day we must labor to enter that rest. That involves some education. It involves some thinking and it's one of those areas that is often misunderstood. I'll get to that in a moment.

Back in 1924 at the Olympics something historic transpired there in Paris. There was a Scottish missionary's son, Eric Liddell who was a very talented runner and he was scheduled to run a sprint in the Olympics but he discovered that the time trials for his event were going to fall on Sunday which was his Sabbath. And even though he had trained and prepared and his country had chosen him and invested in him he said, "I'm not going to do it. I won't have it." And he was under an immense amount of pressure. "Just this once!" "God will understand." "Your country is counting on you. What's more important?" There were politicians, teammates, some extended family members (not his mother and father who supported what he was doing) that put incredible pressure on Eric to capitulate his convictions and just go ahead and run the time trials "just this once." And he said, "No, I can't even do it this once."

He believed Sunday was the Sabbath and he said, "I'm not going to violate my conscience even if I die." Well, later they wanted to use his talent for the country somehow. They found out that he could do the time trials for the 400-meter. And when he did the time trials he didn't show very well. Matter of fact, they were wondering if he would be able to finish at all compared to the other talented runners, but he said, "You know, the results are with God. I don't question God. I'm going to do what He tells me to do and the results are in His hands." And just prior to running that 400-meter race even though he did poorly in the time trials someone handed him a slip of paper that had a scripture on it. It said very simply, "Those that honor me, I will honor." And when the gun went off and he ran that race he not only won he was five lengths ahead of every other runner and he broke the record. Later he lived out his convictions. He died in a prisoner of war camp in Japan at the end of WWII 1945 because he had been serving as a missionary in China. The man believed in obeying God.

Now let me tell you what has precipitated this series of messages on how to keep the Sabbath. I believe that it is the devil's decided plan to erode our convictions through a series of rationalizations and compromises so that when the big test of the last days comes and we must choose who we will worship at the point of death so many of God's people have been so prepared and trained to compromise that we won't know how to take a stand, and it will be just as important that we are faithful in little things like keeping the Sabbath holy. That commandment is no less important to God than the one that says, "Do not murder" and "Do not commit adultery." But it's difficult sometimes for us to wrap our minds around that and

Enter a description of what you are looking for.

The Conscientious Objector?

The Congressional Medal of Honor is the highest medal that can be given in our country. It was awarded to only one non-combatant. He was a Seventh-Day Adventist Christian named Desmond T. Doss. In World War II Mr. Doss wasn't really a conscientious objector, he was a non-combatant. He said, "I will serve. I will try to save lives but I refuse to pick up a gun and to take lives."

And all through boot camp and training he would not work on the Sabbath. Right from the very beginning he respectfully and humbly said, "I can't do it, because as much as I respect my officers and superiors, God comes first."

"Then Peter and the other apostles answered and said, We ought to obey God rather than men." Acts 5:29

He was tested, they would put a rifle in his hands and he wouldn't hold it. And they would try to make him work and he would say, "On the Sabbath I can't. I'll work six days a week twenty-four hours a day but from sundown Friday to sundown Saturday I can't work. Now if life is threatened since I'm a medic I will do that because

I'll talk about that in a moment.

Jerusalem so people would know what God he worshipped. And when the law was enacted Daniel had to make a choice. He actually had made the choice a thousand times before when three times a day he went to his upper room and prayed in this pagan land.

You know we were talking about this this week in our staff meeting and Pastor Mike was saying that he or a friend was somewhere where they saw this Moslem who in the middle of a crowded public place at the time of prayer he stopped, rolled out his prayer rug and began to pray towards Mecca. And though it looked a little absurd you had to respect the person's convictions. They did not care what anyone around them thought. They were more interested in what God thought. And here Daniel thought, "Even if I am torn limb from limb by lions I would rather obey God than man, even if it's unpopular." And the thing that you must also respect is he did not make little compromises. How easy it would have been for Daniel to say, "Well, look. I don't want to offend the king. It might be a bad witness. I could look obnoxious so I'm going to shut my windows." It could have been easy for Daniel to say, "Well, I'm going to stand in my window and face Jerusalem but I'm not going to kneel because that looks too much like prayer." Or Daniel could have quoted that scripture, except the scripture hadn't been given yet, "When you pray enter into your closet." I mean there would have been so many available rationalizations that he could have chosen to compromise, but he would not. Did God honor Daniel because he honored him? He delivered him and his enemies were destroyed.

Then in the same book, of course, you've got the three Hebrew worthies, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. Another government law. This is now chapter three. It says, "If anyone fails to pray to the golden image that I have set up they are going to the flaming furnace" that you could still see smoldering in the distance. Oh, how easy it would have been for Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego to say, "When the music plays, let's all tie our sandals. I'm not going to pray to the image but you know we don't want to wreck the king's party. We'll just kneel down and tie our sandals" or drop a contact lens. See if you can find it. Find some excuse to look like or kneel down but really pray to Jehovah in your heart. I mean, after all, that's what really matters. How many rationalizations they could have found to just cut the corners, but they said, "No! We will not even look like we're failing to worship our God." They stood up for God and did God stand up for them?

Then of course you go to the book of Esther in a similar story where one of the enemies of God's people was Haman the Agagite who was related to the Amalachites, avowed enemies of God's people. The first ones to attack the Children of Israel when they left Egypt were the Amalachites. And a law was made by the King of Persia that says everybody was to bow and worship Haman. Mordicai said, "I can't do that. Even if it means that I lose my life." And he knew that his whole people would be targeted, but even though his devotion might react in suffering on the rest of his people he said, "I'm not going to compromise." And there was a law made to exterminate all of God's people because he would not compromise. He stood up. Did God deliver his people?

Now, here's my point, friends. If you read in Revelation 13:15 it tells us there is going to be a law enacted by the Beast. And it says that this beast power is granted power to give breath to the image of the beast that the image of the beast should both speak and cause as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed. A law is made regarding worship and if you do not worship the way you are told it is the death penalty.

that's what Jesus did. But the KP and the sweeping of the barracks and this other stuff," he said, "I can't do it on the Sabbath day, on the other six days I will be happy to do it."

Desmond was jeered and tormented, ridiculed, and mocked, made fun of all through his military experience until they arrived at the front lines. When they were on the front lines they were in some of the worst fighting in WWII.

Many soldiers were trying to take a cliff, an escarpment from the Japanese, and a hail of machine gun fire was coming off the top. A lot of marines and soldiers were wounded. He heard them up there crying and he went up one time after another and he rescued these men who were wounded. And brought seventy men to safety.

Every time he'd come back down with one they'd say, "You better stop. You got lucky that time. Don't push your luck." He would then hear another one crying, "Medic!" And he'd go back up. No one else went. And he brought them down and was never hit. He was given the Congressional Medal of Honor.

One time, a hand grenade was thrown into the group where he was standing. He jumped on the grenade. And to this day he's missing some toes. He's still alive. He gave me one of his signed books. It's a book I recommend. It's called The Unlikeliest Hero. But he said, "I'd rather die than disobey."

"...for them that honour me I will honour, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed." 1 Samuel 2:30

This commentary by Pastor Doug Batchelor

More Information on the DVD

Now follow me for a moment. Let's review a little history. The Bible tells us "he that is guilty of breaking one commandment is guilty of all." The devil doesn't care whether your sin is adultery or murder as long as he can get you to sin and separate you from God it doesn't matter what commandment it is. And in God's book the Sabbath commandment is not any less important or valuable than the other nine. Some people think that it's, "Well, you know, it's sort of a personal preference commandment." No, it's not! It's not an optional commandment. It's not a recommendation. It's still a commandment. We're not commanded if it's convenient. We're commanded to remember.

Could it be in the last days that, you know? Daniel chapter 3 the commandment was the one about not worshiping images. Daniel chapter 6 the commandment was not worshiping other gods. The same thing with the story of Haman. And you'll find different stories with different commandments.

With David and Bathsheba we know it was the seventh commandment, but he failed. Joseph passed it. Amen. And Joseph passed it even before the 10 Commandments were written, it was still a sin to commit adultery. Joseph said so. Before the 10 Commandments were written the Sabbath was still a commandment. Otherwise why would God begin the commandment by saying "remember" if it had never existed before?

Any of you remember things that never happened? I've heard about some legal cases that have been brought against psychotherapists, psychologists who tell people the reason they're having all of these problems in their life is because of repressed memories. They say, "Maybe you were abused as a child and you've been repressing that. You don't know it." And it's almost like they've encouraged them to conjure up memories of the parents or somebody that abused them that never really happened. They got them so mixed up they thought they were remembering things that never even really happened! Well, that usually is not the case. You remember things that have happened. So when God says, "Remember the Sabbath Day" it's understood it's there before He asks you to remember it.

And all you have to do, of course is go to Genesis chapter 2 and that's where God made it Holy and He blessed it. Now when you talk about a subject like this about how to keep the Sabbath one reason I enter in on this with a little trepidation is because it is very easy to be misunderstood and appear legalistic. Because let's face it. In the time of Jesus there were two extremes that were being dealt with. In the time of Christ there were two religious groups that were in supremacy, the Sadducees and the Pharisees. Forgive me if I use some modern labels there were the liberals and the conservatives. The Sadducees didn't even believe in angels or resurrection. That's pretty liberal theology. You think why even believe? The Pharisees were so meticulous in their Sabbath keeping. They wanted to make sure you didn't walk too far on the Sabbath day and I understood they had a ball of string that they would unravel and measure off the distance and make sure that you could walk the appropriate distance. They didn't want you to carry a burden on the Sabbath day and if you carried a handkerchief to blow your nose on the Sabbath day it was a burden and you were working. So what they did to get around that if you had a cold is they sewed the handkerchief to your clothes and you'd blow your nose on the hankie which when you think of it being your clothes doesn't sound very good, but then at least you weren't carrying a burden. They had hundreds of man made laws and you often see Jesus battling with and trying to clarify the Sabbath truth.

He would heal somebody on the Sabbath day and they'd say, "Oh! You're breaking the Sabbath!" But where in the Sabbath command does it say you can't heal anyone? And in all the conflict that Jesus dealt with regarding the Sabbath truth, often it was healing people, never do you hear Jesus say, "You don't need to keep the Sabbath anymore." It would have been so easy for Him to say that, but He doesn't say that. He tells them how to keep it, that it was "made for man", that it was "made for good" and He tries to clarify it, but never does Jesus say that it's not important. The problem in the time of Christ was more legalism. Back of the days, if you read your Bible, in Jeremiah and Isaiah the problem about the Sabbath then was the problem we face today. They weren't keeping it any better than the pagans. They were being very sloppy about it.

My concern as a pastor and I want to tell you right now I'm not just talking to you who might be here or watching, we're talking to the Batchelor family. Karen and I are constantly trying to educate ourselves about what is right and what is not right on the Sabbath. And when you love God and you want to obey Him it's not legalism to seek to understand and obey better. Don't let people accuse you of being legalistic because you're asking good questions. And so because I will be dealing with some of the specifics of what is right to do on the Sabbath and what should not be done on the Sabbath there will be people who misunderstand. And this would be a good place for me to announce this message is for those of you who already love the Lord. If you have not committed yourself to the Lord it may seem legalistic to you, but if you love Jesus and if you are determined to obey and to follow Him then this is for you that we might understand what God wants us to do.

Now one reason I think this is especially important for God's people in the time in which we are living we know that there is going to be a law made that commands us to break one of God's laws. I think there is a very good probability that the Sabbath is going to be the issue

➤ Germany-Tennhardt of Nuremberg (18th Century)

"He holds strictly to the doctrine of the Sabbath, because it is one of the ten commandments." Bengel's "Leban und Wirken," Burk, p.579

He himself says: "It cannot be shown that Sunday has taken the place of the Sabbath (P.366). the Lord God has sanctified the last day of the week. Antichrist, on the other hand, has appointed the first day of the week." Ki Auszug aus Tennhardt's "Schriften," P.49 (printed 1712)

More History on the Sabbath

because of what I read in prophecy. And if we're being indifferent and sloppy in how we keep the Sabbath now, if we're fudging on doing things on Sabbath that should not be done on Sabbath now, when our lives are on the line and when our commitment to Christ is on the line and when you can't buy or sell or there is a death penalty we're making a series of little steps that is going to make it very easy for us to give up.

